rangements, in the manner they had expected, only one subscriber having yet come forward, and the delay occasioned in the last voyage, by touching at that port, having cost more than it is worth,

It is resolved, that none of their packets shall call at Madras, unless the association is guaranteed freight and passage-money to the amount of rupees, and that the delay shall not exceed days.

It was understood, that both these blanks were to be filled up at the discretion of the committee.

Thanks were then voted to the chairman, and the meeting separated.—Hurkaru, July 3.

LEPER ASYLUM.

Abstract report of the sub-committee appointed by the central committee, District Charitable Society on the 30th April, 1838—for admitting patients into, and enquiring and reporting on the state of the Leper Asylum, and on the extent of the leper population of Calcutta.

The report of the sub-committee first records the pristine unsuccessful efforts which were made to provide for the most calamitous portion of natives whose claims on the humanity and benevolence of their countrymen, especially among the wealthy natives, are still more cogent in the present era. With reference to the origin and progressive history of the Leper Asylum, it endeavours to shew that the suppoed apprehension on the part of Government that the institution would tend to attract an influx of lepers from the country to Calcutta, is altogether effaced, by many years' experience to the contrary, and the reluctance with which lepers are induced even in the present day to avail themselves of this asylum.

The sub-committee's very interesting report thus continues:

In October, 1826, in consequence of some improvements which Dr. Stuart perceived from the administration of iodine, a medicine which had never been publicly tried in this disease before, an application was made to Lord Auckland for assistance to enable Dr. Stuart to conduct his experiments in a more satisfactory way than from the limited means, from the District Charitable Society, he could then possibly do. His Lordship, at the suggestion of Dr. Stuart, was generously pleased to order the erection of a vapour bath on the premises, on the part of Government; and granted a monthly sum of 80 rupees for six months from himself, to procure a better diet for the patients, and expressed a wish to be furnished at the expiration of the six months, with a report to shew the benefit which had during that time been derived from the bath and improved diet. When the period for furnishing the report arrived, one so satisfactory as might have been expected, could not be drawn up, owing to circumstances which were at the time explained to the District Charitable Society, and which may be shortly recapitulated here.

It was the medical superintendent's wish to try the improved diet and vapour bath conjointly, but considerable delay occurring in the erection of the bath, he commenced with trying the effects of the improved diet, by itself. Just as the bath was ready for use, and when there were still four months before him to try the effects of both together, the asylum with every thing it contained was burnt to the ground; and until it could be re-built the patients were removed to another situation which proved to be excessively unhealthy—they were crowded together, had no opportunity of attending to cleanliness from the want of water for bathing, &c. &c. The fact that there was more sickness of different kinds, such as fevers, cholera, dysentery, spleen &c. &c. during the short time the patients were in their new abode, than had occurred in their former situation in the course of twelve months, will serve to prove how much both surgeon and patients had to contend against.

The bath of which nothing but the bare walls were left has been re-built by Government, and since the patients have been subjected to the vapour bath simply and also impregnated with the tincture of iodine, the only result has been that persons on whose bodies there was no trace of moisture perceptible for months, nay years, have perspired profusely. In others, partially affected with leprosy, and who used to perspire on the healthy parts only, by means of the vapour bath the diseased part have been caused to resume that healthy action. As the patients leave the bath their bodies appear much improved, but as soon as the perspiration has dried up the skin assumes its former unnatural appearance. Though Dr. Stuart, now that he has had upwards of two years' experience is not so sanguine as he was some time ago, still as improverment though slowly continues to progress, he is not perfectly destitute of hope.

When the Leper Asylum was re-built in November 1837, which cost the District Charitable Society Rs. 2,877, it was intended to accommodate 20 Christians and 96 natives, (viz. 40 Hindoos and 56 Musselmans). At the Committee's first meeting it was found to contain 87 individuals, 64 of whom were actually afflicted with leprosy, and 23 their relatives free from disease, but equally supported. Considering the proportion of relatives too great, and many being capable of doing something for themselves, it was determined on decreasing their number, but having ascertained that most of them had been for years in the asylum, it appeared cruel to eject them; your committee has confined itself to passing a resolution that no relatives should in future be admitted except in cases where the state of the patient demands such additional aid.

Independent of Rs. 100 per mensem, which Dr. Stuart receives as travelling allowance, a monthly grant of Rs. 360 is made for the support of the Leper Asylum, of which Rs. 151-13 defray the establishment, inclusive of ground rent, as per annexed statement, and the remaining sum is incurred, nor could any retrenchment be attempted without materially affecting its efficiency; as almost the same establishment is required to keep the premises clean, and attend to the wants of the present number of inmates, as if it contained many more.

It has occurred to your committee that, in order to reduce the amount of ground rent which amounts to 47-5-0 monthly, it would be advisable to take a lease of the grounds on which the Leper Asylum is situated, as the site appears very eligible; and consequently application has been made to the several proprietors.

Were the inmates of the Leper Asylum to be considered merely to the light of pensioners, the present diet allowance would be quite sufficient, but when it is remembered that they are all more or less under a course of medical treatment for the amelioration of their disease which imperatively demands a generous regimen, we are induced to recommend an increase of one anna and three pie to each monthly, which has already been adopted confident of the central committee's concurrence.

The apothecary formerly employed in the Native Hospital was transferred to the Leper Asylum, when the District Charitable Society took charge on a pension of his full salary (Rs. 60 monthly) which is paid by the Governors of the Native Hospital, and he is provided with a suitable dwelling on the premises.

To aid the surgeon in preserving peace and good order among the inmates the members of the committee have agreed to become monthly visitors of the asylum, and conduct the current duties in rotation.

Your committee having been requested to admit an increased number of lepers in proportion to the existing accommodations, which will admit of 33 additional patients, has opened for the present, the asylum to all applicants afflicted with leprosy who obtain their subsistence by begging in the streets, without reference to their birth place. Should none but strictly Calcutta-born lepers be admitted, the huts might for a long time remain untenanted because they are seldom compelled to apply to the asylum being in some degree supported by their friends in addition to what they can obtain by begging. Lepers from other quarters, for diametrically opposite reasons, are frequent applicants, and more likely to be found in the streets.

Since your committee has been acting two persons who were afflicted with leprosy, but who by some oversight had always been placed on the list of relatives, were added to the number of patients. Nine new lepers have been admitted, two who were absent on leave, have returned, one has died, one is on leave of absence to his country, and eight relatives have been discharged, and two lepers with five relatives have left the asylum at their own request, making the number at present in the asylum as follows :

Patients.....	73	Christians.....	18
Relatives.....	13	Hindoos.....	27
		Musselmans.....	41
Total.....	86	No.....	86

There is abundant vacant space within the boundaries of the asylum to erect sufficient huts accomodating almost double that number of persons.

From the returns obligingly furnished by Mr. McFarlan, the chief magistrate, it is ascertained that the extent of the leper population of Calcutta at present amounts to 531 individuals, out of which only 118 are beggars, and the remainder are either supported by their relatives or are able to support themselves by various trades.

Although your committee is aware that the funds of District Charitable Society are not immediate competent to meet an increased outlay, yet your committee anxiously and boldly recommends the admission of the total number of leper beggars now infesting the streets of Calcutta, confident that a public appeal to the liberality of the native community will readily supply any exigency. The charity now extorted by lepers is principally from natives, and is obtained as much if not more by working upon the fears of the givers as from any feeling of commiseration for the wretched condition of the afflicted. A small sum of 4 annas or 8 annas monthly from each individual would soon place at the disposal of the District Charitable Society means more than sufficient, not only to accommodate all the poor lepers in Calcutta, but render their situation within the limits of the asylum so comfortable that they would gladly forego all the advantages they reap by begging.

To the accomplishment of the grand object in view your committee urge the necessity of the Central Committee of the District Charitable Society authorizing the chief magistrate to offer shelter and support in the asylum to each poor leper individually, and in the event of any refusing to avail themselves of the proffered relief, that the laws which must be in existence for the suppression of vagrancy should be rigorously put in force, against any individual who refusing the advantages now offered, persists in infesting the streets and bazars for the purpose of extorting alms; and if this be carefully enforced your committee is of opinion that we shall soon have all the poor lepers spontaneously resorting to the asylum.

Lastly, your committee beg to state that it has suggested to the general committee for the relief of the sufferers in the late fires, the claims the Leper Asylum has of having any surplus balance transferred to the general funds of that institution, in payment of the amount the District Charitable Society has disbursed for re-building the Leper Asylum after its complete destruction by the general conflagration on the memorable 27th day of April, 1837.

STEAM TUG ASSOCIATION.

A: a special meeting of proprietors of the Steam Tug Association, held at the office of the secretaries, on the 9th July, 1838,

Mr. J. W. CRAIG, in the chair,

Present.—Messrs. W. Bruce, K. R. Mackenzie, J. Carr, D. Tagore, J. Somerville, J. Colquhoun, D. M. Gordon, G. A. Prinsep, Pissoonooncar Fagore, A. Thompson, A. H. Sim, Wm. P. Pissop, C. P. Pissop, and Rajchunder Mookerjee.

The secretaries laid before the meeting a memorandum of the earnings of the two boats, Forbes and Seetakoond, since the 1st March, shewing a net balance of about Co.'s Rs- 24,500.

Also a statement of the subscriptions to the new stock realized, and in the course of realization amounting to Co.'s Rs- 130,000, shewing, therefore, that there remain 70 shares of the 200, forming the additional capital, still unsubscribed for, and a consequent deficiency of 70,000, in the capital required for the completion of the two new boats.

The secretaries report one of the new boats to be nearly finished, and that Capt. Henderson, the agent in England, states in his letter of the 14th April, 1838, that a pair of fifty five horse engines, by Fawcett and Wilson, with boilers, and every thing complete, will be shipped from Liverpool in a few days. The second boat is entirely in frame and partly planked.

The total expenditure on account of the increased capital for the above purposes, including £ 5,000 remitted to England at the exchange of 2-2½ for purchase of engines, amounts to Co.'s Rs 92,413.

The secretaries report that the applications for steam tug hire have greatly increased, and that they have not the least doubt of finding constant employment for all four boats, as soon as the new ones are ready.

Proposed by Mr. Bruce, and seconded by Mr. Mackenzie, and resolved,

That the proprietors of this association be urged to exert themselves among their friends and constituents, and particularly among those interested in insurance offices, who derive the greatest benefit from this application of steam, towards the completion of the subscription to the new increased stock, and that the secretaries be authorized in the meantime to borrow money for the completion of the work on hand, upon the security of the association.

Read the abstract of Captain Henderson's correspondence regarding his provision of engines and materials, for the new boats, and the measures he had adopted in the absence of replies to his proposition for substituting a pair of seventy-five horse engines, for the Forbes, and for placing her present pair of sixty in one of the new boats.

Proposed by Mr. G. A. Prinsep and seconded by Mr. Jas. Colquhoun, and,

Resolved, that it is not considered advisable to adopt Captain Henderson's proposition. But, as it seems possible that the engines of larger power, which he has ordered, may have been shipped before the fresh instructions from hence can reach him.

It is resolved, that the building of the second new boat now in frame, be suspended, in order to be able to make such alterations as may be hereafter found necessary to enable her to receive the engines of increased size and power; also that Capt. Henderson be desired, in case the large engines have not been shipped, to negotiate with the makers of them for the substitution of a pair of fifty-five, as originally ordered, with authority to pay a penalty, if absolutely necessary to the extent of £500.

BENGAL MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.

Proceedings of the third quarterly general meeting for 1838, of Subscribers to the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund.

At a quarterly general meeting of subscribers to the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, held at the Town-hall, at 4 o'clock P. M. on Monday, the 9th July 1838, in pursuance of advertisement, dated June 19th ultimo, and provision of section XIX. of the deed,

PRESENT,

Geo. Angus, Esq., 7th battalion, artillery, in the chair, Frederick Corby, Esq., garrison surgeon, Fort William.
A. Garden, Esq. M. D., presidency surgeon.
J. Grant, Esq. apothecary E. I. Company.
Geo. Smith, Esq. surgeon 33d N. L., leave at presidency.

H. Chapman, Esq. 21 assistant, presidency general hospital.

Henry N. Spry, Esq. M. D., officiating assistant garrison surgeon, Fort William.

H. H. Goodeve, Esq. M. D., professor medical college.
Wm. Shirreff, Esq. 1st troop, 3d brigade, horse artillery.
J. Gregory Vass, Esq. M. D., deputy apothecary East India Company.

The secretary read the proceedings of the last quarterly general meeting, and the following report of the proceedings of the committee of management for the quarter ending this day.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT

Medical Fund Office, Calcutta, 9th July, 1831.

In pursuance of the resolution passed at the last quarterly general meeting, the committee of management submitted a requisition to the honorable the President of the Council of India in Council, praying that the authority of Government may be issued, directing paymasters and other disbursing officers regularly to deduct from the monthly pay, arrears of all subscribers to this fund, the amount of their monthly subscriptions, in the same manner as is done in respect to the orphan fund, and officiating secretary Lieut. Col. J. Stuart's letter, dated 30th April last, communicates that Government have been pleased to comply with the requisition, and that the proper Ministerial officers have been directed to carry the measure into effect. The committee of management have to congratulate their constituents on the establishment of this important measure, and if disbursing officers act up to Government orders, there can be no further accumulation of arrears of subscription.

In compliance with the second resolution passed at the last quarterly general meeting, the subscribers who are now in India, and who had intimated their desire to become members of the fund, but had not formally signed the fund-deed, nor continued the payment of their subscriptions, have been addressed, and all have sent in powers of attorney, to enable the secretary to sign the fund-deed on their behalf, with the exception of Mr. Surgeon James B. Clapperton and another, the latter of whom has returned no answer to the two references made to him on the subject, though he has since made a payment in account through his paymaster. This gentleman will be again addressed on the subject reminding him of his omission. Mr. Clapperton observes, in his assistant to become a subscriber was conditionally given, "that the Fund should be formed upon the calculations then submitted to him, that of the subscriptions of the whole service, and that it should meet the approval of the Court of Directors, none of these conditions, observes Mr. Clapperton, have been fulfilled, and the greatest of all objections has arisen since of its being the only obstacle to our obtaining pensions for length of service, which would give him a better retiring pension, than the fund and Government pension, as it now stands," and therefore he adds he means "to take some time to consider." Mr. Clapperton having withdrawn from the fund, his name has accordingly been struck off the list of subscribers. This gentleman had contributed nothing towards the fund, and the circumstance of his not having signed the fund-deed, precludes the committee of management from demanding payment of arrears up to date of his letter, communicating his withdrawal from the fund.

Agreeably to the third resolution of the last quarterly general meeting, a copy of the proposed memorial to the honorable the Court of Directors, reiterating the prayer of a former memorial for reduction of the period of service, and pension according to length of service instead of rank, was duly sent to each superintending surgeon, to take the sense of the medical officers in their respective divisions, and the suggestions received up to date have been incorporated in the memorial, that will be presently read to the meeting. To obviate delay, superintending surgeons have been further called upon to obtain the signature in duplicate of the several medical officers in their respective divisions, to accompany the revised memorial.

The following resolutions of the committee of management under date the 28th February 1838, being a graduated scale of penalty on all admissions from and after that date, noticed in the committee's report read at the last quarterly general meeting, as being in circulation for the votes of subscribers, having been sanctioned by more than two-thirds of the subscribers, the same is accordingly passed into a bye-law of this institution.

Resolved.—That as the admission from the medical list as it now stands, of new members to the Bengal medical retiring fund, so many years after its formation, gave advantages to such new members over the earlier supporters of the fund, in having avoided the tonnage risk incurred by the latter, all persons applying for admission as subscribers to the said fund, or who are not actually subscribers, this Wednesday, 28th February 1838, shall, previously to their application for admission (in the conditions of sections III. of the fund-deed) being circulated for the votes of the subscribers resident in this country, pay as a penalty for the exclusive benefit of the fund, but to be repaid to the applicant, should be rejected by a majority of votes, a sum of money equal to one moiety of his arrears of subscription to be calculated in the first instance from the 1st January 1838, to the date of his application; and in the second from the date of his application to the date of his final admission as a member, to be decided by the committee of management of the fund, after due examination of the votes of the members residing in India. Such amount of penalty to be according to the rank of applicant as provided in section IV. of the fund-deed, or the annual sum according to the following table, and that such applicant or applicants shall also pay the expense of printing and circulating the reference for his or their admission previous to the result of votes being declared.

Amount penalty to be paid on admission, reckoning from 1st January 1833, to date of admission.

Thomas Smith, Esquire, member of the Medical Board has been elected a manager in the room of Dr. James Ranken proceeded to Delhi.

Objections having been urged by some to pay interest demanded on the balance due on the 1st September 1837, the committee of management deem it necessary to notice, for the information of subscribers, that under a resolution passed at the quarterly general meeting held on the 11th July 1836, time was allowed up to the 31st August 1837, to pay up arrears without interest; but on all balances due after that date, interests at the rate of 1 per cent. per annum was made chargeable, agreeably to the provision of section VIII. of the fund rules.

The sum of Co.'s Rs. 34,010-4-2 * has been invested in treasury notes since last quarterly meeting, which makes the amount of investment in treasury notes since May to November 1837, Co.'s Rs. 123,075-6-9.

The sum of Co.'s Rs. 261-7-10 has been transferred this year from credit of unappropriated to "appropriated funds," agreeably to provision of section XXXVII, to make up deficit of amount required at credit of the letter head for value of annuities of present incumbents as per annexed account marked A.

The committee of management beg to draw the attention of their constituents to the abstract account of the pecuniary state of the fund from the year 1832-33 to 1837-38, exhibited in the paper marked B. Up to the 30th April 1837, the books of the fund have been balanced, but the accounts of 1837-38, continue open, owing to some confusion having arisen from the change of system introduced in May 1837, for remitting amount of subscription by drafts on the general treasury, instead of, as heretofore, affording credit to the fund on the Government books. In some instances, drafts have been sent for realizations effected previous to May 1837, which, from appertaining to a period before the noticed change, and, therefore, coming under the old rule of settlement with the Government offices of accounts, have been returned to the parties transmitting them, for credit to the fund in their public accounts; in other instances accumulated subscriptions of months have been remitted by one draft, thus requiring adjustment of date from which interest is to be passed to the fund; on the respective monthly payments before credit can be taken for amount of such drafts; until, therefore, this matter is settled with the Government financial officers, it is impracticable to close the books of that year, and to arrive at a correct balance; however, the unappropriated funds actually in hand on the 30th April 1838, exclusive of interest on the receipts of that year, are readily ascertainable. The amount is Co.'s Rs. 160,000, from which deduct Co.'s Rs. 48,000 reserved for probable half value of annuities to be granted to Messrs. Thomas Tweedie, T. Stoddart and Alexander Scott, the amount available on the 30th April 1837, for annuities for the coming year is Co.'s Rs. 112,000, which sum will yield seven annuities, valuing the moiety required to be made up by the fund at Co.'s Rs. 16,000 on each annuity.

As the amount of monthly subscriptions at the present rate receivable from the number of subscribers at present resident in India, is short of the value of even six annuities that the fund is pledged to grant every year, it would be hazardous, though there is a considerable outstanding balance under recovery, to estimate the receipts of the coming six months beyond the actual amount anticipated from current subscriptions; the committee have accordingly confined their expected receipts at 5,000 rupees a month, from 1st July to 31st December next. This estimated receipt, enables them to add two more annuities, they accordingly declare nine annuities for the coming year. Should sufficient surplus beyond the estimated amount appear at credit of "unappropriated funds" on the 31st Dec. next, additional annuity or annuities beyond those now declared, to the extent of such surplus, shall be offered at the quarterly general meeting to be held next January.

The allotment of the above nine annuities is as follows: two of 1834, which completes six annuities for that year, six of 1835, and is of 1836, leaving still seventeen, annuities in arrears.

To obviate expense to the fund and trouble to the Government office, whence information of those who have completed their period of service must be obtained, the committee purpose to discontinue the practice of addressing circulars, to such subscribers as have completed their period of service, to intimate the number of annuities declared; they would, accordingly, recommend that subscribers who are entitled to annuities, and may be desirous to accept of the same, should communicate their intention to the secretary to the fund before the 31st October next, as on that date the applications will be opened, and candidates declared. Applications for annuities must be super-scribed on the envelope. "application for annuity," to prevent their being opened until the day of examination. Some subscribers in India have already intimated their intention to accept annuities this year, but it will be necessary that they also observe the form here laid down. The usual advertisement declaring the annuities will be continued.

The committee beg to announce two additional subscribers since last quarterly meeting by the undermentioned new arrivals from England.

Mr. Surgeon Daniel Harding (furlough, 25th December 1836) has intimated his having sent into the Honourable the Court of Directors his request to retire from the service of the East India Company, and has requested admission as an annuitant. From this gentleman's standing in the service, it is likely that an annuity will offer for his acceptance. Mr. Surgeon Ewen Macdonald (furlough, 14th January 1836) he also expressed his wish to retire, should be admitted an annuitant.

The rate of exchange being so much in favour of this country, has induced the committee of management to remit £1,500 or Co.'s Rs. 13,584-14-6, exchange 2 2½ per Co.'s Rs. to the London agents, to meet the payments of annuities receivable from them. The amount of this remittance is drawn from the sum of Rs. 30,000 or Co.'s Rs. 32,000 reserved under section V. for "contingencies" under "appropriated funds."

In consequence of information reaching the committee of management, that certain veterinary surgeons stationed at Cawnpore, have addressed a memorial to the Governor General of India in Council, seeking admission in the same way as their colleagues on the Madras establishment, as members of the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, the committee addressed a letter on the 21st May last to the officiating secretary to the Government of India in the military department, for a copy of this memorial, with which they were favoured in Lieut. Colonel J. Stuart's letter of the 18th ultimo. The precedent established at Madras for the admission of veterinary surgeons, on the fund there, is taken as the ground for preferring the request, and hence the present applicants have, notwithstanding the negative given by the committee of management to a former application from one of their service, petitioned Government to be authoritatively nominated members of the fund in opposition to the convictions and wishes of the subscribers at large, by whom such admission would not be only considered unjust, but as utterly at variance with the constitution of their retiring fund. The Madras medical fund includes a scheme for the maintenance of widows and orphans, and affords support to sick subscribers on furlough to Europe, and grants to a certain class of subscribers a higher rate of retiring pension by £100 than the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund. The military fund of this presidency is similar in principle in these respects to the medical fund at Madras, with exception to the annuity branch that the latter has in addition; and to these advantages veterinary surgeons are admitted as subscribers to the military fund; but as the medical retiring fund of this presidency is an exclusive institution constituted solely with the view of accelerating promotion, by offering annually an additional retiring pension of £300 per annum as annuity to the six seniors of the medical service, the injustice of pressing the admission of veterinary surgeons to subscribe to it is at once apparent; the committee accordingly intend to submit a respectful remonstrance to the local Government against the encroachment contemplated by veterinary surgeons.

The advertisement convening this meeting has apprised you that the committee of management are about to be deprived of the benefit of the experience of their colleague Mr. C. C. Egerton, at their Council board, owing to his duties at the medical college preventing his attending at the meetings of the managing committee of this fund; you are accordingly to choose his successor until next election for January next, conformably to provision of section XV.

By order of the committee of management,

Geo. Hill, Secretary M. R. F.

Resolved—That the report of the proceedings of the committee of management for the past quarter just read, be confirmed and adopted.

Resolved—That the modified memorial for the boon drawn up by Dr. J. Grant, and approved of by the service at large, and read to this meeting be adopted and copied for transmission to the Honourable the Court of Directors through the regular channel and of military correspondence.

Resolved—That the thanks of this meeting be presented to Dr. Grant, for the trouble he has taken in drawing up the memorial for the boon in its present form.

Resolved—That any expense attending the getting up and transmitting the memorial for the boon, be defrayed by the resident members of the medical service at the presidency.

Resolved—That H. Chapman, Esq. be elected, until next regular election, for January, 1838, a manager in the room of C. C. Egerton, Esq. resigned.

Resolved—That the thanks of this meeting be voted to George Angus, Esq. for his conduct as chairman.

(Signed) Geo. Angus, Chairman.

MEETING FOR PREVENTING THE EXPORTATION OF COOLIES.

JULY 10, 1838.

At 4 p. m. the sheriff of Calcutta took the chair, and soon after the room became exceedingly crowded; there could not have been less than four hundred gentlemen present, among whom, we observed several distinguished natives,

On taking the chair, the sheriff read the requisition, by which the meeting had been called, and observed, that, in conducting the proceedings, he would observe the utmost impartiality.

The following resolution was then moved by the Lord Bishop:

I.—Resolved, that this meeting having heard of the commencement, continuance, and extension of a system of exporting the natives of India to the British slave and other colonies, expresses its deepest regret that such a traffic should exist, and, more especially, that it should have originated in this port, believing the system to be fraught with unmixed evils to the so called "free emigrants."

His lordship addressed the meeting in a very animated speech. He appeared there to support the cause of humanity, and to urge upon the attention of Government, the necessity of adopting every measure which suspicion, jealousy, and the utmost circumspection, suggested to wards a traffic which, to say the least of it, presented every feature of a suspicious character. Nay, he would go further to express to the Government their fear and apprehension, lest this traffic involve them in the commission of a crime, nothing like which had been heard at any period from the beginning of the world. His lordship's suspicions were first awakened on this subject by the representations in the newspapers. He did not like a trade in his fellow-creatures, and would do all in his power to put it down. Under the mask of freedom and all that was good, the blackest deeds were perpetrated. His lordship was ready to admit, that freedom of action should not be checked, but he asked, if that principle applied to men who were so ignorant as not to be aware where they were going or what they were about. Where were the laws to protect them in an old slave colony and from the tyranny of task-masters who had spent a whole life in driving slaves? These were the circumstances which had awakened his lordship's worst suspicions. He was, however, far from imputing improper motives to any; but when he called to mind what he had heard and read in his native land, as well as here, during the course of some forty years, regarding slave trade, all the horrors of those scenes recurred, and, in reviewing the struggles of freedom against slavery, the battle of humanity against brutal oppression, he could not but behold with alarm, in this rising country, just at the moment, when the dawn of freedom was about to burst upon her, the commencement of one of the greatest evils connected with commerce. These were the causes that created a suspicion in his lordship's mind, and had induced him to propose that we should go up to our paternal Government, and seek redress for the helpless coolies. His lordship observed, that when a servant was to be taken on board, a deposit of about a thousand rupees was required. He asked no more in behalf of the coolies; let their exporters do something of that sort, deposit even half that amount as a pledge for the return of the coolie to his native land, and the evil would in a great measure be remedied. Even in Rome and Greece, the mention of such atrocities afforded whole multitudes; and when, in a heathen amphitheatre, the examination of thrilled through a thousand bosoms, and made an assembly of Pagans rise as one man, and respond to this great and ennobling sentiment, shall I, a Christian, having the light of the purest faith, be backward in raising my voice in behalf of suffering humanity. (loud cheers.)

The Rev. Mr. Charles then rose to second the resolution, and addressed the chair in a most eloquent speech, of which it is impossible for us to convey any adequate idea. We shall merely attempt to give a sketch of the substance of what he said. Having complimented him, in suitable terms, the Lord Bishop, who had preceded him, he observed, that so far as it depended on strong reasoning, the cause was already won. Enough had been already stated to justify a strong representation to Government. Although the practice was prima facie a detestable one, he would admit the grand principle of the right of every body to employ his limbs, his labour, and his energies in any manner and at any place he chose, provided no public right was infringed, and that no one had a right to interfere with this freedom of locomotion and action. How then could they, in the face of this principle, go up to Government with any representation to prevent the coolie from exercising this right. He hoped he had stated the case fairly, and given to the opposite side of the question its due weight. He would now endeavour to explain the grounds on which he opposed the traffic. He rested his whole argument on the circumstance that the coolies in question were not in a condition to enter into the contract required of them in this case, and that if they did, they were not capable of defending their rights agreeably to the terms of that contract. In England, children were permitted their parents to hire out their labour for their own as well as their parents' benefit. But even in that enlightened country, the Parliament found it necessary to legislate between the cupidity of parents and masters on the one side, and the protection of those children on the other. If then the British Parliament in its wisdom had found it necessary to set this example of interference, under certain circumstances, with the freedom of action, why could not we under the most urgent circumstances go up with a respectful representation to Government. The coolies were exactly in the situation of those children, unable to help themselves, and requiring the protection and interference of Government. They were not in a fit condition to enter into the contract. It had been justly remarked, that they were more allied to monkeys than to men; their only care consisted in eating and drinking; these wants being satisfied, they thought of nothing else, and would never reflect on the probable consequences of what might befall them hereafter. They were, therefore, quite unable and unfit to understand what they were about. The police authorities, before whom these people are taken for examination, might be competent to explain to them the terms of the contract they were about to form; but were these ignorant men, the recipients of those explanations, capable of understanding them? That was the question, and there could be no doubt that these men were not capable. What idea had the bill coolie of the horrors of sea sickness, the first week or two of the voyage? What can he know here of the manner in which he will be employed at the scene of his labours, the period he will be kept to his work, the effects of a climate to which he is a perfect stranger, and to the circumstances in general of his new situation? What could all the care of the police authorities here do to protect these men from the ill treatment of their employers at the Mauritius and Demerara? What laws could be provided to defend their rights when entrusted into the hands of men who had been born and bred in an old slave colony? (loud cheers.) Could these men on the arrival of the coolies among them be at once transformed into kind and sympathizing beings? Who would there come forward to defend them when ill-treated and oppressed? Was there a Wilberforce at the Mauritius, and in every town where these coolies are to go, to protect them? Was there a Lord Brougham in every place to plead the cause of the oppressed? This then was the case, and he would put it to every one present to say whether there was not sufficient cause to go up to Government with a strong representation.

The supporters of this traffic, observed the Rev. speaker, called upon us to make out a case; he thought they were bound to do that on their part. Could they expect us to forget all that had been recorded about this trade in the history of our country? The traffic in coolies was the same in principle. What meant the application of the word trade to this business—what but that it was a slave trade? When you once turn man into an article of merchandize, you cannot but make him suffer slavery. All that had ever been said in defence of the old slave trade, was urged here, and every feature of that horrid traffic was applicable to the traffic carried on in Indian coolies. (loud cheers.) When he looked back to the history of his country, his bosom glowed with the recollection of glorious deeds. The great achievements of his country, recorded in the page of history, arose before him in review. But not all the glory of Rome and Greece—not all the laurel won by his country from Crecy to the memorable field of Waterloo, could, in his estimation, equal in glory the emancipation of the slave and the payment of those millions which flowed from the British treasury, to ransom the wretched beings. That, that was the greatest of all the acts which Britain has done. The victory of freedom over slavery has already been achieved there; was it necessary to renew the contest here, and fight the battle over again? No, let us, without impeaching the motive of any individual, raise our united voice in the cause of suffering humanity; let us with one accord appeal to all that is dear to human nature, to our country, and our religion: let us now pledge ourselves one to another, that we shall not rest until we have accomplished the great cause we have undertaken. Let us resolve that so far as the sun shines we shall not see it shine upon the slave. (Loud and continued cheers.)

Dr. Stewart claimed attention for one minute, for he had not many to spare. He held in his hand a copy of the Hurkaru of the 31st May, which contained, under his signature, the following statement:

"The system as at present followed, possesses as many checks and is fraught with as much consideration for the emigrants, as is possible."

He begged thus publicly and frankly to proclaim his recantation. The exposures made during the last six weeks by the press of Calcutta, and before the Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs, were quite enough to convince any candid mind, that these checks were inefficient that in operation they were next to useless.

In this conviction, he knew that he was borne out by many gentlemen engaged in the "coolie trade," many of whom he was proud to acknowledge as personal friends; but he begged distinctly to say, that this conviction was not the result of the eloquence or oratory of my Lord Brougham, but the press of Calcutta and the zeal of the magistrate of the 24 Pergunnahs, in detecting and exposing, in open court, the dreadful and fearful frauds to which the present system was liable.

Mr. Osborne alluded to some points in Mr. Charles's speech, which referred to something he had written concerning the coolie traffic, yet he would not dwell upon the subject, but content himself by stating that he was not a supporter of slavery. The strongest argument which had been urged against the traffic was, that the coolies could not understand the terms of the contract they entered into, and that they were not able to defend themselves. Against this he had nothing to urge; but as to the newspaper reports on which his lordship's suspicions were founded, he had not much confidence in them; for although the editors, he was willing to allow, would not misrepresent any fact, yet the reporters, on whom they depended, might act very differently. His lordship's suspicions were based on these reports; but whatever they were based upon, they amounted to nothing more than suspicion, and he did not see how a verdict of guilty could be returned on such grounds. The comparison which Mr. Charles had drawn, between the old slave trade and that carried on now, in regard to the coolies, was not, in Mr. Osborne's opinion, a just one; the likeness of the two trades was not so great as had been represented. He fully admitted the horrors of slavery; but observed that in the present case there had not been one authenticated fact adduced. Mr. Osborne dwelt upon the act of Lord Glenelg, and the authority of the Government of India, by which the coolie trade had been sanctioned, and thought that suspicions founded on mere newspaper reports, which could not be depended on, ought not to be permitted to upset a measure so supported. There was not proof of the alleged atrocities, and he did not see why the condition of the coolies at the Mauritius would be so bad as had been represented. Mr. Charles, he said, had alluded to a Wilberforce, and asked where could these coolies find such a protector? He (Mr. Osborne) would reply, by pointing to Mr. Charles himself, and say, that in him these people had found a Wilberforce, and he did not see why they could not find another at the Mauritius (much laughter). Why should the benevolence of the whole world be concentrated around this table?

Captain A. G. McKenzie bore said, that he took the liberty of addressing the present meeting, from having had considerable experience in what had been called the trade, which he denied was of that inhuman description as those who, by allowing their imaginations too much vent and their tongues to run riot, in their touching and eloquent appeals, had made it appear; and as a charge of so serious a nature as that of the Bengal community supinely conniving at a system of slavery for years past, had been preferred against us, that it was but justice to ourselves, before petitioning Government, to be guilty of so great a stretch of authority, as preventing or even suspending the emigration of free British subjects, to appoint a committee to enquire whether any such traffic existed; as by at once petitioning for its abolition, it would appear to the world an acknowledgment, that we had permitted a slave trade to grow up and flourish under our eyes, until exposed to the world by Lord Brougham.

The Revd. Mr. Boaz replied, that the principal object of the meeting was to ask Government to institute a strict enquiry into the case.

The resolution was then read from the chair a second time, and carried unanimously.

Mr. Dickens—Gentlemen.—The substance of the resolution that I am about to propose for your adoption is, that the Government shall be solicited to institute a full enquiry into the abuses said to exist in the trade, which has been commenced, of exporting the hill coolies and other natives of India, to countries where slavery recently existed; and, in the meanwhile, that the exportation of persons of these classes shall be suspended altogether. It cannot be urged against us, that this resolution pledges the opinions of the meeting too deeply without due caution; it cannot be said that we prejudge any man or any question. It is moderate, perhaps too moderate, in the opinion of some amongst the denouncers of the traffic, but I wish to guard ourselves against the imputations of being actuated by a zeal without measure or by the spirit of party. Abundant ground has been laid for enquiry by facts and circumstances of alleged abuse within the knowledge of all the world, and if it should be said that we are precluded to act without evidence, our resolutions of to-day will shew that we do not, in asking for enquiry—which is all that we ask for, except intermediate suspension, which is evidently most reasonable and necessary to prevent irreparable mischief, in case the enquiry should terminate—as I believe it will, in that degree of evidence which is sufficient, in almost every occurrence in life, on which all men act every hour of their lives, when they do things from a strong moral conviction of their propriety or necessity, without pausing for legal proof. The degree of evidence required as the basis of a special legislative enactment, which may be considered as an exception to general rules is one thing, and that is for the Government to consider hereafter; the degree of evidence that is required to justify men in assembling in a public meeting, to ask for enquiry is another, and that is all we are going to do, and we do it in the strongest conviction that common justice, and the protection of our fellow-creatures cry aloud and ask for it in a voice that will not be silenced. I understand that we shall be met by two arguments, the first that there is a law already, which is adequate to the occasion and fully sufficient for the purpose of protecting these poor, ignorant fellow-creatures of ours from all abuse and oppression in these contracts for foreign service; and the second argument is, that it is an infringement of the rights of that class of her Majesty's subjects called hill coolies or Dhangers, to prevent them from carrying their free labour to what market they will; an interference, it is urged, which militates against an abstract principle of high value, and unnecessary interference with the liberty of the natives of India. Let us examine the law of the 1st May, 1837, which Lord Ellenborough, in the House of Lords, in a late debate, seemed to take for granted was framed by the scientific wisdom of the then Law Commissioners, and let us put it to the test of critical analysis and see if it be sufficient for the purpose for which it was intended; but, before we test it by reason, let us recollect how it has been treated by authority, by very high authority, nay by the very highest authority. Lord Brougham pronounced it wholly inadequate to the end proposed; the Duke of Wellington, that great man, whom I feel that it is almost presumption in me to praise, whose sound and clear judgment in civil affairs, will in the eyes of posterity be acknowledged to be as conspicuous as his most brilliant deeds in the field of battle, and in whom a perfect and manly candour is as conspicuous, as sound judgment, has commented upon it in detail and exposed many of its defects. Lords Lyndhurst and Ellenborough, no mean authorities, have made it the subject of animadversion and not a single minister of the crown, has, as far as I can see, defended it though they expressed, as was to be expected, a full reliance that the wisdom of Lord Acland and the local Government, would be found wholly adequate to all the purposes of repression of these evils.

The law in question, gentlemen, was passed on the 1st May, 1837, and is styled Act No. 5. By the first clause, it is enacted, that no native who makes a contract on service abroad, shall be received on board any vessel without a permit from an officer authorized by Government to act in that behalf. By the 2d clause, the native is to appear personally, accompanied by the exporter or his agent, and exhibit a memorandum of the contract written both in English and the mother tongue of such native, or some language understood by such native which memorandum shall specify the nature, the term and the wages of the service as settled by the contract. Now, gentlemen, this law was framed at the time it was well known, that the great majority of all such labourers exported were hill coolies, who could not read and whose language is unwritten, and I should be glad to be informed who there is in Calcutta, who knows how to read this contract written in the mother tongue of the Dhangers? who there is who could write such a contract in that tongue? or what written language it is that the hill coolies can read, seeing that their own is one in which writing is unknown? By the 4th and 5th clause, when the officer is fully satisfied that the coolie fully understand the terms of the contract and is desirous to fulfil the same, the officer shall write a note by way of memorandum on the back of it and the contract shall be delivered to the native to be kept by him during his service. So it would appear that either the superintendent of police must have fully explained, point by point, to nearly 6,000 hill coolies, the terms of this contract to their perfect comprehension and satisfaction, or else that the law has not been executed. For my part, I believe that the law has not been complied with, from the obvious impossibility of carrying into effect its provisions. The native can derive no benefit from keeping that which he cannot understand, and which, if he could understand the language of it, he could not understand its terms, or be satisfied with them, if he did, as I shall presently take upon me to shew. But the native is to keep this for his protection, forsooth, in Demerara or Mauritius? Keep it, as a facetious friend of mine said, when asked about the place of custody, in his breeches pocket, for five years ready to produce at every turn when required for his defence from injustice! Let us then see what sort of a contract this is which is to protect him.

1st. The natives agree to proceed to Demerara to work as labourers there, upon a sugar estate the property of ——— and to remain there, if required, the time of five years.

2d. The passage of the natives to Demerara shall be paid by ——— who shall also provide a passage again to this country (India) for each native who may then wish to return; but if any individual from any cause, should be DISCHARGED, or LEAVE THE EMPLOYMENT OF ———, before the expiration of five years, such individual shall have no claim on him for a passage.

3d. The pay of the natives shall be fixed at five rupees per month for each man. The labour required from them will be that of digging holes, weeding canes, working in the sugar-houses, repairing roads and bridges, or otherwise making themselves useful, according to their ability as ——— MAY ORDER THEM. THE QUANTITY OF DAILY LABOUR REQUIRED FROM EACH, TO BE FIXED BY THE MANAGER OF THE PROPERTY: the pay of the sirdar shall be fixed at seven rupees per month, and boys at three rupees a month.

4th. As ——— must be responsible to Government that the natives shall not be a burthen to the colony in the event of their being discharged, or leaving their employment, ONE RUPEE PER MONTH shall be retained from the pay of each individual until there shall be a sufficient sum to provide a passage for each to Calcutta; should no such contingency take place, the money shall be restored, at the end of five years.

Thus, gentlemen, we see when we come to compare this contract with the 3d clause of this act, the real value of the protection it affords. I ask whether, by the terms of that contract, it is not obvious to every person of common sense, that the coolie is wholly in the power of his employer, from first to last; whether the contract does not bear on its face the brand of fraud and slavery? whether it is not plain that the very day before the five years expired the master might discharge his servants for any pretext however unreasonable, and thus relieve himself from a burdensome obligation; whether it is not as plain that he might require from him an impossible quantity of labour and thus relieve himself in a most effectual manner from the burden of his return passage? Shall I be told this would be inhuman and ought not to be supported? Why, gentlemen, in England the legislature has been obliged to protect children from their own parents, who would have forced them to labour more than sixteen hours a day. Yet, gentlemen, these contracts, such as they are, have passed inspection, and under the 5th clause of Act No. 5, the superintendent of this traffic must have professed himself satisfied that the native fully comprehended its terms, unless (as I believe) the act was wholly useless from the very beginning. By the 7th clause of it, the superintendent is to prevent the embarkation if a greater number of coolies than he thinks ought to go in one ship, if dissatisfied with the fitness of the accommodation; and by the 9th clause he is to receive a fee of one rupee, from the exporter, for each coolie he passes, thus placing his interest in direct and incessant opposition to his duties! This, gentlemen, is the act which, to use Lord Ellenborough's words, the scientific wisdom of the then law commission, or if not so, then the practical wisdom of the Governor-General in Council, aided by the science and legal philosophy of one member of the law commission, has devised, as a check to abuse, in the export of these poor people! We are bound, gentlemen, to believe that the utmost which legislative wisdom in India could do has been done. I do believe it, and it is, therefore, as well for other reasons, gentlemen, that I feel satisfied that any attempt to control the abuses ingrained in the very nature of this traffic, cannot by any law or regulation be cured or palliated, and that I vote, as I trust you will do, for abolition. I proceed to the second argument, that it is an infringement of civil rights. Not surely if protection be required by these poor men, and the contract is not understood or unfair, and these are the very points, I can hardly say in dispute, but which we urge. I say they cannot be said to be in dispute, because the latter is indisputable, and I doubt whether any one man can be found who will push abstract principles so far as to say, that in no case ought emigration to be regulated or restrained if incapable of regulation. None but a visionary, fit only to occupy a place in the island of Laputa, will pretend to urge that the right to emigration is a right, which ought in no case to be subject to limitation. Luckily, however, let who will urge those strange notions, we are in no danger of encountering opposition as such ground from the Government. The act of the 1st May, 1837, is at once an abandonment of the abstract principle, a solemn admission that the trade is fraught with the danger of abuse, and requires limitation and regulation; besides, gentlemen, it would be strange indeed if Englishmen were to be told in India, that it is the inherent and inalienable right of every subject of the crown, to visit any other part of the dominions of the crown, for the purpose of carrying his labour to the best market, when you know that we are prohibited by several sections of the last charter granted to the Company, from carrying our skill and capital and intelligent labour to the markets of a very large portion of India without license. We are in no danger, therefore, from abstract principles in this quarter, and may safely hope that the right of free emigration possessed by the hill coolies, may be curtailed for their good, when our right of free passage to this country is curtailed, and pretty largely, on the assumption that it is good for the natives of the country.

The foundation of this newly begun trade to Demerara, stands on an order of Lord Glenelg, which has also, as it seems, obtained the entire and unqualified approbation of Sir J. C. Hobhouse. By this order the traffic in coolies across half the globe, to what was lately a slave colony, is licensed. The tribe of natives of India, gentlemen, whose transportation is thus licensed and legalized, are confessedly amongst the most ignorant of her tribes; they are permitted to go to a land where those who have hitherto laboured, now that the overwhelming coercion which compelled them is removed, will labour no more; where the only relation that has hitherto existed in service, has been that of master and slave; where labour (in itself honourable) has always been stigmatized as the portion of slavery; where the late masters of slaves are the lawgivers; where the prejudices of color are entertained and produce a degree of hatred, and scorn of fellow men, of which you have no adequate conception—even to ferocity. Were these things, gentlemen, explained to the hill coolies, and did they fully, aye fully, understand them in their remotest consequences! There is something besides the contract of service to be considered, in these engagements, but the coolies were alike incapable of comprehending, what was easy to us, as what might be difficult even for us to measure. When I consider that this order in Council has been passed by Lord Glenelg, the professed protector of the poor and ignorant native of India, one of the framers of the East India act, which it is literally assumed without proof, that they will be ill treated here by every Englishman not in the Company's service, in which, viz. the 85th section, it is said, that the mere intercourse with us, gentlemen, renders it necessary to provide with all convenient speed for the protection of the natives from insult and outrage in their persons, religious, or opinions, I am amazed! Did Lord Glenelg then consider, that these men would be better protected in Demerara? Did he believe, that the coercion of the Home Government was stronger there, where the Europeans are numerous, united, and the possessors of legislative power, and who have constantly defied the authority of Parliament itself, than here, where the uncovenanted English are a scattered band, scarce 2,000 in number, at the mercy of the Government and every local authority, and where every magistrate is protected by law from affording compensation for civil injuries and secured in impunity for violence beyond the law, by the impossibility of proving a criminal intention? The more I consider this act of Lord Glenelg's, the less, I confess, I am able to understand it, for I see plainly, that while he considers it unsafe, that Englishmen in India should have free and unconstrained intercourse with the poor and timid natives in their own country, and under the protection of a strong and despotic Government, his lordship is of opinion that in Demerara they can protect themselves! I am unable to understand it!!

I shall touch but lightly on the alleged abuses of the traffic on this occasion; but I may mention here, that I have received credible information, that one individual of proved bad character has cleared a sum exceeding 40,000 rupees for head-money in this traffic, and that he is in constant communication with the police, and to the habit, in his own name, or that of his agents, of sending abroad circulars addressed to the judges, collectors and magistrates, which are countersigned and registered by the police, calling upon the authorities to aid his minor agents in the task of marching these coolies through the various districts from which they come to Calcutta. The signature and sanction of the police was doubtless well intended, but the effect of it is naturally to persuade the officers of the zillah courts and the different districts, and local police agents, that the agents, rump and kidnappers (I unhesitatingly so call them,) of this and other contractors in Calcutta, are acting by authority of the Government, and such is the persuasion of the coolies themselves! Further facts it would be premature to detail. I trust I have said enough to secure your cordial concurrence in the resolution I shall now have the honor to submit to you.

Mr. Dickens moved the following resolution.

II. Resolved, that while this meeting distinctly disavows the remotest intention to interfere with the civil rights of any class of her Majesty's subjects, or the slightest wish to press upon the adoption of Government any measure that should interfere with free emigration, it feels bound, solemnly to declare its deliberate conviction, that the hill coolies and other natives of India, who are induced to emigrate, do not understand, and are not capable of understanding the terms of the contract into which they are said to enter; and, entertaining this conviction, the meeting further resolves, that it is expedient respectfully to petition the Government to institute a full enquiry, into the circumstances of the traffic; which enquiry, in the opinion of this meeting, will necessarily lead to its prompt and total suppression, and that in the mean while, and pending such enquiry, the exportation of natives of India to any part of the world, as labourers, be suspended.

Mr. Bracken, in seconding the resolution, observed, that after the eloquent speeches of the Bishop of Calcutta and the Reverend Mr. Charles, he should confine himself to merely stating, with reference to the authenticity of the reports, which had appeared in the Hurkaru newspaper, that he had the authority of Mr. Patton for assuring the meeting, the reports were correct copies of the depositions made before him at Allipore. Mr. Bracken thought the public ought to be assured that such was the fact. He further observed, on the authority of Major Archer, who had lately arrived from the Mauritius, that the coolies were utterly ignorant of the engagements they entered into and were very ill-treated.

Mr. Osborne questioned the opportunity which Major Archer had of forming an opinion regarding the state of the coolies at the Mauritius; he had been just informed, that Major Archer was not longer than a few days at that place. In reply to Mr. Dickens, Mr. Osborne said, that although he knew nothing of the Dhanger language, he was sure that the coolies were not from that country only, but from Bengal and other provinces of the empire, whose language was understood at the police office; and he was surprised to hear that there was no one in Calcutta who spoke the Dhanger language, and could explain the articles of contract to the Dhanger coolies. On the whole, he had thought that the object of the meeting was at once to abolish the trade without any inquiry, but he was now satisfied that such was not the case; and he would therefore support the resolutions.

Mr. Bracken here expressed a wish that Major Archer should address the meeting, as he had ascertained since his first communication with that gentleman, there had been a misunderstanding, Mr. Bracken having applied Major Archer's opinions of ill-treatment to the Mauritius, which were intended to be limited to Calcutta.

Mr. Longueville Clarke, stated, that he had purposely obtained from taking any active or leading part in bringing about this meeting, although he had been treated, both in the newspapers and other publications, with apathy on this great question. When it was first mooted; Mr. Turton was in England, Mr. Dickens in the upper provinces. They had always been his fellow labourers in the vineyard of public movements, and it was to himself, therefore the taunt applied, of being forward enough in stamp act, or black act, or ice questions, or feasting favourite statesmen, but having no sympathy in the oppressed and helpless coolie. But these were not his feelings; he wished to aid, and therefore feared to injure the cause, and as his Indian career had been marked for its radical politics, he had purposely abstained from taking a lead in this question; that it might not be alleged, that this meeting was brought about to aid any political purpose. (Cheers) He rejoiced to find the names of the Lord Bishop and the Venerable Archdeacon at the head of the requisition, and he was willing to follow in their wake, for the measures proposed ought to be supported, for the sake of humanity, by every man, no matter what God he worshipped by every man, no matter what his political creed. (Loud cheers) Mr. Clarke expatiated at great length on these points, and then continued: he would now take another view of the question. It might be urged that the opposition to coolie exportation originated in local interests. If the trade would be prevented, it might injure the sugar colonies, to the benefit of the sugar planters here. It might also give to the planters here the benefit of that labour which would otherwise be abstracted. For the sake of the argument he would admit all this, and he would as readily admit that being true, it afforded no reason for stopping the trade. If the trade were not injurious to the coolie himself, then never mind the planters, the many must not be injured for the few and the labourer had a right to seek employment abroad without reference to the interests of the cultivators at home. It was in this wise spirit those absurd acts against entering artisans abroad had been repealed in England, and these were the principles of political economy he would always advocate. (Cheers) But he took up the cause for the sake of the coolies; it was for them he feared. (Cheers) He would throw overboard all questions of ill-treatment; he would grant to the traders that nothing had been proved on the subject, or if it had, he would not stop to argue from particular instances to the general principle; but he would argue from the general to the particular, and would shew the whole system to be so generally bad, that in no one instance ought it to be permitted. In taking this general view of the question, he had only to draw their attention to the condition of the coolie who was exported, and to the historical character of the men, to whom they were entrusted. The coolie was represented, as but little removed from the monkey, so wild, so deplorably ignorant, as to be utterly helpless; what then would become of him in a foreign and distant land, where his language was unknown, and his wants and habits were strange? Removed from his tribe, his relatives, his friends, from those Englishmen who, never having been slave-owners, could feel for his degraded condition; (loud cheers),—removed from the paternal care of this Government, and many of its excellent servants, what was then to save him from oppression, if it should be practised? (cheers) Now, was oppression likely to be practised? To answer this, let them look, not at this, or that instance, but at the general history of slavery, and slave-owners. (loud cheers) Go back to forty years hence, and examine the state of the slave then, his very life at the mercy of every savage driver, to say nothing of the tortures of the cart whip. True his condition had been ameliorated, but was it the act of the slave-owners, or from any sense entertained by them of humanity or justice? (cheers) No, it had been forced upon them; they had fought the battle to the hour when the slave was declared free; they had risked all the breach was stormed and carried; it was the act of that excellent, he had almost said divine, man William Wilberforce; it was the result of successive Acts of Parliament, wrong from the legislature, and forced on the slave colonies. (cheers) Such was the history of slavery, and slave-owners. History spoke their deeds, their deeds spoke their character, and was it to the tender mercies of men of that character, that the helpless coolie of the hills was to be committed. (loud cheers) This to him appeared the strong view of the question; it would be strengthened, and much strengthened, by particular instances of oppression, and the almost general system of kidnapping; but if neither existed, still the trade ought to be put down, when it exposed the avowedly helpless to a class, whose oppressions were a matter of history. (Cheers) It were better to trust their property with the common thief, their characters with the common scoundrel, then lives with the cut-throat, the honor of their daughters with the bawd, than the liberty of man with the slave-owner. (loud cheers)

Mr. Dickens spoke in reply to Mr. Osborne and others.

Major Archer now appeared on a chair, elevated above the rest, at some distance from us, and stated that it was true he had been only a short time at the Mauritius, sixteen days; but that on the neighbouring island of Bourbon he had resided some years. He said he was a hater of slavery in all its forms, and ready to shed the last drop of his blood in defence of freedom. (Loud cheers) The laws at the Mauritius, so far as they went, were good, and their leaning was towards the coolies and against the planters. Major A. had sought information from the planters themselves, and had been informed by them, that they were quite satisfied with the conduct of the coolies. Offences amongst them were of rare occurrence, and they were paid their wages with great punctuality. (hear, hear, from one or two on the opposite side of the question—perfect silence among the friends of the cause) He was ready to admit that the major part of the coolies had been inveigled into these countries, and there were now at the Mauritius 18,000 of them, besides some at Bourbon. He was willing to believe that they were ignorant of what they were about, and being naturally desirous to enquire into the matter, he had questioned some of the coolies whom he met at Bourbon, and learnt from them, that they had not yet been set to work, and that they were ignorant of the nature of what they would have to perform. On the whole, he thought these men were well treated there, and had better wages than they could obtain here.

Major Archer returned to his seat in the midst of much and confused talking, and Mr. Bracken rose to observe, that Major Archer was of course the best person to give an account of what he had seen and heard; but that he, Mr. Bracken, had understood Major Archer to state distinctly that the coolies were miserable. But it appeared, Major A. had alluded to their misery here, and he, Mr. B., had understood the expression to apply to their condition at the Mauritius. Evidence of their treatment in Calcutta was of course in abundance.

Mr. Dickens observed, that although Major Archer had been called on to give evidence on behalf of the cause, certainly by a mistake, he had mentioned one fact which afforded a strong proof in defence of the objects of the meeting. He had stated that there were 18,000 coolies at the Mauritius; but by the registers of coolies it appeared that only 6,000 had been sent; the great surplus number, therefore, must have been carried thither clandestinely, and the fact in some measure accounted for the 40 or 50,000 rupees which certain persons had made by this trade, and to which he, Mr. D., had before alluded.

Mr. Dawson observed, that 10,000 coolies had been imported from Pondicherry.

The resolution was then put and carried nem. con.

Dwarkanath Tagore rose to move the third resolution.

III.—Resolved, that in order to carry into effect the foregoing resolutions, the following petition be adopted, signed and presented to the Honorable the President of the Council in Council at the earliest convenient day.

The institution of an enquiry, being the object of the present meeting, he would reserve for a future and more suitable opportunity the details of facts, which he had in store as to the manner in which these poor natives were inveigled and carried out of the country. He would have much pleasure in affording all the information in his power to any committee that might be appointed to enquire into the business. Major Archer had stated that, in point of wages, these coolies were better off at the Mauritius than here. How could this be, when out of the four or five rupees they get they have to pay largely to the duffadars and others concerned in this trade? But even granting that their wages were higher at the colony, how were they to provide for their families here, who were certainly exposed to the greatest misery during their absence? So far for the benefit of the high wages conferred on them. Ever since the administration of Lord William Bentinck, flogging as a punishment had been abolished here; but the benefits, of that mode of punishment were yet in vogue at the Mauritius. All he could say, was, that the sooner his countrymen ceased to relish such benefits the better for them. (Much laughter and loud cheers) He alluded to the time when the act of Government affecting the exportation of coolies was under discussion at the Marine Board. At that time his friends Mr. Parker and Mr. Greenlaw drew up a sketch of the provisions which were thought necessary; but these provisions were set aside by that great legislator, Mr. Macaulay, who considered them too detailed, and an act being promulgated after his peculiar laconic fashion, the poor coolies were hurried on board by wholesale, under its provisions. If the details he alluded to had been allowed to stand, those poor creatures could not have been transported from their native land with such wonderful facility. Dwarkanath Tagore observed, that in Calcutta and in all the factories throughout the country, eight months was the utmost limit to which a native labourer could ever consent to remain apart from his family; how these men had become all at once willing to leave, not only their families, but also their country, and remain in exile from their native land for so long a period as five years, was to him a perfect mystery. He could only account for the fact by supposing that, as it had been asserted, these men were totally ignorant of the terms of the contract they entered into, and that their long stay at the colonies was beyond question a measure of coercion. He really could not account for the motive which could induce so many of his ignorant countrymen to cross the ocean at the suggestion of the duffadars, unless it were a philanthropic wish to produce for mankind a better quality of sugar than could be produced in this country. (Loud cheers and laughter.) The speaker then read the resolution a second time.

The chairman observed, that although the meeting appeared to be unanimous in regard to the resolution he thought it necessary that the draft of the petition be read before it was sanctioned. The Revd. Mr. Boaz then read the petition, and, at its conclusion, observed, that Major Archer had alluded to the high wages the coolies received at the Mauritius, and their happiness at that place. He would ask Major Archer if that happiness consisted in leaving their families and native land for a pittance of four or five rupees a month? He would ask Major Archer if that happiness consisted in being crowded on board ship and suffering the misery of sea sickness? He would ask Major Archer if that happiness consisted in the untimely death of so many who had been thus expatriated? He would finally ask Major Archer, if the happiness he alluded to consisted in working from five in the morning to five in the evening, which he was told the Indian coolies were obliged to do at the colonies, the climates of which were different from that of their native land? If these questions could be satisfactorily answered he would be satisfied but not till then. As the case stood, it reminded him of some old English lines which ran thus;

Humpty Dumpty sat upon a wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall;
And all the King's horses, and all the King's men,
Could not get Humpty Dumpty up again.

The fall which the coolie traffic had received that evening, appeared to him a great fall, such an one that it could no more recover from it than poor Humpty Dumpty. (Loud laughter.)

The Revd. Mr. Morton said, he had been at the Isle of France, and the price of food there was double of what it cost here. He also commented on the desitution to which the wives and children of these unthinking emigrants were exposed during their absence, especially in such seasons of scarcity as the one which has lately afflicted the upper provinces.

Captain Harrington, the Master Attendant, had no wish to offer any criticism or remarks on the conduct of Government, or any of the public authorities concerned; but at such a public meeting, and on such an occasion, he felt it his duty to state, that murderers and the vilest malefactors, transported from this country for crime, had always some provision made for their comfort on board during the voyage; but in regard to the coolies, he solemnly declared he had never been called upon to provide any comfort for them, or to examine into their accommodations. He had witnessed two or three hundreds of them packed off on board like so many sheep and oxen, & practice the like of which he never remembered in the whole course of his official career.

Mr. Dickens, alluding to the remarks of the Rev. Mr. Morton on the dearth of food at the Mauritius, commented at some length, and was followed by Mr. Dawson, who observed, in reply to him, that the coolies were provided with rice, dall, ghee, and even chilly, to which the last speaker had alluded particularly.

Dwarkanath Tagore. What will you say about the desitution of those whom these unthinking people leave behind, their wives and children, on whose condition the Rev. Mr. Morton has already commented?

Here Mr. Longueville Clarke suggested a verbal alteration in the petition: he proposed that the President in Council be substituted for His Lordship, which was agreed to, and the resolution carried unanimously.

Mr. Roger Dias, felt himself called upon to take up some observations that had been made by Mr. Osborne on the Fouz-dary reports. Mr. Dias declared himself as the author of those papers, and said he had seen Mr. Patton in the room, who could tell the meeting that the reports were authentic and accurate in every respect. Mr. Osborne was pleased to question the integrity of reporters. Mr. Dias begged to remind the meeting, that Mr. Osborne, but a very few months ago, frequently reported the Supreme Court cases, for the Hurkaru, could not Mr. Dias question their authenticity; but he would not do so. Mr. Osborne could not account for the authenticity of reports, but how would that gentleman account for a change of principles in public characters? Did not every body know that certain individuals had been engaged for a number of years with the radical press, during which time they strenuously supported all liberal views; but just as emolument became a paramount consideration, those individuals turned tones, to the astonishment of all [Order from the high Sheriff and others at the opposite end of the room.] Mr. Dias apologized for having given vent to his feelings, but he had been urged to it by the constant and gratuitous aspersions which Mr. Osborne had indulged in, in the course of the debate. He would now call the attention of the meeting to a case that had transpired on the previous day, at the Allipore Court. Mr. Thomas Francis, a gentleman, who Mr. Dias believed is in some way connected with the coolie trade, had written a letter to the magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs, and yesterday personally attended the court, and enquired, under what charge Sgt. Floyd arrested some coolies on the old Ballasore road near Sulkeah. The magistrate said the men had not been apprehended on any charge; but that they were detained pending an enquiry, that was in progress, regarding a system of kidnapping that had been extensively established in the 24-Pergunnahs. The magistrate was glad, however, of the opportunity, and requested Mr. Francis to examine the men himself, as the magistrate felt convinced he would feel satisfied that he was deceived by the duffadars. Mr. Francis then examined the coolies one after another, and every man said, "I will not go to the Mauritius; I have been deceived. The duffadars promised me employment here; they have threatened, abused, and maltreated me." Mr. Francis took note of the replies he got from the coolies, and declared that the duffadars had entirely abused the confidence of the European agents, and had duped the coolies. Mr. Francis then observed, that he could not account for the declaration the coolies had made before Captain Birch, before whom every one of them had willingly consented to be shipped. The magistrate said, he flattered himself that he had much experience, and from his constant practice was very familiar with the native tongues; but he would feel it impossible to make the coolies understand the nature of an agreement of a term of apprenticeship for a certain number of years; that they would get certain wages, a portion of which would be held in hand as a security for good conduct, and that the coolies would be allowed certain clothing and diet during the middle passage. The coolies are too ignorant to understand the nature of a compact containing so many peculiar provisions, and the magistrate believed the police authorities must have found great difficulty in affording sufficient explanations to the coolies on the points adverted to by him. Mr. Francis retired satisfied.

Mr. Dias would now ask the gentlemen engaged in the trade, if the above was not a clear case? and would

Mr. Osborne require a stronger case in support of the facts which had been exposed by the press. "I (said Mr. Dias) have no interest in the business: it was accident alone that enabled me to bring to light a nefarious practice, and I believe that, if Mr. Osborne had been in my situation at the time, he would have felt himself bound to bring the case to the notice of the authorities. I thought, gentlemen, the cause of humanity, of my fellow-creatures, loudly demanded the course I pursued in the case of Oojawah! (cheers and hear hear.)

"That case (continued Mr. Dias) has been instrumental in exposing the villany of the crimps and duffadars, and has exposed a system, which would have gained stability, as it had spread itself over the whole country, so far as Cingah and Benares, and to countries on the south of Calcutta. People of all castes were kidnapped—not only Dhangers but Buglies, and even Rypoots and Brahmins. A timely check has been given to a system abounding in danger to the happiness of this country. I (said Mr. Dias) applied yesterday to the magistrate for subpoenas for certain respectable members of the H. C. Bengal Marine, by whom I proposed to prove, that in the month of May of the past year, two ships left this port with coolies, one of them, the Ajor, took out fifty men, five women and three children. The meeting would feel surprised to hear, that those poor creatures had been exposed to the inclemencies of that dangerous season of the year (the season from May to August being the most precarious for navigation in the Bay) and had been all put on board the long boat of the ship, which was held on by a hawser. This, gentlemen, (said Mr. Dias) was the case. A hawser was the only means of safety for the lives of fifty men, five women and three children! What do the supporters of the trade say to such treatment? and I believe Captain Harrington can bear me out in this assertion.

"I have also, Mr. Sheriff, (continued Mr. Dias) to bring to your notice another fact that came to my knowledge, from a very respectable quarter—a gentleman whose authority is not to be questioned. A few evenings ago, at a party comprising several of the most respectable members of the Civil Service, and many of the most influential merchants, a merchant, in conversation, mentioned that a ship left this port on Thursday or Friday last, with a number of coolies; that in the river the coolies took flight, twenty jumped overboard and several of them were never heard of again. We have not yet any authentic report of this sad tale, and, perhaps, no one will come forward to enquire into the circumstances by which twenty human beings were lost, (hear, hear and cheering) I did not come here with a prepared speech, or with the intention of making one. I have watched the opinions that have been promulgated, by means of one portion of the press. I said before I had no interest in bringing forward the case of Oojawah; I again repeat it; but you will admit, that a subject in which we were all so deeply interested, should not have been selected as one for facetious remark, or one that should have been dealt with lightly. You have heard the facetious remarks that have this evening fallen from a gentleman; I will now ask if those remarks were timely, or applicable to the case of the father, the widow, and the helpless? I was present at almost every proceeding held by the worthy magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs. One day an old man, apparently of about sixty or seventy years of age, came crying before Mr. Patton, and said, that his son, his only child and support, had been stolen from him, and that he would now have to beg for maintenance. Among the forty-eight coolies released at Sulkeah, one man said his brother and his daughter had been kidnapped. A widow declared her son, her only support, had been taken away by the duffadars. Are such cases to be dealt with facetiously? Are we to be deaf to such cries? I feel, gentlemen, I have done my duty, and I trust, I will, at least, have your support in bringing to light such facts as may come within my knowledge or observation. (Cheers.) In the case of Oujahwah, I thought I was doing right, at least that it would be the means of detecting others, and we know that it has mainly contributed to the detection of the prison at Bhowanipore." Mr. Dias concluded by observing, that he would leave his conduct to be examined by the public, and if they attached any blame to it, he would hope to be forgiven; but he felt convinced, that if his efforts were commendable, they would obtain for him that boon which every good act was sure to win. (Loud cheers and applause.)

The Revd. Mr. Morton, said that he had been disgusted by the levity of Mr. Osborne's speech. He again adverted to the destitution of the families of those who had been exported, and in a most animated manner, denounced the heartless man who could treat such subjects lightly.

Captain Harrington reiterated that he had never been called upon to look to the comforts of these coolies, although he had always been called upon to provide for the vilest of criminals.

Mr. Lenth proposed the thanks of the meeting to the worthy chairman, which was carried by acclamation, and the meeting broke up at about 7 p. m.—Hark., July 21.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF INDIA.

A general meeting of this society was held at the Town-hall, on Wednesday the 11th July, 1838.

The Hon'ble Sir E. RYAN, President, in the Chair.

Present:—Dr. Wallich, v. p.; Mr. C. K. Robison v. p.; Dr. Hufnagle; Mr. W. Storm; Dr. Strong; Messrs. G. A. Prinsep, A. Grant, G. F. McClintock, A. Colvin, E. Stirling, W. Ainslie, D. Hale, T. S. Kelsall, W. K. Ewart, C. Trebeck, W. F. R. Ferguson, R. S. Strickland, A. Harris, A. Porteous, E. S. Hodges, R. S. Strickland, Jno. Jenkins, Thos. Bracken, Thos. Lench, Baboo Cassinaut Bose; Messrs. H. Cowie, Jas. Church, O. T. F. Speed and John Bell.

Visitor:—Mr. Colin Campbell.

The proceedings of last meeting were read and confirmed.

The following gentlemen, proposed at the June meeting, were duly ballotted for and elected members of this society, viz.

Major H. Cox; H. Fieeth, Esq.; H. J. Leighton, Esq.; Colin Campbell, Esq.; Brigadier General Sir Thos. Anbury, v. c. n.; W. R. Logan, Esq.; Baboo Peary Mohun Day; W. F. Dawson, Esq.; Major J. D. Parsons; Colonel L. R. Stacey.

The following gentlemen were proposed as members, viz.

Jeffrey Finch, Esq., of Tirhoot, proposed by the secretary and seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

Colonel G. W. A. Lloyd, Duijeeling, proposed by the secretary and seconded by Dr. Wallich.

Capt. C. Dallas, Artillery, proposed by Capt. H. J. Wood, and seconded by the secretary.

W. Bell, Esq., C. S., proposed by W. Cracroft and seconded by the secretary.

Alexander Holmes, Esq., proposed by G. A. Prinsep, Esq., and seconded by the secretary.

E. D. E. Shuttleworth, Esq., proposed by Thos. Leach, Esq., and seconded by W. W. Kettlewell, Esq.

J. D. Herklots, Esq., proposed by Chas. Hufnagle, Esq., and seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

Geo. Barton, Esq., Coolbariah, proposed by W. Storm and seconded by Jas. Crook, Esq.

Dr. McCosh, proposed by Dr. Strong and seconded by C. Trebeck, Esq.

Motion of which notice was given at last meeting.

The motion by G. A. Prinsep, Esq., and seconded by C. K. Robison, Esq., to appropriate the sum of 500 rupees for procuring cotton-seed, from South America, was brought forward and discussed, upon which Mr.

Prinsep requested to withdraw his motion, in favor of another upon a more extended scale, viz.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Proposed by G. A. Prinsep, Esq., and seconded by C. K. Robison, Esq., "that the sum of one thousand rupees annually be set apart for procuring cotton seed (of every variety of cotton in estimation) from South America, the Western Coast of Africa, China, Manila, and all places capable of affording good cotton seed not already resorted to by the society for that object."

REPORTS.

Read the report of the caoutchouc and oil seeds' committee, on certain specimens of caoutchouc and dammer varnish, grass and grass otto, submitted for their opinion. Ordered to be made over to the committee of papers.

Read the report of the agricultural committee on the state of the sugar-cane plantation, in the Society's nursery, at a meeting held at the residence of Dr. Wallich on the 28th June, 1838.

The following communications were read:

From Brigadier Genl. Sir Thomas Anbury, dated Saugor, Neibudda territories, June 28th, acknowledging the receipt of the secretary's letter of the 15th June on the subject of Mr. Alexander's melon, produced from seed presented to the Society last year by Sir Thomas. Mentions that this has been an unfavorable season for melons at Saugor,—but encloses part of the rind of one produced in his garden, of twenty-seven inches circumference, promises to send down some more seeds from the same description of melon, and forwards a few seeds of the Semool cotton.

Two very large and well flavoured pomegranates, were presented through the secretary by a gentleman who grew them at Chinsurah, and promised to send a memorandum,—which, however, has not been received, and the donor's name is accordingly unknown.

A packet of tobacco seeds of sorts, and samples of three varieties of tobacco, grown in the branch society's garden at Burdwan, was presented by Dr. Cheek.

From Jeffrey Finch, Esq., dated Tirhoot, 5th June, acknowledging receipt of secretary's letter of the 18th idem, regarding the sample of apples presented by him to the Society, and with reference to the request conveyed therein, encloses a memo. detailing the mode adopted by him in the cultivation of his apple trees.

From N. Alexander, Esq., dated June 14, forwarding a melon grown in his garden from seed presented to the Society by Sir Thos. Anbury, the weight of which was 5½ lbs. and its circumference 24 inches.

Memo.—This melon was sent a day too late to be presented to the Society, but it was acknowledged by those who saw it, to be the finest specimen of melon they had seen in Bengal, and in flavor it was exquisite.

From M. Crow, Esq., dated 22d June, forwarding a bunch of purple grapes, produced at Serampore, in the garden attached to the Vicarage, under the Revd. Mr. DeMello. The bunch weighed 2½ sicca weight, and was of fine flavor; but the fruit was so thickly set together, that the grapes were squeezed into all manner of shapes.

Had the method successfully adopted by Mr. Milner, been known, the appearance and size of the Vicar's grapes would have been very different.

From Dr. Wallich, dated June 21st, enclosing a letter to his address from Captain Jenkins, dated June 13th, forwarding a sample of mishmee wool.

From Dr. Wallich, dated June 21st, annexing a postscript of a letter to his address from the Revd. C. E. Dillberg, tendering his services to the Society, to translate the transactions into the Bengalee language.

From M. McLean, Esq., dated June 23d, forwarding, on the part of J. Balestier, Esq., American Consul at Singapore, two bundles of sugar-cane, and a sample of raw sugar, entrusted to his care.

From J. Balestier, Esq., dated Singapore, March 20th, presenting to the society, as specimens of the produce of his plantation, with two varieties of cane, green and yellow also a small sample of raw sugar.

Mr. Balestier denominated the green the "Salangore cane," and the yellow, he thinks, is the Otaheite. He craves the indulgence of the society to the sample of sugar alluded to (the first ever made on the island), which had been manufactured in a hasty manner, and with imperfect materials. Promises hereafter to give the Society the result of his labors.

Note by the secretary.—The canes were received and sent over to the Society's nursery, but Mr. Masters reports them all dead. They were very fine specimens as to size, averaging ten feet in length, and some of them eight inches in circumference. The sugar was in a very small pot, had been exposed to the sea air, and the molasses had not been drawn from it, consequently it was in a high state of fermentation.

From the superintendent of the Baptist Mission Press, dated June 23d, intimating his willingness to undertake the reprint of the transactions vols. 1, 2 and 3, 300 copies of each, at the rate of 1-14 per page, amounting in the aggregate to 1,732 rupees.

Memorandum.—The 1st volume is now in the press.

From Mr. C. N. Villet, dated Cape Town, May 11th, giving cover to invoice and bill of lading for 6 cases of vegetable and flower seeds, shipped on board the Abberton, for the use of the Society, amounting to sicca rupees 1,390, for which he has drawn on the Society at 30 days' sight.

From J. Tennant, Esq., dated Cape Town, 3d May, advising despatch per Abberton, of a parcel of seeds forwarded on the part of Dr. A. R. Jackson.

Note. —All these seeds have arrived in excellent order and condition, and are now under distribution.

From T. Wilson, Esq., M. D., secretary of the Agricultural Society of Comillah, dated 23d June, in reply to the secretary's letter of the 15th idem, respecting the offer of rewards and medals by this Society, to encourage the introduction of European vegetables at that district, states it as the opinion of their committee, that the amount would be better awarded (by pecuniary rewards only) to stimulate the growth of tobacco, grapes, sugar-cane, &c., superior to what is already grown.

The president moved, and it was resolved by the meeting, to refer the matter of Dr. Wilson's communication to Mr. Bell, as the proposer, and Mr. Storm as seconder of the motion, for any suggestions they may have to offer on the point alluded to.

From Jas. Colquhoun, Esq., dated 11th July, presenting a sample bunch of guinea grass, grown in his garden from that received from Mr. Bell. The height of this grass is eight feet.

From Jas. Pontet, Esq., through Wm. Storm, Esq., a bottle of bamboo seed, collected in the valley of Rajmahal.

From J. W. Laidlay, Esq., Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of Moorsshedabad, dated July 6, acknowledging receipt of secretary's letter of the 15th ultimo, and returns the thanks of the Society for the offer therein conveyed, viz. the award of fifty rupees and two silver medals to encourage the culture of European vegetables in that neighbourhood.

Advices despatch of four grafts from mango trees of a superior variety.

From Captain C. Barnett, dated Beaur, June 8, acknowledging receipt of guinea grass and cotton seed. States, that the former had vegetated freely.

Annexes receipt furnished by Capt. Wm. Barnett for preventing the ravages of white ants, in sugar-cane.

From W. Dent, Esq., dated Arrah, June 21, mentions having imported two rams for competition for the Society's medal at the shew fixed for the 1st February next.

Suggests a modification of the conditions on which medals are awardable for horned cattle, which is to the effect that on arrival the committee shall report their opinion, so as to render their exhibition of the animals unnecessary in February.

Proposed by C. K. Robison, Esq., v. p., who was called to the chair, on Sir Edward Ryan's departure, and resolved by the meeting that, as the cattle thorn is calculated to throw an interest into the Society's proceedings, and Mr. Dent's suggested modification would lead to much confusion and inconvenience, it is not expedient to alter the conditions already published.

From T. P. Marcus, Esq., dated June 30, presenting to the Society a mound of banmutti seed paddy.

From Dr. W. Montgomery, dated Singapore, June 13, returning, with reuerce to his former letter of the 31st May, the silver medal, awarded to that gentleman by this Society.

From H. T. Prinsep, Esq., secretary to Government, general department, dated June 27, acknowledging receipt of secretary's letter of the 23d idem, conveying a request of the Society, respecting, the transmission of fruit trees, &c. from the botanical garden at Saharanpore.

In reply thereto, states, that the application should have been addressed to the Governor-General for the north western provinces.

From N. Stemell, Esq.; Secretary to the Inland Steam Navigation Company, London, dated February 8, requesting, on the part of the Company, to be furnished with replies to a list of queries, respecting the facilities, &c. of the navigation of the rivers of India.

From E. B. Stevenson, Esq., dated Cottyam, June 2d, requesting, on the part of the Travancore Governor, to be supplied with copies of all the volumes of transactions past and future.

Resolved.—That the secretary do furnish a copy of this Society's transactions gratuitously to the Governor of Travancore.

From Mr. H. Mansell, dated June 5, tendering his services to make models of agricultural implements for the Society.

From Monsr. Parquir, dated July 2d, enclosing copy of the Cornucopie of the 14th April last, containing an article on the culture of beet-root in America, &c.

From Dr. Wallich, dated July 7th, presenting, in the name of Capt. Jenkins, two articles received by that gentleman from Capt. Hannay, viz. a sample of Rosin called "Mekai" by the Assamese, and some "Naga Cosseir Bark."

From Major Sleeman, dated Jubbulpore, June 27, gives cover to a paper on the subject of a blight which attacked the wheat and other crops in central India in the year 1831, and mentions the sad effects experienced by the inhabitants in 1833, owing to the consumption of this diseased grain.

From Wm. Dunbar, Esq., Assistant Surgeon, Ramghur Light Infantry, Dorunda, Chota Nagpur, dated June 30th, giving some account of a disease termed "Goorgoora," or "Nahurroora," which had been very prevalent among the horned cattle in the neighbourhood, during the past hot season.

From Colonel W.G.A. Lloyd, dated Dorjeling, June 29th, in reply to secretary's letter of the 21st June, offers his services in distributing among the inhabitants of that district any variety of seeds that may be furnished to him by the Society. Gives some information respecting the seasons and capabilities of the country.

Memo.—The secretary had sent to Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co., some Cape vegetable seeds, for distribution among the natives.

From L. A. Harris, Esq., dated July 9th, forwarding some specimens of cane grown on the high lands in the Soonderbuns.

From R. W. Chew, Esq., dated July 9th, presenting a bunch of the Pesang Gadung, or large plaintain of the Straits.

From Dr. Wallich, dated — July, presenting on the part of Major Archer, a box containing a leaf of the Cactus, with a few insects of the true grand finé cochineal. On receiving this box the secretary found only six diminutive insects, and in subsequent closer examination four of these were found to be dead. Major Archer states, that all the large insects were destroyed on board the Cavendish Bentinck by cockroaches, when he was too ill to look after them.

Mr. George Prinsep, in allusion to the above interesting communication, drew the attention of the meeting to the following extract of a letter dated London, March 7, 1838.

"As soon as a fitting opportunity can be found for conveying some plants of the true Mexican cactus and real cochineal insect, they will be forwarded. I have arranged the matter with Anderson, of the Chelsea garden, who will provide the plants, and the insects can be had at Claremont."

Mr. Prinsep added, that this extract is from the letter of a gentleman who had been much in South America, and had latterly devoted much attention to entomology.

The thanks of the meeting were ordered to be offered for all communications of an interesting nature and presentations.

JOHN BELL, Secretary.

Town-Hall, Calcutta, July 11, 1838.

ADDENDUM.

A copy of the journal of the Madras Literary Society in No. 19, was received and submitted.

Two copies of a pamphlet, received from the Agricultural Society at Bombay.

Mr. Bell presented a copy of his external commerce of Bengal, 1836-37 and 1837-38.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Calcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's Apartment, the 7th July, 1838.

G. Voss, Esq., proposed at the last meeting, was elected a member of the Society.

Letters from the following gentlemen were read :

From T. Holmes, Esq., Assistant Surgeon and W. Bell, Esq., Surgeon H. M. service, announcing their wish to withdraw from the society."

From A. Brunton, Esq., Librarian to the College Library, Edinburgh, expressing the thanks of the curators for the IV. part vol. 8, of the transactions of the Society, and the two first of their Quarterly Journal.

From Sir James McGregor, Baronet, Director General of the Army medical department, to the same purport.

From Dr. G. Gregory, London, to the same purport, and forwarding his last report upon the smallpox hospital. Dr. Gregory expresses himself much interested in the papers relative to vaccination contained in the 2d No. of the journal, hoping that he shall be able to avail himself of them, in some researches regarding the varieties of vaccine lymph in which he is now engaged.

From Capt Taylor, of the Madras Cavalry, forwarding a communication from Major Ousley, of Hussingabad, stating that the latter gentleman had found the sinking of wells in the police chokies to Baitool, had quite put an end to the jungle fever which used formerly to attack the dawkmen and travellers who resided there, and recommending this plan to the notice of Government. This was communicated in a letter from Mr. J. Hutchinson.

From Mr. J. Taylor, of Dacca, stating that he had the pleasure to forward four specimens of urinary calculi, and three examples of a curious intestinal worm. These preparations were laid upon the table.

From Messrs. Carr, Tagore and Co., forwarding prospectus of a New Inland Steam Navigation Company.

Dr. Goodere, communicated to the Society that he had been engaged in a correspondence with Mr. Hutchinson, secretary to the Medical Board, upon the subject of franking the society's letters. Mr. Hutchinson, conceiving that he had not the power to frank the Society's communications, had referred the matter to Mr. H.T. Prinsep, who confirmed Mr. Hutchinson's view of the matter, stating at the same time, his readiness to take that office upon himself, as he was empowered to do by the late post office regulations.

A copy of Dr. O'Shaughnessy's 1st report of the Pharmacopoeia Committee, was presented by the author.

Dr. Stewart's paper upon "the extraction of farga calculi from the bladder, was then read and discussed. The paper was accompanied by a very large specimen of calculi taken from one of the patients, who formed the subject of the paper. It weighed 8 oz. This was followed by the reading of a paper on the effects of arsenic, upon the bodies of those employed in the manufacture of shell lac, by the same gentleman.

At the close of the meeting, some discussion having taken place with respect to the present state of the Society, it was proposed by Mr. Egerton, seconded by Dr. Spry, and carried unanimously,—"That a committee assemble to enquire into the cause of the number of recent retirements and the means of restoring the Society to its former flourishing condition; the members to consist of the president, Messrs. McClelland, Spry, Voss, and the secretary."

MEDICAL OFFICERS' MEMORIAL.

TO THE HONORABLE THE COURT OF DIRECTORS OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

THE HUMBLE MEMORIAL OF THE MEDICAL OFFICERS SERVING ON THE BENGAL ESTABLISHMENT.

MOST RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH.—That your memorialists in again appealing to your Honorable Court are impelled by motives of a force and character never before experienced by them, in regard to their most unlooked for and peculiar exclusion from the benefits of the late boon, which has been conferred on the officers of the Indian army, in which your memorialists hold their commissions.

2. Though relying entirely on the favor of your Honorable Court extending alike to all departments of the army, yet the absence of specific allusion to the medical service in your Honorable Court's despatch of the 23d December, 1835, on the subject of the boon, and the information derived from the local Government that they are not included in its advantages, render another appeal to your Honorable Court, on the part of your memorialists necessary—in the confident hope that the marked distinction between them and the other commissioned officers of the army (Chaplains included) now existing may be removed.

3. In making this appeal they trust that no charge of pendency or disposition to frivolous complaint, can lie against your memorialists, when it is considered that the privilege of pension according to length of service, has been exclusively enjoyed by their more fortunate brother officers of the army during upwards of a year and a half; while many of your memorialists, seniors of such retiring officers, are obliged, from not being included in the same privilege, to remain in this country with declining energies and health.

4. Though some of its members are occasionally lent for a time to the civil service in the same manner as purely military officers sometimes are, the medical department of India is essentially a military body, obnoxious to all the hardships and many of the dangers of the military life, in addition to the fatigue and anxiety of its own peculiar duties in peace as well as in war.

5. Apart from the indefeasible identity of the military and medical services, giving both an equal claim to such an indulgence as the specific scale of pensions for periods of service without reference to rank, secured to purely military officers and chaplains by the late indulgence of the Court: Your memorialists humbly conceive, that there are both essential and incidental circumstances in their own position that would render the terms of that boon especially applicable to the medical service. The first of these is the small number of grades in the medical compared with the purely military service, and the consequently longer period required to pass through them to the higher. In proof of this may be submitted the simple fact that the ten Bengal senior surgeons are men of thirty years' service or upwards, who, according to the rule of their branch of service now in force, are entitled to no higher reward than a pension of £191 per annum, nor will they be entitled to more till they have attained the next higher grade of superintending surgeon, which some of them probably will not reach in less than seven years, having to serve therein moreover for two years before becoming entitled to the pension of that grade; whereas, the purely military officer of the same period of service, whatever his rank, may retire on the boon with an annual pension of £365.

6. The next circumstance they would urge in claim to the boon, is the abolition in January and March, 1835, of two of the then eleven Bengal superintending surgeoncies. The attainment of the higher grades, the point on which medical pension is at present made dependent, is thus retarded to nearly twenty-nine-thirtieths of the medical service, to the same degree that promotion would to that of the lower grades among the purely military officers. By the sudden abolition of eighteen majorities from the army list. It was on men of thirty years' service or upwards that this stoppage in medical promotion first fell; and when to this retardation is added the singular condition entailed on the medical service only, by which the pensions of the superior grades cannot be attained without parties serving for certain fixed periods in these grades—your memorialists confidently hope that your Honorable Court will see the propriety, not to say justice of extending to the entire military department, the principle already adopted towards the majority of a specific scale of pension, graduated according to actual duration of service, and not the accident of rank attained.

7. A third important circumstance is the difference of age at which the military and medical officers enter the service. According to the rate of promotion from the grade of assistant surgeon to that of surgeon, calculated by those of the head of each list for the last eight years, the cadet will, on an average, reach the captaincy two years sooner than the cotemporary assistant surgeon does the surgeoncy—while the latter must be in his 23d year before entering the service—and the former is eligible to join at sixteen. Indeed the obstacles to the retirement of the seniors of the medical list, must produce such an obstruction to the promotion of the more than 300 below them, that the disproportion of eight years now existing will be very much increased.

8. Your memorialists would also respectfully beg to draw your Hon. Court's attention to the adoption of the principle of pension for length of service, independent of rank, that has lately taken place in the medical department of the royal army, where, to remove all disheartening circumstances, and with a view to guarantee to every rank a fair and proportionate remuneration, it was determined that, in lieu of rank and promotion, surgeons and assistant surgeons should be paid and pensioned according to length of service.

9. Your Honorable Court having adopted this equitable principle towards our brother officers of the purely military and ecclesiastical establishments, while various circumstances besides those adverted to above, seemed to point a fortiori to the justness of its application to the medical branch; your memorialists, in their distress and embarrassment at their exclusion from the same boon, sought in vain for an adequate explanation of it; but the rumour at length reached them, that in your Honorable Court's sanction of the Medical Retiring Fund, the explanation was afforded that had escaped their research, though they could not for a moment imagine that your Honorable Court considered the slight assistance afforded to the subscribers of the Medical Retiring Fund, of about one per cent. on their balance in the treasury, as an equivalent to the medical service generally for their exclusion from the benefits of the boon: First, because the latter is a clear unqualified free gift, open to all, while the fund must be purchased and paid for by each individual member, to the irreparable loss of so much money to his family, should he die before his turn of retirement come, or should his life be prolonged but for a year or two after retirement; Secondly, because the boon from its nature is universally attainable, while the fund costs a price that must necessarily, and for a long period, render it partial and limited in its operation, gratefully as its advantages in other respects are acknowledged; while some, from the embarrassment of debt, or the necessity of reuniting all their savings to England for the support of their families, are unable to join the fund at all, rendering the support of it a heavier pull on their brethren who are members; and the medical officers of your service who have given up promotion, are of necessity entirely excluded from its benefits—so that the non-extension of the boon to the service at large, falls with peculiar hardship on them.

10. It does not appear that your Hon'ble Court have prohibited the establishment of a retiring fund among officers purely military, should such hereafter be found practicable. Nay, it would appear by a general order of the Right Honorable the Governor General, dated Simla, 25th April, 1838, repealing the Honorable Court's orders of 6th June, 1798, requiring from officers about to retire on pension a declaration on oath, that he had not received and would not receive, any pecuniary or other gratification or compensation for so retiring; by which order encouragement is held out to the army for the purchasing out of military officers:—the principle of the Medical Retiring Fund being thus actually extended to the army at large, and with more effect than will ever be the case with the Medical Retiring Fund in favor of your memorialists.

11. The only direct pecuniary aid afforded by your Hon'ble Court to the medical fund as interest nominally at six per cent. or one per cent. above what can be procured in the market on such balance as may from time to time be at its credit in the Government treasury. This advantage, the character of which comparatively is as nothing in lieu of the boon, your memorialists are prepared at once to relinquish, should your Honorable Court deem that exaction necessary in extending to your memorialists the benefits of the boon.

12. In conclusion, your memorialists beg to reiterate their respectful and confident reliance on the consideration, generosity and justice of their Honorable masters, in deciding upon the prayer of this petition, and to express their earnest hope, that in the (to them,) most important matter of fixing the length of service that shall entitle medical officers to retire on the boon pension scale; due allowance will be made for the mature age they had attained, before being admitted into the service, (those of their number who have given up promotion included) this principle having heretofore been strictly adhered to by your Honourable Court in regulating the relative periods of service of their purely military medical and clerical officers, and that in consideration of their more advanced age, they were allowed to retire five years earlier than your military officers: Your memorialists would, therefore, respectfully repeat their prayer, that with reference to the present or boon scale granted to the military, officers a similar proportion should be conceded to them, which would enable the officers of your medical establishment to retire—

After 18 years' service (full included) the pension of Capt.
Do. 23	do.	do.	do. Major,
Do. 28	do.	do.	do. Lt. Col.
Do. 33	do.	do.	do. Col.

Provided always, that such rates shall in no wise interfere with the pensions of superintending surgeons and members of the Medical Board, who, it is earnestly prayed, may be eligible to their respective pensions on attaining their respective grades. In consideration, too, of the current period of the boon scheme of retirement already lost to your memorialists; they ardently intreat a speedy as well as a favourable answer from your Honourable Court to this humble, unanimous, reasonable and very respectful appeal for extension to the medical branch of the army (with the existing relative terms of probation in each rank) of the boon lately conferred on their military brothers, and your memorialists, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

TRAVELLING ALLOWANCES TO COMMISSIONERS OF REVENUE AND CIRCUIT.

Mr. Browne, the commissioner of the division of Bhaugulpore, submitted an application to the Revenue Board, to be allowed the usual expense for travelling charges, whilst actually out on routine duty. The like application had been previously submitted by Mr. J. J. Harvey, the commissioner of the 16th, or the Chittagong division, whose duties had been lately much increased, and who, in order to discharge them efficiently, was compelled to be constantly moving about his district, to superintend his subordinate officers in the discharge of their duties, and a part of whose division bordered on the Dacca district. He represented that since the Court of Directors had fixed the salary of the Commissioners at Co.'s Rs. 35,000 per annum, many of the divisions had been abolished and their districts absorbed. The divisions that remained, had thus necessarily increased the duties of the commissioners, whilst their emolument had been decreased; a measure which he supposed the Government never contemplated at the time it reduced their salary, as it was fraught with injustice and by its recent operations, the commissioners of revenue were losers of 2,000 Company's rupees each per annum. He begged that the same indulgence as had been allowed to Mr. Gordon, the commissioner of the Dacca division, may be extended to him. Another application to the same nature was submitted by Mr. Jackson, the commissioner of the Moorshedabad division, who stated, that his district extended 400 miles in length, and that his duties were very arduous. Mr. Halliday, the secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the revenue department, in submitting these applications to Mr. Mangles, the Secretary to the Government of India, in the revenue and judicial department, recommended that the Vice President in Council be pleased to sanction the additional allowance herein claimed, to these applicants, although it stated that Mr. J. J. Harvey's case was not analogous to that of Mr. W. Jackson's, and the Sudder Board of Revenue likewise backed the claim of Mr. Browne, who is applauded as a very zealous and active servant of the Government.

Mr. R. D. Mangles, the secretary to Government of India, in the judicial and revenue department, in reply, informed Mr. Halliday, the secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the revenue department, that the Vice President in Council had been pleased to adopt the suggestion of His Honor the Governor of Bengal, and to authorize to these applicants, as likewise to all Commissioners or any other officer pro tempore discharging that duty, the sum of Co.'s Rs- 230 per month, during the period that they may be actually on active duty beyond the limits of their Sudder stations; and the secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the Revenue Department was further directed by the secretary to the Government of India in the judicial and revenue department, to inform the secretary to the revenue Board, of this resolution of the Vice President in Council, and to direct him to communicate the purport of it at his earliest convenient opportunity to these applicants, as likewise to all the commissioners of revenue and circuit, under the surveillance of the Sudder Board of Revenue, for the Presidency of Bengal at Calcutta.—Hurkaru, July 14.

UNION BANK MEETING.

A meeting of proprietors took place on Saturday, at the bank, pursuant to advertisement, when H. M. Parker, Esq. was elected to the chair.

Mr. Parker professed his readiness to do his duty to his fellow-citizens to the best of his ability; he hoped that the usual practice of Calcutta meetings would, on this occasion, be departed from, as there was business of some importance to be brought before the proprietors. He trusted that gentlemen who desired to speak would get upon their legs and address the chair one at a time, and that all noisy and unnecessary conversation might be avoided; he hoped in enforcing order in these respects, that he should have the support of the meeting.

The secretary then read the following report:

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

Of the operations of the Union Bank, from 1st January to 30th June, 1838.

The accounts on the table are so full and satisfactory, that little is left for me to say.

It will be gratifying to the proprietors to know that the operations of the bank continue to exhibit a profitable result, under its increased and gradually increasing capital.

The net profits actually realized by the bank during the last half-year, amount to Co.'s Rs- 253,961-7 2. This yields a dividend of 13 per cent. and leaves a surplus of Co.'s Rs- 3,165-1-10, or if it shall appear advisable to this meeting to declare a dividend of 12 per cent. or 60 Rs- per share, amounting to Rs- 231,504-5-4, a surplus of Rs- 22,457-1-10, may be appropriated to a reserved fund.

Since the last half-yearly report, there has been an increase in the amount of fixed deposits carrying 5 per cent. interest of about 5 lacs.

The capital stock paid up on the 1st January last, was..... Co.'s Rs- 3,115,000 0 0
And since that period.... ditto 1,522,349 8 1

Making the paid-up capital, ditto 4,637,349 8 1

This sum includes Rs- 721,764-11-7, of the 40 lacs capital recently declared and now in course of being paid up.

The circulation of the bank's notes for the last half-year, has averaged steadily 379,568, and has done so, notwithstanding the monetary panic in the bazar in consequence of the failure of several shroffs.

JOHN STORM, Actg. Sec.

RESOLUTIONS.

I.—Proposed by W. Carr, Esq. and seconded by T. Dickens, Esq. carried

That the secretary's report just read, is approved and be published.

II.—Proposed by W. C. Hurry, Esq., and seconded by R. Cowasjee, Esq. carried

That the accounts now submitted, are approved and passed by this meeting, and closed accordingly.

III.—Proposed by T. Holroyd, Esq., and seconded by J. P. McKilligen, Esq. carried

That a half-yearly dividend at the rate of 12 per cent. or 60 rupees per share be now declared.

The meeting then proceeded to the election of Directors, by ballot, when much discussion took place, respecting the manner of voting and the appointment of scrutineers, Mr. Dickens was eventually proposed by R. J. Bagshaw, Esq. seconded by Longueville Clarke, Esq. and unanimously elected sole scrutineer. The ballot then commenced.

The scrutineer reported the following gentlemen duly elected directors for the ensuing year:

Rustomjee Cowasjee, Esq. G. F. Remfry, Esq.

William Carr, Esq. Longueville Clarke, Esq.

MR. D'ANSELME'S CASE.

The meeting then proceeded to the consideration of a claim for Rs- 340, made by Mr. D'Anselme as his proportion of profits arising on one share, part of nine shares, forfeited, and sold at the general meeting of the 16th February. The acting secretary read the correspondence that had taken place respecting this claim, together with the several decisions given by the directors thereon; when it was moved by Colonel Young, and seconded by N. B. L. Baillie, Esq.

That the resolutions of the successive Court of directors in the case of Mr. D'Anselme be confirmed.

It was moved as an amendment by T. H. Gardner, Esq. and seconded by W. F. Fergusson, Esq.,

That Mr. D'Anselme, be allowed to profit by the sale of the shares. The original motion carried.

VOTES AND QUALIFICATIONS.

The chairman then read the following requisition, for which this meeting was also made special.

To JOHN STONE, Esq., Acting Secretary Union Bank.

SIR,—We request, that the directors of the Union Bank will be good enough to make the annual general meeting of July next special, for the purpose of proposing to the proprietors the following resolutions:

1st.—That in consequence of the greatly increased capital of the bank to eighty lacs of rupees from thirty, at which it stood on the 4th May, 1837, the limitation fixed by the resolutions of that date to the stock which might be held by each proprietor, namely, 150 shares of 1,000 rupees be extended in the same proportion of 3 to 8, that is, 400 shares.

2d.—That the qualifications of a director be extended from its present amount of 5,000 rupees to ten, as the capital has been doubled.

3d.—That no proprietor, after the present election shall be eligible for a director's seat until he has held his qualification for 3 months, being the time fixed for enabling a proprietor to vote.

4th.—That the scale of voting, according to the amount of stock held, which now stops at 10 votes for 50 shares, be extended in the rate of one additional vote for every 10 shares above 50.

We are, Sir, your obedient servants,

T. DICKENS, DWARKANATH TAGORE, W. CARR, R. WALKER, J. CULLEN, R. SCOTT THOMSON, SAMUEL SMITH.

Moved by T. Holroyd, Esq. and seconded by T. Dickens, Esq. carried unanimously.

1.—That in consequence of the greatly increased capital of the bank to 80 lacs of rupees from 30, at which it stood on the 4th May 1837, the limitation fixed by the resolutions of that date to the stock which might be held by each proprietor, namely, 150 shares of 1,000 rupees, be extended in the same proportion of 3 to 8, that is, 400 shares.

Moved by Colonel Young, and seconded by A. St. L. McMahon, Esq.

2.—That the qualifications of any director to be hereafter elected, be extended from its present amount five shares to ten, as the capital has been doubled, and that a declaration be required from each candidate that he holds the required number of shares, bona fide on his own account, or for self and partners, in a Calcutta firm, and not as trustee, agent, executor, administrator, or assignee, or collaterally on any other account, and in case any director shall, during his term reduce his interest below 10 shares he shall thereby be disqualified.

The lines in italics were proposed by W. C. Hurry, Esq. adopted by the mover and seconder, and carried, subject to confirmation at next general meeting.

Moved by T. Dickens, Esq., and seconded by T. Holroyd, Esq. carried unanimously.

3.—That no proprietor, after the present election shall be eligible for a director's seat until he has held his qualification for three months, being the time fixed for enabling a proprietor to vote.

Moved by T. Dickens, Esq. and seconded by L. Clarke, Esq. carried unanimously.

4.—That the scale of voting according to the amount of stock held which now stops at 10 votes for 50 shares, be extended in the rate of one additional vote for every 10 shares above 50; and that each proprietor, prior to voting, if required, shall make the same declaration as provided for in the second resolution.

Thanks were then voted to the chairman and scrutineer, and the meeting broke up.—Markku, July 16.

MEETING OF THE GLOBE INSURANCE OFFICE.

A meeting of the members and proprietors of the Globe Insurance office was held this morning at 11 o'clock, at the office of Messrs. Eglington, MacLure and Co. when the following resolutions were passed:

Proposed by James Fergusson, Esq. and seconded by T. S. Kelsall, Esq. and carried

That the accounts now submitted, shewing the office to be above par Co.'s Rs 170,094-12-2, or Co.'s Rs 1,545 per share, are approved and passed by the meeting.

Then two resolutions followed, erasing the names of some of the proprietors from the proprietary list, on account of their not having paid up the instalments on their respective shares, their names we do not think it proper to mention in this place.

Proposed by A. D. Macleod, Esq. and seconded by D. B. Syers, Esq.,

That, as it appears that the dividend of one thousand rupees per share, declared at the last general meeting, approached upon the deposit of one thousand rupees per share, which it was resolved, at the fourth half-yearly meeting held on the 16th January, should be reserved as moiety of the deposit provided for, in the sixth article of the deed of co-partnership; the secretaries be directed to set apart and invest in Company's paper the amount of one lac and ten thousand rupees, which shall be kept distinct from the general funds of the office, and receipts granted to each individual shareholder for one thousand rupees to be considered as a fixed deposit.

It was subsequently resolved, on account of the great loss incurred in exchange in this country,

That the agents at home be instructed to remit five thousand pounds, and that in future they shall remit every six months, whatever sum, they may have on their hands, after deducting all ascertained claims.

And also resolved,

That the agents in London be requested to advertise in all the newspapers of any great circulation at Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester, and Leeds, that they are prepared to take risks on lives on the same terms as all the other insurance offices in London.

The Globe is the oldest established insurance office in Calcutta, it dates its commencement in the year 1814, when there were but five other similar institutions to compete with it, these latter have, however, increased so rapidly during the last few years that their number now amounts, as we are informed, to twenty-two; and, of course, the competition naturally arising from so many insurance offices being at once in the field, has been and is of so formidable a nature, that it has considerably cramped the operations and reduced the emoluments of the Globe office; but notwithstanding all these drawbacks, we cannot but view with pleasure that the Globe is in so flourishing a condition, its last dividend was a thousand rupees per share, and now, though it has not been enabled to declare another similar dividend at this meeting as at the last, from reasons stated in the above resolutions, yet our readers will perceive that the shares are considerably above par, and we think this old established insurance office deserves encouragement at the hands of the public.—Calcutta Courier, July 16.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE CALCUTTA FAMINE RELIEF FUND.

In publishing the annexed account of receipts and disbursements for the information of subscribers, the committee of the fund for the relief of the distress in the north western provinces, desire to take the opportunity of giving a brief account of their proceedings, and of the measure of success which appears to have attended the efforts made to alleviate the fearful calamity with which that part of the country has been afflicted.

It has been the object of the committee, to ascertain as accurately as possible, first in what districts the pressure of the distress was most severe, and secondly, the means and mode of relief available to and adopted by the local authorities; and they have endeavoured to regulate the distribution of the funds at their disposal, according to the information which they have been able to obtain.

The famine appears to have been most grievous in the districts lying along both banks of the Jumna, Muttra, Agra, Etawah, and Humeerpore. The whole district of Mynpoorie and some pergunnahs of Cawnpore were equally afflicted. Futteghur and Allygurh suffered also, but in the latter district, the consequent distress appears to have been comparatively small.

It is well known, that in consequence of the relief early and liberally afforded, great numbers of the destitute flocked to Agra to such an extent, that the distress may be said, in some measure, to have concentrated itself there. The aid, which the annexed statement shews to have been afforded to the Agra society by this committee, is in no way proportionate to the demand thus created; but after their first remittances, the committee were made aware, that the greater part of the sums collected at Pombay and elsewhere, had been placed at the disposal of the Agra society, and the Calcutta committee were thus enabled to apply their funds to the relief of the pressing necessities of other districts.

The assistance afforded has, of course, been limited, but it is gratifying to learn, that wherever it has extended it has been effectual; and it is certain, that it has been the means of saving many thousands from otherwise inevitable death. At every sutler station in the distressed provinces, relief has been given to all who needed it: and for the last three months, it has been very generally extended to the interior of the districts through the medium of commercial gentlemen and of the native officers of Government.

The mode of relief generally adopted, has been the distribution of wholesome prepared food, but money also has been given occasionally. As far as the committee have the means of judging, the measures adopted, appear to have been judicious, and the exertions of all concerned in the highest degree praiseworthy.

Not only have the hungry been fed, but hospitals have been established at almost all the stations for the care of sick and enfeebled. At the larger stations these would seem to have been conducted in a most extensive and efficient scale, and at others, all has apparently been done, which the means available to the resident allowed.

The setting in of the rains and the return of the season for agricultural labour and production, will, doubtless, abate; and, should the season continue favourable, gradually remove the existing distress. But there must still under the most propitious circumstances be many: the aged, the sick, widows, and orphans, who will require the continuance of eleemosynary aid, the committee therefore cannot yet consider their commission as fulfilled; they will continue as heretofore to receive subscriptions and distribute them to the stations where they may appear to be most required.

In illustration of what has been said, the committee subjoin for general information, a brief abstract of the expenditure for the month of May, at the stations of Muttra, Futteghur, Mynpoorie, Etawah, and Humeerpore. No accounts from Agra and Cawnpore have yet been received. It should be observed, that the disbursements for June, have been (the committee are informed,) on a much larger scale than for the previous month.

NATIVE SUPERSTITION.

An indigo planter, residing in the Sylhet district, was one day attracted to a solitary spot in a neighbouring jungle, by a large concourse of the inhabitants who had collected there. On arriving at the place, he found a joggy sitting under a large tree which had all the marks of venerable antiquity. He was surrounded by a crowd of wandering spectators, many of whom had brought him presents of various kinds.

On inquiry into the cause of this exhibition our planter was informed, that the personage seated under the tree, was a great saint, and had worked wonderful miracles in proof of his sanctity. They said that the very beasts of the forest were obedient to him, and that he could make the tigers lick the dust of his feet. As a proof of his power, they said he could make the tree moan and silence it when he liked. The gentleman anxious to be an eye or rather ear witness this prodigy, requested the faquir to make the tree speak. The devotee, nothing embarrassed, commenced muttering certain incantations, and then ordered the tree to speak. It was not obeyed, the order was repeated, and on the third bidding a hollow funeral sound issued from the tree, and was distinctly heard by all, who were gathered round, and in a few minutes it ceased at the faquir's bidding. The sound was any thing but human. It struck terror into the admiring crowd, and other men who would dare to express a doubt of the genuineness of this miracle, could scarcely hope to return home safe from the fanaticism of the mob.

Our planter himself was at a perfect loss to account for the strange sound he had heard, and though too sceptical to believe in such miracles, he was obliged to retire for the time without being able to satisfy himself in the least. He, however, resolved to clear up the mystery, and for this purpose he chose from the dhangers employed in his factory, about eight strong and resolute men, and promising them some buxis and a good treat of what they very much like, eau de vie, proceeded well armed to the enchanted tree in the dead of night. The faquir, it was known, would not be found there at this hour, but there was a general belief that whoever would first injure the tree would be struck dead on the spot, and the whole country would suffer some calamity. It was, therefore, with some difficulty that he had induced the dhangers to follow him on this strange expedition. Our planter was, however, the first to strike the axe to the root of the tree. Several strokes followed each other from his axe; but he stood safe, and the dhangers seeing this, set about the work in earnest. In an hour the tree was felled to the ground; and to his great joy and satisfaction, our planter discovered the whole cause of what he had witnessed during the day. As the tree fell the same strange voice which had been heard in the day again issued from the fallen trunk, the gentlemen advanced towards it with a lantern and having got to the exact part of the tree from whence the noise issued, he discovered a large hollow, the orifice of which was shut up with a curious sort of bamboo net work, so cleverly interwoven, that a fly could scarcely escape through. From underneath this issued the sound. With the help of an axe this contrivance was torn off, when, behold, out rushed a swarm of bees towards his lantern, the only light about the place. On further examination it was discovered, that a bamboo had had been passed through the bottom of the trunk of this half decayed tree, which at one end touched the bee-hive, and at the other, at the foot of the tree, was joined to another laid horizontally in the ground, the outer end of which had a crook pointing upwards, by pressing which the whole machinery could be shaken and the bees disturbed to make their usual buz.

The discovery of this imposture soon spread itself over the country, and the fakir succeeded with difficulty in making his escape from the infuriated mob, who, now that the whole had been unrivelled, were as anxious to chastise the fellow who had duped them, as they had been before to support his cause against a very unbelieving sceptic. — Hurkaru, July 15.

PETITION AGAINST RESUMPTION.

TO THE RIGHT HON'BLE LORD AUCKLAND,
Governor of Bengal.

The humble petition of the undersigned zemindars, talookdars, and landholders of Dacca, Mymensing, and Tipperah.

SHewETH,—That your petitioners feeling aggrieved by the proceedings of the revenue authorities in the matter of resumption of alluvial lands, beg most respectfully to be permitted to submit to your lordship for consideration the following circumstances, praying that your lordship will apply such remedy as the nature of the case may require.

It is known to your lordship, that great alarm has arisen among the landholders in the settled provinces of this presidency, from the proceedings of the special deputy collectors now employed on resumption duty, and that your lordship may be the better able to appreciate the degree of distress and distrust now prevalent; we beg leave most respectfully to detail, as shortly as is compatible with clearness, a few cases that have occurred in these districts within the knowledge of your petitioners.

1st. In the year 1831, an awmeen from Tipperah unexpectedly made his appearance at Punea, a village on the bank of the river Dolasorry, near the city of Dacca, armed with full powers to measure and assess a track of land newly formed there. Upon inquiry it was ascertained, that a suit under Regulations II. of 1819, had been carried on quietly to its natural conclusion by the collector of Tipperah, altogether unknown to the parties in possession; and that in August 1829, a decree in favour of Government had been passed by that functionary, directing the assessment of the land, and declaring that it was attached to mouzas Punea and Puchumdee, pergunnah Bickrampore; although neither Punea nor Puchumdee belonged to Bickrampore, and no part of that pergunnah ever was previously found on the northern bank of the Dolasorry.

Before danger was suspected, the time for appeal had gone by, and, although Bickrampore has no connexion whatever with the Tipperah district, and, although it could have been shewn that the lands of, at least, twenty talooks paying revenue in Dacca, had been broken away, not more than fifteen years before, and this new formation thrown up on the site they had occupied, all remonstrance was vain; the complaints of those who remonstrated were either disregarded, or they were told they ought to have appeared in time; and the chur is now in possession of the Tipperah revenue authorities.

2d. When this part of the country was surveyed by Major Rennel, many years before the decennial settlement, the main body of the Ganges occupying a wide channel flowed to the southward of Rajnuggur, and your petitioners are also enabled to state, that the course of the river remained unaltered until several years after the settlement was made, and, consequently, that the ground between the Ganges and Megna, south of Dacca, was all included within the boundaries of settled estates paying revenue to Government.

Your petitioners beg to state, that, about the year 1800, the Ganges began to change its bed, and in the course of a few years, instead of pursuing its course towards the sea by Gourmuddy, joined the Megna about seven miles below Rajabarry; thus cutting out a channel of about 25 miles in length, varying in breadth from two miles to five; occupying a space equal to nearly one hundred square miles, and destroying upwards of one hundred and fifty thousand begahs of the most fertile and valuable parts of several pergunnahs. Your lordship's petitioners respectfully submit, that in process of time, as the new bed of the river encroached on the right, or on the left bank, in its course, new lands began to be thrown up, and were occupied as they became susceptible of cultivation by the several talookdars and zemindars, whose lands had been lost on the first irruption of the river, and the lands thus recovered were gradually being brought under cultivation, when the whole, or nearly the whole of the new formations were claimed by the collector of Dacca as now alluvial lands, not included within the boundary of any settled estate, or as belonging to certain small talooks, which having been in possession of poor people, unable to pay rent after the loss of their estates, were of necessity sold and purchased on account of Government. Under one pretence or other new formations in this new branch of the Ganges were taken possession of by the collector of Dacca several years ago, though the proprietors had continued for many years to pay the jumma assessed on their talooks, whilst the talooks were in the bed of the river, and quite unproductive. Your petitioners recognize the undoubted right of Government, to the possession of a share in the new formations, proportionally equal to the space occupied by those estates purchased by Government; and your petitioners believe it is not the wish of your lordship to take from them then right in the soil conceded by the British Government in 1793, and preserved by many years payment of revenue when the land was unproductive; but, nevertheless, such is the effect of the resumption laws as lately administered. Not fewer than twenty small estates were abandoned in October and January last, after having been preserved at a great sacrifice for many years, and at the final sale for 1243, at least fifty more must be suffered to follow.

In the case above referred to, notice was served on ten or twelve individuals, and the decrees of the resumption courts at once swept away the property of upwards of one hundred persons.*

3d. Howallah Pctumber Sein, separated from pergunnah Rajnuggur or Boozargomedpore, at a jumma of 557-6-19, became, at various periods, divided into a number of distinct talooks, paying each, separately, revenue to Government.

In process of time, several of those talooks were lost by the encroachment of the river, and the revenue ceasing to be realized, the sudder board directed the separated portions to be reannexed to the estate, and the entire jumma to be recovered rateably from the proprietors of the remaining talooks, a measure to which they were compelled to submit, although, at the same time, they had proof before their eyes, that Gourmuddy and other lost talooks had been thrown up by the river again; and having been taken possession of under Regulations II and III, of 1819 and 28, more than compensated Government for the loss previously sustained, and to balance which, their estates had been burthened with additional jumma.

4th. At the period of the decennial settlement, the main body of the water of the Berhanpooter ran to the eastward from Sana-tygunge and joined the Megna on the border of the Sylhet district, but since 1800, the course of the river has changed, and nearly the whole stream has forced a passage directly south from Jamal-pore, and in one or two or sometimes three wide branches the waters of Bethampooter join the Ganges a short way below the head of the Chundnaw by this irruption from 400 to 600 square miles of land; has been lost to the zemindars and talookdars of Burbazoo, Caugmawry, and Attya; yet the resumption process is in full operation along the banks of those new rivers, and although many lacks of begahs were lost by the landholders, who paid, and still pay the jumma contracted for in 1798, several large pieces of alluvial soil thrown up by the river are claimed by the revenue authorities, and notwithstanding the palpable nature of the evidence of recent loss, ought even to have precluded inquiry on the subject, large tracks of country have passed into the hands of the Government.

Your lordship's petitioners most respectfully submit those cases for consideration, without wishing in any way to impute blame to the revenue officers now employed in the districts. They have brought them to your lordship's notice in illustration of the hardships they are suffering, and as fair specimens on a large scale of the operation of the resumption laws. Your petitioners entreat your lordship to be persuaded, that what is here shewn to have been the manner of disposing of the new formations thrown up by the Ganges and Bethampooter, has also been enforced in regard to the breaking and formation of chun land in the smaller nullahs with which the country is intersected.

Your petitioners further beg your lordship to consider, that the actual amount of property taken from their hands, forms only a portion of the evil inseparable from the process of resumption as lately conducted.

The chief and most obvious road to favour or promotion in the revenue department has been the demonstration of zeal in aid of the collector's inquiries after lands subject to reassessment: many people in every zillah have found employment, first in preliminary inquiries, and subsequently in measuring lands wherever the collector, or deputy collector has been led, by information true or false, to suspect a defect in the title deeds of the occupants: and thus numerous spies and goondas have found encouragement and opportunity to prey on the tears of the landholders, for the prudent as well as the timid, will occasionally pay money to avoid the trouble and expense attending a suit in the special courts appointed to try Government suits, where the judge in the first instance, at least is a party directly and necessarily prejudiced against them.

Your petitioners learned with great satisfaction, some time ago, that your lordship, in consideration of the alarm excited, had thought proper to suspend the inquiries of the special deputy collectors in certain cases referring to new formations, but your petitioners now learn, that the interpretation given to the instructions issued by your lordship, will limit the relief to a few unimportant cases of direct up jheels, leaving the special deputy collectors at full liberty to pursue investigation into all cases of alluvial formation, whether important or trifling.

When your petitioners learnt that your lordship had become aware of the alarm and distress excited by the proceedings of the resumption officers, in case of new formations, they entertained a hope, that your lordship would extend your inquiries into the principle by which the resumption officers have been guided in their proceedings.

Your petitioners freely admit, that Government is entitled to all actual new formations not occupying the site from whence land belonging to permanently assessed estates has been removed by the river; and to all new formations thrown up in the place of estates, which having been previously lost, have ceased to pay revenue to the state, but several of the cases submitted with this petition will prove how widely this limit has been passed, and your petitioners humbly entreat your lordship to reflect, that, the process of destruction and renewal is in constant progress, on the banks of the river in this country. That not one begah of new land can be thrown up until an equal amount of soil has been broken away by the river, and your petitioners respectfully affirm, that, unless a stop is put to the proceedings of the resumption officers, or unless they are expressly limited to the cases noted in your lordship's letter to the sudder board, of May 21, 1837, there must be an end to the confidence hitherto reposed in the permanency of the settlement made in 1793, and at no very distant period an end to the settlement itself.

Your lordship's petitioners, therefore, pray that you will take this petition into your consideration, and issue such orders as you may judge necessary, to protect them from the harassing investigations of the special deputy collectors.

And your lordship's petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.—Hurkaru, July 27.

MAHARAJAH BUNNOWARRY LOLL BAHADOOR versus RAMTONG DOSS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Leith shewed cause against the usual rule obtained in this cause, that publication of the deposition and evidence taken do pass. The learned counsel relied upon affidavits, stating that six witnesses remained to be examined, and that one of these resided at Nuddeah. Further time had been granted to the other side for filing additional interrogatories; and his own client now prayed, that the rule to pass publication might be enlarged for one month.

The Advocate General, on the other side, contended that the application to enlarge the rule was made merely for the purpose of delay, and that no satisfactory reason had been shewn, why further progress had not been made in the examination of the six remaining witnesses.

Sir Edward Ryan.—Take a fortnight's further time.

BUCKRAR SING versus PITTAR, LATTY AND Co.

This was an action brought for the value of certain precious stones, alleged to have been sold to the defendants for the price of Co.'s Rs. 1,744. The plea amounted to a special plea of payment, setting forth that the plaintiff sent the bill of parcels with a receipt or voucher thereon, to which the defendants gave their signatures by way of acceptance; this security was negotiated in the bazar by the vendor-plaintiff, who was alleged in the plea to have received the full consideration from his indorser, and the amount of the acceptance was paid when due by the defendants to the holder. To this plea, the plaintiff replied, that he had revoled the order to pay before the amount was paid by the defendants to the holder, and that such sum was paid in their own wrong. To this replication there was a general demurrer.

Mr. Prinsep was called upon by the Court to support the replication. The learned counsel contended, that the sole question was, whether such an order to pay could be revoked at any time before payment, and whether a payment after such an express revocation was valid in law or not. The order was clearly revocable. The voucher, with its acceptance and indorsements, was not a bill of exchange or a negotiable security of any kind whatsoever, and it had been decided over and over again, that a bare authority to pay money, or to do any act, not coupled with an interest, was revocable at pleasure.

Sir Edward Ryan.—That does not touch the question involved here. The plea expressly avers what is tantamount to a payment, and this is not denied in the replication. How does the question of revocability affect the matter, when the consideration has been actually received?

Mr. Prinsep. — With submission, that is not altogether the correct mode of putting it. I admit, that the plaintiff upon the pleadings appears to have received the consideration from his indorser, before the revocation, but the payment made by the defendants was after the revocation. Now I contend, that the latter is the only material point. It may be, that circumstances afterwards occurred which rendered inoperative the consideration received by the plaintiff from his indorser, and if so, he had a right to countermand the order to the defendants, and the subsequent payment made by the latter would thus be in his own wrong.

Sir Edward Ryan said, the Court had no doubt upon the point, and would not call upon the counsel for the defendants (the Advocate General and Mr Barwell) to support the demurrer. This is substantially a valid plea of payment. The sum in question has passed from the defendants, and the stipulated consideration appears upon the face of the pleadings to have been received by the plaintiff. No question of revocability or non-revocability arise at all. It is true, that a chase in action is not assignable, and if this instrument had not been a negotiable security, the indorsements would have passed no property, and have shewn no consideration. Yet, even then, if money had been received upon the indorsement, a subsequent assent would be implied on the part of the plaintiff, and his claim would be satisfied. But in point of fact, these vouchers are negotiable instruments by the custom of trade and dealing in this place, and are effected by the same rules of construction as bills of exchange. The replication is bad in substance, and the demurrer must be allowed.

Judgment for the defendants.

In DaCosta v. Coordeo, whereas the plaintiff demurred to the defendant's plea, in an action upon a promissory note, the Court this day intimated an opinion that the plea was not good.

The important cause, Radakissen Mitter v. The Bank of Bengal has been fixed for Wednesday.

One cause stands for hearing on the common law board, to-morrow (this day).—Hurkaru, July, 3.

TUESDAY, JULY 3, 1838.

(Before Sir Edward Ryan, Chief Justice.)

THE EAST INDIA COMPANY v. WILLIAM CUMBERLAND.

Mr. Cockane opened the pleadings. The plaint contained two special counts in assumpsit, and the plea was the general issue.

The Advocate General stated, that this was a claim for Rs. 2,000, brought by the East India Company against Captain Cumberland, commander of the ship Roxburgh Castle, for the value, services rendered by their steamer the Irrawaddy, in towing the said ship during the space of four days, from Garden Reach to the river Hooghly out to sea, evidence would be given to prove the contract, and the fulfilment on the part of the plaintiffs. Messrs. Roussac and Co. were the agents of the Roxburgh Castle, and, in January 1837, wrote a letter, at the request of Captain Cumberland, to Mr. Johnston controller of the Government steam vessels, requesting a steamer to tow the ship out to sea. In the course of the same month, Captain Cumberland gave a certificate, under his own signature, certifying that the Government steamer, Irrawaddy, had towed the Roxburgh Castle out to sea, and had been occupied four days in the performance of this service. The learned counsel apprehended, that the claim be fully made out upon proof of the above facts.

Mr. Johnston was called as a witness, and the letter of Messrs. Roussac and Co., and the certificate signed by Captain Cumberland, were then put in evidence.

Mr. Prinsep for the defence, contended, that the plaintiff had not established their claim, inasmuch as no authority was shewn to have been given by the owners of the Roanburgh Castle to Captain Cumberland, to hire a steamer for the towing of the vessel out to sea. The action was certainly brought against Captain Cumberland himself, but the learned counsel apprehended, that it could only be under peculiar circumstances, and where the contract had been specially made with the commander himself, that the latter could be treated as the principal party, and sued personally upon the engagement.

Sir Edward Ryan said, that this was a very plain case. If it had been established, that the contract was not with this party, that would have been a complete answer to the action, but the whole evidence was the other way. Of the owners of the ship, nothing appeared upon the face of the proceedings before the Court; the agents had applied for the services of the steamer at the request of the captain, and a certificate of the services rendered, had been signed by the captain himself. There was no ground of defence whatever to the action.

Verdict for the plaintiff.

A long issue case stands for trial to-morrow, Wednesday (this-day), and it is doubtful, therefore, whether the cause of Rudakhissen Mitter v. The Bank of Bengal fixed for the same day, can be heard.—Hurkaru, July 4, 1838.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 4, 1838.

THIRD TERM.—PLEA SIDE.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

GUNGANABAIN DUTT AND ANOTHER versus FREEMUTY OONOPPOORNAH DOSSEE AND ANOTHER.

The Court was occupied until a late hour in the hearing of this case, and the farther hearing was adjourned before the plaintiff's case had closed. We believe, that there are a host of witnesses on both sides, and in all probability the trial will last a considerable time. A report will appear when the case is closed.

It may be merely mentioned at present, that this is an issue directed from the equity side of the court, to determine the validity of a will alleged to have been made about the month of May 1837, by one Oodichurn Doss. As usual in such cases, there is likely to be a considerable amount of hard swearing on both sides and the usual quantum of perjury.

Adjourned.—Hurkaru, July 5.

JULY 5TH AND 6TH 1838.

THIRD TERM.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

GUNGANABAIN DUTT AND ANOTHER versus OONOPPOORNAH DOSSEE AND ANOTHER.

The trial of this issue, which began on Wednesday the 4th, continued throughout that day and Thursday, and was not closed until a late hour on Friday.

Messrs. Clarke, Osborne, and Lieth were counsels for the plaintiffs, at law.

The Advocate General and Mr. Prinsep appeared for the defendants, at law.

This was an issue directed from the equity side of the Court to try the validity of a document alleged to be the last will and testament of one Oodichurn Dutt, deceased. A former will, admitted to be genuine, had been executed by the testator three years previously to his death, and the present question was, whether this will was revoked by a second will alleged to have been made about May 1837? By the former (admitted), the testator left the bulk of his property to his widow, by the latter (disputed), he bequeathed to his widow only a yearly sum for her maintenance and gave the residue of his property in favour of the thakoor, or family moi. The plaintiffs in the trial at law were the executors of the new will, and of course had to support the affirmative of the issue. The defendants, were the widow, and the executor appointed by the original and undisputed instrument.

The witnesses for the plaintiffs swore, that the testator and his wife had quarrelled in the intervening period, that he complained of her "foul tongue," and threatened to disinherit her. The second will was alleged to have been made in the house of another person, and the testator, who was then in good health and of sound mind, was stated to have died of cholera about a fortnight afterwards. Three material witnesses were called upon their subpoena.

The witnesses for the defendants stated, that the testator was in indifferent health, and of weak mind, for at least a twelve-month previously to his decease; that, at the time when the second will was alleged to have been made at the residence of another person, the testator was in such a state of debility as to be utterly unable to leave his own house, and that the pretended signature of "Oodichurn Dutt" to the document set up by the plaintiffs was a forgery.

Sir E. Ryan at the close of the case, said that the Court would not make any comment upon the evidence adduced on either side. The affirmative of the issue, whether the disputed document was the genuine will of the deceased or not, was upon the plaintiffs, and they had not made out their case to the satisfaction of the Court. It was necessary, therefore, to nod against the will.

Verdict for the defendants.

The Insolvent Court sits to-morrow, Saturday, (this-day).

The Bank of Bengal case, and some special arguments are standing over, and will come on next week. The Court never take contested matters during the progress of a cause, adjourned from day to day.—Hurkaru, July 7.

MONDAY, JULY 9, 1838.

THIRD TERM.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

BONNERJEE versus BONNERJEE.

The chief justice called the attention of the counsel concerned, to this case, argued in the course of the present term upon exceptions to the master's report. His lordship suggested the expediency of a compromise by consent between the parties, which they would have an opportunity of arranging, before the Court pronounced judgment.

Mr. Clarke expressed his willingness on the part of his client to accede to an arrangement.

RAJAH BURRODICAUT ROY versus BISNOBOONDERY DABBY AND OTHERS.

In this cause and the cross causes, a rule had been obtained, calling upon the appellant to give security, under the charter to abide such order as the Privy Council may make. Cause was shewn on the ground, that the respondents were in contempt for non-compliance with two orders for the payment of costs, and that they were not in a position, therefore to make the application until they had cleared themselves from the contempt.

The Advocate General and Mr. Prinsep were in support of the rule.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. Leith were to have shewn cause, but were not called upon by the Court.

Rule discharged with costs.

RAMNARAIN MOOKERJEE AND OTHERS versus ANNA MARIA BARRETTO GONSALES.

This was a rule to shew cause why a judgment upon a warrant of attorney, to enter up judgment upon a bond for Sa. Rs 80,000 should not be set aside upon the ground of want of conspiracy and fraud.

The Advocate General and Mr. Morton appeared in support of the rule.

Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Leith appeared to shew cause on behalf of the plaintiffs.

In the voluminous affidavits filed in support of the rule, it was stated (among other matters) that the firm of Biale and Co. had been assisted by advances made from time to time by the defendant, Mrs. Gonsalves, whose son and son-in-law were partners in that firm. These advances had been secured by the mortgage to her of the ship Sir Herbert Taylor, which was insured by the firm to the amount of a lac of rupees. The plaintiffs constituted a joint and undivided Hindoo family, and the plaintiff Ramnarain, had acted for many years as the banian of the firm. In the month of December 1835, the plaintiff Ramnarain, accompanied by an attorney and his clerk, and also by the son and son-in-law of the defendant, came to her house when she was confined to her room, and induced her to sign certain documents which she then understood to be securities to herself for the debts due to her from the firm, but it afterwards proved that these documents, falsely represented to be securities in favour of the defendant, were, in fact, a mortgage to the plaintiffs of certain houses, with a bond and warrant of attorney to confer judgment thereon for Sa. Rs. 80,000. The defendant swore, that these circumstances had only recently become known to her, that the title-deeds of the houses have been obtained from her upon the assurance that they were only required for a temporary purpose, and that she had at last succeeded in procuring their restoration after several unsuccessful applications. Upon these grounds, it was moved that the Court should order the judgment entered up to be set aside as wholly fraudulent and void.

The affidavits on behalf of the plaintiffs expressly and positively contradicted the story set up by the defendant Mrs. Gonsalves. Three of the parties (including Ramnarain, the plaintiff) swore that the defendant signed the instruments with a full knowledge of their contents, and that they were explained to her in detail both in the English and in the Portuguese languages. The consideration was alleged to be an advance of Company's Rs. 40,000, by the banian to the firm of Biale and Co. as a collateral security for the repayment of which, Mrs. Gonsalves executed the mortgage-bond and warrant.

Sir Edward Ryan observed, after the case had been partly opened, that it plainly appeared upon the face of the affidavits, that two diametrically opposite stories were set up by the parties. Under these circumstances, it was impossible for the Court now to decide the matter in issue. However strong the case might be made to appear on behalf of the defendant, it was quite out of the question to apply to make this rule absolute. The utmost that could be obtained by the defendant, was an order directing the matter to be tried by an issue at law. The Court would give no opinion upon the probabilities of the case, or the comparative weight of evidence on either side. Where the affidavits expressly contradicted each other, this was not the proper mode of finally determining the question.

The Advocate General called the attention of the Court to the difficulty in which an issue would place his client. She could not be examined herself, and she had no directed witnesses to call. Her son and son-in-law, indeed might be expected to come forward as her witnesses; but in fact their interest was hostile to her's, and they were accused of being themselves parties to the alleged conspiracy against their relative. They had made no affidavit.

Sir Edward Ryan said, that all the parties might be examined. There was no other way of trying the question than by directing an issue. The rule in the meantime might stand over, and all proceedings at law and equity might be stayed. The terms of the issue were to be as follows:—the present plaintiffs to support the affirmative.

1st Qu.—Whether the securities in question were executed by Mrs. Gonsalves, knowing their purport and effect?

3d Qu.—Whether there was any consideration for the execution of the same?

Rule ordered to stand over, to abide the event of issue.

J. W. ALEXANDER, Assignee of P. Foster, versus J. A. FOSTER.

This was a rule to shew cause why an injunction should not be issued to restrain the defendant from despatching a certain brig, called The Brigand, from Calcutta, or out of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Prinsep shewed cause.

The Advocate General and Mr. Sandes supported the injunction.

The grounds of application for this injunction, were, that the insolvent P. Foster, had been possessed of the brig at the time of his insolvency, and that a short time previously he had been fraudulently disposing of his property to nominal purchasers, who held the property without consideration, and in reality as the agent of the insolvent himself. The ship Brigand, had not been launched, but was fraudulently transferred while on the stocks, to J. A. Foster, the defendant, who was the son of the insolvent, and who had given no value or consideration for the pretended sale.

The affidavit of J. A. Foster set forth, that he was the sole and bona fide owner of the ship Brigand, that the said ship, before the filing of the bill of complaint, was half-laden with a cargo for Madras and that her delay in this port under a writ of injunction, would cause great loss and detriment both to the owner and shippers.

Sir Edward Ryan said, that this writ was applied for by the complainant upon the ground of fraud, but that question could not now be finally determined by the Court. In the meantime, the rule for an injunction must be made absolute; but liberty would be reserved to the defendant to move hereafter to set it aside, upon giving sufficient security to the registrar to abide the final decree.

Rule absolute for an injunction, with leave to move to set it aside, upon giving security.

J. S. DaCosta versus BRIJMOHUN COONDOO.

This was a demurrer to a plea, pleaded to a plain upon a bill of exchange. The plea stated, that time had been given by the plaintiff (the indorsee and holder of the bill) to the acceptor, without the knowledge and consent of the defendant (a prior indorser.)

The plaintiff demurred to this plea, assigning for cause, that no valid and binding agreement to give time, founded upon a good and sufficient consideration, was set forth in the plea, and that the mere voluntary postponement of the debt due from the acceptor, could not operate as a discharge of the indorser.

The Court, upon receipt of the paper-books, had intimated a strong opinion, that the plea could not possibly be supported; but as the demurter had been set down for argument, it was called upon in the regular way. The defendant's counsel did not support their plea.

Mr. Leith and Mr. Morton for the demurter.

Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Saunders contra.

Demurter allowed with cost.

The common law board will be taken first to-morrow Tuesday (this day), and as there are some cases standing for hearing, it is probable that Rudakissen v. The Bank of Bengal, will again stand over.—Hurkain, July 10.

TUESDAY, JULY 10, 1838.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

YOUNG AND ANOTHER versus SMITH.

Mr. Advocate General moved, that this case be referred by consent to the arbitration of J. F. Leith, Esquire, barrister at law.

Referred.

PARTAB SING DOGARE versus TILLOKHUND LOJCHAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Prinsep opened the pleadings.

The Advocate General stated, that this was an action upon a hundee or bill of exchange, drawn by the gomastahs of the defendants in the partnership name. The defendants, who were three in number, a father and his two sons, carried on business as bankers, and had a cootee at Moorshedabad and at Calcutta. These two cootees or banking-houses, though belonging to the same concern, were known by different names at the two different places. It would be proved, that the gomastah (according to custom) was authorized to sign for the firm per procuration.

The defence attempted to be set up by the defendants, was, that they were not partners at all, that the cootee in Calcutta was the sole property of the elder son, and that the father and younger son had no interest in it whatever, and that the gomastah, therefore, could not possess any power or authority to bind the defendants by signing in any partnership name. The evidence adduced by the defendants, however, failed to substantiate their case, to the satisfaction of the Court.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. Cochran for the defence.

Verdict for the plaintiff.

AMEERUN BEEBEE versus SHAIK PEEH ALLY.

Struck out by consent and referred to arbitration.

DOE, ON THE DEMISE OF HULLODHUR SADKHAR v. HILDER.

This was an action of ejectment for land and house in Calcutta, and came on ex parte against the casual ejector,

The jurisdiction and title were regularly proved.

Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Cochran for the lessors of the plaintiff.

Verdict for the lessors of the plaintiff.

SCHNEIDER versus MORGAN.

Mr. Leith opened the pleadings. The action was for goods sold and delivered, and the plea was the general issue.

The Advocate General for the plaintiff, stated, that the action was brought to recover the value of a second-hand buggy, sold by the plaintiff to the defendant for the sum of Rs- 700. In April last, the defendant, accompanied by a military friend, went to the premises of Mr. Schneider, who is a coach-maker, in Calcutta, and requested to be shown some good second-hand buggies. The one in question was at last selected and the price was fixed at Rs- 700. The buggy was sent, according to direction, to Spence's hotel, where the defendant was residing, and the usual receipt was transmitted at the same time, which Mr. Morgan's friend signed, and returned to the plaintiff. Two days afterwards the bill was sent, but the bearer was told to call again. About six days after the purchase, the buggy was returned to Mr. Schneider with the shaft broken short off. Mr. Schneider received it as a matter of course, merely remarking that some violent accident must have occurred, and that it could not well have happened with fair driving, and the defendant then admitted that the horse had wheeled suddenly round. It was at last agreed on the part of Mr. Schneider, that a new shaft should be put in free of charge. When this had been done, the buggy was again sent to Spence's hotel, but Mr. Morgan refused to receive it, and it was returned to Mr. Schneider, who thereupon wrote a letter, intimating that if payment was not made he should be compelled to have recourse to proceedings at law. The defendant, after some remonstrance, agreed to accept the buggy, but requested that it might be allowed to remain for a few days on the plaintiff's premises, for the convenience of himself, the purchaser. The learned counsel contended, that if the above facts were proved in evidence, both the first and second contracts would appear to have been sufficiently recognized by the defendant, and the plaintiff would be entitled to a verdict for the sum claimed.

Mr. Watson, who had been in the employ of Messrs. Schneider, but was now in business for himself, was called to prove the circumstances connected with the purchase. He said, that the buggy was sold as a "good serviceable buggy," and he admitted that he should not have considered it as answering such description if the shaft had broken after a few days use without some violence or sudden accident. The buggy was, made by Stewart and Co. and was sold by Schneider on commission, on behalf of a gentleman returning to England.

Mr. Gibson, of the firm of Messrs. Dykes, and Co. was called to prove that the broken shaft was sound, and made from wood of average quality. The witness said, that in this opinion the shaft must have been snapped from violence, or a sudden twist, and if the buggy had been his, he should neither have cancelled the sale nor put in a new shaft!

Mr. Clarke (with whom was Mr. Nott) for the defence, took several objections. First, there was not sufficient proof of a recognition of the contract on the part of this plaintiff, and the action was improperly laid. Secondly, the buggy was sold as a good and serviceable article, and this warranty was broken, inasmuch as the injury to the shaft, within so short a time after the purchase, had not been shown to be the result of any unusual accident. Thirdly, the circumstances which occurred at the period when the buggy was returned and repaired, raised a clear presumption that the original contract had been totally rescinded. Evidence would be given to shew that Mr. Schneider declared at the time when the broken vehicle was returned, that "if the buggy had been his property, he would not have hesitated to take it back immediately." Now, this evidence would place the other party in a dilemma. If the article was the property of Mr. Schneider, this was equivalent to a waiver of his claim, and to a rescission of any contract which previously existed; and if it was not his property, then he had no right or title to bring the present action.

Two officers were called as witnesses on behalf of the defence.

The Advocate General, in reply, was directed by the Court to confine himself to the question of law, whether the action was, rightly brought by the present plaintiff. The learned counsel referred to Chitty's Pleading, in support of the position, that an action for goods sold would well lie in the name of the commission agent.

Sir Edward Ryan said, that the Court had no doubt upon the question either of law or of fact involved in this case, and the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. It was for the defendant to shew clearly that the article was unsound and not conformable to the description or warranty. Thus he had failed to do, as there was no distinct evidence respecting the nature of the injury which broke the shaft.

Verdict for the plaintiff.—Damage Rs. 700.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1838.

THIRD TERM—PLEA SIDE.

(Before Sir F. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

PEARMONEY DOSSOFF, EXECUTOR, &c. versus MUDDOOSOODUN DOSS DAX.

Mr. Clarke opened the pleadings.

The Advocate General for the plaintiff, stated that this was an action upon a Bengallee bond for Rs. 500 with interest thereon at 12 per cent. The defendant had appeared, but had not pleaded, and judgment had, therefore, passed by default. The learned counsel apprehended that the representative character of the plaintiff was admitted, and that nothing remained to be proved but the amount of the debt due.

The subscribing witness was called to prove the execution; and a verdict was given for the amount claimed.

Verdict for the plaintiff.

MIRZA MAHOMED MEHNDY MISKEY versus THE SHERIFF OF CALCUTTA.

Mr. Leith opened the pleadings. This was an action on the case against the sheriff for a false return to a writ of capias ad respondendum.

Mr. Prinsep, for the plaintiff, stated, that a warrant had been issued to the late sheriff of Calcutta, to arrest one Mr. Rainy, at the suit of the plaintiff in the present action, who was the obligee of a bond executed by the said Rainy for Rs. 816. The bond was payable by instalments, all of which had fallen due. The sheriff's bailiff had neglected to arrest such defendant, and the writ was returned non est inventus. It would be made to appear in evidence, that the sheriff's officer, to whom the writ had been given for the purpose of being served upon Mr. Rainy, had wilfully neglected to arrest that gentleman. By the default of his bailiff, the sheriff became liable in law, although the subordinate officer was of course the real party concerned in this action, by reason of the usual indemnity given to his principal. No other plea had been put upon the record, than the general issue, "not guilty," a plea which, the learned counsel submitted, only put in issue the question of neglect of duty.

From the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff, it appeared that Mr. Rainy was a "sporting character," and visited Calcutta during the races in January. The sheriff's officer was proved to have also been in the habit of attending the races with tolerable regularity. The witnesses believed, that the person of Mr. Rainy was known to the officer, but none were able to swear positively that they had seen them altogether at any time. Mr. Rainy remained at Calcutta three or four days at least, without any apparent attempt at concealment, and rode one of the races himself. Some of the witnesses subpoenaed on the part of the plaintiff, had neglected to attend at the trial, and were called upon then subpoena.

The Advocate General for the defence, said that he should not call any witnesses; but he contended that the plaintiff had failed to make out his case, and must be nonsuited. All that had been shewn, in fact, amounted to nothing more than that the bailiff and the party named in the writ had been in the same town at the same period; but surely much clearer and more satisfactory proof would be requisite before the sheriff or his officer could be charged with wilful neglect of duty. It might be true that Mr. Rainy rode a race; but during that performance, at all events, the bailiff would have some difficulty in catching his man!

Sir Edward Ryan was most clearly of opinion, that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict, and much slighter evidence even than what had been adduced, would have amply sufficed to support the case. It has been decided in a reported case, that it was not at all necessary to prove that the bailiff was previously acquainted with the person of the party sought to be arrested, and it was quite a mistaken idea to suppose, that they must have been actually seen together. The sole question was, whether due diligence had been used executing the writ. Here was a party, who had appeared on the race-ground, rode a race, and shewn himself in public, without any apparent aim at concealment; it was for the officer to explain how he happened so completely and unaccountably to fail in finding any opportunity of making the arrest. This was no slight matter; and it might become a question whether this person, who had so wilfully neglected his duty through motives best known to himself, could be allowed to remain any longer in the situation of sheriff's officer.

Sir J. Grant fully concurred. If the doctrine contended for on behalf of the defendant, were to be admitted, the process of this Court be utterly nugatory.

*Verdict for the plaintiff, for the amount indorsed on the writ of capias minus the costs.

DUFF v. HURROFFSAUD GHOSH.—GHOSH v. GHOSH.

These two cases, which were the last on the common law board, were struck out by the plaintiffs' attorney.

Two causes on the equity side are come on for further directions; but they will not occupy long. If there are not many contested motions, to-morrow (this-day, which is the last day of term) the Bank of Bengal case will be heard.—Hurkaru, July 12.

* The plaintiff's counsel claimed no more, but question whether the plaintiff was not entitled to the whole sum indorsed upon the writ?

THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1838.

THIRD TERM.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

MEERSINGSOONDER SEAT versus NITIOYWOONDER SEAL.

Mr. Clarke had obtained a rule nisi, to set aside the writ of sequestration, and all other proceedings thereon, in this cause, for irregularity. The affidavits stated, that the defendant resided in Calcutta in the family dwelling-house, and that he had quitted it upon the day when the plaint was filed; that the sole reason for quitting his house was, that the plaintiff had abused, and ill-treated him (the defendant) and his wife, and causelessly put him in great fear and dread.

Mr. Leith showed cause upon counter-affidavits, in which it was sworn that the defendant had left the house on the day after the day of filing the complaint; that there existed no such cause as that set forth in the defendant's affidavit, and that the real reason for his departure was an anxiety to avoid the process of the Court as soon as he was apprised of a plaint having been filed.

Mr. Clarke supported his rule.

Sir Edward Ryan.—Strictly speaking, we ought not to try such a matter in this form and upon mere affidavits. In order to avoid the danger of ex parte judgments being snatched by plaintiff, the Court has been in the habit of requiring not only affidavits of the debt due, but also affidavits expressly shewing to the Court that the writ has been endeavoured to be duly served. But this is not really necessary; because, if the writ is improperly returned non est inventus, the defendant has his regular remedy by an action against the sheriff for a false return. We shall allow Mr. Clarke to come in here and plead; the sequestration is to stand as a security, and the costs of the present application will be costs in the cause.

Rules discharged on the terms specified.

CHRISTOPHER MARTIN AND OTHERS versus ROBERT SPANKIE AND OTHERS, AND THE CROSS CAUSE.

This cause came on for hearing, for further directions upon the report of the master, W. P. Grant, Esquire.

The Advocate General and Mr. Cochrane, for the relative.

Messrs. Prinsep and Nott, for the city of Lyons.

Mr. Osborne for the next of kin.

Decree confirming the master's report.

SREEMUTTY HURRYMONEY DOSSÉE v. RUSSICKCHUNDER NEOGHY AND OTHERS.

This cause came on for further directions upon the finding of the issue, tried a few days since during the present term. In the issue at law, Russickchunder Neoghy was plaintiff, and the present complainant was the defendant at law. The question, "whether the acceptance to a bill drawn by one of the defendants in equity, Cossinath Dutt, was or was not the genuine acceptance of the said Sreemutty Hurrymoney Dossée," was found for the defendant at law; establishing the fact that the acceptance was a forgery. The object of the original equity suit now brought on for further directions, was to obtain the cancellation of the instrument and an injunction against negotiating or putting it in suit against the alleged acceptor.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. Leith appeared for the complainant.

The Advocate General and Mr. Prinsep, for Russickchunder Neoghy, submitted that, although a decree must pass against them, costs ought not to be allowed. Their client was an innocent party, and the fraud was not practised by him, but upon him. He had good reason for believing the acceptance to be genuine, and indeed was not convinced of the contrary yet; and he was quite justified, therefore, in availing himself of any mode which appeared open to him for recovering a sum of money apparently justly due. It was not the practice, except under very special circumstances, to grant costs in the case of a bill quia timet.

Mr. Nott for the Dutt, infant defendants.

The Court said that costs must be decreed against Russick Chunder Neoghy, but the other defendants were only to pay their own.

Decree as prayed.

This was the last day of term.

RADAKISSEN MITTER versus THE BANK OF BENGAL, is at last positively fixed for to-morrow, Friday (this-day which is the first of the sittings), and it is to be taken first of all. It will probably occupy the Court all day, until late hour.—Hurkaru, July 13.

BENJAMIN HARDING AND OTHERS versus HENRY PIDDINGTON.

This was an action brought to recover the sum of Co.'s Rs. 25,947, being the balance of an account between the plaintiffs and defendant. The latter had been arrested for the alleged debt.

Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Clarke appeared for the plaintiffs.

The Advocate General and Mr. Sandes for the defendant.

It appeared on the plaintiffs' own shewing, that the account upon which they sought to recover was not a settled account, but open and unliquidated. A memorandum of agreement was put in (very reluctantly) on the part of the plaintiffs, by which it appeared that although the accounts were to be made up each year, the balance was not to be struck or the profits divided until the expiration of the third year, which time had not yet elapsed.

Plaintiffs nonsuited. [Hurkaru, July 20.]

SITTINGS AFTER THIRD TERM.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

RADAKISSEN MITTER v. THE BANK OF BENGAL & OTHERS.

This equity case came on for hearing, on evidence, this morning, and occupied the court in argument until a very late hour. The court postponed their decision. A full report of the argument will appear on Monday, and the judgment will be fully reported when delivered by their lordships.

It may be merely mentioned at present, that this bill was filed to restrain the bank from proceeding at law against the complainant, upon certain bills of exchange to the amount of four lacs, of which the complainant was the accommodation-drawer, one Gunganarain Gangooly the accommodation payee-indorser, the firm of Messrs. Fergusson and Co., before their insolvency, the acceptors, and the Bank of Bengal, indorsees and holders. The Bank was alleged in the bill of complaint to have been privy to the fact that no consideration was received by the complainant as drawer, and that he was merely a nominal party; but this part of the case was abandoned, as no portion of the evidence upon the interrogatories supported it in any degree. The case for the complainant was chiefly confined at the hearing to the question, whether the bank was bound to apply in liquidation of the sums due upon these bills, certain property pledged with them by Fergusson and Co. before the insolvency of that firm, and allowed by the bank to be redeemed by the assignees.

The secretary to the Bank, Mr. Udny, and the assignees of Fergusson and Co., were made co-defendants in their official and representative capacities.

The common Law Board will be taken on Monday. The Chief Justice will sit alone to take common motions to-morrow, Saturday (this-day.)—Hurkaru, July 14.

FRIDAY, JULY 13, 1833.

SITTINGS AFTER 3D TERM—IN EQUITY.

(Before Sir Edward Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

RADAKISSON MITTER versus THE BANK OF BENGAL.

Mr. Clarke for the complainant. This bill has been filed to restrain the negotiation of certain bills of exchange of large amount, drawn by the complainant in favour of one Duponarain Gangooly, accepted by the firm of Fergusson and Co., (of which complainant was partner) and endorsed and delivered over to the Bank of Bengal (the present holders). Three bills were originally drawn, for the sum of Rs. 1,50,000 each. These were twice renewed by consent of the parties thereto, by other bills, and payment of a certain part of the principal with the interest accruing due, was made at different times, and at the period of the insolvency of Fergusson and Co., the sum remaining due on the then outstanding bills drawn by the complainant, amounted to four lacs. The complainant states in his bill, that no consideration whatever has been received at any time, either by himself, the drawer or by Gangooly, the payee-endorser; that the firm of Fergusson and Co., gave the complainant an assurance that he was a mere nominal party, and that he never would be called upon to pay, and, moreover, that the Bank of Bengal was fully cognisant of such understanding and agreement. Upon the last statement, there is no evidence to support it, and we, therefore, abandon that part; but the rest of the transaction as set forth, is admitted in the answers. Now there are four transactions between the firm of Fergusson and Co., their assignees, and the Bank of Bengal, to which it is necessary to call attention.

First, in the year 1833, the firm of Fergusson and Co., deposited with the bank 14,500 maunds of copper, to secure loans to the amount of about three lacs and a half. At the same time, bonds were given to the bank, empowering them to sell the copper, in the event of default in payment of the loans, and to apply the proceeds to the liquidation, advances for which they were specifically pledged; and these bonds contained an express agreement that the surplus (if any) might be applied generally to liquidate sums due upon past or future advances. This clearly gave the Bank a general lien upon the property pledged. They were bound to have sold the property, and to have applied it to the liquidation of these very bills; but instead of doing this, they permitted the assignees of the insolvent firm to redeem the property, and it is admitted in the answers, that a profit of about 72,000 was afterwards made by the assignees upon the sale.

Secondly, in the same year 3,500 maunds of indigo were pledged with the bank for the sum of Rs. 4,90,000. This transaction was of the same nature as the preceding, except that the bonds contained no express agreement that the surplus after liquidating the sums for which the property was specifically pledged, should be applied to other outstanding claims; yet we contend that the bank was entitled to a general lien, and ought to have sold the indigo, and applied the surplus value to the liquidation of these bills.

Thirdly, there was a transaction in which the assignees of the insolvent estate were themselves concerned. It appears that the assignees, wishing to raise a loan, applied to the Bank of Bengal, who agreed to advance the sum of three lacs upon the deposit of Company's paper. This deposit was made to the amount of Sa. Rs. 3,18,200 in the name of Durponarain Gangooly, the acceptor of the outstanding bills of which the complainant was drawer as before described; and Gangooly, at the same time, executed a bond of precisely the same tenor as the copper bonds already adverted to, and containing a similar power of sale. The assignees afterwards applied to redeem the Company's paper so deposited, and the bank, instead of selling the paper and applying the surplus proceeds to the liquidation of the outstanding bills, redelivered it to the assignees.

Lastly, the fourth transaction relates to a bank share standing in the name of Mr. W. F. Fergusson, the chief partner in the firm of Fergusson and Co. who was also a bank director. This share, although in the name of Mr. Fergusson alone, was in reality partnership property. It was first given up to Mr. Holroyd, the assignee of Mr. Fergusson's separate estate, and transferred over by him to the assignees of the partnership estate, who disposed of it for Rs. 15,600, and applied the proceeds in payment of the general dividend. Now, by the 21st section of the charter, the bank had a general lien thereon and ought to have applied it, therefore, in part liquidation of the outstanding bills.

The case then stands thus: the Bank of Bengal have been guilty of laches in neglecting to apply to the payment of these bills, certain distinct available funds, to which the complainant, as accommodation drawer, had a title to compel them to resort in the first instance; and pro tanto, therefore, the complainant is discharged from his liability. With respect to the deposits of copper and indigo, the transaction clearly falls within the meaning of the mutual debts and mutual credits, between an insolvent firm and any other party,—debts and credits which the Indian Insolvent Act directs, shall be set off against each other. It has been frequently decided that this law is applicable, even where one of the debts is due in present, and the other only in futuro. There are other considerations. Mr. Fergusson was a partner in the insolvent firm, and also a director of the Bank of Bengal, and as he had a full knowledge of the whole transaction in all its details, this knowledge must affect the bank. ex-parte Wadhman, 4 Deacon and Chitty 312; ex-parte Corvis, 1d. 354. The bank therefore must be taken to be cognizant of the fact that the firm was in embarrassed circumstances, and that Radakisson Mitter, who was a man of scanty property, was a party to the bills only upon the understanding that he was never to be called upon for their discharge.

Mr. Nott, followed upon the same side, and cited ex-parte Morgan, 12 Vesey junior, in support of the position, that even after the redelivery of the deposits to the assignees, and the sale by the latter, they could only be considered as trustees of the surplus proceeds for the behoof of the bank.

The Advocate General and Mr. Prinsep for the Bank of Bengal. How can this be said to be a case of mutual debts and credits, between the insolvent firm and any other party? There is no mutuality whatsoever. Radakisson Mitter, in whose favour the right of set-off is attempted to be established, is a third party, who had no interest whatever in the property pledged. The argument appears to mix up two matters, totally distinct and unconnected, the drawing of bills by this complainant, and the deposit of property by an insolvent firm with which he had no privity, such as the Court can recognize.

But even if there existed any mutuality, this would not be a case to which the law of mutual debts and credits is applicable. As far as relates to the indigo bonds, it is clearly precisely governed by Young versus The Bank of Bengal (reported in 1st vol. of Moore, successor to Knapp,) decided in 1836, by the Privy Council upon appeal from this Court. The bank there claimed a general lien upon certain property specifically pledged by Piller and Co., and after the liquidation of the specific debt, they applied the surplus value to the discharge of two outstanding promissory notes; it was held that they did not possess any such right. Even in the case of the copper bond, which contain a general power and authority to the bank, to apply the overplus value to past and future advances, the same rule holds, because the bank never sold the property deposited, and, indeed, their right to sell it never accrued at all. The authority of Young versus The Bank of Bengal, has been attempted to be impugned; but it must be remembered, that whatever may be the opinion of the English bar, the decision of the Privy Council is final with respect to the colonies, and that case too was decided by high legal authority, the Vice-chancellor Shadwell, Sir James Parke, Sir J. B. Bosanquet, Sir E. H. East, and Sir A. Johnston; not to mention my Lord Brougham. The judgment of Lord Brougham is clear and decisive, and ably reviews all the previous decisions. It is readily admitted, that the law of set-off and mutual debts and credits, may be applicable even where both claims are not due in present, but then the future debt must be a claim certain, and not a claim contingent. Here it was contingent. The firm might have come in, and redeemed the deposit at any time, and until the time had lapsed the bank had no right whatever to sell it. It is most absurd to say, that the mere possibility of an overplus value being realized, and accruing in the hands of the pawnee, constitutes a debt due to the pawnor, which may be made the subject of set-off within the act.

With respect to the deposit of Company's paper, there are two answers to this part of the claim. The paper was specifically pledged, as in the case of the copper and indigo, and the bank were bound to redeem it upon the offer of the pawnor to redeem. But further it is stated in the answer that this Durpoosaram Gangooly, in whose name the transaction took place, and who executed the bond, was in fact a mere nominal party, put forward by the assignees as a trustee for the estate. The transaction might have been, and perhaps ought to have been, in some other name, as Gangooly was under liabilities to the bank; but no act of the assignees can affect the status of the creditors, and the insolvent estate.

The fourth transaction relates to the bank-share. Now the charter prohibits the bank from making advances upon shares, and they could not, therefore, claim a general lien upon it for debts due from the firm. Besides, it has been decided that shares must be taken to belong to parties in whose name, they are registered, and the bank were ignorant that the share standing in Mr. Fergusson's sole name was partnership property; so that, even if the bank had the power of retaining it for a debt due from Fergusson personally, since no such debt was in truth due, the bank were bound to give up the property to his separate assignee.

As to the point that the bank must be taken to have been cognizant of the whole transaction, because, one of their directors happened to be a partner in the insolvent firm; no authority can be found to support so novel a position. There is a great distinction between a corporation and a common partnership; Bank of Scotland versus Watson, & Dow's Reports, charters and corporations would be of no avail, if such a mere theoretical rule were to be admitted, and the corporation were to be constructively affected with knowledge of matters of which they were utterly ignorant, merely because such happened to be known to an individual member. According to the bank charter, a director does not necessarily require even a qualification; he need not be a shareholder, he may have no real interest, and he cannot be considered to stand in the position of a partner.

It appears, therefore, upon the whole, that the Bank of Bengal are innocent holders of these bills; nothing is shown to affect them with notice in not resorting to other funds, and the present complainant, as drawer of these bills, whatever may have been the understanding between himself and the firm of Messrs. Fergusson, to which the bank was no party, is not in any way discharged from his liabilities.

Mr. Leith, who appeared as counsel for the secretary, Mr. Udny, was proceeding to follow the same line of argument as the Advocate General and Mr. Prinsep.

Sir Edward Ryan. The Court do not see what right the secretary has to argue the case on behalf of the bank. He is brought here merely for the purpose of discovery, and he is of course entitled to his costs. I do not understand what he can possibly have to say to the Court.

Mr. Leith declared, that he was entirely in their lordships' hands, and had great pleasure in sitting down.

Mr. Cochrane appeared for two of the defendants, Messrs. Macnaghten and Ousely, assignees of the insolvent firm of Fergusson and Co. The learned counsel was prepared to argue the general case, but at the suggestion of the Court, he confined himself to the question of costs, as it affected the assignees.

Mr. Osborne and Mr. Morton appeared on behalf of the remaining defendant, William Colville, and claimed costs for their client. This gentleman had been appointed co-assignee, but he had been in fact a mere honorary assignee, and had not interfered in any way in the management of the property, nor was he cognizant of the details of the present transaction. He had put in an answer, which was entirely a disclaimer, or at least as much a disclaimer as such answers generally are, and he was unable to see forth of his own knowledge any material matter of which the complainant's bill sought a discovery. There was, moreover, another ground. In January 1836, after the filing of the bill, but before the answer was put in, Mr. Colville applied to their lordships, as commissioners of the Insolvent Court, to discharge him from the assigneeship altogether, and an order was made accordingly. This order was set out in his answer. The complainant, therefore, ought at all events to have then dismissed his bill against Mr. Colville, and it was altogether vexatious to put in a replication and serve a subpoena to rejoin: — Longfellow versus Williams, 3 Atkyn's Reports, 582. The reason why Mr. Colville had appeared by a different attorney and put in a separate answer was, that his answer necessarily differed in almost every point from the joint answer of Messrs. Ousely and Macnaghten. It would be inconsistent for him, as a disclaiming defendant, to have joined with the acting assignees; and in point of fact, this could have made no difference in expense, because Mr. Colville's answer was so totally dissimilar, that even if merged into a single joint answer, the total number of folios would not have been in the least diminished.

Mr. Clarke was heard at considerable length in general reply. As to the question of costs, which had been mooted on behalf of different defendants, he did not see how such claim could be established except in the case of the secretary of the bank, who was made a party merely for the purpose of discovery, and entitled, therefore, as a matter of course. The assignees of the insolvent firm were interested defendants, and were parties with the bank to the transactions set forth in the bill. Mr. Colville had been represented to be a disclaiming defendant, but he had no right to disclaim, and could not relieve himself from his legal liabilities by any act of his own. He ought to have joined in the answer of the co-assignees, and this was the reason why the complainant had chosen to reply instead of dismissing the bill against him, upon the filing of the answer. Again, it had been said, that Mr. Colville was a mere honorary assignee, and had taken no active part whatever in the management of the property of the insolvents; but the learned counsel apprehended that no such term as "honorary assignee" was recognized in law, and Mr. Colville, therefore, was equally liable with the others.

Sir Edward Ryan said, that the Court would carefully look over the pleadings and evidence in the cause, and pronounce their decree on a future day.

Judgment postponed. [Harkaru, July 16.

SITINGS AFTER THIRD TERM—PLEA SIDE.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir. J. P. Grant.)

BONNERJEE versus BONNERJEE.

This case, which was argued during Term upon exceptions to the master's report, and in reference to which the Court suggested the expediency of a compromise between the parties, was this morning referred, by consent, to arbitration.

HOUGH versus SKINNER.

Upon the application of the Advocate General, on the ground that several officers were subpoenaed as witnesses, this case (which stands No. 12 on the common law board) was specially fixed for Thursday morning next.

HARDING versus FIDDINGTON.

Upon the application of Mr. Prinsep, this case (standing No. 13) was appointed to be taken next after the preceding.

DA COSTA versus COONDOO.

Mr. Leith opened the pleadings. This was an action upon a bill of exchange for Rs. 3,000, brought by the holder against the indorser; and the plea was "no notice of dishonour."

The Advocate General for the plaintiff, stated, that evidence could be adduced to shew that due notice of dishonour had been given both to the defendant and his clerk, on the day after the presentment and dishonour by the acceptor. But in fact, the defendant did not appear in support of his plea, and the learned counsel apprehended, therefore, that he had only to prove his signature as indorser.

Sir Edward Ryan. No, you must prove the due notice of dishonour, although the defendant has not instructed counsel to support his plea: this is the very matter upon which you have joined issue yourself.

Evidence was then about to be given of due notice of dishonour, when it was discovered that the instrument was at four months' date, whereas the plaint had accidentally misdescribed it as payable at three months. The plaintiff's counsel upon this submitted to the Court, that the error was amendable, under the new rule, giving power to a Judge to amend the record at the trial when the other side is not prejudiced thereby; and they urged the impossibility of the defendant having been misled, both from the plea which he had put upon the record, and from the circumstance that correct particulars of demand had been annexed to the common counts in the plaint.

Sir E. Ryan.—I am afraid, that this is too much matter of substance to be amendable under the rule. As there is a count upon an account stated, you had better produce your evidence, if any part of it is applicable to that Court.

Evidence was then given of the original consideration for the indorsement, and the Court gave a verdict for the principal sum claimed, but refused to allow interest, as they could not take notice of the count upon the instrument itself.

Verdict for the plaintiff, Rs. 3,000.

THEODORE DICKENS, ADMINISTRATOR OF FLOOD versus WILLIAM PARIEBEAN.

Mr. Sandes opened the pleadings.

The Advocate General stated, that this was an action of trover by the plaintiff, as administrator of Mrs. Flood against the defendant, for the recovery of certain ornaments and other valuables, the property of the deceased, which had been retained by the defendant under the pretence of being the executor of that lady's will. The defendant had pleaded the general issue, and also that he was executor and that the plaintiff was not administrator. Upon the death of Mrs. Flood, some months since, the defendant had produced a will in which he was appointed executor, and had applied for probate, but from certain suspicious circumstances, the Court refused to grant probate of the will, and the plaintiff, the ecclesiastical registrar, thereupon took out administration of the effects.

Witnesses for the plaintiff were then called. It appeared, that the defendant was a manager of Government steam packets: he became acquainted with Mrs. Flood, and they were afterwards engaged to be married, but the marriage was prevented by the lady's illness. Shortly before Mrs. Flood's death, and when she was lying insensible, the defendant took two boxes out of the house, containing silver spoons and other valuables, and also took away a palkee-gharree and a pair of horses. Very slight evidence was given of the value of the property.

Mr. Prinsep (with whom was Mr. Leith for the defence) submitted that there was no proof of "conversion," and that the plaintiff must be nonsuited. There had been no evidence whatever of a demand and refusal, and the action of trover, therefore, could not be sustained.

Sir E. Ryan.—Every unlawful taking of property amounts to a "conversion," and is sufficient to support trover.

Mr. Prinsep, then proposed to put in on evidence the will of Mrs. Flood, by which the defendant had been executor. He apprehended that the production of the will, and proof of its due execution, would be sufficient to defeat the plaintiff's case, inasmuch as it would shew that the grant of administration was ab initio null and void.

Sir E. Ryan, have you probate of the will?

Mr. Prinsep. No, my Lord.

Sir E. Ryan. Then you are out of Court. The plea of ne unques administrator must beforesay for the plaintiff, as long as the letters of administration stand unrevoked and unimpeached. It is a question entirely for an Ecclesiastical Court. You can shew no authority whatsoever for the position that an unproved will can be brought into a Court of Common Law to impugn letters of administration granted by a competent Ecclesiastical tribunal.

Mr. Prinsep. I hope your Lordships will give me leave to move.

Sir E. Ryan.—Certainly. There must be a verdict for the plaintiff on all the issues; but we shall take a note of the objection, as to the question of damages, more vague evidence could scarcely have been given of the nature and value of the property. We can only suggest a certain sum;—for the plate and jewels, we fix Rs. 1,000, and for the carriage and horses, Rs. 500; liable to be reduced to nominal damages, if the goods are specifically restored.

Verdict for the plaintiff, Rs. 1,500.

TUESDAY, JULY 17, 1838.

SITTINGS AFTER THIRD TERM.—PLAID SIDE.

(Before Sir Edward Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant)

OLDFIELD versus STOCQUELIER.

The Advocate General stated to the Court, that the plaintiff's witnesses in this action for libel, were retained at Firhoot, and that they had been expected to reach Calcutta on the 13th of this month, but had not yet arrived. Now two of the causes on the common law board had been fixed for special days, and as the remainder were chiefly ex parte, there was a probability of the above case (though standing, No. 14) coming on, this very day. Unless, therefore, their lordships postponed it, or made some order the plaintiff might be obliged to strike it out of the board, although judgment had been allowed by the defendant to pass by default, and it remained only to assess damages.

Sir E. Ryan said that the Court would consent, not to take this case out of its regular order, and as two causes standing higher up on the board had been fixed for particular days, this would ensure its not coming on before Thursday or Friday.

GUNGANARAIN DUTT AND ANOTHER versus DOONAPARAIN DOSS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Clarke moved in this case for a new trial upon the ground of misdirection, and verdict against evidence. This was an issue tried last term, to ascertain the validity of a certain document purporting to be a will, and after a tedious trial of three days' duration the Court found the plaintiff's case "not proved," (the onus of proof being upon him) and gave a verdict in favour of the defendant, thus establishing that the instrument did not appear to be the genuine will of the alleged testator (A report of this case will be found in a former number of the Hurkaru.) The learned counsel said, that he had little hope of succeeding in his motion, as he felt the difficulty a party was placed in, when calling upon the Court to alter their own deliberate opinion, formed upon the hearing of full evidence, and thus appealing (as it were) ub orem ad eundem. A similar application had been made and refused some time since in a similar case, in which he must confess that he felt far more confident of his grounds. The real object of this motion however, merely was to obtain an order of the Court refusing to grant a new trial, and upon such order the plaintiffs would be enabled to appeal at home.

Motion refused, and order of refusal granted to the plaintiff.

NILCUNT PARAMANICH versus MUDDENMOHUN SAUPOYE.

Mr. Sandes opened the pleadings.

The Advocate General stated, that this was an action to recover Rs. 1,200 for money lent and interest, and came on for hearing ex parte. As the defendant had not entered an appearance, the plaintiff was compelled to prove the jurisdiction regularly.

Verdict for the plaintiff.

BUNGSEBUDEN DUTT versus BAUGBUT SAUPOYE.—
SHREKISHEN BERSUS versus KISSERN DOSS.—AUMRITH
BEBER versus GRIDDIAR GHOSH.

The two first of these cases came on for hearing ex parte, and in the third judgment had been allowed to pass by default: The respective plaintiffs recovered verdicts for the sums claimed.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. Nott, were counsel for the plaintiff in each case.

The whole of the common law board, was gone through, with the exception of the three cases which have been specially fixed. To-morrow (Wednesday) the equity board will be taken.—(Hurkaru, July 8.)

WEDNESDAY, JULY 18, 1838.

SITTINGS AFTER THIRD TERM.—IN EQUITY.

(Before Sir Edward Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

SULEMUTTY NOBINMONEY DAWEY v. SHANLOL TAGORE AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Morton opened. This case came on for further directions, upon a decree dated March 1837, and two reports, one by the late master dated July 1837, and the other by the present master, of July 1838.

Mr. Clarke for the complainant stated, that the bill had been filed by a legatee against two executors for the amount of principal and interest due upon a legacy of Rs. 50,000, and upon certain other accounts. The reports upon the decretal order directing the reference, found the amount due to the complainant to be a sum equal to about Rs. 65,000. They also found the sums due to the creditors of the estate, and among the rest to two creditors who had been allowed to come in before the master, after the date of the decree, by a special order of the Court made upon motion. The learned counsel admitted, that all the debts must take precedence of the legacy. He prayed the Court to decree the payment of the sums found due, and to appoint a short day for the payment of the same.

The Advocate General and Mr. Prinsep appeared for the creditors. They prayed to be allowed costs, as they had only come in to defend their rights.

Mr. Leith for the executors, admitted, that the complainant was entitled to his costs, but denied the right of the creditors to claim them. This was a legatee's suit, and the creditors were not parties. No doubt they might come in at their option, but it ought to be entirely at their own costs and charges.

The Court said, that the creditors could not claim costs against the estate. The chief justice suggested, that three months might be allowed for payment of the debts and legacies, although, of course, if they were not paid at the expiration of that time, the decree would be most strictly enforced against the executors.

Mr. Clarke prayed for a shorter date. He wished to apprise the Court, that the executors, pending this suit and the proceedings on the decree, had just confessed judgment upon a disputed debt, to an alleged specialty creditor for Rs. 40,000. This was a contempt of Court, and amounted almost, if not quite, to a deserteur for which the executors were personally liable. They ought to have applied for an injunction. This judgment creditor would inevitably proceed forthwith to seize the property in execution.

Sir E. Ryan said, that this was a very strong point.

Mr. Leith declared, that he was willing to consent to the immediate appointment of a receiver, provided the time were extended to six months. The assets were ample, and the executors were ready to pay both the creditors and the legatees, but they were anxious to prevent the estate from being prejudiced by a forced and hurried sale.

Mr. Clarke consented.

The Court directed the decree to be made accordingly

GUNGANARAIN DUTT versus OONAPOORNAN DOSSE.

This cause and the cross-cause came on for further directions upon the finding of the issue directed from the equity side of the Court. (This was the case in which Mr. Clarke moved yesterday for a new trial.) By the verdict on the issue, the document purporting to be a second and latter will of the testator was found to be a forgery, and a former will, of which the genuineness had not been disputed, was thus established.

Messrs Clarke, Osborne, and Leith were for the complainants.

The Advocate General and Mr. Prinsep, for the defendant.

The Court decreed, that the former will was established and that the executors under the second should be restrained from opposing the executors under the first, in applying for probate thereon or the ecclesiastical side. An account of all property and effects and of debts due from the estate, was directed and the master was directed to allow in account to the executors under the alleged second will, all payments by them bona fide made.

JOHN LUCAS v. ATHANAS MAORODY MITCHOS AND ANOTHER

The Advocate General and Mr. Leith appeared for the complainant. The original and supplemental bills were filed for an account, and a dissolution of partnership.

By decretal order a reference was directed to the master, and such references having taken place, the master made his report and stated, what sums appeared now due to the complainant. They prayed accordingly that the sums reported due might be decreed to be paid, and that a receiver might be appointed.

Decree as prayed.

HOUGH versus SKINNER.

Stands specially for hearing to-morrow, Thursday (this day).—Murkur, July 19.

THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1838.

SITTINGS AFTER THIRD TERM.—PLEA SIDE.

(Before Sir Edward Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

HOUGH versus SKINNER.

Mr. Clarke opened the pleadings. This is an action of trespass, brought by the plaintiff, Major William Hough, against the defendant Major Thomas Skinner, for criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife. The plea is the general issue.

The Advocate General for the plaintiff. May it please your lordships. I shall not commence my address to your lordships in the usual declamatory strain adopted in such cases as the present. I am quite sure I need not impress upon the Court the magnitude of the injury which has been inflicted by the defendant upon the plaintiff; an injury calculated to endure in its irreparable consequences until the close of both their lives. I shall confine myself to a concise and simple statement of the unfortunate circumstances. Both of these parties are members of a most honourable profession, and one which can ill brook even the semblance of dishonour. They are both Majors in the army, one in the Company's and the other in the Queen's service. The plaintiff holds the situation of Deputy Judge Advocate, and is known as the author of certain useful publications upon the subject of military law and courts' martial. The defendant, too, is an author, and is represented as a man of varied accomplishments. The subject of his treatises appears to have chiefly consisted in his own travels and personal adventures, and doubtless such a subject may have had more charms for a lady's taste than the more abstruse, though more solid subjects which have employed the plaintiff's pen. I do not, however, expect to hear this urged by my learned friend on the other side, as a sufficient reason for a lady preferring a stranger to her husband! The plaintiff and his wife were married in February, 1835, at the station of Saharanpore, and since that period they have travelled over different parts of India, and remained for various periods of time at different military stations. It will be proved that Major Hough is of the most amiable disposition, and that he invariably treated his lady with kindness and attention. The circumstances preceding the elopement, and the conduct of the parties towards each other during the whole period of their union, cannot be proved with such precision and minuteness as in England, because a military man in this country is continually moving about from station to station, remaining but a brief period in each; yet it will be most satisfactorily shewn that such of their friends as have had an opportunity of observing their habits and intercourse with each other for any length of time, had every reason to believe, that their intercourse was most happy. In May last, Major and Mrs. Hough were living at Dinapore, and the defendant Major Skinner was residing in an adjacent bungalow. The defendant was upon visiting terms with the plaintiff and his wife, and had been considered for some time as an intimate acquaintance. On the 18th of May, the lady left her husband's house before breakfast, and walked with a chattrah held over head, direct to the bungalow of the defendant: she remained there two or three days, sat at his table as if she had been his wife, and slept in the same apartment, which happened to be a single-bedded room! These circumstances established by evidence will be quite sufficient to satisfy your lordships' minds of the fact of adultery committed. I am truly glad to be able to spare myself and the Court all reference to those disgusting details of evidence which such unfortunate cases as the present often render painfully necessary.

Major Robert Becher, examined by Mr. Clarke.—I was present at the marriage. It took place in February 1835, at Saharanpore. The ceremony was performed by Mr. Parish, a chaplain in the Company's service. Mrs. Hough was a Miss Sophia Raikes. From April to October, in that year I often saw them; they were on very good terms. Major Hough's disposition is most kind and good.

Cross-examined by Mr. Leith. I knew her slightly before marriage. I knew Major Skinner. Do not know whether they were intimate, or whether he escorted her to parties. Possibly it may have been a mariage de convenance. She lived before her marriage at Captain and Mrs. Mathew's. I think, I once advised Major Hough from making the marriage. This was before I knew that he was paying his addresses to her. I considered that there was a disparity of years and some dissimilarity of tastes and inclinations. His age is about 50, and hers may be 30. Major Skinner perhaps is 32. The Hough's had no family. The Mathew's are still at Dinapore, 4 or 500 miles from Calcutta.

Re-examined. I knew Major Hough when he first arrived in Calcutta in 1806, a cadet. From 1829 to 1835, I saw him almost every day. Since his marriage I have not seen him often.

By the Court. I do not think Mrs. Hough a lady of great personal attractions. She is accomplished in music, singing, and literary acquirements.

Sheik Dalow, examined by the Advocate General. I am a servant of Major Skinner, I lived with him at Dinapore. I know Major Hough. Their bungalows were very close, only separated by a wall, with wooden railings. Major Skinner frequently visited, and went to dinner at Major Hough's every second or third day. One day in May, I saw Mrs. Hough in my master's house at half-past nine in the morning. She came alone. He desired me to bring breakfast. They breakfasted together. At eleven he gave orders that dinner that day should be at home. Before he used to dine at the mess. Mrs. Hough remained 4 days and nights in the house. Two nights my master slept at home, and during those two nights they slept in the same room. She slept in his room. It contains only one bed. My master put her on board a boat on the 4th day, to come from Dinapore to Calcutta.

Cross-examined. A letter arrived about an hour previously to Mrs. Hough's coming to my master's bungalow. It was brought by the Ayah. I saw the bearer receive it from the Ayah and give it to my master, who returned an answer.

Captain Henry John Wood, examined by Mr. Clarke. I know the parties, Major and Mrs. Hough. They lived upon usual terms. There were various shades of happiness. I heard no complaints from either party. I should say Major Hough was a most kind man in every respect. They visited my house. Defendant is a Major in H. M.'s 31st regiment. I cannot say what his allowances are.

Cross-examined. I knew the Houghs before marriage. Major Skinner was acquainted with them intimately. I do not know whether he ever paid his addresses to her before marriage. He certainly was named to her by report. I consider him as an accomplished man. I think Mrs. Hough is more accomplished than the generality of ladies. Dinapore is now a full-batta station.

Major William Martin deposed, that he knew the plaintiff and his wife. He considered Major Hough a most kind-hearted man, and incapable of treating a lady ill. Major H. was of studious, but not secluded habits. He has occupied himself much in compiling works on military law.

Captain Caine, of H. M.'s 26th regiment, saw them in Calcutta, in the cold weather before last. He treated her with kindness. He is considered by witnesses one of the best hearted and best-tempered of men. At a full batta station, a Major's allowances are 780 rupees per month. The value of the commission, according to the regulations, is £3,200.

Henry Martindell, of the military fund office, deposed, that Major Hough had subscribed to the fund, so as to entitle his widow surviving him, to the same annuity as the widow of a Lieutenant Colonel would be entitled to.

Mr. Lieth then addressed the Court for the defence. May it please your Lordships. This case appears to be a verification of the saying, that "matches are made in heaven and marriages on earth." Far be it from me to treat such a subject with levity, involving as it does a violation of the sacred tie of marriage; but I may be allowed to say, that a plaintiff has rarely come into Court with a feebler claim for heavy damages as compensation for an injury such as the present. I will not attempt to rebut the presumptive evidence of guilt which has been adduced before your Lordships, but I will simply confine myself to the question of the appropriate amount of damages due to the plaintiff. It is usual in such cases to produce evidence of the habits and intercourse which subsisted between the husband and wife in the retirement of their family circle, and to establish such evidence, by calling as witnesses those intimate friends who have had opportunities of observing their mutual conduct at their own domestic hearth and board. There is no such evidence here. Mere acquaintances speak of their outward behaviour under the eye of society, when the countenance often wears a mask and real feelings cannot be detected. But even such evidence as my learned friends have produced is defective, for it does not extend to the most important period of all, the moment of the elopement. It may be that the unfortunate event was produced by previous and recent ill-treatment, or by a sudden and hasty quarrel. Again, there are many extenuating circumstances. The defendant and the lady were previously intimate, perhaps attached to each other; the plaintiff, it seems, had been warned against the match by a friend; and there appeared to be a disparity of years, tastes, pursuits and inclinations. It is no case of abused friendship and confidence; no deliberate design or deeply laid plan has been evinced, but the lamentable catastrophe appears to have been in a great measure the result of the plaintiff's want of discretion and forethought. I am not instructed to come before your Lordships, in order to deny the charge, nor do I deny it, but I merely wish to urge upon the Court the utter absence of any cause forwarding heavy and vindictive damages. Perhaps I may be allowed to say, that I have received directions from my client to admit in the fullest manner his belief in the fact that the lady entered his house (from what cause I know not) in entire purity and integrity of motive. The deplorable consequences no one can regret more deeply than himself, and he sincerely wishes that there was a possibility of making adequate reparation. I leave the case, entirely in the hands of the Court.

(Their Lordships then consulted for a few minutes. The Court room was rather crowded, and much interest was manifested. Several officers and others had been subpoenaed as witnesses, but were not called.)

Sir Edward Ryan.—There must be a verdict for the plaintiff. We think it necessary and proper, under the circumstances which have appeared in evidence, to abstain from all comment upon the case. The damages were assessed at Rs. 5,000.

Damages five thousand rupees.

SURMURCHUND BORAH versus MAUN SING—Struck out.

JOHN MOORE versus THOMAS DRIVER.

This was an action upon the common money counts for money paid (with interest) by the plaintiff, on account of the defendant, and at his request, in discharge of a debt due from the latter to a third party. The case was heard ex-parte, and a verdict given for the amount claimed.

Messrs. Prinsep and Sandes, for the plaintiff.
Verdict for the plaintiff.

GAFFAR versus SEAL.

Mr. Osborne (with whom was Mr. Lieth), stated, that this was an action on a Bengallee bond, in which the defendant had allowed judgment to pass by default. The learned counsel suggested to the Court a doubt whether this was not a case in which the damages might be assessed by the Prothonotary.

Sir Edward Ryan thought not.

Evidence of the instrument was then regularly given, and a verdict taken for the amount claimed.

Verdict for the Plaintiff, Rs. 651.

BUNOKEBUDDEN DUTT versus MUDDENMOHUN SAUPOZE AND ANOTHER.

This was an action for the value of goods sold and delivered. The defendant had not entered an appearance, and the cause was heard ex-parte.

Messrs. Clarke and Leith, for plaintiff.

Verdict for the plaintiff, Rs 1,683.

HENRY SWANN OLDFIELD versus JOAKIM HAYWARD STOCQUET.

This was an action of libel brought by the plaintiff, who is the civil and sessions' judge of Tirhoot, resident at the station of Mozufferpore, against the defendant, who is editor of the Sporting Magazine, the Englishman newspaper, and other periodicals published in Calcutta. The libel appeared in the Bengal Sporting and General Magazine, (No. 47, vol X new series) for the month of November, 1837. The article containing the libellous matter, was headed "Mr. Haldebrand Muggleston's trip into the moluassil," and some free remarks were there made upon certain matters connected with the civil station of Mozufferpore. This produced a letter in contradiction and remonstrance, addressed by a civilian of that station to the defendant, and the letter appeared, but with editorial comments, in the Sporting Magazine, for January last. The paragraph in the abovementioned article, which was made the subject of the present action, conveys a very gross and palpable insinuation, and runs as follows:

"But what seems to have delighted Muggleston more than any thing else, was the kind condescension of the judge and other officers of the station, in accepting of the use of the houses of opulent natives for a mere nominal rent, thus diffusing throughout the district an exalted opinion of their affability, and furnishing an unquestionable guarantee of the strict impartiality with which justice would be administered, whenever the landlord should happen to be a party concerned in a suit."

Mr. Leith rose and stated to the Court, as soon as the case was called upon, that he was instructed to appear for the defendant, (who had allowed judgment to pass by default) and upon his behalf to express his readiness to offer any apology and make any reparation, which his learned friends on the other side might dictate.

The Advocate General (with whom was Mr. Clarke) for the plaintiff, said, that he certainly was not instructed to receive any such apology, on the contrary he had been directed on the part of a justly incensed client to press the case to the utmost; yet of course, Mr. Oldfield had no personal animosity against Mr. Stocqueler; nor could any one dream of suspecting that the present action was brought for the sake of recovering damages. The learned counsel admitted, that an offer somewhat similar to the present had been made before; he then conceived it proper to reject totally as he was of opinion, that Mr. Oldfield, who held a public and most responsible situation, ought not to be satisfied with a mere private apology for so public an insult. The learned counsel added, that as his client resided at a distance, he should exercise the discretionary power with which he was invested as counsel, and he should therefore declare that he did not consider the objection which he had made to receiving the former apology, applicable to the present public apology in open Court just offered.

Sir Edward Ryan.—Then the counsel for the plaintiff had better dictate the terms of the apology which they conceive will be fully satisfactory to Mr. Oldfield. Every one must know that the present action is brought solely in justice to that gentleman's station and character.

Mr. Clarke.—I have drawn up a brief memorandum of the terms, and my learned friend, Mr. Leith acquiesces. They are to the following effect: "That the defendant has since discovered, and therefore admits, that the statement contained in the publication is altogether untrue; that he expresses his regret, that it should ever have been made; and that he is in readiness to publish the retraction and apology in the columns of the publications in which the statement appeared, and consents to pay all costs as between attorney and client."

Sir E. Ryan.—There must be a verdict for the plaintiff with nominal damages.

Verdict for the plaintiff.

FRIDAY, JULY 20, 1838.

SITTINGS AFTER THIRD TERM.

No causes upon either board stood for hearing this day, and common motions only were taken.

Sir E. Ryan took occasion to observe, with reference to a cause alluded to by counsel, standing on the equity side for a future day that although it had been the constant practice to set down causes on the equity Board and to fix a particular day for the hearing, this was not regular. The proper course was for the solicitor of the complainant to set down the cause, and it would then come on to be heard regularly in two days, after being set down.

(Note.—By the new equity rules, No. 3—of setting down and hearing cases; it is provided that, "four days notice of hearing be given in all subpoenas to hear judgment," so that this would seem to modify the rule of practice mentioned by his lordship, in cases where the subpoena was only served on the day when the cause was set down, or on the day preceding. At all events the other party might object.)

The chief justice will come into Court to-morrow (Saturday,) at eleven o'clock, to take common motions. —Hurkaru, July 21.

MONDAY, JULY 23, 1838.

SITTINGS AFTER 3D TERM.—IN EQUITY.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

MURDOORNAUTH MULLICK versus SREENUTTY HURREEMONEY DOSSIE AND OTHERS.

This cause came on for hearing upon evidence. The bill was filed for the purpose of setting aside as fraudulent and void, a decree obtained in 1835, by the defendant Hurreemoney, and for declaring valid and genuine the will of Hurrechunder Mitter, who was the husband of the said Hurreemoney, and for reassuring and confirming a certain conveyance by way of bargain and sale, and certain indentures of lease and release by way of mortgage. The bill was taken pro confesso against two of the defendants, Rajchunder Mitter and Sreenutty Thakoorany Dossie.

It appeared upon the pleadings and evidence, that the defendant Rajchunder had sold to the complainant a three anna share in a certain bazar, and mortgaged another share of one anna and six pie. The sale was for Rs. 65,000. The vendor Rajchunder, entered into the usual covenants for good and sufficient title, and claimed under an alleged will of the abovementioned testator, Hurrechunder Mitter. The widow Hurreemoney, in 1825, instituted a suit for partition and impeached the genuineness of the will; but this suit was compromised amicably, by the gift of a house and the payment of a considerable sum of money to the widow, in consideration of which she executed a release in which the genuineness of the will was admitted. By her present answer, however, she stated, that this compromise was obtained by grossly false and fraudulent representations on the part of Rajchunder, who induced the lady to believe that the estate of her deceased husband was deeply encumbered, and that the residue could not be great, whereas she had since ascertained that the debts and liabilities were few, and that there was a clear surplus of very large amount, to which she was in fact entitled as widow and sole representative. Upon this ground she had filed a bill against Rajchunder, and obtained the decree of 1835; but of this the present complainant had no notice, and it was contended by him, that he was entitled to relief as a bona fide purchaser and mortgagee without notice and for valuable consideration.

The Advocate General, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. Leith, appeared for the complainant.

Mr. Prinsep was alone for the defendant Hurreemoney Dossee.

Sir Edward Ryan. The complainant as an innocent purchaser is entitled to have his title made secure; but he asks too much in this bill. The Court will not declare the validity of the will, because that is not necessary nor interfere with the decree of 1835, because that affects other property. We shall decree that the conveyances by sale and by mortgage are valid, and binding upon all of the defendants; the mortgage to be subject to the right of redemption by defendant Hurreemoney. Costs of suit to be paid by defendant Rajchunder.

Decree accordingly.

FRANCIS PETER MENDES versus LAWRENCE DESOUSA
AND OTHERS.

This cause was heard on bill and answer.

Mr. Prinsep, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. Leith for the complainant. The bill was filed for the amount of a legacy of Rs. 20,000, alleged to have been bequeathed, on a condition which had been fulfilled by the testator Francis Mendes, deceased, to the present complainant, his nephew. This testator left very large property, and appointed three executors in India and two in England, all of whom had taken out probates in those countries respectively. The executors in India, Lawrence DeSouza, Jonathan Duncan Dow, and Robert Doucet, had been made defendants, and the residuary legatee Aurelia, wife of Antonio Pereira, with her husband had been joined as co-defendants. The terms of the disputed bequest were as follows: "I leave the further sum of Sa. Rs. 20,000, upon trust to pay the interest and dividends to Mrs. M. A. Mendes, widow of my late brother, Peter Mendes, during the term of her natural life, in case she shall so long continue a widow, but not otherwise; and in the event of her marrying again, then, from and after such marriage, or upon her decease, whichever shall first happen, I leave the said sum to my nephew F. P. Mendes (the complainant) and my niece Matilda Mendes, in equal shares, or to the survivor of them." Now Mrs. Mendes had remarried in the life time of the testator, and Miss Matilda Mendes had departed this life: it was contended, therefore, that the present complainant was entitled to the whole sum as sole surviving legatee in remainder. The condition upon which the legacy was to rest in the complainant was the remarriage of Mrs. M. A. Mendes, or her decease, whichever should first happen. That lady had married again; and it was quite absurd to say, that it made any difference whether the event happened in the life time of the testator or after his death. The learned counsel were not certain that it was not intended to be urged on the other side, that such a condition was in restraint of marriage; and therefore void; but they apprehended that there was no ground for this in the case of a widow, although there might have been something in the objection, had the lady been a jeune sole.

Sir Edward Ryan.—It is a very common condition to make a bequest contingent upon a party remaining a widow, and to leave property only durante viduitate.

The Advocate General and Mr. Barwell for Mrs. Aurelia Pereira, the residuary legatee, said that they had no intention whatever of taking any such objection to the validity of the condition, they contended merely that by the happening of the contingency in the life time of the testator the legacy in remainder never vested at all, and the whole became a lapsed legacy. They cited Newton v. Ayscough, 19 Vesey Junior, 534. Umberston v. Stanfield, 1 Vesey and Beame's reports. Russell v. Long, 4 Vesey Junior.

Mr. Marnett and Mr. Sandes appeared for two of the executors, and claimed costs, as their clients were altogether uninterested in the event of this suit, and were ready to pay over the legacy to the party who might be decreed entitled thereto. They came in, as interpleading parties, whose presence was requisite in the decision of the matter pending between the parties really interested.

Mr. Nott and Mr. Morton appeared for the other executor, Robert Doucet. This gentleman had severed in his answer from his co-executors, because he had never interfered, in the least degree, in the management and administration of the property farther than simply taking out probate of the will, and he was, therefore, altogether unable to answer the chief matters inquired of in the bill, further than according to his information and belief.

Sir J. P. Grant at the conclusion of the argument, stated that his mind was not made up, and that he should look into the case cited before he delivered his opinion.

Judgment postponed.

REVELEY versus HARDING.

In this case evidence de bene esse was taken, to be used at the trial of the cause.—Hurkaru, July 21.

TUESDAY, JULY 24, 1838.

SITTINGS AFTER 3D TERM.—In Equity.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

MOOKERJEE versus GONSALVES.

This was an issue directed to try the validity and genuineness of certain securities purporting to be a mortgage of two houses, with a bond and warrant of attorney to confess judgment (upon which judgment had been entered up for Sa. Rs. 80,000), and alleged to have been executed for valuable consideration by Mrs. A. M. B. Gonsalves, the defendant, in favour of Ramnarain Mookerjee and his brothers, the plaintiffs, forming a joint Hindoo family.

Witnesses were examined and cross-examined at great length, and the case for the plaintiff was not closed until past 5 o'clock, when the Court adjourned until tomorrow.

Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Leith were for the plaintiffs.

The Advocate General and Mr. Morton for the defence.—Hurkaru, July 25.

MOOKERJEE versus GONSALVES.

The Court were occupied until nearly eight o'clock at night in the trial of this issue, commenced yesterday, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. A report will appear hereafter.—Hurkaru, July 26.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 25, 1838.

SITTING AFTER THIRD TERM—PLEA SIDE.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

RAMNARAIN MOOKERJEE AND OTHERS versus ANNA MARIA BARETTO GONSALVES.

The trial of this issue began on Tuesday morning, and was not terminated until nearly eight on Wednesday night.

Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Lieth for the plaintiff.

The Advocate General and Mr. Morton for the defendant.

The question at issue was, whether the defendant, Mrs. Gonsalves, had duly executed certain securities (a mortgage bond and warrant), knowing their purport and effect, and for a good and sufficient consideration. Last term and application was made to set aside the judgment entered up for Sa. Rs. 80,000 upon the warrant, on affidavits stating, that the securities had been obtained from Mrs. Gonsalves by gross fraud; but as the affidavits filed on the other side entirely contradicted this case, the Court declared that they could not come to a decision upon mere contradictory affidavits, and an issue at law was directed accordingly. By terms of the order, all the parties were to be examined as witnesses.

On behalf of the plaintiffs, Mr. Rowland Graham, an attorney, and his clerk Mr. Gego, were called to prove the due execution of the instruments, of which they were themselves the subscribing witnesses. They stated, that in December 1835, they called at the defendant's residence, in order to get the deeds signed; that they were accompanied by her son Francis Baretto Gonsalves and her son-in-law Henry Lewis Christiana, and by the plaintiff Ramnarain; that the lady was reclining in her room on a couch, and appeared to be expecting them; that the instruments were explained in the English and Portuguese languages, and that she appeared fully to understand their purport and effect, and that she afterwards put her signature to all the instruments in the presence of the subscribing witnesses. It was afterwards discovered that the signature was "A. M. B. Gonsalves," whereas the lady had been described in the deeds and warrant as "A. M. Gonsalves," and upon this error being pointed out to the Prothonotary, it was found necessary either to make an affidavit on the part of Mrs. Gonsalves, the obligor in open Court, or to prepare a fresh set of instruments. In January 1836, fresh deeds were drawn up, and these were executed in the same manner as the former; the defective deeds being returned cancelled, and an explanation in English and Portuguese being given to Mrs. Gonsalves, of the reason why resigning had become necessary. This evidence was confirmed by Christiana and F. B. Gonsalves, the son. It appeared that these two persons were members of the firm of Biale and Co. and that this firm had been established and sustained chiefly by funds advanced by Mrs. Gonsalves. These advances, however, to the amount of Sa. Rs. 85,000 had been secured (upon a settlement of accounts, and the striking of a balance, between Mrs. Gonsalves and the firm,) by a mortgage of the ship, Sir Herbert Taylor, valued at nearly a lac of rupees; but her contingent liabilities upon the present securities were not included in such balance, and her legal advisers appeared to have been wholly ignorant at the time of the existence of such outstanding liabilities. There were several discrepancies in the evidence, chiefly in the account given of the manner in which the consideration for the deeds was explained to Mrs. Gonsalves: some of the witnesses stated, that the consideration consisted entirely of a general prospective credit to the amount of Rs. 40,000 to be given to the firm of Biale and Co. by their banian, the plaintiff, upon the security of the deeds, while others stated that part of the consideration was the giving up and cancelling the out-standing acceptances of Mrs. Gonsalves, to the amount of Sa. Rs. 30,000 held by the banian. The testimony of the banian himself, though he was present on the occasion of the signing was not of much importance, as he had but very slight knowledge of English and not of Portuguese.

For the defence, the chief witness was Mrs. Gonsalves herself, who swore, positively that nothing was explained to her of the contents of the deeds on the occasion of signing them, and that from previous conversations with her son-in-law, Christiana, she was under a firm conviction that she was signing securities to herself. This old lady appeared to be a great invalid, and from feebleness and infirmity, little able to understand the details of law business. She was examined partly in English and partly in Portuguese, and from nervousness and agitation gave occasionally somewhat confused evidence. She had no recollection whatever of two occasions when she was called upon to sign deeds, and believed that she had never signed more than five altogether; but she admitted that she had parted with title-deeds of her houses to Christiana, not for the purpose of mortgage, but in order to enable him to raise a temporary loan. Mr. Longueville Clarke was examined as a witness. The learned gentleman had known Mrs. Gonsalves for many years, and had been constantly consulted as a friend upon matters of law business. The securities were never spoken of to him by Mrs. Gonsalves; it was entirely by accident that he discovered their existence; and as soon as he saw the cancelled mortgage, bond and warrant of which he had heard nothing, he felt convinced that a fraud had been practised. Mr. Clarke added, that he thought such a fraud might easily have been practised upon this lady, and that when with difficulty he had succeeded, upon the discovery of the documents, in explaining to her their nature and effect, she became hysterical with surprise and terror, having evidently previously laboured under the impression that they were securities in her own favour. Mr. Clarke spoke also of conversations which he had with Christiana, in which the latter made use of expressions purporting that he had acted wrongly, but that now all the documents were cancelled, and Mrs. Gonsalves remained under no further liabilities for the firm. Boyle, the solicitor of the lady, deposed that he had never been consulted upon the present transaction, and that it was only by accident, long after the execution of the papers, that he became aware of the liabilities of his client upon these outstanding securities. She was in the habit of managing her own property, and keeping her own accounts; but she had always consulted either Mr. Clarke or Messrs. Wight and Boyle, on matters of law. Mr. Boyle spoke of several interviews which he had on different occasions with Mr. Christiana, in which an offer to compromise matters was made, and it was stated that there would be no difficulty in obtaining the securities from the banian (the plaintiff). Mr. DeSouza was called as a witness, and spoke of the conversation between Mr. Clarke and Mrs. Gonsalves, at which she was present.

After the case had been closed, their lordships consulted for a few minutes, and agreed that a verdict must be given for the plaintiff.

Sir Edward Ryan. This arises out of an application to set aside a judgment upon a warrant of attorney, and the affidavits being contradictory, an issue was directed. Mixed up with this is a question concerning the validity of a certain mortgage, purporting to have been executed on the same occasion; but although this, of course, collaterally arises, and influences the case materially, the real question is, whether the warrant to confess judgment was executed by Mrs. Gonsalves, with a full knowledge of its nature and effect. It was impossible to reconcile the evidence on one side and the other, and it is clear that there has been downright perjury somewhere. In such a case we must look at the whole transaction, and see what is the natural order of things. It seemed beyond doubt that Mrs. Gonsalves was desirous of establishing her son and H. L. Christiana, her son-in-law, in business, and that this wish continued even after the misconduct of her son and the decease of her daughter, to whom Mr. Christiana was married. Another circumstance which has been too much lost sight of, is, that Ramuarain Mookerjee and the other plaintiffs, are clearly innocent parties, and if any fraud existed, nothing whatever has been shewn to make them privy thereto. Again, it appears clearly that Mrs. Gonsalves did give the pottahs or title-deeds, for the purpose of enabling Christiana to obtain money, though she states, indeed, that they were not given for the purpose of mortgaging her houses, but merely for the purpose of pledging the deeds themselves in order to raise a temporary loan. Then we come to the disputed facts. Mrs. Gonsalves declares that the whole is a fraud, that no explanation was given of the contents of the deeds, and that she was impressed with the idea that she was signing securities to herself. Against this, however, there are the oaths of four persons, all of whom, if her story were to be found true, would be guilty of the grossest perjury; and if it be true, that two sets of deeds were executed upon one occasion (which is the only supposition compatible with her tale) I must say I never heard of a more unmeaning, clumsy contrivance. Mr. Clarke states, two important circumstances, viz. the admission of Christiana that he had behaved wrongly, but that no other liabilities were then outstanding; but in fact it does not appear that Christiana was ignorant that Mr. Clarke at that time knew nothing of the fresh deeds. The interview between Mr. Clarke and Mrs. Gonsalves does not tell in favour of the defence; because we cannot understand how such a state of feeling could be produced by cancelled deeds, unless Mrs. Gonsalves scarcely knew (though Mr. Clarke did not) that other deeds were outstanding. We think, therefore, that Mrs. Gonsalves must have known of the existence of these instruments and that they were duly executed; the consideration consisting of advances of sums of money from time to time, which were bona fide made by the banian to the firm of Boyle and Co. upon the faith of these securities. There must be a verdict for the plaintiff on both issues, and by the terms of the order, the original rule for setting aside the judgment will of course be discharged.

Verdict for the plaintiff.

THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1833.

(Before Sir Edward Ryan.)

IN EQUITY.

HURROMONEY DOSSER versus COSSINAUTH BYSACK AND OTHERS.

This case came on for further directions to confirm the Master's report.

Mr. Leith, on behalf of a creditor, moved that it might be postponed, in order that the creditor might have an opportunity of coming in to prove before the master. The bill had been taken pro confesso. The learned counsel cited Haine versus Haine, Jacob's reports, p. 49.

Mr. Clarke objected on the ground of the wilful delay.

Sir E. Ryan said, that the question was whether the party could thus be allowed to stand by, and wait without out taking any step until the master had actually sent up his report. If the other party did not consent the Court would not direct the postponement.

Decree confirming the master's report.

BONNERJEE versus BONNERJEE.

The Advocate General said, he was sorry to inform the Court that the contemplated compromise had not been effected in this pending cause, and that as it appeared the parties could not agree in the matter, there was no other alternative than to await the decision of the Court.

Sir E. Ryan said, that as it had so long stood over, that decision was not now likely to be given very soon. His lordship observed, that from his knowledge of the case, a private settlement would be for the most advisable course.

It appeared that the difficulty was merely in the question, to whom the matters should be referred for settlement.

Mr. Clarke said, that he considered it his duty to state, that he had acceded to almost every proposal from the other side, but that a new proposition had been made at the eleventh hour, to which his client, (who was not present in Court) for some reason or other, did not choose to consent. He should, however, again press upon him the expediency of a private arrangement.

ROBERT JOHN LATTEY versus CHARLES JOHN PITTAR.

In this case, the bill had been filed by Mr. Lattey, as executor of the last will of Mrs. Mary Ann Fleming, deceased, for an account of her estate and effects, against the defendant Mr. Pittar, who was also executor of that lady's will. It had been referred to the master to take the account and make a report, and that report having been duly made, the cause was set down to be heard on further directions.

Mr. Leith applied for a rule nisi for the postponement. This application was on behalf of two creditors Henry Field Savory and Thomas Moore, chemists of London, and was made under rather special circumstances. The master had inserted the usual advertisements for creditors to come in and prove, but Messrs. Savory and Moore, being in England, were unable to come in within the limited time. Last May, Bagshaw and Co. having just received a power of attorney to act in the business, addressed a letter in a very informal manner to the master, who sent an answer pointing out the irregularity, and recommending that an order from the Court should be applied for. Inquiries were then made and all diligence used, but no assistance whatever had been obtained from the executors, who although hostile to each other at first, had been hurrying on the proceedings latterly by consent, in order to defeat, by a final decree, the claim of these creditors, of which claim due notice had been given. A ground of opposition was that the debt of Messrs. Savory and Moore, appeared to be against the estate of Robert Fleming, the husband of the deceased; and not against the estate of the widow; but the affidavits shewed that, in fact, the widow had no separate property of her own, and the property left by her at her death was the estate of her deceased husband, of which she was executrix.

The Advocate General was unable to shew cause in the first instance, as he had no affidavits filed; but he begged to correct an assumption of his learned friend in stating that the parties had ceased to be hostile. This was not the case. The proceedings had occasionally been had by consent, but this was solely in order to avoid expense.

Mr. Marnell said, that there would arise a difficulty from the circumstances that an allowance was directed of £200 per annum to an infant in England, for his maintenance. This would fall in arrear in all proceedings were now tied up by the rule. The debt claimed by the present creditors was £1,780. 1s. 3d. sterling, and the whole amount credited to the estate in the account taken by the master, amounted only to Rs. 28,000, besides a house and some effects.

Sir E. Ryan said, that cause might be shewn next Wednesday. If the rule was discharged the decree might then be taken, and if the creditors' application was allowed, the master would be directed to proceed.

Rule nisi granted.

ECCLESIASTICAL SIDE.

IN THE SHAMY LOLL, TAGORE, DECEASED.

This was a caveat entered on behalf of the widow of Shamy Loll, the deceased, against the taking out letters of administration of the effects by the Ecclesiastical registrar of this Court.

Mr. Prinsep for the caveat. The deceased here is a Hindoo, and I apprehend that whatever power the Court possess under the charter over the estate and effects of a British subject deceased, it has no power to compel administration to be taken on in the case of native estates. The Ecclesiastical registrar, ex officio, has here taken out letters of administration at the suggestion of a bond creditor; and I submit that the mere application of the widow, as next of kin, is sufficient to render the whole proceeding nugatory. She had an unquestionable right to administer, and ought to be preferred to any other party.

Mr. Clarke contra. The usual citations have issued to the next of kin, and if the widow or other representative has omitted or refused to come in, the registrar has a right to administer. But I admit that the widow may stop us by taking out letters of administration and offering security; that is, in fact all that the creditor requires. The general jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in granting probate of the wills, and letters of administration of the estate and effects of Hindoos and Mussulmen within the local jurisdiction of the Court, is fully established by Hebes Multra's case (Clarke's notes of cases, 1834, p. 1190, when elaborate judgments were given by Russel C. J. and Franks, and Ryan Justices.

Sir E. Ryan, the only effect of that decision is to shew generally that the Court has authority to grant probate and letters, in the case of Hindoos and Mahomedans within the limits of the local jurisdiction; but it does not decide the particular question to whom the administration is to be granted. It had been the practice before, and has been since, not to require the grant as a necessary proof of title.

Mr. Dickens, the ecclesiastical registrar, stated to the Court, that in all cases where he had taken out administration in native estates, it had only been upon the application of parties interested. In this very case, he had allowed his name to be used at the suggestion of the creditor, who had no power himself, and who had suggested that without due security the estate might be jeopardized.

Sir Edward Ryan. The only point which I am going to decide here is, whether the ecclesiastical registrar, ex officio, has any power or right to take out administration. I think, that he has no such right; the officer is a creature of the Court, and no such capacity is recognised at home as that of an ex officio administration. I am of opinion, therefore, that this caveat must be allowed. I say nothing now of the right of a creditor; the creditor may try the right, if he chooses, in another form.

Caveat allowed.

This was the last day of the sittings.

Sir Edward Ryan intimated that he should adjourn the sittings until Wednesday next, the 1st of August, (which is the first day of the sessions) when any matters standing over would be heard, and his lordship hoped, that the Court would then be prepared to deliver judgment in the cases in which judgment had not yet been pronounced.

[Two of these are the Salvoe case, and the case of the Bank of Bengal.—Harkn, July 27.

POLICE OFFICE.

JULY 5, 1838.

COOLIE LABOURERS.

The following statement have been taken by Captain Birch from the Indians lately returned from the Mauritius on the Cavendish Bentinck.

Saomlee ayah, Mussulmaunee, returned from the Mauritius on board the Cavendish Bentinck, arrived in Calcutta 4th July 1838. I sailed from Calcutta in the Raj Raner. We went on board on the day of the new moon after Eed 26th, about the fifteenth of Mang (or 27th January last.) The ship sailed three days after. We were consigned to the Mauritius. I was entertained by Messrs. Howarth, Hardman and Co. through Ruggobur, duffadar, for the service of Monsieur Dabois, as an ayah. My house is west of the Jaun-bazar thanah, on the cross road. I was told by the duffadar that I was to go to the Mauritius, and that ship would take two or two and a half months' reaching the place. I have been once before to the Mauritius. I went in the month Bhadoore. The month of Bhadoore this year will be two years, the latter end of Bhadoore (say 20th to 25th of September 1836) I did not go as a servant, I accompanied my husband

Emaum Bukhs, who went as a tailor, to the service of Monsieur Monadien. We accompanied Monsieur Mais, who went in the ship (I forgot the name), I do not remember the captain's name, Boodhoo Bhan duffadar entertained my husband. He told my husband that the Mauritius was a pleasant country; that he would have to do the same sort of work as in this country, to go to his work at nine o'clock and leave it at four; that we would with a fair wind reach in a month (but we were two months and twenty days). My husband agreed to for seven rupees per month, food, ghee, doll, rice, fish, tobacco, mussallah, and clothing, one chupkun pajamah, pugree, and English blanket every year. My husband received five months' pay in advance. I had jewels and money to the amount of about one hundred and fifty rupees, and my husband took with him about thirty rupees. He gave five or six to the duffadar who got him service. I do not think he gave more. My husband and I gained this money. He had a tailor's shop and I served as an ayah. I did every thing I could to persuade my husband not to go to the Mauritius, but he was determined and would go. He said he wished to see the place. There were one khidmutgar, with his wife, my husband, and myself, and my husband's younger brother. Besides us, there were one hundred and ninety six coolies. They were dhangars and western men. I cannot say in what proportion. There were about fourteen women among the dhangars. The duffadar told the dhangars, that they would be employed as durwans, chowkodars, and sepahies, and their wives would have to pull pepper and spices from the trees in the gardens; and he told me that if I would take service I would get twelve rupees per month and food and clothing; but that if I would not work I would get only food and clothing and no pay. On the passage, the captain beat the coolies constantly and severely. He did not beat us. One of the sailors once gave my husband a blow on the face. I don't know what for, but I think because he did not understand what he said. We had plenty to eat and drink, coolies and all. We had nothing to complain of in this way. One coolie was ordered to clean the privy forward. He said he was not a inheter, but a dhangar, and would not. They said he must and forced him to go forward. He fell overboard where the privy was, and no boat was lowered to pick him up. There was a heavy sea on when the coolie fell overboard, and all the rest of us were sent below. Monsieur Mars was troubled about it, and that is why we were sent below. No other accident happened and we landed safe at the Mauritius. There was not any illness on board, only my brother-in-law fell ill but recovered. We staid one night in the city, and the next morning Monsieur Donadieu took my husband and self to his house about two and half koss from the city, called Montague Long. My brother-in-law went as tailor into Mr. Luvarrie's service, and the rest, we don't know where. I have never heard of or seen them since. I have seen my brother-in-law once. Monsieur Luvarrie's place is called Ablay, and is about seven or eight koss east of the city. I went there and staid with him one night. He was content and well treated, and told me he was very well off. My husband had to go to his work at six in the morning and to do table work (khansaurangrice) until ten o'clock at night. He remonstrated and said, the Calcutta custom was to commence work at nine o'clock, and would not do table work at ten o'clock at night. For this he was beaten with a cocoanut rope by Monsieur Donadieu himself, and was shut up three days in a room with his feet in stocks. Since then he worked as tailor and as table servant. He has not received any pay except the five months' advance he got here. He agreed to serve for two and half years. Five may have been put in his agreement, but I don't know. He repeatedly asked Monsieur Donadieu to take twenty or thirty rupees from him and let him go, but he would not. My husband received daily rice, dhull, ghee, an a little dry fish and salt, nothing else. I only got food for twenty-five days. Monsieur Donadieu told me to work in the fields weeding, &c. I refused, and he said if I did not work I should go back to Calcutta. I said, I was married to my husband, how could I go? He beat me and turned me out of my dwelling out of the plantation, and then my husband got me a hired house. Mr. Donadieu told my husband to cast me off and take a coffeee woman to wife. He replied, how could he do so, that he was married to me and would rather lose him life than do so. He was interdicted coming to me for about two months. I was living in a house in a place called Dhana Maulwah close to the city. My husband ran away and came to me. He remained three days. He told me he would complain against Monsieur Donadieu. I advised him to do so. Monsieur Donadieu was searching for him. I went out on the road to buy some ghee. Monsieur Donadieu was coming toward me in his buggy. He stopped, jumped out and caught hold of me and took me to the police, left me with the guard and returned for my husband, whom he brought also to the police. We were both sent to the jail. I was told I should be sent back to Calcutta and my husband should remain. I threatened to put a knife into my throat

They then asked my husband what he said to it. He replied, he would not give me up; that if I staid he would stay, if I went he would go. They took down what we said, and sent us to the jail. We staid there eight days. On the eighth day Monsieur Donadieu sent a note to the police for my husband, who was sent to him. He said that if I was allowed to stay he would work, but if not that he would kill himself. Monsieur Donadieu told him I should not stay. He was again brought to the police and sent back to jail. Fifteen days after this, he was again sent for, but refused to go unless I accompanied him. The jail sergeant tried to persuade him, but finding, it of no effect, his head and beard were shaved, and he was sent to the stocks. We staid in the jail altogether about a month and a half, when one Saturday the guard came and asked my name and my master's. I told him, and four men seized me to carry me on board, saying, I was to go to Calcutta. I said I would not go, beat my head against the stones. The sergeant came and desired them to desist and let me go, which they did. The following morning twelve men came, bound my arms and carried me off to the ship, and shut my husband up in a room. I was taken on board without clothes. I don't remember the name of the ship. We sailed in the month Bysauk, (about the 15th and 26th of April 1837,) and arrived in Calcutta about the 15th of Choeth (27th of May.) We were twenty-seven days on the way and stopped two days at Madras. Surrooptollah, sirdar of coolies, who was of the party that sailed with me, returned in the same ship with me. I saw him in the house of correction. I don't know what he was sent there for. He was discharged by his master, that I know. I asked him why, and he said he had once taken his gang of coolies to the police to complain, and his master had told him he was bad sirdar to do that, and discharged him. He said that his cause of complaint was that they were not sufficiently fed, and much beaten, and on their complaining to the police, his master was fined one rupee per man, and this made him angry and caused him to discharge him. After my return to Calcutta I remained eight months. I found it difficult to live and fell sick, and, being anxious to return to my husband, I took service to go to the Mauritius, and engaged with Mr. Dablos. I was pressed at the police and sailed in the Raj Runes about the 26th of January last. There were about two hundred and sixteen or twenty coolies and five khidmutgais, one syce, one coachman, and three ayahs, besides myself. Among the coolies there were dhangars, western men, and Beugallees, no women. We were one month and twelve days on the passage. All who went understood what they were going about and went willingly. It was explained to them by the police saheb, that they would be a month and half with fair wind, but more than two months if no wind. They understood that it was far off, that they would see no land until they got there. They were all willing to go. We were all very well treated on board, had plenty to eat and drink, and nothing to complain of. Four of the party died from sickness, the rest arrived safe and well at the Mauritius about the time of the hooley, about twelve days before the hooley-moon (about the 10th of March). I was taken with the rest to the police. My master came and spoke to me in French, I answered him. He asked me if I understood French, I replied a little. He asked if I had eat my dinner, and I replied no, upon which he gave me eight pice and desired me to buy bread, and when my name was registered he would send me to his house. He went away. Captain Ley of the police, asked me what business I had to return after he had sent me back to Calcutta, put me in the guard and from thence he sent me to jail. I staid there three months and fifteen days. I had been in jail about two months when my husband came to see me. His master came to fetch him away. He said he would not go, he would return with me; that he had not received any wages for a year and a half, and would return to Calcutta. His head and beard were again shaved and he was put in the stocks, after which he was sent back to Mr. Donadieu, and I was forced on board the Cavalish Bentinck, in which ship I have returned. I was sent on board without any property, and with nothing but a dirty syah and old doputtah. We had five coolies, a coachman, tailor, and myself. Four coolies died. The coachman and tailor served the same master, and one can speak of the other. I don't know them. The coolies said he had not received any money for a year and had been sent back because he refused to work. I do not know where he is likely to be found. I said yesterday evening, in reply to your question, why I had come back, that I was ordered to take away the chamberpot and sweep the room, instead of waiting on the lady, dressing her hair, &c., but I said so, out of fear, and to account for my coming back; but now, to-day, as you have told me not to fear any thing, but to speak out, I have told you every thing.

Qadir Bukus, Moonsulman coachman, returned from Mauritius on the Cavalish Bentinck, arrived in Calcutta 4th of July 1838; said, I sailed from Calcutta in a ship. I don't know the name. It was loaded with rice. I forgot the captain's name. We were consigned to the Mauritius, I went on board on the 15th of the month Awasin, now three months less than two years. About the thirtieth September 1836, I was entertained by Mr. Gilmore and Mr. Scraup. (We could not make out the latter name, but think Crawford is meant) to serve Mr. William Julgo. He is next to the lord, saheb, in rank at the Mauritius. I was entertained as a coachman. My house is close to Tom Hunter, saheb's. I was without employ. I heard from a bhuttearah, whose name I forget, that several servants were required, and went with him to Nilmoney baboo, who took me to Mr. Gilmore, by whom I was entertained. I engaged for eight rupees per month, clothing and food; that is, my wages were to be sixteen rupees per month, out of which I was to receive eight, and my master was to deduct eight rupees, to furnish me with food and clothing. I went of my own accord. I engaged for three years, but was told that if I behaved well my master would give me my discharge before the three years were out, or on the termination of the three years. Besides myself, there were engaged for my master one syce, one tailor, two dhobeas, in all five. For a Monsieur Deine, two dhobeas, one mhetur, one blueshee, five coolies, a khansaman, two children, two women (the families of the dhobeas) and a tailor. I cannot speak certainly, but I think there were five others. We were in all twenty-five, men, women, and children on board the ship. We were two and a half months on the voyage from Calcutta to the ghat at the Mauritius. I had heard before I sailed from several people, that Mauritius was from two to three months distant from Calcutta, and that for that time one should see nothing but water. I was told the same when I was engaged, and understood it before I went. We were well treated on board ship, had good food and water. No one was beaten or ill-used, no one was sick on board. A dhobe's wife brought forth a daughter prematurely, which was thrown overboard. We all reached the Mauritius. Those who sailed with me understood as I did, that we would not see any thing but water for two and a half or three months. We used to talk of it among ourselves. Some said, if we had a wind we would get there in a month and half. The coolies who accompanied us were all dhangers. They understood this also. They were told before me that they were not to be afraid, that they would be from two to three months on board ship. They were told this before they went on board. We were all told the same when we were beyond Orange Saugor. They serving out water to us, and told us to be careful of it and not to waste it, as it would be long before we reached Mauritius. I received six months' wages in advance in Calcutta; we all received the same. I paid my debts here to the extent of about thirty-two rupees, bought some clothes and took with me about five rupees. I understood that I would not get any more pay until six months should pass. I was asked by the sircar, Nilmoney baboo, to give something; but I refused and did not give any thing. The rest, on my refusing, refused also. The dhangers sent some money to their homes, either through Nilmoney or Romance bearer, duffadar, who entertained them. I don't know how much. They took with them, one durzee, a khidmitgar, and a dhobe, only received four months' advance. These left monthly tickets for their families of four rupees per month. I don't know whether the dhangers gave any thing to the duffadars. I heard from them that they had received six months' advance at the rate of five rupees per mensem. The Mauritius is a very good country, plenty to eat and drink; I liked it, but I was anxious to return to my family being old. I was well treated by my master. I told him I was old, and wished to see my family, and asked him to return. He gave me leave seeing I was old. I received my wages regularly, also food and clothing. This is my master's livery (orange). I got these clothes from him. There was no deduction whatever made from my pay. Of the servants who went with me, one syce and two dhobeas are still there. I don't know whether they wish to remain. They said when I left, "well it is your fate to return, and if it is our fate we will return too." They were well-treated and contented, and my master was pleased with them. The tailor who went has returned with me. My master was not pleased with him. He would not work, but was constantly gadding, and my master sent him back, saying he would not do. He had sent for a man who would work. The tailor was well pleased to get his discharge. He gave much trouble, was drunk and absent from work. My master sent him once to the police. He was confined one night, and the next morning my master wrote a note and got him released. I was in the city. I did not go to the plantation but once when my master took me with him to the races at a place called Gumpoon, about fourteen kos from the city, where there is a European regiment quartered. I did not see any whom I knew. I saw coolies, Hindoostanee, and they appeared contented and well; but I saw no one that I could ask questions of. The other servants who sailed with me, for Monsieur Dine went to the plantation about five kos from the city. They occasionally came in and visited me. I used to ask them how they fared. They said they were well treated and fed, and had nothing to complain of. I did not see any of the dhangers; but I asked Buxoo how they were, and he said well, and well used. I never saw any one beaten. Four of us came back in the same ship, an ayah, the tailor, a coolie, and myself. We had five coolies put on board at the Mauritius, three were very ill and died, and were thrown over-board. One coolie went over the side to make water and fell into the sea, the ship was hove too and the jolly boat lowered, but they could not find him, there was a high wind and sea on. I did not see the ayah before she came on board. She told us that her master said to her, you had better go back to Calcutta and get service there. Her husband is in service at the Mauritius, but I don't know with whom. She made no complaint of ill-treatment, but said her husband also did not want her to remain. She is living some where near Mendhee bazar; the durzee is somewhere near Taultollah, and of the coolie I don't know what has become. I live near Mr. Rose's stable in town, in Hunter's jemadar's house. I would not mind returning after four or five months to the Mauritius, if I could take my family with me. I would not mind remaining there altogether; but I am now an old man, and would not like to go without my family.

JUNE 15, 1838.

Case of Mr. D. P.—e and his treasurer Jogul Kissors Sain.

Mr. D. P.—e, late collector and magistrate of zillah Mymensing, in a letter dated the 25th May last, to the address of the secretary to Government in the revenue and judicial department, detailed to him the following particulars of a monied transaction between him and his late treasurer, Jogul Kissors Sain.

He stated that, when he joined his cutcherry at Mymensing, he was requested by the proprietors of the Bygunbaree indigo factory, in zillah Mymensing, Messrs. Logan and Davidson, to remit the savings from his salary through them to the presidency. To this proposition he consented. From these transactions originated the occurrence which was submitted by Mr. P.—e for the consideration of his honour the Vice-President in Council.

Mr. P.—e added, that from the extreme regularity of his payments to the factory in exchange for drafts received, neither party thought it necessary to call for a comparison of accounts until Mr. P.—e was about to leave Mymensing, having been removed from that zillah to Coomillah, which was at the commencement of last year, when the result of Mr. P.—e's private account, as kept by the treasurer of his cutcherry, Jogul Kissors Sain, showed a debit on his side of 1,000 rupees, for which there was no corresponding account entry made in the book. In consequence of this discovery being made by Mr. P.—e, after his arrival at Coomillah, he was incapable of either rectifying or satisfactorily explaining this matter until he accidentally met Messrs. Logan and Davidson at Calcutta. The debit and the entry in question, as found in Mr. P.—e's private account with the treasurer, to whom an order is addressed in Mr. P.—e's own hand-writing, instructing him to pay Mr. Davidson's servant 1,000 rupees on Mr. P.—e's account, bears date the 19th November 1835, and the entry is further supported by a receipt purporting to be of the factory servant of the same date for a corresponding amount. This receipt which the Payek disacknowledges to be his, differs widely from his servant's former receipts. The others have his name signed in full by himself, whereas this bears a mark purporting to be made by him, and his name written beneath by another person; and there is one receipt for 50 rupees of the same date as this questioned receipt, which bears the individual's name in full, written by himself, being made by Jogul Kissors Sain on Mr. P.—e's account, for which he is duly credited by Messrs. Davidson and Logan. Further, as Mr. P.—e got no draft from the proprietors of the factory for these 1,000 rupees, it cannot be supposed that they had received this amount, which would otherwise have been credited to Mr. P.—e, and Mr. P.—e supposes the delay in the detection of this false entry was caused by the mutual neglect of Mr. P.—e and the proprietors of the factory in not comparing their accounts until after Mr. P.—e's appointment to another station.

From the above circumstances a violent presumption was established, that the receipt purporting to be the factory servant's, and which was denied by him, was a forgery committed by the treasurer to defraud Mr. P.—e; nevertheless the motive of Mr. P.—e, for having authorised the treasurer to pay 1,000 rupees to Mr. Davidson's servant, on that day, remained yet to be explained and this was not elucidated until Mr. P.—e, Mr. Davidson at Calcutta as aforesaid, when Mr. Davidson produced a letter from Mr. P.—e, to the address of Messrs. Logan and Davidson. In this letter, Mr. P.—e regretted that he had led Messrs. Logan and Davidson, under a misapprehension of what was due to them, at that time, to draw upon him for 1,000 rupees; and concluded by assuring them, that they should receive the amount during the following month, and though this letter bore no day but only mentioned the day of the week in which it was written, yet as Mr. Davidson did not receive it till he was on the point of quitting Bygunbaree factory for Calcutta, which was in December 1835, Mr. P.—e concludes it must have been written on the very day on which the false entry was made, after he had given, under an erroneous idea that money was due by him to Messrs. Logan and Davidson, an order for the payment of the 1,000 rupees to the factory servant, who must have come from the factory for these 1,000 rupees, and after the discovery of the error, the order for the payment of the 1,000 rupees must have been countermanded, and this explanatory letter written; and this is borne out by the fact of the factory servant denying the receipt for the 1,000 rupees to be genuine. The fact is, that Jogul Kissors, in Mr. P.—e's opinion, must have taken advantage of this order, and forged this false receipt with an intention to defraud Mr. P.—e of 1,000 rupees.

Having thus satisfied himself of Jogul Kissors Sain's guilt, Mr. P.—e determined to prosecute the culprit for this forgery; he therefore executed a power of attorney in favour of Mr. Llewellyn, the civil surgeon at Mymensing, in which he authorised that gentleman to conduct the proceedings on his behalf against the treasurer, and transmitted a petition to the magistrate of Mymensing, to commence the prosecution against the treasurer. When Jogul Kissors Sain heard of these proceedings against him, he paid to Mr. Llewellyn the 1,000 rupees, together with the interest on it, up to the date of payment, and observed that he would prosecute the factory servant to whom he had paid the 1,000 rupees for that sum in the civil court at Mymensing, and recover judgment against him.

Such being the circumstances of this case, Mr. P.—e did not consider himself justified in receiving the money paid by Jogul Kissors Sing to Dr. Llewellyn on his account, without previously acquainting his honourable the Vice-President in Council, of the particulars of this transaction. However, he believed there existed not a doubt, that the treasurer forged the receipt in question, with an intent to defraud him, and although he has satisfied Mr. P.—e by paying him the 1,000 rupees with interest, yet Mr. P.—e considered, that in order to clear up his honesty, and show to the public that he is a trustworthy person, and not unfit to be employed in a responsible situation under Government, he ought, without loss of time, to commence an action against Payek for the 1,000 rupees, which he alleges he has paid him on the receipt in question, and if he can obtain a verdict in his favour in that suit. The acknowledgment of a court of justice of the genuineness of the document will be ample testimony of its validity, and fully clear the treasurer from the stigma under which he must, without doubt, labour, under the present circumstances of this case in the opinion of all acquainted with the particulars of this transaction.

Mr. P.—e, in conclusion, requested his honour the Vice-President, that in the event of his honour being disposed to sanction the proceedings of Jogul Kissors against the Payek, the secretary to Government in the revenue and judicial department be desired to inform him of his Honour's resolution to that effect, as he was a party concerned in this affair, and for other reasons, which, if his honour the Vice-President deemed necessary, he would lay before him. Mr. P.—e, in his postscript, assured the Vice-President in Council, that his private money accounts with Jogul Kissoore Sain, were entirely confined to that individual receiving Mr. P—e's salary from a third party, and by paying out of it the amount of P—e's orders in favour of Messrs. Logan and Davidson.

The Secretary to Government in the revenue and judicial department, informed Mr. P—e, in reply to this letter, that his honour the Vice-President in Council, entirely refused to interfere in the matter which Mr. P—e had submitted to his honour's consideration and his honour differed totally from Mr. P—e in the view which Mr. P—e had considered his money transaction with Jogul Kissoore Sain, which he highly disapproved as they were in direct contradiction with the orders of the Governor General in Council, and the 13th section of the 2d regulation of 1793, and the 2d clause of the 2d section of the 8th regulation of 1825, which distinctly forbid all civil servants from having any money transactions with those who are officially under them. Mr. P—e was further informed by the same channel, that he had, by his infringement of these orders, made himself liable to be dismissed from Government employ for neglect of duty; but as his honour the Vice-President in Council was of opinion, that this breach of Mr. P—e's conduct arose more from his ignorance of the regulations of Government on this subject than from any wilful misconduct, his honour the Vice-President in Council, was disposed to overlook the error of judgment in Mr. P—e's official career, and trusted that Mr. P—e would never be guilty of the like again after this admonition from Government.

The Secretary to the revenue board, was likewise directed to transmit a circular to all the revenue commissioners under the jurisdiction of the Sudder revenue board, informing them therein, that, the orders of the Governor General in Council, and the 13th section of 2d regulation of Government of 1793, A. D., and the 2d clause of the 2d section of the 8th regulation of Government, passed in the year 1835, A. D. strictly forbade them and all the officers under them, as well as all Government employees from having any money transactions with those who were under them in an official capacity; and persons who were found guilty of infringing these crimes, would make themselves liable to be dismissed from Government employ, and such other penalties, as the Government may deem adequate to their offence; and the commissioners were all directed, to keep a sharp scrutiny into the conduct of their subordinates, and report to Government any of them who may be found guilty of having acted in breach of these regulations on this subject.—[Harkaru.

THE RAJAH OF TIPPERAH'S OFFICERS.

Mr. Wise, the mooktar of the Rajah of Tipperah, petitioned the revenue board. He stated, that his client, the Rajah of Tipperah, had extensive zemindaries under the Bengal presidency. This circumstance necessarily involved him frequently in immense money transactions with Government, which often came under the award of the Sudder board of revenue at Calcutta. Previous to Mr. A. A. Bigsall's appointment, as the pleader and manager of the Government suits pending before the Sudder revenue board in Bengal, that gentleman had the management of Mr. Wise's client's cases, but subsequent to that appointment, as that gentleman was, in consequence thereof, incapacitated from conducting the Rajah's cases, which may be pending against the Government, and as Mr. Wise could not procure any other competent person, except Mr. N. E. Baillie, the Government pleader in the Courts of Sudder Dewanny and the Nizamut Adawlut, he begged the Sudder board of revenue to permit Mr. Baillie to manage his client's case at the revenue board; for if this boon were denied to his client, his affairs would suffer materially from the want of a proficient pleader to conduct his cases at the revenue board.

The members of the revenue board stated, that if Mr. Baillie could conveniently, without the detriment of his business at the Sudder Dewanny and the Nizamut Adawlut Courts, spare time to conduct the cases of Mr. Wise's client's at the Sudder revenue board, the members of the board could perceive no objection to his doing so.—[Harkaru, July 6.

The responsibility of Collectors on the postponement of the sale of any estate advertised to be sold for arrears of Government rents.

The Secretary to the Sudder Revenue Board of the Bengal Presidency, by the intimation of the Board, issued, the following circular letter to the Commissioners of Revenue under its Jurisdiction.

It desired them to inform the several collectors attached to their districts, that whenever they may officially give notice of the sale of any estate in their district for the liquidation of the arrears of ground rent due to the Government by the proprietor of it, and fix the sale of that estate on a certain day, should the proprietor of that estate in pursuance to that notice, subsequent to the issue of the said notice, but previous to the day fixed for the sale of his estate, come to the Collector's office and adjust with him his accounts for the arrears of ground rents due by him to the Government, and the sale be consequently postponed, the Collector is in that case directed to make diligent and particular inquiries, and examine the Government account current with that estate, and make the entries of the debit and credit sides of that estate with Government, with the utmost accuracy, and mark of the amounts paid and the outstanding, still due to government on that estate at the time of the sale being postponed. And in failure of any Collector so doing he will be considered by the Sudder Revenue Board and the Government likewise, liable for any error which may be found to exist between the debt or credit side of the accounts thus examined and submitted by him to the Sudder Revenue Board.

Collectors of districts acting on behalf of a minor permitted to sell a portion of their Landed Estates for the payment of debts contracted on them by the former proprietors.

We have heard that the Secretary to the Sudder Revenue Board for the Bengal Provinces, has issued the following circular order, by the desired of the Board, and with the concurrence of the Vice President in Council, to all the Commissioners of Revenue under the superintendence of that Board, regarding the sale of the landed property, bequeathed by a former proprietor of it, provided that person was one who had reached the age of discretion, to his heir who may be a minor; and the property so bequeathed, and under the management of a receiver appointed by a Court of ward or a bursah nominated by the deceased, previous to his demise. If that property was at the time of the testator's death encumbered with debts or saddled with a mortgage, the Collector of the district in which that property might be situated, is authorized by the circular order, to dispose of a portion of it under the following restrictions for the payment of the aforesaid encumbrance on it, viz.

Firstly. The Collector was directed to make strict and minute inquiry to ascertain if their existed under the circumstances of the case any other possible mode of liquidating the debt of the former proprietor, before he resolved on the sale of any portion of the said landed property, which was only to be restored to as an ultimatum if no other means of clearing of the farmer's and proprietor's debts could be available. And whenever over the Collector finds any estate so involved, he is to draw up a brief summary of the particulars of that estate, and through his immediate superior, the Commissioner of his division, submit it to the Sudder Revenue Board for its final orders on it.

Secondly. Should the sale of the estate under the existing circumstances of the case be considered requisite and ordered, the Collector must in that case put up for an adequate period a notice in a conspicuous part of his office, describing the nature of the estate from the records of his office that is to be thus sold, and in that notice fully and explicitly cautioning and acquainting all intending purchasers, that the estate thus intended to be disposed of by public sale for the satisfaction of the debts of the former proprietor of it, will be sold with all the contingent liabilities of any claim of deficiency of title, &c., which may hereafter be found to exist in it; and further, that the future purchaser of it would be liable for the full payment of all the arrears of rents that may be due on it to the Government, who will not hold itself liable for any contingent liability with which the said estate may be encumbered at the time of sale. And the purchaser must comply with the usual condition of such sales before he can have the property conveyed over to him from the collectorate or obtain a ballot for it.

This precautionary notice will guarantee the Government from all litigation regarding the encumbrances which the purchaser may discover after he has bought the estate, and will enable him to regulate his bid for the estate according to the circumstances of the case.

Any surplus money which the estate may realize after the payment of the debts for whose liquidation it may be sold, will be carried to the credit of the heir at law, and placed in Government Securities for his benefit.

Regarding Administering Oath to prosecutors in a criminal case, in the Mofussil Courts.

In a criminal case which lately was called on for trial in the Zillah Court of 24 Pergunnahs, before the then Sessions Judge of it, William Cracroft, Esq., it appeared that a riot and an affray had lately taken place in one of the villages within his jurisdiction, between the ryots of two neighbouring proprietors of two indigo factories; one of whom was a European gentleman, and another a wealthy Baboo. In this assault it was alleged by the prosecutors, who it appears had been the servants of the gentleman concerned at the time of this affray, that two persons who had been engaged in this affray on behalf of the Baboo and his ryots, cannot be found nor any account of them traced subsequent to this affray, consequently these prosecutors deposed in the Mofussil that they verily believed that these missing men must during the riot and affray, have been murdered by the riots of the gentleman and his party, and their bodies subsequently secreted to prevent the detection of the murder, and the apprehension of the criminals concerned in the perpetration of it. They admitted that they were neither the friends nor the relatives of the two missing persons, who had relatives living in their village. The prosecutors having deposed to their charge in the Mofussil, the magistrate, in the regular routine of his duty, forwarded the case for trial to the Sessions Judge of the Zillah, who previous to examining them on the particulars of the case, asked them to depose on oath, why, as they had admitted that they were neither the relatives nor the friends of either of the two missing persons, who had both friends and relatives living in the village where they had resided—and, moreover, as they, it appears, were formerly the employers of the gentleman against whom and whose party they now bring this charge—it now came that if these persons are actually missing since this affray and were concerned in it, that neither their relatives nor any of their friends have come forward with any complaint regarding them, but these prosecutors who were apparently strangers to them. The Judge insisted on having their answer on oath to this question, and which they declined giving on oath as pertinaciously.

The case was consequently postponed and the matter referred by the Sessions Judge to the Nizamut Adawlut for its order on this point. The Superior Court in reply desired the Sessions Judge to administer either the sook-reete namah or the written oath to them.

In consequence of Mr. Cracroft's removal to the Special Commissioner's Court and the nomination of Mr. Biscoe to the Civil and Sessions Judge, this case, we believe, has not been finally disposed of as yet.—Hurkaru, July 26.

SUDDER BOARD.

• MR. BIGNELL.

Mr. Bignell, the Government pleader at the Sudder revenue board at Calcutta, applied for authenticated copies of certain cases decided at the revenue board, as being required to be filed in some Government cases, which he is now managing. The members of the board ordered them to be supplied to Mr. Bignell; but they at the same time, intimated to Mr. Bignell, that, as the writers at the Board could not afford to spare time from their duties to transcribe these documents, he was authorized to employ extra writers to engross them and charge Government for their labour in an extra bill, which would be submitted to and passed by the revenue board as a contingent bill.

Detailed statements of mouzahs.

The Sudder revenue board have circulated an order to the several collectors and commissioners under their jurisdiction, that in submitting to the board the statement of the mouzahs in their district, they are only to detail those whose jimmah have undergone any change, and to state what local arrangement they have made with the locaters of them, pending the reference to the Sudder revenue board.

Sales ordered by collectors.

The Sudder revenue board have in their circular, orders to the commissioners and collectors under their control, declared that whenever a collector deposes any person to hold a sale of any landed property in his district, without previously obtaining the sanction of the Sudder revenue board to effect the said sale, that sale shall be deemed illegal and of non-effect.

Regarding cases referred to the Special Commissioners' office by the Commissioners of revenue.

The Sudder board of revenue has circulated an order to the Commissioners of revenue under its jurisdiction, to the effect that whenever they may be dissatisfied with the decision of any special collector on any resumption case, and find it in conformity to the 9th section of the 3d regulation of Government of 1828, they are to specify to the revenue board, in communicating the same, and likewise to the Sudder special commissioners, to whom the case may be referred, the grounds for their having made the reference, and the commissioners' attention was directed by the revenue board on this point, particularly to the 4th rule of the practice of this Court on this subject, as circulated to them.—Murkaru, July 24.

Case of Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore, the agent of Baboo Prankissen Holdar for a fund of 1,157 rupees 12 ans. 6 pies.

In this case Baboo Jodonath had mortgaged some talooks to Baboo Prawnkisson Holdar, of Chinsurah, whose agent, Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore, as the mortgagee, failed to redeem his mortgage, moved the Sudder Court, and, by a decree of that court, had the property seized and sold. Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore purchased three of these talooks on behalf of the mortgagee, and in conformity to the Government regulations in such cases, paid the arrears of the rent due to the Government on these three talooks up to the date of his purchase; but the collector of zillah of 24-pargunnahs insisted on receiving the arrears from 1240 B. S. and 25 per cent. interest, on these arrears and fines from that date up to the date of the purchase of these estates by the mortgagee. This sum Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore likewise paid into the collector's office. He then subsequently instituted inquiries into the particulars of the arrears of rents, fines, &c. accruing to Government on these three talooks, and having ascertained that these talooks had no prices standing against them, and were entitled to a remission of interest for the year 1240 B. S. he obtained an official letter from C. Trower, Esq. the late collector of zillah of 24-pargunnahs, to that effect, which he filed, together with the other papers relative to the case of his client, in the office of the commissioner of the Jessore division, in whose jurisdiction the zillah of 24-pargunnahs is comprehended, and appealed against the decision of the collector of 24-pargunnahs, considering his exactions to be a serious and exorbitant, and unjustly levied against his client.

Mr. Pigou, the commissioner of Jessore, on a careful investigation into the particulars of the case, considered Baboo Dwarkanauth's client entitled to a refund from the collector of 24-pargunnah office, of the sum of Rs. 1,157 12 ans. 6 pies, being the amount of interest levied in excess of Government established sales of 6 per cent. in such cases, and recommended the Sudder revenue board to sanction the refund of this sum to the appellant's client.

The members of the Sudder revenue board, considered the decision of the commissioner of Jessore to be reasonable, seconded it, and submitted it to the final consideration of Government. His honour the Vice-President in Council, having maturely considered this case in all its bearings, confirmed the decision of the commissioner of Jessore, and directed the secretary to Government in the revenue department, to communicate to the secretary to the revenue board, that the Government had sanctioned the refund of Rs. 1,157-12 6 to Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore, the agent of Baboo Prawnkisson Holdar. On this case being submitted by the revenue board to Government, the members of the revenue board directed the secretary to the board, to communicate the decision to the commissioner of Jessore for the information of the collector of the 24-pargunnahs.

Purchasers of property at Government sale not entitled to any refund of the deposit money.

In a case, in which a person named Paradhur, of Sonatoney, purchased some landed property at the Government public sale in the district of Beerbhoom, and in conformity to the regulation 11th of Government of the year 1822, and regulation 7th of Government of 1830, paid a certain sum as deposit money to bid down the bargain. The purchaser having become subsequently dissatisfied with his purchase, failed to pay up the balance of the purchase money, and the estate, after due notice, was resold. Subsequent to this resale, the first purchaser petitioned the collector to have his deposit-money refunded to him. The collector considering that the first purchaser, by the tenour of the regulations above quoted, had forfeited all right to a refund, refused to comply with the petitioner's application, and forwarded it to the commissioner of Moorshedabad, his immediate superior officer. The commissioner submitted the application to the Sudder board of revenue, who laid it before the Vice-President in Council. His honour, on a consideration of the proceedings, decided, that the applicant had, by the construction of the orders already mentioned, forfeited all right to a refund of the deposit money; but nevertheless, he directed the members of the Sudder board to ascertain, whether the sum in question had been carried as yet to the credit of Government or not, and informed the board, through the secretary to Government in the revenue department, that if the sum in question had not as yet been credited to the Government, the Sudder board may direct the collector of Beerbhoom to refund the amount to the depositor of it; but if it should appear that the amount, had been already credited to Government, the applicant should be informed, that he could in no wise be now entitled to a refund of his deposit money.

The Sudder board, having through the commissioner of the Moorshedabad division, made the requisite inquiries, and ascertained that the sum in question had actually been entered in the collector's books to the credit of the Government, directed the secretary to the revenue board to communicate, through the medium of the commissioner of Moorshedabad, to the collector of zillah Beerbhoom, that the petitioner's application for a refund of the deposit-money in question could not be complied with.

Regarding receipts of decreedars for property purchased by them at the Government sales, pursuant to their decrees.

The collector of zillah Beerbhoom having, under the orders of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, sold some landed property situated in his district, for the satisfaction of a decree of the Sudder Court, of which the decree holder became the purchaser, the purchaser paid the purchase-money in surplus of the amount of his decree to the collector's office, and gave a receipt by a set-off, to the amount of the decree in his favor, for the realization of which the estate had been ordered to be sold.

The commissioner of revenue for the Moorshedabad division, under whose division the Beerbhoom district is, in consequence of this departure from the hitherto usual practice in similar cases, whereby the purchaser was required to pay the full amount of the purchase money into the collector's office, called on the collector to account for his reasons for swerving from the established modes. The collector in reply, informed the commissioner, that he had received instruction from the registrar of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, to adopt the practice he had done in this instance in future similar cases, the orders to which purport having been passed by the Sudder Court, at the suggestion of R. H. Rattray, Esq., senior judge of that court, and he enclosed a copy of the registrar's letter to him to that effect, to the commissioner of his division.

This not being considered a satisfactory explanation by the commissioner, he referred the whole proceedings to the Sudder revenue board, the members of which after a reference to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, having ascertained the correctness of the collector of Beerbhoom's assertions on this point, and having further learnt, that it was the wish of the Sudder Court, for collectors to adopt, in future similar cases, the line of conduct the collector of Beerbhoom had pursued in this instance, on a mature deliberation, approved of and adopted the suggestion of the judge of the Sudder court, and directed the secretary to the revenue board to inform the commissioner of Moorshedabad, and likewise all the other commissioners subordinate, of the control of the Sudder revenue board for the Bengal provinces. That whenever any estates are sold in any district under their jurisdiction, by the order of either the revenue board or the Sudder Dewanny, for the realization of any decree of any of the Company's courts, and the decree holder becomes the purchaser of it; the collector who may be empowered to effect the sale alluded to, must in the first instance, compel the purchaser to pay up all the arrears of rent due on that estate up to the date of the sale to the Government, which the purchaser may, instead of paying each, give a set-off, by giving to the collectorate a receipt in full up to the amount of his decree, and any balance accruing on the sale in excess of his decree, the purchaser must pay in cash to the collector's office.

Zemindary oppressions near Calcutta.

It appears that certain zemindars near Khurrah, a place situated between Calcutta and Barrackpore, are in the habit of oppressing their ryots and dependant talookdars in a most shameful manner. The following is a statement from one of the oppressed which we give as we had them from the person himself.

"As I was coming to town about 5 A.M. on the — of last month, I was laid hold of by 5 or 6 men near Thakoor Pookoon bazar, and taken to the kutcherry of Baboo Umrath Bissas, a mudar of Khurda. The zemindar on seeing me told me, that as I had dug a tank on his ground, I must give him a salance of 100 rupees. I told him it was true that I have dug a tank, but it was on my lakhray ground, and begged of him to call and look at the situation of the tank. This he declined doing. But insisted on the demanded salance being paid. Rather than remain confined, I offered to give five rupees. This was refused. Ultimately I was compelled to give 25 rupees and after remaining confined for eight hours (from 5 A.M. to 1 P.M.) I was released."

This deponent is a writer in one of public offices in the town, and a man whose statement may be relied on. On being asked why these matters are not brought forward before the judicial authorities, or even before the public through the press, the usual answer, that little good and much harm may arise from either course, is given. Indeed the poorer classes of these people seem to dread the vengeance of their wealthy and influential neighbours, to such a degree, that they can scarcely complain of the wrongs they suffer. Such is the state of things within a few hours' journey from Calcutta, and the Sudder station, what must be the state of the interior?

From another person of the same neighbourhood, we have heard that a certain zemindar has such a hold on his dependants, that whenever he or his people come to Calcutta, they make it a practice to put up at the lodgings of some of their dependants and live upon them whilst staying here on their own business; and should the fair provided by the poor dependant, not be to their liking, threat of revenge are held out, and better fare extorted, for providing of which, we have heard, the poor man has been forced to mortgage his trinkets,

Sec. And yet these submissive and oppressed people will not endeavour to shake off the incubus by any attempt to seek redress in the proper quarter.—Hurkaru, July 25.

Cancellation of the sale of certain lands in Burdwan, and the power of collectors to delegate persons to hold such sales declared illegal by the revenue board.

The collector of zillah Burdwan having deputed Meer Daul Ullly, his uncovenanted assistant, to sell by public sale, certain resumption lands situated in mouzah Nodhipoor, zillah Burdwan, on the 18th January 1837, the property of Mussamut Radha Pearce Dossee, Putneedar, for arrears of Government rents, amounts to Co.'s Rs. 1,187, for the month of Awseen, 1243. Mr. Lewis, the commissioner for the division of Moorshedabad, in whose jurisdiction zillah Burdwan was included, considered illegal this sale, which, it appears, had been subsequently confirmed by Mr. Pigou, the then commissioner of Alipoor division, under whose superintendence zillah Burdwan temporarily was. Mr. Lewis, therefore, referred the matter to the Sudder board, and wished to know, whether the collector could depute, without the sanction of either the commissioner or the Sudder board of revenue at Calcutta, an uncovenanted assistant to hold such sale. The secretary to the revenue board informed Mr. Lewis, in reply, that the first circular order of the 15th January 1838, of the Sudder board, fully explained this matter and referred him to it. This not being considered a sufficient elucidation of the matter in question, Mr. Lewis requested the board to construe that order more explicitly, as he could not comprehend the tenor of the board's last note to him on that subject. The secretary to the revenue board then informed Mr. Lewis, that by the 20th and 21st regulations of Government, of the year 1828, A.D., the revenue board possessed the power of authorizing a collector to depute any person, who has already been declared by the board competent to hold such sales, to hold them again; but, nevertheless, it must be obvious to Mr. Lewis, that none but a covenanted servant of Government, by the existing regulations of Government, could be thus delegated. Mr. Lewis, in reply to the communication, informed the Sudder revenue boards that, as in the case submitted by him to the board, it appeared, that the person who had been nominated by the collector of Burdwan to superintend the sale in question, had never before been declared by the Sudder revenue board eligible to conduct such sales, nor was he a covenanted servant of Government, the sale in his opinion must be declared an illegal one. The secretary to the revenue board, on receipt of this communication, desired Mr. Lewis to forward to him the proceedings in the case to which he alluded, for the members of the Sudder revenue board declined passing any decision on the case submitted by Mr. Lewis to them, until they had perused the proceedings connected with it. Mr. Lewis then called on the collector of Burdwan to furnish the proceedings required by the Sudder revenue board, and on receipt of them, he forwarded them to the revenue board. But the papers thus sent not being considered by the revenue board sufficient to elucidate the case. The secretary to the revenue board wrote to Mr. Dampier, the commissioner of the Jessore division, to whose jurisdiction zillah Burdwan had been subsequently transferred, to send him the further particulars of the case. Mr. Dampier consequently desired Mr. Ogilvie, the officiating collector of Burdwan, to furnish him with the details of the case. Mr. Ogilvie, therefore, informed Mr. Dampier, that the lands in question had been resumed on an appeal previous to the passing of the 14th regulation of Government of the year 1828. The collector of Burdwan, who investigated the particulars regarding it, declared it liable to the resumption tenure, and, in conformity to the then existing regulations of Government, submitted his report regarding it to the Sudder revenue board at Calcutta, who, by the 1st regulation of Government of the year 1829, referred the proceedings to the special commissioner. That officer, by the 4th regulation of Government of the year 1828, subsequently referred the matter to the Sudder special commissioner's court on the 10th April 1838, and on the 18th August 1834, an ameen was deputed to go to the spot, and by making inquiries thereon, send in his report to the special commissioner. This ameen, in the month of June 1835, gave in the result of his inquiries, by which it appeared, that the land was divided amongst many proprietors and owed rents, amongst whom Mussamut Raulia Pearce was one, and her share of rent amounted to 431 rupees, 9 annas and 6 pies. Mr. Ogilvie further added, that he considered, that by the sections 20 and 21 of Government regulation of 1828, the collector was justified in deputing a person to sell the land in question, and added, that by the regulation VII. of Government of the year 1830, lands have been sold in his district for arrears of stamp and abkharee without notice. Mr. Dampier, in forwarding the explanation to the Sudder revenue board, stated, that although the 21 clause of the 8th section of the 4th regulation of Government of the year 1831, empowered the board to appoint a person or authorize the collectors to delegate a person to hold such sales, yet he opened, that the 4th section of the regulation XI of 1828, strictly deferred, that, that person must be a civilian, and that the board had not the power to appoint any person not included in that branch of the service, the appointment of an uncovenanted officer to hold such sale being vested with the Governor General in Council solely. Such being the case, he considered the sale in question, which had been conducted by an uncovenanted person not appointed either by the board or the Government, to be illegal and liable to be cancelled. More so as the land had not been formerly settled, but was in reference, and added, that he disapproved of the summary manner in which lands were sold for stamp and abkharee arrive in that district, and intended to write to Mr. Ogilvie on the subject.

The members of the revenue board, on receipt of this communication, cancelled the sale in question, and remarked, that the case was an unique one, and although it decided, that the collector could not, by the regulation IV of 1821, depute any person to hold such sale without the nomination of the Sudder revenue board, yet it very much doubted with or by the regulation XI. of 1822, it was restricted from appointing an uncovenanted person without the sanction of the Governor General in Council, and it intended to refer the question to the Governor General in Council.—Hurkaru, July 28,

ZILLAH 24-PERGUNNAHS—FOUZDARY, ALLYPORE.

TUESDAY TO THURSDAY, THE 3D TO 5TH JULY, 1838.

(Before J. H. Patton, Esq., Magistrate.)

KIDNAPPING.

The jemadar of the full guard, reported this morning, that he had apprehended, on the previous night, two men, with whom he found two women and an infant child. The men could not satisfactorily account for themselves, and the women said, they had been decoyed away by the men from Midnapore, and wished to be released from them. That the men had ten rupees belonging to them, which the men did not deny.

The jemadar added, that on ordering the men to the full guard, one of them was recognized by several of the coolies, as the brother of Narain, a duffadar, now in custody, and the other proved also to be a relative of Narain's.

The men were ordered to the nazir guard, and the women and children are to be kept with the people released within the last two or three days. The magistrate then received an authenticated report from Sergeant Floyd, the purport of which is as follows:

That in obedience to the orders of the Court, of the 29th ultimo, Sergeant Floyd, accompanied Mr. Dias, with the magistrate's clerk, the Balaguhtee jemadar, and a suitable guard, went in search of the kidnappers, Rampersaud and Sunker.

The witness Chumeer first took the party to the north-side of the Bumunbustee village; they there found the homestead of Bheekaree and Beeltoo, and that a hut next to them was pointed out, as belonging to Sunker, Sunker was not found. In a few minutes, the party were surrounded by the villagers, who, on learning the purport of the search, said, that Bumunbustee and Colvin's bazar had for the past two years become a resort for all the kidnappers in the country, and that several of the relatives and friends of the villagers had disappeared, during that time, without any cause, that they could discover. The villagers then pointed out the house of one Hossen Bux, a perfect desperado in appearance, from which two men were taken out. They seemed to have been under the influence of some kind of intoxication, as they appeared quite stupefied. They at first gave several incoherent replies, but after a little time said, they had been enticed away from their countries under promise of employment in Calcutta, and on their arrival here, were told, they would be shipped to "Muchlibunder." They always objected to go, and had frequently attempted to escape from their keepers. They had no friends or money, and were in debt to Hossen Bux for food, which he at first promised to let them have gratis. They were constantly threatened and ill-treated.

The party were then directed to a house, in which several men were found with tin bangles soldered on to their wrists. Some of them had tin badges and seals round their arms, and others were bound round the wrist with tape sealed together at the ends. These men said, they were kept in charge of three men, Moteelall, Reegbur, and Pursunsing, who escaped.

The villagers then took the party to a village in the 24-pergunnahs on the immediate south of Bamunbustee. In a house there, a number of men and women were found, some lodged and others banded. The house was closed on all sides; but some of the guard removed a tattee, and on desiring the inmates to come out, a man of the name of Narain came from an adjoining house. He said, he had been at the expense of feeding the people, some for small periods, and others for so long a time as four months; that he had laid out much money in the business, and was indebted to the soory or liquor merchant alone, in the sum of a hundred and fifty rupees, for liquor supplied for the consumption of the coolies. Narain was taken into custody.

The principal depôt for the coolies was next traced at a place called Chuckerbair, Bhowanipore. The whole building measured about 50 or 60 feet square, running east and west, with a wall all round about 6 feet high. The building stands on an elevation of about 4 feet above the level of the road. The entrance to it is by a small door 6 by 3 feet. This was guarded by an armed bunkundaz, after passing whom, the party found a court-yard about 30 feet square, with small native temporary hearths, at certain distances, round the sides of the wall. On the immediate west of this square, a verandah led to an inner building, but the view from the verandah was intercepted by a small blank wall. This entrance was guarded by two armed bunkundazes. To the ceiling of the verandah, were suspended several swords, spears, arrows, and other weapons. On passing the blank wall, the party came to an inner court, where they saw a woman, who ran from the outer court-yard, crying and saying, she would not leave her husband, or allow him to go on board a ship, she was frightened at seeing the topeewallahs. On being told they had come to release her, she seemed a little pacified but it took a few minutes to convince her of her safety. The three sides of the inner court had a running corridor, which was bounded by several cells, all having separate doors. The woman was asked where her husband was, and she pointed to a cell which was immediately forced open. Just as this was done, several voices cried out "doo, i sahebka," and immediately all the other cells flew open, and men and women voluntarily came out, demanding protection. They were in dirty condition, and had hardly any clothes on them. The woman then pointed to a brahmin, saying "he was her gossain;" that he had been a prisoner for a considerable time; that though the vakeel saheb had ordered him to be released, the duffadars nevertheless kept him in custody and subjected him and his wife to ill-treatment and abuse.

Some of the prisoners, inhabitants and residents of Bancoorah and Soonmooker, said they were taken by force and brought down to Calcutta. They stated, they were arrested by a guard of about 30 or 40 peons with badges and chullanas. The peons said, they were Government servants, and were ordered to impress men for Government work in Calcutta. That on their arrival here, they were deposited in this house, which belongs to Rampershaud baboo. That since their imprisonment, they were not allowed to have any communication with strangers, and the whole of the prisoners were similarly situated. They satisfied the calls of nature in the day under a guard, and at night the inner court-yard was the limit of their liberty for any purpose ever so necessary. None of them were allowed to go to market. One of the cells was supplied with articles of native consumption, which was superintended by a mooder, who served out the rations to the men at the rate of three poahs rice and one poah of doll daily.

Some of the men had from fright and others from disgust, agreed to go to "Muehlilbunder." That non-complaints were subjected to privations of food and other necessities, and several were chastised daily. One man made severe complaints of having for several days received on his bare back so many as 25 thumps with a jootah. His back and cheeks were swollen from the flagellation. A Malabar brahmin also complained of the manner in which he had been decoyed away from his family and friends. Several Rajpoots said, they were intercepted by the duffadars on the road to Juggeraauth to which place they were proceeding on a pilgrimage. The whole of the men prayed for their release, and said, they were detained against their will by Rampershaud baboo and his people. Two brass badges of the alliance insurance company, and several old ohallans or passes of Kemp, Brothers and Co. were found in this building.

On Saturday the 30th, the search was again renewed, Mr. Dias having been informed, by a man named Khodabux, that several men were also confined in Seeladah; the jamadar and guard, and Messrs. Floyd, senior and junior, accompanied Mr. Dias, and at about quarter after 6 p.m. that evening they were conducted to a building on the Seeladah road. The building is about 25 feet long by 10 broad; it has several doors on the road-way, all of which were well secured from within. The party could not make an entrance by the doors, but found a passage from the western side of the building to a tank on the shout of it. Several coolies also banded and badged were found cooking, and a good number were found within the building. The duffadars had effected their escape, but one man was taken in an adjoining ground. The men here released also complained of treatment similar to what has been already described. They all said, they were enticed away from their country and were kept against their will; that they were averse to proceeding to sea, and would not go if the hawkings would protect them.

Sixty-four men and women were released on Friday and Saturday, exclusive of the two women and children belonging to Midnapore. The number of duffadars and under-agents arrested, amount to 23.

The magistrate asked Mr. Floyd, if he had any objection to be sworn to the contents of the report. Mr. Floyd answered in the negative, and the report was duly sworn to and acknowledged.

Mr. Dias then put affidavits from Mr. Floyd, junior, and himself, in support of the report, and a similar affidavit was sworn to by Mr. Grey, who had accompanied the party on the first day's search, out of curiosity.

Monday having been a holiday, the Court was closed. The following communication, were received on that day, but were recorded and ordered to be brought up on the following day, Tuesday, when they were read in Court.

TO JAMES PATTON, E-q.

Magistrate of the 24-pe. gunnahs, &c. &c.

SIR,—I have the honor to represent to you that six, men under engagement to go to Mauritius, have been arrested under your authority and are now in confinement at Alipore. These men have passed the police authority in Calcutta, and their permits granted. They have also received one month in advance of their wages. The favour of your, reply stating, if there is any charge against them, will oblige, as their embarkation is fixed for Monday next. I have the honour to subjoin their names and remain,

Sir, your most obedient servant,

W. E. BROWNE.

Calcutta, 30th June, 1838.

JAMES PATTON, E-q.

Magistrate of the 24-pergunnahs.

SIR,—We have been informed, that a number of Indian labourers engaged by us to proceed to the Mauritius, under permits granted by the superintendent of police, have been arrested by your order.

We shall feel much obliged by your informing us, if there be any charge against these men, as their arrest places us at great inconveniences and loss, the vessel engaged to convey them to the Mauritius, being ready to proceed on her projected voyage.

The labourers engaged for us and passed by Captain Birch, in conformity with existing regulations, are distinguished by a tin armet, marked W. D. B. and numbered to correspond with the police permits.

We will take the liberty of waiting on you to-morrow morning, with the names of the labourers not forthcoming to receive their advance of wages, and said to be confined at Allipoor.

We are, Sir, your most obedient servants,
HENRY, DOWSON AND BESTEL.

Calcutta, July 1, 1838.

Mohun Singh, an inhabitant of Nubbadah, Bahadur pore, zillah Furruck, on being duly sworn deposed. That he was released and brought here from Colvin Baste, in Calcutta. He was going on a pilgrimage to Juggernaith, and on reaching the Baldwin road, one Chollairam and one Assawur Garree, offered to procure deponent employment; and also, if deponent came to Calcutta, Chollairam and Assawur would give deponent 25 rupees, with which deponent would have the means not only to visit Juggernaith, but be able to pay the accustomed fee to the priests at Chareh Nullah. Deponent thought the offer worthy of acceptance and accompanied the two men. On reaching Calcutta, deponent discovered the deceit; as deponent was carried to Assawur's house and continued a prisoner there for upwards of two months and 15 days. Deponent was carried to the house of a Mr. Dawson, where this tin bangle was soldered on deponent's wrists; deponent nevertheless objected to be shipped, and deponent was consequently closely watched. Deponent was made to sleep at night under Assawur's charpoy. Deponent was not allowed to do any thing unwatched, received no money from the duffadar or any other person; but the duffadar took from deponent one rupee and five annas in cash, one brass kutaw and a duputtah, which the duffadar refused to deliver up. Deponent was found in the Assawur's house by the sergeant, who was informed by deponent of all that is above stated, and who released and brought this deponent here. Deponent further said, that he was never willing to proceed on board a ship, and is not now willing to do so, and therefore craves the protection of this Court. Deponent is the son of a zemindar and has a share in a zemindary.

Jauhistah and Doorgah Singh, inhabitants of Sourree, zillah Benares, on being duly sworn, deposed.—That they left their country for employment for Barrackpore, where they have brothers serving Government as seapoys. At a village named ankooree of that zillah, they met Bisundial and Sheechurn, who inquired where they were proceeding. Deponents replied to Awehawnuck, in Calcutta. The two men said, they were going to the same place, and that they would accompany deponents to it. Deponents were not acquainted with the road, and therefore accompanied them. Deponents travelled together and ultimately arrived at Bhowanipore, at the house of one Rampershaud baboo. Deponents not finding their brothers, inquired if the place was Awehawnuck. Deponents were then desired by Bisundial and Sheechurn to hold their tongues. "What," said they, "do you want with your brothers, sawlas?" Deponents were kept for three successive days on very low diet, but allowed bang and opium. On the fourth day, deponents were carried to the house of Mr. Browne, who asked them no questions. Several other men were taken at the same time with deponents. A question was generally put to the whole of the men, as to whether they would go to Muchlibunder, one man answered in the affirmative, the saheb then desired the whole of the men to be numbered and badged, after which Bisundial and Sheechurn brought the men back to Baboo Rampershaud's house, at Bhowanipore. When the sergeant came to the house, deponents mentioned the above circumstances, and asked to be released. Deponents were released and brought here. Deponents received no money, but altogether got articles from the moody in the house to the value of five pice.

Purnum Gowallah, an inhabitant of Oowshan, zillah Junpore, on being duly sworn, deposed.—That he was returning after the feast of Dole Jatra from Juggernaith.

That on arriving at Mednipore, he met a chuprass belonging to the collector's office of that district, named Chandkhan, who asked him if he wanted employment. Deponent said, he was a gowallah, Chand said a gowallah's situation was vacant at a saheb's house. Deponent replied, that he had heard at Juggernaith, that several men had been kidnapped by duffadars for shipment to "Mauritch," and deponent feared Chand wanted to ship him. Chand said, he knew nothing of the duffadars and otherwise made deponent believe, he would obtain for him the birth of a gowallah. Chand then took deponent to the house of one Thakoordoss and one Narain. Narain gave Chand a rupee and eight annas pice. Chand went away. Deponent remained with the last mentioned men for five or six days, after which Thakoordoss said, he was proceeding to Calcutta, and would give deponent the situation promised by Chand. Deponent agreed, and Narain then produced seven other men, all of whom came together to Calcutta. Deponent and the rest of the men were deposited at the house of Rampershaud baboo at Bhowanipore. Two men escaped, and deponent heard that five were shipped off. Deponent was kept a close prisoner for four months, only allowed to cook his own victuals, but never allowed to step out of the house. Deponent was carried to the house of a saheb about a month ago, but on refusing to be shipped, was taken back to Rampershaud baboo's, where Thakoordoss told deponent there was no other employment, but as a cooly for Mamitch; and as deponent would not consent to go, deponent was severely flogged by Thakoordoss. The men that used to watch deponent were Gujraji, Settoo, Bhetchulk Misser, and a Persian. Gujraji and Settoo wore badges. Deponent never received money, but got food at Rampershaud baboo's house.

Honomaundoss and his wife Sacemully Luchman, inhabitants of zillah Cheerunchupraw on being duly sworn, deposed.—That they left their country on a pilgrimage to Juggernaith, that they arrived at the shudabertio (charity place) of the Ryot of Baldwin, where they met Bisundial, who was also travelling to Calcutta. That they journeyed together, and on arriving here, were invited to the house of Bisundial. Deponents never came to Calcutta before. Bisundial took deponents to the house at Bhowanipore, where he asked deponents if they wanted employment. Deponents said, they did not, but that they would immediately proceed to Juggernaith. Deponents from that moment discovered, that they were prisoners. They were not allowed to stir out of the premises of Baboo Rampershaud, and whenever they were taken out, they were guarded by several men. Deponents were carried to the houses of three sahebs. The sahebloke thought Honomaun too old, as he had lost several teeth, and said they did not require him. Bisundial nevertheless refused to release deponents, though deponents earnestly begged to be released. Deponents were prisoners at the house of Rampershaud baboo, received no money and got very little to eat. Deponents were released by the sahebs, who brought them to the Court. The deponent prayed to be allowed to proceed on their pilgrimage.

Choorsea, an inhabitant of Nagpore, zillah Bulludah Hajunshukur, on being duly sworn, deposed.—That he was released and brought to this Court from Colvin's bustee, Calcutta. Deponent is a beggar and lives by donations from individuals. Golaum Hossein, a bheestee, residing in that bustee, said, he could procure good employment for deponent in Calcutta, if deponent would live in his house. Deponent agreed, and after deponent had been fed by Golaum Hossein for several days, he said deponent should go to "Muchlibunder." Deponent declined. Golaum Hossein said, you must do so, or pay for your food. Deponent was immediately locked up in an apartment and kept a prisoner for some time, and almost daily fligated to consent, until deponent was released and brought to this Court. Deponent was a prisoner in Gohinn Hoozee's house for three months. Deponent received no money.—Hukaru, July 7.

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY THE 6TH AND 7TH JULY, 1838.

Before J. H. Patton, Esq. Magistrate.

KIDNAPPING.

*Guruch Buglee an inhabitant of Soomnook, zillah Buncwah, being duly sworn, deposed:—*Was coming towards Bin-buneeah to serve as a labourer, and met Sheeopershau and Gujrauj, on the road, who said, an indigo factory was about being established at Dam-Dum, at which several labourers were required, and a deponent would accompany them, they would procure him employment. Deponent, as well as his uncle Sree-nuth, and one Bagbuth, accompanied the other in Gujrauj to Calcutta. On arriving here they were carried to the house of Rampershaud baboo, at Bhowanipore, and after being made prisoners, were told they had engaged to ship, deponent to "Maurich bunder." Deponent at once declined and asked Sheeopershau and his friend, how they could have made such an engagement. All the satisfaction they got was, that they were immediately put into military cells, in which they were kept for three days. On the fourth day, they were carried to the house of an English attorney, where a tin bangle was put round their wrist registered by a blacksmith with a hot-iron. The attorney also took their names and ordered Sheeopershau and Gujrauj to take care of them; they were accordingly taken back to the house at Bhowanipore. The attorney then directed them to be taken to the house of another gentleman, where a Bengallee surgeon punctured their arms. They were then examined by a doctor. After this, at a late hour one night, deponent's uncle was removed by Sheeopershau from the Bhowanipore house, to which he never again returned. Deponent never agreed, and is still unwilling to leave the country or released. Deponent was kept closely confined for two months. Bleechuch Misser and Sheeburth were in charge of deponent. Deponent took no money or any other advance, but was fed at the Bhowanipore house, at which he was detained by force.

*Sheebodass, an inhabitant of Tuffsheer, zillah Ballasore, being duly sworn, deposed:—*I had he and his brother-in-law came to Calcutta for employment, and at How-bazu met one Sonaram, who said he had work on which to employ him as a day labourer, if deponent would follow him. Deponent did so. After arriving at Sonaram's homestead, deponent was told, the work was at Bhowanipore. Deponent was taken there, and on arriving at the house of one Bhuckut, a duffadar, deponent immediately discovered Sonaram wished to ship him. Deponent said, he would not go to Maurich. Sonaram, however, paid no attention to deponent, but left him in charge of Bhuckut. Bhuckut then told deponent not to be afraid, as he would give him employment at a baboo's house, to which deponent accompanied him. Instead of being carried to a baboo's, deponent found himself at the house of a saheb, where several men were assembled, having bangles on their arms. These men informed deponent, they were about being sent to sea; on hearing which, deponent began to weep. The duffadar on seeing deponent cry, said, "don't be sorry, but come home with me, I will not send you on board a ship." On arriving at the duffadar's house, deponent desired to be released. The duffadar told deponent to be happy, and to set about cooking victuals. Deponent refused to do so, on which the duffadar beat the deponent, and locked him in a godown, and one Ruggobhur was desired to watch deponent. Some days after it, deponent was taken by the duffadar to the house of a saheb on the strand. Deponent met several men at his house also. The saheb got hold of deponent by the arm, and asked if deponent was happy to go to Maurich. Deponent said "no." The saheb immediately ordered deponent to be released, but the duffadar took deponent into the street, and beat him very severely. Deponent was again taken to the duffadar's house, and afterwards to the house of an English attorney, who put this tape and sealed it (pointing to it) round deponent's arm. Another day deponent was carried to another saheb's house, who placed this bangle (pointing to it) on deponent's wrist. Deponent was kept a prisoner for upwards of a fortnight, received no money, was released and brought here by the sergeant.

*Dheenyal, an inhabitant of zillah Benares, being duly sworn, deposed:—*That he was coming to Calcutta to visit his brother, and on the road near Shergotty met one Ramheet, who said he was going to the same place, joined company, and Ramheet said, if deponent was inclined, Ramheet would get him a station as bukundaz at the house of a Baboo, at 15 rupees per month. Ramheet had five other men with him. Deponent came with this party to Calcutta, when Ramheet invited him home. Deponent was carried to the house of a Bengallee at Bhowanipore, where he was immediately made a prisoner. The deponent was carried at day break the following morning, to the house of a saheb, who told deponent he would be shipped off to Maurich. Deponent said he would not go. Ramheet got very angry and desired deponent to be silent. Fearing something worse would follow, deponent remained silent. The saheb then held deponent's arm to fix a bangle on. Deponent would not consent and resisted, was overpowered by the saheb, the bangle was soldered on, and deponent having tried to twist his arm from the hold of the saheb, was severely burnt with the hot-iron with which the bangle was joined (the deponent here shewed a mark about an inch wide.) Deponent not consenting to be shipped was kept a prisoner, for about a month and a half. Deponent did not receive any money, but was fed. Deponent was released by the sergeant saheb and brought here.

*Ruggobhur, an inhabitant of Gaseepore, on being duly sworn, deposed:—*That at a village named Surrouchuttee, in that district, he met Ramheet, who invited him to Calcutta under promises similar to those made to Dheenyal. He was brought to Bhowanipore, when, after being made a prisoner for some days, was carried to the house of a saheb, who asked deponent if he was willing to go to Maurich. Deponent said "no," on which Ramheet replied, "saheb do not mind the fellow, he must go." Deponent was taken another day to a saheb's house on the strand. The saheb put this tin bangle (pointing to it) on deponent's hand by force. Deponent was afterwards carried to a doctor's, who punctured his arm and examined him. Deponent not consenting to be shipped was confined for a month and a half, during which he received no money; was released, and brought here by the sergeant saheb.

*Chota Bhurtan, an inhabitant of Gyah, being duly sworn, deposed:—*That he met one Byraag, at a village named Sahebgunge, who induced deponent to come to Calcutta under promise of employment. Was brought to Calcutta with fifteen other men, and deposited at the house of Rampershaud baboo, at Bhowanipore, from which he was not allowed to stir without a guard. Was locked up in a godown at night, and satisfied the calls of nature, guarded by Birjobausee with arms; was not even allowed to go to market, but was supplied with grain by a moodie on the premises; was carried one day to the house of a saheb and having declined to be shipped, was severely punished by the duffadar, and was compelled afterwards to tell the saheb that he would go to Maurich. The saheb put this tin bangle on deponent's arm, another saheb punctured deponent's arm and a doctor saheb examined deponent. Deponent did not freely consent, and is not willing to be shipped. Deponent wishes to go home, has received no advance of money or any thing else. Was confined for a month, and was released and brought here by the sergeant saheb.

*Gopul Koorme, an inhabitant of the district of Gyah, being duly sworn, deposed:—*Was returning home after delivering some opium at the depôt at Daodnaghur. Met one Conny on the road, was enticed to Calcutta and brought here and kept with nine other men at a Moodie's dukkan at Bhowanipore. Was kept as prisoner in it, and not allowed to stir out. Was taken to the house of a saheb, and on refusing to be shipped, was carried into a room by the duffadars and heavily thrashed, and rather than continue a sufferer, told the saheb he was willing to go. Deponent was then carried to Bhowanipore, where he was confined for twenty days, received no money, or any other advance; was released and brought to the court by the sergeant saheb, and is not willing to go to Maurich.

*Somabhar Pandah, an inhabitant of Benares, being duly sworn, deposed:—*That he was proceeding via Burdwan on a pilgrimage to Juggernaut, when he met one Dorgah Pauree, who introduced him to one Bapawan Khan. A conversation ensued. Deponent was informed by those men, that situations at 10 rupees per month were procurable at Calcutta, and that they had friends who could have deponent engaged if he would accompany them to Calcutta. After some days' journey, they were joined by Pannchoo Khan, who they represented was a relative of theirs. Dorgah and Bapawan said, they were going to a village in the vicinity on business, but that Pannchoo would direct deponent to Calcutta, where they would all meet after a few days. On arriving at a place called Teerpeeny, Pannchoo hired a boat in which both he and deponent arrived at about midnight at Calcutta, and having landed, proceeded to Bhowanipore, and arrived at the house of one Eumpershaud baboo. Deponent slept there that night. Early the following morning he was introduced to Sheeburth and Kassim Khan, who invited him to accompany them, and on his going, said they would take him to a house where he would be employed. Deponent agreed, and was taken to the house of an English attorney. Nothing transpired that morning; on the following, however, one Jethoo, a burkundauz or guard attached to the house of baboo, gave deponent bhauing and opium, after smoking which deponent was again invited to accompany Kassim Khan to the house of the English attorney. A native then informed deponent, that Kassim had brought him there to be shipped. Deponent immediately asked Kassim if this was true. Kassim made no reply; but deponent nevertheless informed Kassim that he would not go. Deponent was taken back to the house at Bhowanipore, and was forced into a godown in which he was allowed a draught of opium and a quantity of gunjah, but no food. This treatment was repeated for three days, and on the third day, deponent was brought out and punished until he consented to be shipped. Kassim then took deponent before Mr. Birch, of the police, before whom deponent, through fright, said he was willing to go to Mauritch. Deponent was ever after kept at Bhowanipore, was confined for fifteen days, and was released by the Sergeant saheb and brought here.

*Nehaul, an inhabitant of Cunchkora, zillah Bundelkhand, being duly sworn, deposed:—*On the road near Bancoorah met two men named Beharry Loll and Ghreedarry Loll. Deponent was coming to Calcutta to seek employment and told Beharry so, Beharry and his friend immediately said they would procure deponent employment, if he would accompany them, that they had got several men situations at Calcutta as burkundauzes at 10 rupees per month. He agreed and followed Beharry and his companion. He was taken direct to the house at Bhowanipore, and some days after to the house of a Mr. Brown, where he was asked if he would serve, he replied "yes." Then said the saheb, you will have five rupees per month and will get brass lotah, clothes, and a red cap. I knew nothing still of being shipped; heard so from the other prisoners, and immediately told Beharry, that he would sooner beg at Juggernaut than go to Mauritch. Deponent never consented to go to Mauritch, received no money in advance, or for any purpose; was obliged to eat, was confined for eight days and was released by the sergeant and brought here. He is not inclined to go to Mauritch.

*Joggopant, an inhabitant of Armarah, zillah Goruckpore, being sworn, deposed:—*Almost to the same effect as the last deponent; but that he was proceeding on a pilgrimage, and was kidnapped by two men named Auchruch and Meerwan. That he was taken to Bhowanipore and kept a close prisoner for two months and upwards, got no money, and did not agree to go to the Mauritius. That he was on one occasion taken to the house of an English attorney, by whom his name was registered, and was afterwards carried to a doctor, who vaccinated and examined him. Was released by the sergeant and brought to Allipore.

Sergeant Floyd reported, that about 2 p. m. he arrived on the old Ballasore, or military road, on the Sulkea side, about 7 a. m. to-day, and at a village there discovered thatched depôts of men, and on going a little further into the country found another depôt. He altogether succeeded in releasing thirty-six men, six women, and six children, in all forty-eight individuals; and took eighteen kidnappers into custody.

Mr. Floyd added, that the chief kidnapper is under arrest; but is sick and is left behind, the others as well as those released are now at Allipore. Several registers belonging to the duffadars are also secured. The villagers reported that the head kidnapper has made a fortune and moves about in a conveyance accompanied by attendants like a petty rajah. Mr. Floyd also saw a building very like the one at Bhowanipore, under construction. He said, that some of the villagers reported that some dhangars had killed two duffadars who had kidnapped some of their relations.

ALLIPORE, MONDAY, JULY 9, 1838.

(Before J. H. Patton, Esq. Magistrate.)

KIDNAPPING.

The following communication was received this day, and read publicly in Court:

To J. H. PATTON, Esq.,

Magistrate of 24 Pargunnahs.

SIR,—I have been informed, that about 6 or 9 o'clock this morning, a constable, accompanied by several peons, stating themselves to be acting by your orders, did seize a number of coolies or labourers residing at place called Bamun Gautehee, in or near Sulkea, which labourers have been engaged by me and passed by the superintendent of the Calcutta police, to proceed to the Mauritius, and some of whom have received one month's pay in advance.

I shall feel particularly obliged by your letting me know if any and what charge has been preferred against them.

I understand the men are confined at Allipore.
I have the honor to be, Sir, your most obed. Servt.

Calcutta, July 7, 1838. T. FRANCIS.

Mr. Thomas Francis appeared this day and asked the magistrate, under what charge the men taken by Sergeant Floyd, on Saturday last, on the Sulkea side were detained?

The magistrate informed Mr. Francis, that the men were not detained on any charge, that they are detained pending an inquiry in which their depositions are being taken. The worthy magistrate added, that he would wish Mr. Francis to examine the men personally as to whether they were forced, or had voluntarily agreed to be shipped.

Mr. Francis agreed, and the men released on Saturday, were brought up one after another, and the whole of them unhesitatingly said they had never agreed to go to the Mauritius; that they had received no advance, and that they would not go if they could help it. That they were threatened and maltreated by the duffadars, and that they had been deceived and decoyed away from their countries.

Mr. Francis acknowledged that the duffadars have been deceiving the merchants, and that they had practised upon the coolies, unknown to those who had employed them for their procurement. He added that it was strange the coolies should have acknowledged before Capt. Birch, that they were agreeable to be shipped.

An answer from the coolies to this query at once set the matter at rest, and Mr. Patton added, that he believed many of the men must have consented without knowing, or understanding when or on what duty they would be sent. Why, said the magistrate, "I flatter myself that from my situation and constant practice, I understand the native tongues pretty well; but I believe there are not two foreigners in the country who would explain to these men, the nature of an engagement, that they are to be shipped, to receive certain advance wages, to be allowed certain utensils and clothing, and to bind themselves to apprenticeships for a term of years. I could not explain it to them satisfactorily enough for them to understand the true meaning, and I believe that the police authorities must have found great difficulty in doing so!"

Mr. Francis said, that after the examinations before him he was satisfied, the men did not understand the engagement they are supposed to have undertaken; but, nevertheless, he was satisfied the duffadars and under-agents had acted contrary to the instructions they had received from him.

The magistrate, in further proof of this fact, referred Mr. Francis to the reports published in the Hurkaru, and said he had read them and believed them to be very accurate, as the depositions published were delivered before him, as they then appeared, and that they were noted in his presence by the reporter.

Mr. Francis retired evidently satisfied, that he had been duped by the duffadars.

Mr. Dias applied for subpoenas against certain respectable members of the H. C. Bengal marine, by whom Mr. Dias would prove that two large ships that took coolies out last year, did not treat them as men ought to have been treated. That while one of the vessels was working down the river, 50 coolies, 5 women and 3 children were put into the long-boat of the vessel. They continued in the boat until the pilot left the vessel at sea, which happened in the month of May.

The magistrate said, he did not think it necessary to obtain evidence as to the treatment of the coolies, and he had quite enough in support of the system of kidnapping which the duffadars had been illegally carrying on for some time, but that if he hereafter required the evidence he would subpoena the parties named by Mr. Dias.

Mr. Dias said, that his application was not made under any impression of the insufficiency of evidence in proof of the case of kidnapping, but to prove that the men were treated almost worse than slaves when on board of the vessels on which they are shipped.—Hurkaru, July 11.

ALLIPORE, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY, THE 21ST AND 22D JULY 1838.

(Before J. H. Patton, Esq. Magistrate.)

KIDNAPPING.

The under-written depositions are from some of the men who were released from the Ballasore road duffadars, by sergeant Floyd, save the first examination and the concluding answers, which complete Oojawah's case and those of the men released from Bhowanipore and Bamunbustie.

Bheekaree, a defendant, by caste a chumar, in answer to the charge preferred against him, said, that he and his brother Bultoo, while coming towards Calcutta, on the Burdwan road, met Oojawah, who said he was also proceeding to Calcutta, and asked for the loan of money to enable him to feed himself on the road. They gave him money, and informed him of the opportunity of obtaining employment by being enlisted for the Mauritius. Oojawah asked what pay he would have, and on being told the amount agreed, and on his arrival at Calcutta, he was taken by Bultoo to vakeel Hughes' house, where his name was registered. Defendant or his brother did not deceive him.

Mr. Dias informed the magistrate, that Bheekaree had a pair of silver ornaments belonging to Oojawah. On being asked to produce them, Bheekaree gave them up, and they were delivered to Oojawah.

Bultoo's answer was to the same effect, only that he had also been induced by his brother to enlist for the Mauritius.

Golaum Ally, an inhabitant of zillah Cheeran-Chupra, on being duly sworn, said, that about a month and a half ago, he left his country to seek employment. At Hazarreebaugh, he met Bhowani, Runimoo, Jeewun, and Bheddoo, duffadars, who induced him to come to Calcutta under promise of employment here. After some days he was carried by the before named duffadars to the house of vakeel Hughes', who registered his name. He never agreed to go to be shipped for the Mauritius, and is not now willing to go there, although whenever he asked to be allowed to go away in search of employment he was detained by the duffadars, under the plea that, as they had fed him, he should restore the khorakee-money before they would release him. He received no money, but food once a day, and was kept under a guard who followed him wherever he went for any purpose. He was kept a prisoner for one month.

Soolun Koormie, an inhabitant of zillah Arrah, on being duly sworn, said, that he met Bhawani duffadar at Huzarebaugh, who inticed him to Calcutta under promise of employment here. That after being some days at Sulkeeah, he was carried by Sheechurn and Loofawnee duffadars to the house of vakeel Hughes. That saheb registered his name and put the tin bangle on his arm. He never agreed to be shipped for the Mauritius, and is not now inclined to go there. He received no money, but was kept a prisoner for a month.

Choonnee Loll, an inhabitant of zillah Beerbhoom, on being duly sworn, stated, that he came to Calcutta for employment, and at Brejootulloo met Toofawnee duffadar, who enticed the deponent to his home under promise of employment, and, after some days, took him to vakeel Hughes' house. On the road Toofawnee said, "If you do not tell vakeel Hughes saheb that you will go to Mauritius you will be imprisoned;" he therefore said he would go. He afterwards understood the Mauritius is two months journey from Calcutta, and that he would have to be shipped, that people are required there to have stones, he therefore objected to go, but was not released. He received no money, but was fed and kept a prisoner for a month.

The depositions of the remaining forty-four men are to the same effect as the above, and many of them said they were carried to vakeel Hughes' house. The whole of these men were examined by Mr. Thomas Francis, as stated some time ago.

The accompanying communication was received by the magistrate during the week, but the men therein named were not sent for, as they were not named by any of the kidnapped men.

Supt. Sudder-bazar office, Barrackpore, July 18, 1838

Sir,—Two men whose names are noted in the margin, having been apprehended by the police of the sudder-bazar, under suspicion of being parties concerned in kidnapping coolies, and of having absconded from Calcutta to avoid inquiry; I have thought it right to make them furnish security for their appearance, should their names have been brought before you in the course of the late investigation regarding the shipment of coolies.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obt. Serv (Signed) JOHN BRILLER, Capt.

TO THE MAGISTRATE OF THE 24-PERGUNNAS, Calcutta

Narain jendair, on being called on for his defence, said, that he did not kidnap any individuals. The fact is (said Narain) that vakeel Hughes is in the habit of shipping coolies to the Mauritius, and for the procurement of men gave defendant, Rambux and Bissonath, badges, purwannas and 50 rupees. Defendant procured seven or eight individuals, and defendant got two rupees a head for each man. Bissonath and Rambux brought the three men and the three women to defendant's house, who have been released and brought here. One of the individuals escaped from defendant.

Prem Singh, on being called on for his defence, said that he was ordered by vakeel Hughes to procure men for the Mauritius, offering him at the rate of two rupees per man; defendant then went to Bancoorah, and having informed all the men that they would have to go to Mauritius, Sanker, Ruggoonath, and Jaddo agreed to go to Mauritius, and accompanied defendant to Calcutta. Defendant took these men to vakeel Hughes' where they consented to be shipped, and also consented before Captain Birch, and defendant did not kidnap any persons.

Mahadeo, on being called on for his defence, said, that he is employed by Bhadoo duffadar, with whom he went to Hazareebaugh, and from there brought Thaka, Mungul, and Byjnatub, (released and brought home) to ship them to the Mauritius. They consented to go, and defendant delivered them over to vakeel Hughes' Moonshee, named Golaun Oullecab; that defendant did not kidnap any persons.

Birjee Ram, alias Bhadoo, on being called on for his defence, denied having kidnapped any individuals, but that he is in the employ of vakeel Hughes. Hughes told defendant to get any persons for the Mauritius, as expressed themselves willing to go to that place. Defendant, accordingly procured, Paraun, Pretum, and Beshwah (since released and brought here.) Those men agreed before Hughes to be shipped, and also before the police.

Those men were fed by defendant for two months, and they wish to get over the amount of diet-money.

The other defendants almost urged the same pleas, though some did not mention vakeel Hughes' name; after which the magistrate having considered the whole of the depositions, desired the shershadar to explain the following conviction to those against whom sufficient proof has been obtained.

"You all have heard the charge and the evidence that has been read. You have carried on a traffic in which you have with a little difference been selling your fellow-creatures, and even your brothers, in particular instances. Had you done only that, your punishment would have been the severest that it is in my power to inflict, but you have added to the amount of your crime by having subjected those, whose liberties you attempted under false promises to sacrifice, to bad and violent treatment; which the law constitutes as assault of the most unprovoked nature, and to privations which must make their sufferings doubly severe. I hope you are aware, that you have been guilty of acting illegally, and the example I will make of you to-day, I trust, will be the means of deterring others from pursuing a source of livelihood, which, to say the least of it is infamous."

The undermentioned individuals were named and identified as kidnappers, some by two men, and several by so many as ten and twelve men.

Misree Singh, six months with labour in irons, and a fine of 200 rupees or six additional months, and a fine of 100 rupees if paid within fifteen days from the date of the conviction in lieu of labour. Hossein Bax, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Shreeo lyal, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Rampaul, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Prem Singh, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Goodyall ditto ditto ditto ditto. Narain jendair, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Sheebro, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Dheehul, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Moosam, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Ramhee, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Blechuck Misser, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Sheeooohurt, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Lakoor Tcwaree, ditto ditto ditto ditto; Kheer karree, six months with labour in irons, or a fine of 50 rupees in lieu of labour if paid within 10 days from date of conviction. Ram Singh, six months with labour in irons and a fine of 25 rupees, if paid within 10 days. Ratten Ram, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Mahadeo Bhagoor Sudar, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Peerbut, ditto ditto ditto ditto. Beerjee Ram alias Bhadoo, ditto ditto ditto ditto.

Mr. Dias submitted that as the agent and duffadars were convicted, he thought it sufficient to call on the principal for his answers. There was strong presumptive evidence against Mr. Hughes. The magistrate said, that in the depositions of several of the kidnapped men, Mr. Hughes had been named, and from the allusions in others to a vakeel saheb there was not the least doubt in the magistrate's mind of Mr. Hughes having employed agents for the procurement of men for shipment to the Mauritius. Mr. Hughes had however sheltered himself from punishment under a defective law which enables him to say, "I employed these men to procure coolies, such as consented to go, were sent to Captain Birch, those who did not, I would not register." Mr. Hughes will however have to make out how several men whose depositions have been recorded, state that they went to Mr. Hughes and afterwards to Captain Birch, that they never agreed to be shipped and received no money. One man (said the magistrate) deposed, that the bangle was put on his arm by force by Mr. Hughes.

The magistrate concluded by saying, that he believed the case that had been just decided would be productive of one great good, that of checking the system of kidnapping in the mofussil, and induce the legislature to amend in enactment, the defectiveness of which has been the means of allowing some offenders to escape the vengeance of law. The magistrate then thanked Mr. Dias for the indefatigable part he had taken, and that his conduct throughout the proceedings was deserving of the highest praise, and that Mr. Dias, ought to feel the gratification of having been instrumental in effecting the release of nearly 125 individuals.

The coolies were then called in one after another, and purwannas were delivered to them certifying their release through the foudlarry court of zillah 24-pergunnas under the signature of the magistrate and the seal of the court. -Harkaru, July 26.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CALCUTTA.

GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY.—Sir Robert Grant died at Dha-poore, near Poonah, on the 9th instant. The event has been daily expected; the fever with which he was attacked, having left him in a state of prostration, from which no remedies could raise him. As a public man, he was scarcely known, but in the private relations of life, few were more highly esteemed.

SOUVIDHAN EUSOPH KHAN.—Eusoph Khan, the sou-bahdar of Lucknow, who was on a visit to England, is now safely arrived in Calcutta. He expressed himself highly gratified with the kind treatment and hospitality he received from the nobility and gentry. His remark on English character is worthy of notice: "Englishmen in this country and Englishmen at home are totally different in point of character." He intends to publish his diary, which will contain accounts not only of England but of every place he has visited, and of which he talks in terms of high admiration.

THE NAWAB OF MOORSHEDABAD.—It is the intention, of the Nawab Nazim of Moorshedabad, to proceed up the country, on a visit to Allahabad, in the beginning of the next month: his highness has already taken his passage for himself and suit, in the Jellinghee, river steamer, which, it is said, is likely to start on the 9th proximo. From Allahabad his highness and followers intend paying a visit to the city of Benares.

THE EX-RAJAH OF MUNNYPORE.—The following is an extract of a letter dated 1st July: the ex-Rajah of Munnypore, Jegun Perjeet, who escaped from Sylhet on the 17th December last, and after whom there have been so many hunts, was taken by a detachment of the Munnypore Levy a few days ago, and, together with his two brothers, who were with him at the time, was strung up to the first tree; thereby saving much trouble to the magistrates, troops, &c. &c. in the district. The jungle, the greater way to Luckipore, is described to be dense and composed of thick strong reeds, impenetrable for two men abreast to enter, and producing the worst malaria. But in the event of a Burmese war, it will be necessary to have a force on the frontier to act on the defensive.

PERTAUB CHUND.—The pretension of the sai daim Rajah of Burdwan; will be put to the test, by a proceeding which the Government have at length resolved on adopting against him. It has been determined to bring him to trial for falsely assuming the title and for forging the signature of the late Rajah Pertaub Chund. The trial will take place at Hooghly.

MR. F. C. SMITH.—Mr. F. C. Smith, the superintendent of police of the lower provinces, who was about leaving Calcutta on the 19th instant, for a tour in the lower provinces, was suddenly ordered by the Bengal Government to remain at the presidency, to await the trial of Mr. Ogilvy and the other parties concerned in the Cula affair.

SUPERINTENDENT OF COSSIPORE FOUNDRY.—It is said that the Court of Directors have sanctioned an increase to the salary of the superintendent of the Cossipore gun-foundry, which is hereafter fixed at 1,000 rupees a month.

MRS. CHESTER.—Mrs. Chester took her departure on the 2d instant, from the city of palaces, in progress to Barrackpore, Kishnagur, Berhampore, Dinapore, Monghyr, Benares, and Allahabad; at each of which stations the fair vocalist will probably delight the residents with a soirée musicale. At Cawnpore Mrs. Chester purposes making some stay, after which she will proceed to Meerut, Agra, and probably to Delhi.

THEATRICALS.—Madame de Ligny has taken the theatre for six months, and the French company are daily expected. Mrs. Leach has announced her intention to return to Calcutta in February, when we may hope for a revival of English theatricals under the most favourable circumstances.

RUM CONTRACTORS.—It is said that, in consequence of the almost entire failure of the sugar-cane crop in Rohikund, the rum contractors in the field, Messrs. Sanders, Barron and Co. have been induced to declare their inability to complete their engagement with the commissariat within the period of the authorized contract and under such untoward circumstances, have submitted a solicitation to Government, through the regular channel, for an extension of time.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE MEETING.—At the ninth half-yearly meeting of the members of the Sun Insurance office, held on the 23d instant, at the office of Messrs. Rustonjee, Cowasjee and Co.

W. BRUCE, Esq., in the chair.

The books of the secretaries, containing the transactions of the society for the last six months, having been produced and approved by the members present, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:

Resolved.—That the accounts now produced be passed.

Abstract of Transactions.

Outstanding risk on 30th June.....	Rs. 2,116,704
Premiums thereon.....	45,891
Assets above par.....	190,231
President value of shares.....	1,902

Resolved.—That the committee be requested to continue their services for a further period of six months.

BONDED WARE-HOUSE.—The receipts of the bonded ware-house already exceed 3,000 rupees per mensem; which, compared with the expenditure, would yield a return of 6 per cent. on the amount paid upon the shares. The buildings that are under construction, commence a pendre figure, and shew a noble range of ware-house and godowns, creditable to the activity and spirit which have caused their erection. This is an instance of what may be effected by resolution; and holds out encouragement to the formation of joint stock companies, hitherto opposed untried to the interests of the mercantile community in India.

THE NEW VICTORIA COINAGE.—The new coin will be larger than the present rupee, say about the size of a half crown piece of England. On the obverse is the bust of Queen Victoria, very similar to the engraving, at Messrs. Moore, Hickey and Co.'s commission rooms, and, encircling the bust, are the words, "Victoria, proclaimed Queen of England, 21st June, 1837." On the reverse, in the middle of it, is the representation of a crown illuminated with radii shooting close and prettily from its centre; a circle or wreath of flowers surrounds the whole along the entire edge of the die, in which a large rose, the emblem of England, at the foot, and a thistle and a bunch of shamrocks, those of Scotland and Ireland, on either side, just above the rose, are particularly prominent, and within this wreath, forming, as it were, a semi-circle over the crown, are the words "Crowned 26th June, 1838."

DORJELING.—At a meeting of the Dorjeling committee, held at the Town-hall on the 7th instant, the tender of Messrs. E. Hopper and W. Martin, was accepted, for the erection of a temporary hotel at that "bright spot," agreeably to a plan and estimate submitted to and approved by the committee, in the terms of the report and resolution passed on that subject at the general meeting of subscribers, held on the 29th ultimo. A sub-committee of four members was also appointed to carry into effect the arrangements for the buildings, who will proceed to Dorjeling next month to fix upon the site and commence active operations. The necessary advances will be forthwith made to the contractors, who are collecting their material and personnel, and engage to have the hotel ready for occupation by the 15th February next.

NEW CHURCH.—The foundation stone of a new church which was to be built opposite the Hindu college, was laid on the 8th of July. The Lord Bishop and the Archdeacon assisted. The church was to be built out of funds at the disposal of the Archdeacon, and the Rev. Krishna Mohana Banerjee was to be the pastor of it. Owing, however to the remonstrances of the Hindu college managers, the site of the church, is to be removed one mile from the Hindu College.

NEW STRAND ROAD.—The master attendant, Captain Harrington, has addressed a letter to the secretary of the chamber of commerce, respecting the proposition, which was discussed some time back for making a new road between the river and the present strand road. Captain Harrington is of opinion, that the encroachment likely to be made by the embankments to be raised in its construction, on the river-space, already inadequate to the convenient accommodation of the shipping of the port, might prove very prejudicial to the interests of the mercantile community. Instead of artificially increasing a bank, that might be formed from any cause, in a trading port in England, the inhabitants, he thinks, would lay their heads together to get rid of it, and guard against its return; and if the expense were too great, they would cut a canal through it, for ships or boats, or both, as there might be room. Instead, therefore, of forming a new road, the master attendant throws out the suggestion of digging a canal, running parallel to the strand road; the entrance to be at or near Hautcollah, and its termination between the strand mills and mint.

LOCAL MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE.—A committee has been appointed by Government, to act with the authorities in the charge of the roads, &c. of the suburbs. This was a measure long called for, and not only essential to the health and convenience of the inhabitants of the suburbs themselves, but no less requisite for the commercial traffic, in a small way, of the city, the whole of our supplies for the markets reaching us through the miserable and at this period in many places almost impassable, roads placed under the committee. Dr. F. P. Strong having accidentally obtained information of a system of extortion long carried on by the police menials of the suburbs, in levying a contribution from every cart, basket or bullock conveyance, of all kinds into the city, personally, at no little fatigue and trouble, assured himself of the accuracy of the fact, which exhibited a revenue illegally derived from this source to an enormous amount. He has brought the subject to the notice of Government.

INTENDED EXTENSION OF THE ENGLISH BURIAL-GROUND.—It is in contemplation to devote the whole of the ground between Rawdon-street and Loudon-street, on the south of Park-street, and extending to the west of the present English burial-ground, to the purpose of extending the cemeteries, the present burial-ground no longer sufficing to answer the wants of the community.

AQUEDUCTS.—The construction of the aqueduct on the west side of the Boitahkhanah road, is nearly completed.

THE DURMOODAH RIVER.—The Durmoolah river has been overflowed—has overflowed the embankments and inundated the whole of the country about Culmajole in the Midnapore district. The superintendent of the bunds is in an isolated position, as the neighbouring country is almost wholly under water.

HOOGHLY.—One of the severest thunderstorms occurred at Hooghly on the 6th instant, that has ever been experienced perhaps in India. The thunder, preceded by heavy rain, commenced about half past six and continued until half past seven. The thunder was awfully loud and the peals varied in their character, sometimes several following each other in quick succession, like the broadside of a man-of-war, and grandly illustrating "the war of heaven's artillery;" at others, a single peal came sharp and crashing like the sound of many heavy shot striking a vessel at once and rending the planks. The lightning in the meantime played around the buildings terrifically bright, and the rain poured down in torrents and continued to do so almost without intermission the whole of the morning of the 7th instant. The house in which the special collector, Mr. Taylor, and his family are residing at Baidel, and which was formerly the residence of D. C. Smith, was struck by the lightning and seriously damaged, but fortunately the inmates escaped injury. Several trees in the neighbourhood were also struck, but no lives were lost. The residences of the Europeans at Hooghly were shook by some of the peals of thunder as if there had been an earthquake. If the heavy rain continues, it is to be feared that the Damoodah may again burst the bunds. Some of the smaller nullahs have overflowed their banks, and a bridge over one of them has been carried away.

NEW STEAMER.—The steamer built by the Calcutta docking company at Kulkarpore, and named the Enterprise, was launched on Tuesday, the 10th instant, at half past 3 P. M.

	Ft. Inch.
Length between perpendiculars	167 0
—over all	187 3
Extreme breadth	27 3
calculated to draw, with engine, boilers, cargo, and 12 days coal, 11 feet.

Builder's measurement, 572½ tons, and carries 2 engines of 60-horse-power each.

The docking company agreed to launch this vessel on the 25th August, but by good management, they have been more than six weeks before their time. The association will make nothing by this job. Government, in the first place, have screwed down the contract as low as they possibly could; and, on the other, have been very particular respecting the materials.

The steamer is most superbly built, and reflects credit on the head-builder, Mr. Bremner, and his assistant Mr. Falconer. In fact, she is as good as any vessel turned out in England or Bombay.

THE IRON STEAMERS.—Various plans have been suggested for regulating the carriage of goods by the Company's steamers, in consequence of the demand for freight being so much in excess of the supply of tonnage.

The lottery scheme has turned out a complete failure. It has been ascertained that parties, not having a pound of merchandize to send up, have applied for tickets in the hope of getting early numbers, and when successful, have parted with them for a consideration to those who were anxious to send off their packages.

It is now proposed to put up the tonnage to auction, to be knocked down to the highest bidder.

THE MALCOLM.—The Malcolm, Captain Eyles, while weighing anchor, a day or two back, in prosecution of her homeward bound voyage, received so much injury from the anchor in her head and fore part, that she is now lying at Cooly Bazar, discharging her cargo, to ascertain the nature and extent of her damage.

THE HEREFORDSHIRE.—The Herefordshire, when taken into dock the other day was surveyed by competent persons and pronounced by them not to have received the slightest damage of any consequence, from her having been so long on the Fultah sand; but, on the contrary, that she was as sound and good in her timbers, and as sea-worthy as any ship in the harbour.

THE BOLTON.—The Bolton has, we perceive, returned to town, in consequence, it is said, of having met with some accident in her course down the river, but it is apparently so slight that she was to start again, in prosecution of her voyage to Singapore and China, on Saturday last.

OPIMUM AND CAPTAIN MACGOWAN.—It is said, that an influential house in China promised the Captain of the Ann, five thousand rupees, if he got there before the Ariel, and communicated to their agents here the advance of prices on opium in China, the Ann did beat the Ariel, and the agents here got the news in time to make large purchases in opium the day before the sale at the low prices! by which clever arrangement a very considerable sum will be realized.

MADDOCK RULES.—The Maddock rules have been rejected by the army; of 752 votes 627 or in other words a majority of nearly 3 to 1 having been for their abolition.

MORE BLOOD HORSES.—Three more blood stallions have arrived in the Eliza, Captain Lay, under charge of six recruits, who, in case of their conduct on the voyage being reported satisfactory, are to be allowed a gratuity of forty rupees each. The horses were landed yesterday by Messrs. Hunter and Co. in whose stables they will continue till boats are declared to be in readiness to take them unto Buxar, from whence they will, at the ensuing cold-season, be distributed to the different studs.

AUGMENTATION OF THE ARMY.—The order regarding the expected augmentation of ten privates per company, in the native infantry is published. One duffadar and 10 sowars per rissallah is authorized for the 2d, 3d and 4th local horse; and an additional rissallah to the 5th local horse.

NEPAULESE PREPARATION FOR WAR.—Letters were received in town on the 3d instant, from Titelya, announcing the arrival at the station of the ladies of Colonel Lloyd's family, in consequence of news having reached that officer at Dordjeling, of a Goorkaw party of one hundred men having taken possession of Nogra, a position on the old road, about 10 miles from Dordjeling, and which was formerly occupied by a detachment of sepoy. The Goorkaws were stockading themselves and building a house for the reception of two hundred men, who were collecting in various quarters.

Nogra is considerably within the frontier line, which divides the Nepal territory from the country of the Sikkim rajah, and is within the district ceded by the latter to us. This irruption, therefore, is a direct aggression, which will, of course, be immediately resented.

It is said also, that the passes leading into Rungpoor Purneah, &c. had been occupied by the Nepaulese troops to the number of about 20,000 men.

HERAT AND THE PERSIANS.—Major Todd arrived at Cabul about the 20th of June, having left Herat about the 22d of May, at which date it had not surrendered to the Persian troops. Unfortunately the bazar rumour-give by implication a subsequent day for the fall; so we are still in the dark as to the fate of the city, and need of Dr. McNeil also. Up to the period of Major Todd's departure, it would seem, that the besieged vigorously resisted, and had been successful in two or three sorties, capturing on one occasion two guns, and putting 200 of the assailants hors de combat. There were Russian officers in the Persian camp, and it was rumoured, a Russian army was moving on Herat from Khiva. Some offer of mediation between the Shah and Prince Kamran, by the Russian envoy, is alluded to, as having been refused by the latter, who is said to have preferred the British representative.

INSUBORDINATION IN THE ARMY.—It is said, that when a party of sepoy were lately warned for the execution at Saugor of a prisoner, their comrade, whom a general court-martial had sentenced to be shot to death by musketry, four or five of the men positively refused the duty, and though they subsequently undertook it to the extent of forming a part of the detail to whom the execution was assigned, they intentionally and openly fired clear of the convict, who was, in consequence, obliged to be dispatched by the Provost-Sergeant!

DACOITS.—Reports of the commission of several dacoities, after the perpetration of which the robbers escaped with impunity, have been published this month also. When will we have a competent police to detect these depredators for the perpetration of their maraudings.

SUICIDE.—On the 10th morning of instant, between the hours of ten and eleven o'clock, Mr. Francis Henry Penny, a respectable European, about 26 years of age, residing in Puddoepookar, Estally, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor.

A WOMAN CARRIED OFF BY AN ALLIGATOR.—On Monday last, a woman, as she was bathing at a ghaut at Goopey, on the opposite side of Hooghly, was carried off by an alligator, of a monstrous size.

ORDERS TO THE THANADARS, &c.—The thanadars, uahis, and chokeedars have lately been prohibited from having money transactions with the inhabitants of their respective jurisdictions, and especially from borrowing any from them. The measure has originated from the circumstance of one of these worthies, having on a charge of corruption being preferred against him, attempted to evade the same by the plea that the sum talked of was a loan to him. This is certainly good, and, it is hoped, will prove effectual. Mr. McCann distributed blank books to the thanadars of Calcutta, for the purpose of entering therein, such orders as are issued from time to time for their guidance.

CHOWKEEDAR TAX IN THE SUBURBS.—We have just learnt, that the magistrate of the 24-pergunnahs is about to adopt measures for the more equitable levy of the chokeedaree tax in the suburbs, though the act of Government, in itself, opposes a serious difficulty in the way of a just imposition of this tax, by fixing certain rates as leviable from each description of house, without reference to their dimensions, they being classified into "huts, shops, lower-roomed pookah houses, and upper-roomed pookah houses," the highest rate on the latter of which is fixed at two rupees; so that the small brick-house, 10 feet square, inhabited by a native at a rent, perhaps, of two rupees per mensem, is chargeable at the same rate as the large lower-roomed house on a rent of fifty to eighty rupees per mensem.

KIDNAPPERS PUNISHED.—The undermentioned individuals, who were named and identified as kidnappers, some by two men, and several by so many as ten and twelve men, have been punished as below stated.

Mis tree Singh, six months with labour in fens, and a fine of 200 rupees or six additional months, and a fine of 100 rupees if paid within fifteen days from the date of the conviction in lieu of labour. Hossein Bux, ditto ditto ditto. Sheeoodyal, ditto ditto ditto. Rampaul, ditto ditto ditto. Prem Singh, ditto ditto ditto. Goordiyall, ditto ditto ditto. Narsin Jemadar, ditto ditto ditto. Sheebno, ditto ditto ditto. Dheebul, ditto ditto ditto. Moos-un, ditto ditto ditto. Ramhess, ditto ditto ditto. Bheebuck Messer, ditto ditto ditto. Sheeobhul, ditto ditto ditto. Takoor Tewartree, ditto ditto ditto. Bheekarree, six months with labour in irons, or a fine of 50 rupees in lieu of labour if paid within ten days from date of conviction. Ram Singh, six months with labour in irons, and a fine of 25 rupees, if paid within ten days. Ruten Ram, ditto ditto ditto. Maha Deo Dhangur Sirdar, ditto ditto ditto. Peerbux, ditto ditto ditto. DAWK TRAVELLING—CALCUTTA TO BOMBAY—Memoandum on the mode of travelling post from Calcutta to Bombay, via Cuttack, Hyderabad, and Poonah, distance, 405 miles.

From Calcutta to Ganjam 364 miles. Apply to postmaster general. Dawk must be paid in advance at the rate of 8 annas a mile.

From Ganjam to Moonegallah 497 miles. Apply to collector of Ganjam, stating all particulars in respect of extra bangy bandais, also intended detention at stations en route. Bearers must be paid by the traveller at end of each stage. Stages vary from 15 to 20 miles each. Average cost about 5 annas a mile.

From Moonegallah to Hyderabad 100 miles; apply to resident at Hyderabad, in same form as above. Timely notice must be given, as bearers must be sent out from that city to meet the traveller. The same rule applies to the route from Hyderabad to Sholapore, 200 miles, as bearers must be sent the whole distance from Hyderabad. This portion of the route is very expensive.

From Sholapore to Poonah 157 miles. Apply to postmaster of Sholapore to post bearers to take you to Indooroor 77 miles. From which place to Poonah 80 miles. Bearers must be sent out from Poonah, for which apply to the post-master of Poonah. Timely notice should be given.

From Poonah to Panwell 73 miles. Bearers will be posted by the post-master of Poonah.

From Panwell to Bombay 20 miles. The conveyance is by water.

If more than a single set of bearers are required between Moonegallah and Poonah, good notice should be given, and I am not aware, that it is practicable to post more than three palanquins on that road. I believe it is with extreme difficulty that bearers can be posted for more than two.

From Calcutta to Ganjam, the cost of travelling, for a set of bearers with musankhree and two bangee-burlais, will vary from 8 to 9 annas per mile. From Ganjam to Moonegallah it is about 5 or 6 annas a mile. From Moonegallah to Sholapore, it averages 2½ rupees a mile, and from Sholapore to Poonah, it averages 1½ rupees a mile.

From Poonah to Bombay, it is about 12 annas a mile.

MOFUSSIL.

DELHI.—On the 29th of June, a scion of the house of Timor, was hanged, for having brutally murdered his wife, because she refused to give up half her jewels to his paramour. The poor woman was young and beautiful, and eight months gone with child. The wound made by the tulwar cut her up, and the child fell at her feet. Just the sort of murder to be expected from a brutal sultaneen.

DELHI ON DITS.—Captain Barnes is said to be now at Simlah, with the Governor General.

Four cavalry corps, from the Madras presidency, are coming round to Bengal, to assist in the coming wars!

The Bengal and Bombay troops are to be employed in settling matters to the north-west, and bringing the Nepalese to their bearings, while the Madras forces are to do for the Burmese.

Our local horse are all to be increased, and temporary horsemen raised for civil purposes, as not a single local horseman will be left at home.

An order is said to have arrived from England, directing that all Major Generals shall vacate staff appointments in five years after their promotion to that rank.

Mr. Macnaghten, it is reported, has carried all points, our own way, with His Majesty of the five rivers, and has obtained great credit, in consequence.

We learn that the Governor General's escort and tents are to be at Peerozepore, on the Sutledge, by the anniversary of the gunpowder plot! His lordship will meet Ranjeet there and thence accompany him to Lahore. From Lahore the Governor General will proceed to Jouppore via Havsi, thence to Agra, Gwalior, and Allahabad, and from the latter station, either to Calcutta or Simlah, as the exigencies of the public service may demand.

AGRA.—Mr. Dun, a preventive officer, recently shot himself at one of our preventive outposts.

Mr. Neave, the civil and session judge, has been suspended from his office, for dereliction of duty.

The draught which continues uninterruptedly, and unmitigatedly, and is becoming a matter of very serious consideration, has begun to affect the market. Wheat, which was, in the middle of June, selling at 13½ seers, is now at 11½, and the prices of other grain has risen in proportion.

The number of poor employed, exhibits a decrease of 13,922. This is a striking commentary on the views entertained by some of our worthy economists, as to the expediency of allowing these paupers just sufficient food to save them from absolute starvation, because if it were raised beyond this allowance they would never disperse, but remain slothfully depending on Government.

MYNPOOREE.—On the 16th ultimo, appeared an advertisement of the loss of certain mails, after having passed Mynpooree. The mails in question, 8 in number, were despatched along with 49 others, in three wallets, from Mynpooree to Allyghur, on the 24th ultimo, by a sowan, the servant of the contractor. The post-master, at Allyghur, reported the arrival at his office, of only two of the wallets, with the deficiency of the 8 packets in question; and, the road subbarhkers reported the arrival of only two of the wallets at Malown, the second stage from Mynpooree; they now say, the three arrived at Eia, the 3d stage. During the first week of this month, a discovery was made of 78 letters and gazettes, a pamphlet, and a packet for Meerut, near Secunderabad, a place on the road to, and about 32 miles from Delhi, by one of the dawks subordinates; and a further discovery was made in the same neighbourhood of 13 or 14 letters for Simla, by a jemadar in charge of prisoners. Both former part of the missing mails; they were obtained by the magistrate at Boolundshur; and forwarded towards their destination. Inquiry is, and has been on foot, by the magistrate of Allyghur, Boolundshur, and Mynpooree; but at present, as far as I know, without effect.

ROTTERHAM.—The mortality in the jail of this sudder station has been for the month of March, 188 deaths, out of 1,469 inmates; and for April, 191 deaths out of 1,411 inmates. The rate of mortality thus exhibited is appalling, exceeding for the respective months one hundred and fifty per cent. or annihilatory of the whole jail population to about nine months. Thus far exceeds either the Cawnpore or even the Agra mortality, and is, perhaps the heaviest in the country.

NATIVE STATES.

JOUDHPUR.—Maha Rajah Maun Singh remains as usual at Joudhpore. A hukarrath arrived from Malwa, and reported that the English gentleman had sent about 100 men from Samblini and taken possession of Malwa, and that they intend to take possession of Deelavann also. The Maha Rajah thereupon issued purwanas to call in his chiefs and sirdars immediately. Uizees were received from the Thakoor Hunwut Singh, of Pokun, and Thakoor Runjeet, of Khoochawun, saying, that, agreeably to orders, they were on their way. Afterwards the Maha Rajah bending towards those that were present said, "that the British Government, under pretence of his inability to pay the amount of tribute, are desirous of taking his territory in lieu, to the amount of four lacs of rupees, and also a plan to establish a cantonment for troops, to act against the Kuzzacks, but that it was contrary to his wish. That the amount of the revenue will be paid, and if the British Government intend to take his territory and establish a cantonment in the Joudhpore state, that he will never agree to it. That if God has given him authority, it cannot be wrested from him, otherwise, be it as it will. That he had now become old, and will not give away any lands in his dominions. He then ordered the ahulkar to prepare the tribute money, and having sent for his Moonshee, caused something to be written, which he dispatched towards Scindh and other quarters.

MADRAS.

LA GLOIRE.—The French barque La Gloire, which left Madras for Pondicherry and Bordeaux, returned to port, having sprung a leak at sea, which obliged her to throw some cargo overboard. She has since been surveyed and is now discharging her cargo as fast as possible in order to find out where the leak is. The crew of H. M. Ship Victor, have afforded very prompt and ready aid in working at the pumps of La Gloire night and day since her return. It is most fortunate this vessel was near land when the leak was discovered or she would inevitably have gone down.

DISTURBANCE AT AKOLAH.—The 5th regiment of Nizam's infantry, a brigade of six-powaders, and a troop of cavalry, marched from Ellichpore on the 16th ultimo, to quell a serious disturbance at Akolah occasioned by orders sent up from Hyderabad, for the destruction of all Hindoo temples, to prevent a recurrence of the broil which have so frequently taken place between the sects in their religious processions.

BOMBAY.

The Coots returned to harbour on Saturday afternoon, under the following circumstances: at 6 A. M. on the 20th instant, the vessel, while under courses, single reefed top-sails, and fore-top-mast stay-sail, was taken aback by a severe squall, which carried away her main-yard, main-top-sail gaff, and outer iron bobstay, and split her mizen-top-sail. The damage can be repaired under a month, and then she will be able to take up the mails intended for the Atalanta on the 1st proximo, which will save that vessel a trip to the Persian gulph, against the wish of the public, and certainly not at all to the public advantage. As no arrangements have been made for the conveyance of packets, &c. Beirut, it is all the same by what vessel they may be forwarded to the mouth of the Euphrates. They will slumber as comfortably at what should be the commencement of their overland journey, taken up by the Coots, as if they had had the honour of transmission by a steamer.

ABOLITION OF ANGRIA EXACTIONS AT REWAS.—The vexatious exactions levied on trade by Angria, the chieftain of Colabah at Rewas, as vessels passed the channel between his territory and the island of Caranah have been abolished. It appears, the Angria has been induced to discontinue his levies altogether, by representation from Government, coupled with an offer of compensation for the loss of the revenue he derived from that source. As these exactions were not only heavy and oppressive, but, obliged every boat to come to anchor off Rewas, while Angria's officers boarded them, and took an account of the cargo, they are believed to have been the primary cause of so little traffic as has hitherto existed, being carried on between Bombay and Nagoma Pennu, Durimthar and other places on those creeks which boats cannot enter without previously passing through the above-mentioned channel.

THE NEW SUPERINTENDENT.—The new superintendent assumed charge of his department on the 2d instant, under a salute of thirteen guns. His predecessor, Admiral Sir Charles Malcolm will proceed home by the Red Sea early in September.

CHINA.

By the Water Witch, Canton papers up to the 5th of June have been received. The stir in the opium trade, announced in our former advices, had passed off, and the drug was dull.

Cotton was heavy, the native dealers being averse to the increased duty proposed to be levied on this and several other articles. Stocks were not large, and business would no doubt be resumed, so soon as the tariff was officially promulgated. Freight to London wore up, ranging from £10 to £10 10s.

The Ruba, Capt. Randall, from Canton to Bombay, foundered, near the Seychelles. The Captain and crew left her in three boats, one of which with the first mate in charge, was picked up by the Jupiter. She had specie on board to the amount of 14 or 15 lacs of rupees, of which we believe, about a moiety was insured in Calcutta.

PERSIA.

BUSHIRE.—From a letter written by a merchant at Bushire, bearing date the 31st May last, the following items of intelligence are gleaned. A change has recently taken place in the internal administration of Bushire. The Governor of that place having become exceedingly unpopular, has been induced to abandon his onerous and responsible post, and to retire to the island of Karak. A much distinguished Persian Khan, highly favoured by the ruling prince of Shiraz, has been appointed to the Government of Bushire. Our resident was still at the British factory, where, apparently, not the slightest anxiety was displayed respecting our present unsettled relations with Persia, or the approaching storm consequent thereon. The fall of Herat was currently reported everywhere, and generally believed to be true. This recession to the territories of Persia, has afforded to the people of the country a prolific theme of feasting, rejoicing, and gratulation! The name of Mahommed Shah, their conquering monarch, is extolled to the skies or the display of his exemplary valour and unity of purpose, in his late successful expedition. The King was lately expected at his capital, where preparations were in progress to receive the conqueror, with the highest honour, due to his rank, and the greatest prompt suitable to the occasion.

The John Adam and Belhaven, which sailed from Calcutta in the middle of March, have safely arrived at Bushire with all well on board. They were on the point of sailing for Bussorah, and must be expected back in Calcutta in all October. Indigo has yielded a very handsome profit in the gulph, so much so, that the merchants of Bushire intended to make large remittances for the ensuing crop.

BURMAH.

THE RANGOON GOVERNOR AND MR. CRISP.—An unusual measure of haishness and imperiousness had been adopted by the Governor towards an English resident at Rangoon, Mr. Crisp. It appears that Mr. Crisp's vessel, the Colouet Burney had slightly infringed the regulations of the port by moving farther down the reach than the visiting officer considered she ought to do. This being reported to the Governor, a party of six men were sent to bring Mr. Crisp, before him without delay, leading that gentleman to suppose that if he had resisted, he would have been dragged away by the hair of his head.

A curious report is afloat, to the effect that the ministers at Ava have addressed a letter to Dr. Bayfield, in reply, it is said, to that addressed to them at the commencement of the year by the late resident, Col. Burney, from Calcutta. This letter appears to have been sent to the woodcock of Rangoon for the purpose of being forwarded to Dr. B. but that officer has taken on himself the responsibility of declining to forward it, giving some frivolous excuse about the seal on Col. Burney's letter having been supposed by the ministers to be a private one, and not that of the Government. Much speculation was afloat as to the contents of this mysterious letter. Some suppose it to have been too yielding, others that it was too strong, but all seem to concur in ascribing the fact of a letter having been written, to the impression made on the Court by our reinforcement of troops at this station.

CRUEL CONDUCT OF THE KING OF AVA.—On the 31d waning of Tago the Tsekya Prince applied to his uncle, the King, for permission to go next day, and make some offering to the Moo-nes Pagoda. His Majesty granted it. On the evening of the same day one of the King's daughters skilled in astrology, having cast a horoscope, reported to her royal father that she had divined he had enemies. That same night, the Prince of Peghan surrounded the Tsekya Prince's residence with armed men, carried him off with his wife and children, and placed them in confinement, saying he was about to rebel. At that time the princes of Peghan interceded with her brother, the King, for the pardon of the Tsekya Prince, but for so doing she was deprived of her possessions, notwithstanding which she took the infant son and daughter of the Prince to take care of. On the morning of that day, the Tshan-she-Bo, the Toung-gyeo-Bo, the royal tailor with his father and his son, with others making 8 in all, were placed in confinement. On the 4th, these eight persons were taken out to the "two mango trees in burial-ground" and there executed. On the 6th, at 3 o'clock, the Tsekya Prince being bound with cords and surrounded by a party of armed men, at the head of whom were the Woongyees Moung-Shoay-za and Moung-loong-nyo, was taken out to the place of execution. On the way, within the town, he was allowed to wear his sandals, but on arriving outside, he was made to take them off and walk barefoot, his two concubine-wives and his nurse were taken out at the same time on a cart. Arrived at the place of execution, the "two mango trees burial-ground," and when about to be put to death, the Prince called out "I am not a rebel, it is my uncle who is a rebel." On this he was struck on his throat with a stick, and his hands and feet being tied together, he was then doubled up and thrust into a large open chatty or pot. On this, loud cries of grief and lamentation issued from the surrounding multitude, which was silenced by the armed men on the ground, who were sent to cut them down with their swords. During the execution of the prince, the three women were placed in a posture of supplication, their faces turned another way. The prince being executed, they also were struck on the throat with a stick and their bodies doubled up. The bodies of the two concubine-wives were thrust into pots and with that of the prince were all three carried down to the bank and thrown into the river, they being all of royal blood.

Great was the grief of all people at Amarapoora after this execution. For ten days none frequented the bazar either to buy or sell, and the town had a funeral aspect. This is the relation of people from Ava and Rangoon, who have arrived here.

Notwithstanding the positive assertions of several individuals of their having witnessed the execution of the young prince, the idea is still very prevalent in Moulemein, that he has escaped, and that his family only were put to death, some persons lately from Rangoon confidently assert, that such is the case, and their assertions are in some measure borne out by the contradictory statements of pretended eye-witnesses of the execution. Some say, they saw him cut to pieces in the palace-yard, while others as above related saw him taken out to the place of execution.

CIVIL FUND.

At a half-yearly general meeting of the subscribers to the Civil Fund, holden at the Town-hall, on Monday the 30th day of July 1838.

PRESENT.

C. TUCKER, Esq. Chairman.

W. Braddon, Esq.
J. H. Young, Esq.
J. French, Esq.
J. P. Grant, Esq.
F. Millet, Esq.

J. Hawkins, Esq.
H. V. Bayley, Esq.
J. A. Dorin, Esq.
G. F. McClintock, Esq.

Read and approved the proceedings of the last meeting.

Read an application from Mrs. Crawford, claiming the benefits of the fund on behalf of herself and child, as a widow of the late Douglas H. Crawford, Esq. a subscriber.

Moved by Mr. Millet, seconded by Mr. Bayley, and resolved, that the managers be authorized to admit Mrs. Crawford and child upon her signing the declaration and schedule.

The managers submit to the meeting the annual statement of the fund to the 30th April last.

Proposed by Mr. Grant, seconded by Mr. Braddon, and resolved, that the statement be approved, and that it be published in the Calcutta Gazette pursuant to article XVI. of the rules.

Read a letter addressed to the managers from J. A. Dorin, Esq. revenue accountant, dated 21st February 1838, forwarding an official letter from the collector of Burdwan, and stating that their secretary's office had no means of guarding against the extraordinary accumulations of unremitted subscriptions as had been allowed to take place at Burdwan and elsewhere, also Mr. McClintock's memorandum on the affairs of the fund.

It appearing from these and other papers laid before the meeting, that the fund has been subjected to serious loss, not only in the shape of short deductions from allowances of subscribers, but also of interest on mofussil treasuries instead of being immediately remitted to the presidency, and it further appearing that such loss may be attributed in a great measure to the want of an effective establishment under the secretary, who should have in his own hands the means of ascertaining that the dues of the fund are fully realized and punctually brought to credit; and it appearing that we can have no security against similar loss in future, until an account be opened with each individual subscriber under the immediate control and superintendence of the secretary.

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding rupees 130 per mensem be left at the disposal of the managers for entertaining an additional establishment for the purpose of putting the accounts of the fund on a proper footing and preserving regularity in future; and that the managers be requested to report to the next general meeting what measures they have taken in prosecution of the above objects. Resolved further, that the 50 rupees per mensem allowed for the temporary establishment, entertained under resolution, 25th January 1836, do cease from the 31st instant.

The managers submit the result of the votes at the meeting held in January last.

For the surplus being levied on married and widower subscribers exclusively..... 51
For the surplus being levied from all subscribers,.. 52

The following votes being unintelligible, the secretary was directed to address the gentlemen, viz. A. Dick, J. Lawrence, E. Deedes, A. Smelt, the Hon'ble R. Forbes, A. Sconce, J. S. Dunergue, and N. B. Edmoustone, Esqrs. with a request that they would forward distinct votes on the above subject, the managers to publish the result in the Government Gazette and two daily papers, and to take measures for the levy of the additional cess accordingly. Additional cess to begin from 1st November next.

For Mr. Louis's proposition..... 48

DORJELING.

A meeting of the shareholders of the Dorjeling hotel was held yesterday at the Town-hall, Richard Walker, Esq. in the chair, when the following report was laid before the meeting by the chairman of the committee:

THE COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

"In compliance with the general opinion expressed as to the expediency of a public competition for the building of the hotel as well as for obtaining a suitable tenant, your committee immediately after the last general meeting advertised for tenders and offers. Regarding the first of these objects, it may be sufficient to state, that the tender by Messrs. Hepper, Martin and Co. was accepted, and that they have become bound under an adequate penalty to complete the building on or before the 15th of February next.

" In regard to the tenant for the hotel, your committee regret they have not been so successful. The advertisement brought forward several inquiries, but no offer was made by any individual possessing the requisite means, and the scheme of a hotel was nearly abandoned. About this time, however, Messrs. Wilson and Co. verbally expressed their readiness to rent the hotel on fair terms, provided furniture was supplied at the expense of the shareholders; and the result of this communication was a distinct offer on their part of 8 per cent. on all sums expended, whether in buildings or furniture. Messrs. Wilson and Co. stipulated for a godown at Titalya and another at the station. These your committee agreed to build. They appear to be essential to the hotel, and will be useful to other parties who may consign their property to the care of Messrs. W. and Co. Some difficulty occurred as to fixing on the quality and quantity of articles of furniture, but this matter was at length disposed of and the object of the present meeting is to obtain its sanction to these arrangements, and authority for another call to meet the extra expense to be incurred.

" On the subject of the furniture, your committee have to state, that estimates were applied for from all the Europeans in Calcutta on that line, that the articles ordered are to be of the plainest description, and that the lowest estimate (that by Mr. Lazarus) amounts to Rs. 10,416-8.

" In these circumstances, your committee recommend that another instalment of Rs. 100 per share be this day ordered.

" To conclude your committee beg to state, that the arrangements with Government in regard to the establishment of the sanatorium, have proceeded in the most satisfactory manner. Throughout, the hon'ble the President in Council has evinced an earnest desire to promote every measure conducive to its prosperity, and though it may be unnecessary here to enumerate these measures, your committee feel great pleasure in thus publicly referring to, and acknowledging them.

" (Signed) J. W. GUANT, Chairman."

After some discussion, it was moved by R. Davidson, Esq., seconded by Major Forbes, and carried,

" That this meeting do approve the report, and direct the committee to raise the said instalment of one hundred rupees accordingly."

The meeting then voted thanks to the chairman and dissolved.—Hurkaru, August 11.

LANDHOLDERS' SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a meeting of the committee held at the Society's office, No. 3, Clive-street ghaut, on Monday, the 6th instant.

PRESENT.

Committee.—T. Dickens, Esq., W. C. Hurry, Esq., W. Storm, Esq., Baboo Prosonnocomar Tagore, Baboo Ramcomul Sen, and Moonshie Mohamed Ameer.

Members.—Baboo Debbyposaud Roy, Dewan of Ranmykattawony.

Visitors.—Baboo Bhubbanchurn Mitter and Baboo Pooran Sing.

The members proposed at the last meeting were confirmed.

Proposed by Baboo Prosonnocomar Tagore, and seconded by Baboo Ramcomul Sen, Fuker Oodin Mahomed Ahsun Chowdry, of Dooly, Pubna;

Rajah Beerassor Roy Chowdry, of Taherpore, Rajshaye.

Read two letters from Government in reply to the applications addressed by the Society relative to the stamp duty leviable on kubooliats and bonds of the gomastahs.

Ordered, that the whole correspondence with the board of customs, salt and opium and with Government on the above subject, be published for the information of the members of the Society.

To S. G. PALMER, Esq.

Acting Sec. to the Board of Customs, salt and opium.

Sir,—The Committee of the Landholders' Society have directed us to represent respectfully to the board of customs, salt and opium, the additional hardship to which that section of the community which they represent is subjected by an order of the board contained in their circular, dated 13th January 1836, directing that "an impression appearing to exist, that security bonds, when executed on the same sheet or paper containing the original or principle deed, are not liable to any separate or additional stamps," the board of customs, salt and opium, deem it necessary to correct such an impression if it should also exist in your division!!

2d We are requested to bring to the notice of the board, that the above order must severely affect the landholders, particularly in regard to the kubooliat and security bonds they are in the habit of taking from their village gomastahs and other zemindary servants; the salaries of the former being in general not more than three or four rupees per month.

3d. The committee have carefully examined the original and subsequently modified regulations, bearing upon the subject, and also regulation X. of 1829, consolidating into one with modifications all former enactments relating to the collection of stamp-duties. They are unable to discover therein any direct provision that kubooliats or bonds for the due execution of offices, and the security entered into with landholders and their village gomastahs. Tusheldars, naib, peshkar, and other zemindary servants, appointed for the collection of revenue, should be liable to stamp duty. But in practice particularly subject to the enactment of regulation XVI. of 1824, when any question between a zemindar and servant, in connexion with the terms of his kubooliat or security was brought before the judicial and revenue authorities, they declared that such documents is an inadmissible unless it is written on stamp-paper. Thus the landholders on many occasions were subjected to the prescribed penalty for a constructive omission.

The majority of the executive functionaries in the absence of any direct provision in the regulation, prescribing a stamp-duty of eight rupees on the kubooliat, with reference to Regulation XVI. of 1834, schedule No. 1, under the head "agreement not otherwise charged or expressed in it," have sanctioned the admission of the deed, with the security bonds inserted at the foot of the kubooliat until the recent order of the board hereinbefore mentioned. Thus the stamp duty at this period levied amounts to sixteen rupees on persons ill able to afford it.

The provision in question for an eight rupees stamp on all deeds not otherwise expressed in the regulation, was rescinded by the consolidated regulation of 1829, which sub-joined (vide schedule A, No. 15,) that contracts and deeds, if not otherwise charged or exempted from duty, should be stamp an agreement. Again referring to the note of No. 3, of the said regulation, it is found to be prescribed that agreements for a purpose not restricted, to or specifying any amount, should be executed on such stamp as the parties may determine, but no recovery can be made on the instrument in any court of justice, of a larger amount than may be covered by the stamp, at the rate prescribed in the schedule for bonds. Thus the amount of stamp duty leviable on kubooleuts of zemindary servants, is hence involved in greater uncertainty. But supposing the average collection of each gomastah be computed at 1,000 rupees, the stamp prescribed for bonds of the same amount would be ten rupees, and for a security deed also an equal sum amounting on both to twenty rupees, being the cost of a set of kubooleuts and security bonds for a gomastah employed on a salary of three or four rupees per month.

The landholders' Society conceive, that it was the intention of the Government, a part from a consideration of the nature and provisions of the permanent settlement of land revenue in Bengal, &c. to make the stamp-duties fall as lightly as possible upon the zemindars and their ryots, inasmuch as they have exempted all leases, vis. pottahs and kubooleuts executed and exchanged with ryots and other actual cultivators of the soil from stamp duty. They consequently conclude, that the very oppressive nature of the recent order cannot be known either to the Board or to the Government, and they therefore beg to call your attention to the following circumstances.

First.—That the stamp now required, amounts to at least one-half the average annual salary of the person employed.

Secondly.—That the frequent changes in this description of servants, occasioned by removal, unfitness and other causes, makes the duration of their service very short, so that a necessity for fresh kubooleuts is perpetually recurring.

Thirdly.—That the number of village gomastahs and other servants in a zemindary, is so great that the stamp thus required becomes a serious addition to the amount of the sunder jumma, and is actually a tax falling directly upon the land.

We therefore respectfully submit that it cannot be the intention of the present Government, any more than it was that of the Government of those days which I established the noble institution of permanent land revenue in Bengal, to increase the sulkier jumma by any indirect taxation of the land, and consequently that the effect of the order abovementioned, has in all probability escaped the notice of the Board of Customs and of Government.

We have therefore to beg, that you will be pleased to lay this representation before the Board, with our request not only for a reconsideration of their recent order, but also for an extension of the exemption from stamp duty on kubooleuts and securities between a zemindar and his servants, in the same manner as on leases exchanged with ryots, or else to fix the duty on such a moderate scale as in the wisdom of the Board may be thought equitable, and which may bear a fair proportion to the duty already levied on other instruments. In that case exempting only those servants who are in the receipt of salaries less than 10 rupees per month.

We are, Sir, your obedient servants,

(Signed) { W. C. HURRY,
PROBODHCHANDR TAGORE,

Calcutta June, 28th 1838. Honorary Secretaries
No. 571.

TO WILLIAM COBB HURRY, Esq. AND BADOO PROBODHCHANDR TAGORE, Honorary Secretaries to the Committee of the Landholders' Society

Gentlemen.—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated 30th ultimo, and in reply to express the regret of the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, at their inability to meet the request which it prefers.

2. You will, the Board are persuaded, perceive on reflection the impossibility of such a compliance on the part of an authority entrusted only with the administration of the law enacted for their guidance. In the administration of the stamp law as it now stands, the Board do not perceive that they have any option but to consider the kubooleuts of village gomastahs as falling under entry No. 3, Schedule Regulation X. of 1819, and the security bonds (having reference to, and giving value to such kubooleuts) as falling under entry No. 11, in the same schedule and regulation, with the reservation of course of those cases in which parties may choose to take kubooleuts under entry No. 1, of the schedule and security bonds, under No. 12, with reference to a definite sum.

3. With respect to the other point, viz. the requisition of a separate stamp for a security bond, written on the same piece of paper with a kubooleut, it does not appear to the Board, that the order of the 13th January, 1836, quoted by you, is opposed either to the spirit of letter of the mutual stamp law. If the observation of the order in question were not insisted upon, a wide opening would be left for defrauding this branch of the public revenue. A bond attached to a kubooleut gives additional security, it does not, therefore, seem inequitable, if bonds and agreements are taxed at all to subject the writing affording such additional security to an additional tax, but more than this there does not appear, any sound reason why instruments, which, to make them valid in the courts, must bear a stamp; say of 10 rupees each, if written on separate pieces of paper should bear only one stamp of ten rupees simply, because both are written on one piece of paper."

4. The interpretation of the law against which you appeal is no fresh construction put upon it by the present Board. It is, on record so far back as 1832, and the orders to which you advert of January, 1836, were merely written to call attention to the Board's views on the subject, which were communicated in 1832, to the Superintendent of stamps, but were not, it is apprehended, fully explained to the several officers of revenue at that time.

5. The arguments urged by you for a relinquishment or mitigation of the duties on the kubooleuts and bonds of village gomastahs, appear cogent, but it is not the province of the Board to determine on the weight which they ought to carry. They have, as already explained, only to administer the stamp law as it stands, but they do not doubt that Government will be prepared to afford the most just and equitable consideration to any fairly grounded suggestion for its amendment, which the Landholders' Society may place before them.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

SIR,—We beg respectfully to request that you will be pleased to lay before his Honour the Governor of Bengal the annexed correspondence between the Landholders' Society and the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, on the subject of an increased stamp duty, now levied on the kubooleut on the zemindary servants.

As the case is fully explained in the correspondence, we deem it needless to recapitulate the details, and have, therefore, merely to add that we hope his Honour the Governor will afford the relief, which, it appears, is out of the power of the Board to grant, though they fully admit the justice of the request we have made to them, as we cannot think that it could ever have been the intention of the Government that the stamp duty should fall so heavily on those who are employed in collecting the land revenue.

We are, Sir, your most obedient servants,

Hon. Secs

H. T. PRINSEP, Esq. Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the General Department.

SIR,—On the 17th instant, we had the honor of addressing you, and forwarding for your perusal, a communication which we had received from the Board of customs, salt and opium, on the subject of the stamps, levied on the kuboolouts of zemindary servants.

The Landholders' Society, however, are anxious that his Honour the Governor in Council should be put in possession of the reasons which prevent the Society from fully concurring in the opinions expressed by the Board, in their letters above referred to, and they have therefore desired us to express the same to you.

The Board observes, "that in the administration of the Stamp Law, as it now stands, the Board do not perceive that they have any option, but to consider the kuboolout of village gomastahs, as falling under No. 3, Schedule A Regulation X. of 1829, and the security bonds having reference to, and giving value to such kuboolouts, as falling under entry No. 11, in the same schedule and regulation, with reservation, of course, of those cases in which parties may choose to take kuboolouts under entry No. 1, of the schedule and security bond under No. 12, with reference to a definite sum." But all these quoted clauses have reference to a limited sum and no recovery can be made on the instrument in any court of justice of a larger amount than may be covered by the stamp at the rate prescribed in the schedule. Thus the representation made in the 5th paragraph of our letter to the Board, dated 28th June, ultimo, is borne out, that the stamp duty leviable on kuboolouts of zemindary servants is hence involved in greater uncertainty.

The Board observes, "that with respect to the other point, viz. the requisition of a separate stamp for a security bond, written on the same piece of paper with a kuboolout, it does not appear to the Board that the order of the 13th January, 1836, is opposed either to the spirit or letter of the Mutussil Stamp Law." With due deference to this opinion of the Board, we beg to submit that the Regulation X. of 1829 being a regulation merely consolidating the former ones, and affording a pledge in the preamble of the same, that its object is not to increase the burthen of the impost on the people; the question is now to be considered whether the security bond was required to be written on a stamp, prior to the said order of the Board. We beg to quote the highest judicial authority available namely, the opinion of the Sudder court on this point, (the copy of their circular dated 22d September, 1825, hereto annexed) from which it will appear that the court distinctly mention, "that the security bond should be written on plain paper, until the Government should declare by a formal enactment the amount of the stamp paper on which they should be executed." The requisition of the Board for a separate special stamp to a security bond in the absence of an enactment must appear not to bear out the construction of the regulation, when generally the security bond itself was declared by the Sudder court to be receivable on plain paper.

Besides the Board allege as the ground of their regulation, that a bond attached to a kuboolout gives additional security, and is therefore liable to a separate tax. We also beg respectfully to differ from this opinion, and regret that in arriving at this conclusion the Board overlooked the spirit of the original stamp regulations, as embodied, and expressed in the Regulation X. of 1829, for the stamp duty is leviable, not a reference to the additional security, but to the amount which constitutes the subject of transactions between individuals, otherwise every joint bond of parties, indorser or acceptor of drafts, and mortgage of property to secure the amount of bond. All these giving further security to the advances of the principal sum, may, by the above principle adopted by the Board, be subject to a separate full amount of stamp duty, which is obviously contrary to the spirit and letter of the existing regulations.

It is also worthy of attention, that when an action is required to be brought before a court of justice against a principle and his security, in reference to a kuboolout, the plaint is to be filed against the parties jointly, and award is given accordingly. It is, therefore, by no means a separate transaction, on which a separate stamp duty ought to be charged, moreover the records of the Board, or if necessary, a reference to the mutussil courts, will satisfy his Honour the Governor that it has been an universal practice to take a kuboolout and security on the same piece of paper, and it is admitted by the courts of justice that such documents no way infringe on the provision of the stamp regulation.

The Board, with reference to their order of the 13th January, 1836, remark, that if the observance of the order in question were not inconsistent upon, a wide opening would be left for defrauding this branch of the public revenue. The Society beg to submit their opinion that neither an alteration in the rate of stamp duty nor the total exemption of certain documents from its operation are in themselves likely to occasion frauds on the revenue, and they trust that his Honour the Governor will concur with them in thinking that a reduction of duty tends to diminish the temptation to the commission of fraud, as well in this as in all other departments of the revenue. The Board admit the argument of the Society for a reduction or mitigation of the duty now levied to be cogent.

They have, therefore, respectfully to request that you will lay this letter before his Honour the Governor in Council, in addition to the papers forwarded on the 17th instant.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The first annual report of the Temperance Society established in her Majesty's 49th regt. 17th April 1837, under the sanction of Colonel R. Bartley, commanding, read to the members at a meeting held on the 17th April, 1838.

With feelings of gratitude to Divine Providence and much thankfulness for the success that has been vouchsafed to our Society, we now lay before you a summary report of its progress since its commencement in April 1837.

The annexed statement will exhibit its monthly variations, and it must be satisfactory to us all to observe, that there have always been caused by an increase to our numbers, till within these last three months, during which time a great number have fallen into their former habits of intemperance. Painful as it is to every man, who has the welfare of his fellow-creatures at heart, to witness such defection, we can boldly say, that it by no means amounts to discouragement; and though the falling away of some of our associates adds another to the many proofs of the infirmity of human nature and the blindness of man to his own happiness, still we can triumphantly appeal to those who have stood firm, and who can bear their honest testimony to the beneficial effects of joining a Society which is only ridiculed and scoffed at by bad men, and misrepresented by those who do not, or will not, understand its principles.

When we consider that at the first formation of this Society, there were only twenty-three individuals out of the inhabitants of this cantonment who came forward to join it, and that now it numbers 360 members, those who then looked up to that being who despises not the day of small things, may now indeed go on their way rejoicing, trusting, that as he has hitherto prospered the cause, so will he incline men's hearts towards it, until the Temperance Society proves an effectual barrier against that dread mass of misery and crime, which drunkenness engenders. All experience proves, that its principles are correct, and that nothing but total abstinence from ardent spirits will ensure the reformation of the drunkard, or the prevention of the temperate becoming the degraded victims of this vice.

Much as Temperance Societies have done for the good of mankind, there is still much for them to do. Notwithstanding we have more than three millions of our fellow-creatures of all classes, from the sovereign on her throne to the poorest subject who upholds the respectability of his humble name and character, we cannot escape the distressing fact, that we still are few compared with the multitude who are or are becoming the slaves of that degrading vice, which is the cause of most of the misery, crime, punishment, and distress which we are all painfully obliged to witness. We may with truth say, that the temperance cause is yet in its infancy: it has to struggle against the bad habits which have for centuries been handed down from generation to generation, against deep-rooted prejudices, the influence of bad example, the selfishness of the evil-hearted, the thoughtlessness of the inconsiderate, and that enmity and hatred which is borne by all whose deeds are dark to whatever by its brightness exposed them to shame. With so much to contend against, the cause is deeply indebted to those who come forward to bear the burden and heat of the day to those who stood in the front of the battle against wickedness and sin, and who, mounting the breach which had been made in the fortresses of the evil one, gallantly waved the banner of the Temperance Society to encourage their comrades to follow that hope which shall never be forlorn.

The establishment of a coffee-room with a library and reading room had, ever since the first organization of the Society been a desirable object with the committee; but the ungovernable state of the funds had always precluded every hope of so desirable an object. This result, however, the committee rejoice to add, has, at length, been happily accomplished, entirely through the unsolicited hospitality of Colonel R. Bartley, who, upon casually learning our wish on this subject, and the reason which prevented its realization, most cheerfully gave us a very large and comfortable building, which is situated in a very eligible part of the lines. Had not Colonel Bartley thus kindly intererred, it is more than probable that the Society would have sustained a loss of all those comforts which they have since enjoyed. The grateful thanks of the Society are given to Colonel R. Bartley, commanding, Lieutenant Colonel E. Morris, Dr. French, Captain G. J. Pasley, (president of the Society) and Lieutenant and Adjutant A. McEwen, for the interest and zeal which they have at all times manifested for the Society's welfare, and the kind and liberal support they have given the Society since its formation.

Whilst we tender our thanks to our staunch supporters, and fearlessly appeal to them whether in doing good they have not received an immediate blessing in their own persons by the enjoyment of all the happiness which temperance confers, we would earnestly entreat others, who have been less decided, to judge fairly for themselves, whether a single benefit was gained by withdrawing from or not joining us. Whether our Society did not fulfil all that it engaged for, and whether they were better off by leaving us.

It is taking a very contracted view of the merits of a Temperance Society to imagine, that it merely regards the drinking or not drinking a certain number of drams; our object is professedly to put an end to the misery and degradation which drunkenness entails; and, should we succeed, as we earnestly hope that we shall do, ultimately, it will be our delight to see the British soldier in possession of those privileges to which his intemperance has rendered him blind. Let him compare his lot with that of the agriculturist, the mechanic, or journeyman, and he will find a great balance in his favour. His duties, are much more easy than their labours; in sickness he is provided for without the dread of a wife and children being reduced to distress, while he is unable to work for their support; his lodging, food, and comforts are under Providence secured to him free from the dangers of bad seasons, stagnation of trade, or any of the many necessities to which all the labouring classes are liable: his pay is more than adequate to his support, and the bank is open for his monthly savings. Books are provided for his leisure hours, and he has time to enjoy the exercise and amusement for which many a hard-working man elsewhere sighs in vain. We all know that good conduct recommends him for promotion to honourable and trust-worthy situations, and if men would but use their reason they would not only find cause for contentment, but would see what is actually the fact, that the army affords a better livelihood and more hope of advancement in life than almost any profession, trade, or calling. And shall we barter all these advantages for the wretched, senseless depravity of dram-drinking? Shall we be any longer blinded to the madness of casting from us all those good things, and willingly incur the curse that spirit drinking offers in exchange.

A few rough calculations will, we trust, speak with convincing power to those who have hitherto been insensible of the advantages of their situations, whose interests and intellects have been ruined by ardent spirits. We will confine ourselves within the narrowest limits, and only suppose that a man drinks no more than his two annas per day, merely to show the enormous consumption of arrack, in rations, by European soldiers in India. We would indulge the sincere hope that this statement may be the means of opening the eyes of all, not only to the waste of money, but to the serious importance of what so vitally affects the efficiency, good conduct, health, and prolongation of the life of the British soldiers. We will suppose that there are only 20,000 British soldiers in India, that each man only drinks his two drams at the rate charged for them by Government, and the sum thus drawn from the army amounts to no less than 6,38,750 rupees per annum, for which the deluded soldiery receive as an equivalent 14,600,000 drams, or 1,438 tons, 1 puncheon, 20 gallons of ardent poison, administered to ruin the finest army in the world. Now could the enormous sum above mentioned be directed into any other channel beneficial to the soldiers, what a blessing would it be to the men themselves, and what an inestimable advantage to the state! Independent of the saving that would accrue in the expense of medicines, hospital charges, attendants, and the many contingents required in endeavours to renovate the arrack-shattered constitutions of drunkards, whose spirit produced illness and premature deaths cost more than all the duty they have ever done, would be an equivalent for.

Having shewn a very low aggregate of the annual consumption of arrack, we will state a few facts for individual consideration.

A man who takes no more than his two drams a day, drinks in one year 730 drams or eighteen gallons, two pints of ardent poison. In seven years he will at this rate swallow 10,320 drams or two butts, fifteen gallons, four pints.

Twelve years is, we have heard, a fair average for the life of a spirit drinker in this country, taking one with another; but if a man should survive these daily doses of poison, as some few do, he will in twenty-one years drink 15,330 drams or three butts 2½ gallons and two pints of ardent spirits, taking the butt at an average of 120 gallons. We all know, however, that it is rarely indeed that the man who drinks two drams, drinks no more, and that for many a calculation might be more than doubled.

Now let us exhibit the gain of joining the Temperance Society, and we shall find that the man who adheres to his pledge, and lodges the price of the poison in the savings bank every month, will have in Government securities, bearing interest 4 per cent;

In 7 years.... 254 rupees

In 14 ditto.... 588 ditto

In 21 ditto.... 1,029 ditto

for the two drams a day. But two drams beget two drams, and let those who drink more calculate their loss taking into consideration the destruction and waste of property during drunken bouts.

Should a ship arrive from England with news that an increase of £64,000 per annum, was to be made to the European soldiers' pay, what rejoicing there would be; but the soldiers can do for themselves more than Government can do for them, even if it were possible to give them so much money. Neither the Government nor any human power can give them health and happiness so long as they continue spirit-drinkers; but when they leave off the accursed habit, they really and bona fide come into possession of the above increase of pay by their own savings, and, at the same time, benefit the state to an extent that can only be correctly calculated, after some years have shown the blessed result of so glorious a reformation.

We have thus given a faint sketch of some of the advantages which we invite all to partake of. We ask for nothing in return, and hope for nothing, but to see the spirit-drinker rescued from his degradation, and the temperate preserved from the deadly contagion of the drunkard's touch. Your happiness is our reward; and, in seeking that we would close our report by an appeal to the judgment, to the mind, to the conscience of every man around us. What have you who stand aloof from us ever gained, or what can you hope to gain by persevering in spirit-drinking? Is the drunkard a friend? Alas! he is dead to every feeling that would make him one. He knows that unless others can be led into a participation of his guilt, his own spirit fallen from the high and generous bearing of the British soldier, will quail before the disgrace that is attached to drunkenness by every honest, upright, manly mind. The drunkard recklessly causes misery and ruin into the domestic peace of every family and society to which he is admitted; absorbed in self, he neither wishes nor dares to contemplate the extent of his pernicious influence, but with a satanic joy at which even hell might shudder, onward he goes, seeking fresh victims, turning the peaceful home into an abode of wretchedness, the affectionate husband into a cruel, drunken tyrant, the virtuous wife into all a woman ought not to be, cold blooded and hard-hearted. The children's cry falls unheeded on his ear, and when he has played out his infernal part and seen the hopeless parent consigned to an early grave, he leaves the wretched orphans to the pity of the good and sober, and seeks whom next he shall destroy.

Friends! think of these things; turn them over in your minds; ponder well what the drunkard offers, and what we earnestly beseech you to except, and judge which is best. We hold out peace, happiness, contentment, the enjoyment of those privileges to which you have hitherto shut your eyes.

The drunkard invites you to the certain commission of some crimes, and the almost certain commission of many. He invites you to a breach of the laws of God and man, what renders you obnoxious to punishment and disgrace in this life, and to the wrath of your offended Maker throughout the endless ages of eternity. He offers you cursing, fighting, blasphemy, outrage, whoredom, adultery, neglect of every duty; hours of debauchery followed by days of misery; the aching head, the trembling hand, sickness, disease and premature death. We invite you to health, happiness and sobriety; to an enjoyment of good that Providence so abundantly and mercifully supplies for us in this world, and we point beyond it to that heaven which the God of infinite goodness, wisdom, and mercy has commanded to be shut against the pollution of the drunkard's presence.

We appeal to you as Christians! We appeal to you as men worthy of being British soldiers! We appeal to you by every hope of happiness here and hereafter! Rouse yourselves from the wretched infatuation which has too long prevailed. Burst asunder the fetters that have hitherto chained you in bondage, to bad example, to evil habit, and the most degrading vice. Hear us, you who are sober, moderate men; and if in your breast there is one spark of love to God, to your fellow-men, for the Lord's sake, if you are not indifferent to the welfare of those around you, join your exertions to ours: throw the weight of your influence, your example, your persuasion into the temperance cause, and do your duty towards God and towards man for God's sake. Should there be any here who have made a traffic of their comrades' souls, any who, finding no English word to designate aright their dreadful trade, have called themselves brahmins or merchants, for the occasion, we earnestly and affectionately address ourselves to you that have assumed the name of those whose profession is without one redeeming point, that to carry on your soul and body destroying work, you have cast off even the designation of Christians and of Britons, and adopted that which is too truly descriptive of the dark and nefarious transactions in which you have engaged.

Think of the comrades you have helped to ruin and destroy; looking at the dying victim whom, though slowly, you have surely murdered; listen to the groans poured out in agony, to the ineffectual cries to God for merry and to man for help. Look to the noble specimen of manly strength and beauty that has been reduced to weakness and emaciation, now sinking into an unhonoured and untimely grave. Think of the widows and orphans who have lost all that endeared once their happy homes, and ask yourselves these awful questions: how much of all this is my doing? When the secrets of all hearts are disclosed, when all stand before the judgment seat of God, when human opinions or allowances will no longer be heard with those whom I have induced to drink away happiness in this world and salvation in the world to come, appear as witnesses against me, or will they not? Either the one or the other, they must be and now is the time to consider which.

In conclusion, the committee earnestly recommend to the Society a firmness and consistency on the part of its members, as the most effectual means of encouraging others to join it by their example, and of thereby increasing its strength; and thus, while the Society gains in numbers and respectability, its good effects will at length be felt and acknowledged throughout the regiment.

REMOVAL OF LEPERS AND MENDICANTS FROM THE STREETS.

Calcutta, 29th June 1838.

To D. McFARLAN, Esq. Chief Magistrate.

SIR,—I am authorized by the District Charitable Society, to hand you the annexed extract from a report submitted to it by a special committee, on the subject of the lepers in this city, infesting the streets, &c and to solicit your co-operation in the attainment of the Society's wishes.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed) J. GREGORY VOSS, M. D.

Sec. C. C. D. C. Society.

(No. 2.)

Extract from report, dated 22d June 1838.—To the accomplishment of the grand object in view, your committee urge the necessity of the central committee District Charitable Society, authorizing the chief magistrate to offer to shelter and support in the asylum to each poor leper individually, and, in event of any refusing to avail themselves of the proffered relief, that the laws, which must be in existence for the suppression of vagrancy, should be vigorously put in force against any individual who, refusing the advantages now offered, persists in infesting the streets and bazars for the purpose of extorting alms; and if this be carefully enforced, your committee is of opinion, that we shall soon have the poor lepers spontaneously resorting to the asylum.

A true extract,

(Signed) J. GREGORY VOSS, M. D.

Sec. D. C. Society.

(No. 3.)

To F. J. HALIDAY, Esq.

Sec. to the Government of Bengal.

SIR,—I have lately received from the District Charitable Society the letter of which a copy is annexed, leaving it to me to put the law which the Society supposes to exist, into force against lepers. It is known to Government that we have no special Indian law for annoyance caused by this class or by common beggars, but, finding the ancient criminal law of England, (James 1st, Act 7 c. 4) to have been very strong in virtue of statutes passed long before the first charter of the Supreme Court, I ventured to send out to the China bazar, at 1 o'clock of the afternoon on Saturday the 30th June, and found it infested with beggars, the cases of a few of whom are detailed in, "Cause book 30th June 1838."

2d. The civilization of Calcutta is, at least, as far advanced as was that of England in the days of Lord Coke, who is reported to have said, "whilst the justices and other officers were diligent and industrious, there was not a rogue to be seen in any part of England but when the justices and others became remiss, rogues swarmed again." The long and beneficial existence of the District Charitable Society gives just ground to hope that some such institution will never be wanting for the relief of the sick, the maimed, and the blind, and were there fewer promiscuous and unworthy beggars, the funds of that institution would probably increase. The legislature need be under no alarm that cruelty may attend the operation here of acts found salutary in England.

3d. It is obvious, that if Government desire the magistracy to act at all, they should not leave them and their proceedings to the uncertain defence of ancient acts of parliament, but at once prescribe the course that is to be followed. (See vagrant act, attached.) The last vagrant act for England which, whilst slight alterations, might be made law here; the parts which I would propose to omit as inapplicable, or alter, "are struck out," and notes are also entered to show the parts of the act which are already law here.

4th. It seems quite plain that none of the principal marts of a metropolis like Calcutta, should be infested by upwards of eighteen wretched objects, seeking and importuning alms by exposure of disgusting sores; and whether the interior of the country or the great towns in it should have the same law, is a question that may be decided in the negative or affirmative, without affecting the case of Calcutta at all.

5th. The practice of the natives of the country who administer indiscriminate charity at shravals, could not be affected by the law, for to them the poor come at the bidding or seeking of the givers of charity, nor perhaps would it affect the charity given by Mahomedans on Thursdays. Practically, the apprehension in cases of vagrancy would be found to rest on summons by complaint to a magistrate, with European officers of the police, or thanadars, when the complaint accompanied the case to the magistrate.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

(Signed) D. McFARLANE,

Chief Magistrate.

Calcutta, Police-office, July 4th, 1838.

P. S.—One or two of the clauses above recommended relate to police more than vagrancy.

If necessary in England they are as much so here at least.

Extracts from Act 5th, Geo. IV. cap. 83, dated 21st June 1824.

Idle and disorderly persons committing certain offence, herein mentioned, how to be punished.

Section 1st. Enacted, that every common prostitute, wandering in the street, &c. and behaving in a riotous or indecent manner; persons wandering in the public streets to gather alms or encouraging children to do so, shall be deemed idle and disorderly within this act, such offenders shall, on oath of credible witnesses, be imprisoned one month with hard labour.

Section 2d. After having been committed as in the 1st section, persons professing to tell fortunes or otherwise deceive her Majesty's subjects, or persons wandering about, or exposing obscene points, or persons in any place with intent to insult any female, or exposing wounds or deformities to obtain alms, or going about to gather alms or endeavour to procure charitable contributions of any kind under any false or fraudulent pretence.

Persons leaving wife or child referred to in this act, is provided for in bye-laws of 11th November 1814, section III, also for gaming, in bye-law, of 17th April 1820.

This act then proceeds. Persons having in their possession implements or weapons for any unlawful act or purpose.

The bye-law of 11th November, has also provided for suspected persons frequenting rivers, docks, warehouses, avenues or any public places of resort with intent to commit felony.

The act then goes on. Persons resisting a peace officer when apprehended as idle and disorderly, and if found guilty, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, shall be imprisoned three months with hard labour.

Persons deemed incorrigible rogues.

Section 3d. Persons breaking out of any place of legal confinement be dealt with as rogues and vagabonds; and persons so adjusted so to be before, and again apprehended as such and resist a peace officer, shall be deemed an incorrigible rogue, shall be imprisoned with hard labour, for six months.

Section 4th. Lawful for any person to apprehend and take before justice of the peace, found offending against this act.

Section 5th. Justice may issue warrants to apprehend suspected persons.

Justices may bind persons to prosecute vagrants at the sessions. Sessions may order payment of expenses to prosecutors and witnesses.

Clerk of the peace to make out and deliver order. Sessions may punish rogues and vagabonds and incorrigible rogues either with whipping or hard labour.

Lodging houses suspected of concealing such persons may be searched, and suspected persons brought before justices.—Hurkaru, August 16.

UNION BANK MEETING.

At a meeting of proprietors, held this day, (15th August) A. St. L. McMahon, Esq. in the chair. T. Holroyd, Esq. moved, that the following resolutions, passed at the general meeting held on the 14th ultimo, be now confirmed:

Resolution 1st. That in consequence of the greatly increased capital of the bank to 80 lacs of rupees from 30, at which it stood on the 4th May 1837, the limitation fixed by the resolutions of that date to the stock, which might be held by each proprietor, namely, 150 shares of Rs. 1,000, be extended in the same proportion of three to eight, that is 400 shares.

Resolution 2d. That the qualification of any directors to be hereafter elected, be extended from its present amount of five shares to ten, as the capital has been doubled, and that a declaration be required from each candidate, that he holds the required number of shares bona fide, on his own account, or for self and partners in a Calcutta firm and not as trustee, agent, executor, administration or assignee, or collaterally on any other account; and in case any director shall, during his term, reduce his interest below ten shares, he shall thereby be disqualified.

Resolution 3d. That no proprietor, after the present election, shall be eligible for a director's seat, until he has held his qualification for three months, being the time fixed for enabling a proprietor to vote.

Resolution 4th. That the scale of voting according to the amount of stock held, which now stops at ten votes for fifty shares, be extended in the rate of one additional vote for every ten shares above fifty, and that each proprietor prior to voting, if required, shall make the same declaration as provided for in the second resolution.

This motion being seconded by J. Mackenzie, Esq. was carried unanimously.

The thanks of the meeting were voted to the chairman, when it was dissolved.—Hurkara, May 16.

STEAM MEETING.

Proceedings of the tenth half-yearly general meeting of the subscribers of the new Bengal steam fund, and to the petitions to the House of Commons, held at the Town-hall, on Saturday, the 19th August, 1838.

Ross D. MANGLES, Esq., in the chair.

The chairman having read the requisition called upon the secretary to the committee to read the report, which is read accordingly.

Proposed by James Cullen, Esq. seconded by A. F. Smith, Esq. and carried unanimously, 1st.—That the report now read be received and adopted.

Proposed by W. Spier, Esq. seconded by W. Carr, Esq.
2d.—That this meeting following up the second resolution of the half-yearly meeting, held on the 18th August last year, reiterate their unabated desire for the immediate establishment of steam communication direct to the principal ports of India, and their firm determination to pursue by all possible means "a communication by steam packets, with Madras and Calcutta, as well as with Bombay," which has been declared by the president of the Board of Control to be nothing more than the people of England and India have a just right to expect.

Proposed by H. M. Parker, Esq. seconded by Thos. Holroyd, Esq.

3d.—That in the event of the late petition to the House of Commons, and memorial to the Board of Control, and Court of Directors failing to induce the authorities at home, to establish such a communication forthwith, the committee be requested to take measures for calling a general meeting, of the inhabitants of Calcutta and its neighbourhood, with a view to determine what further measures it may be proper to adopt.

Proposed by Ram Comul Sen, seconded by W. Storm, Esq.,

4th.—That H. M. Parker, Esq., be appointed a member of the committee, in the room of the late Archibald Dobbs, Esq.

Proposed by Thomas Holroyd, Esq. seconded by W. Storm, Esq.,

5th.—That the committee be instructed to address the supreme Government, urging the recent failure of the Semiramis, and the heavy disappointment and loss thereby inflicted upon the whole community as an additional strong reason for pressing earnestly upon the home authorities the prompt and efficient establishment of the comprehensive plan.

The thanks of the meeting were then voted to the chairman, and the meeting dissolved.

Ross D. MANGLES, chairman.
Town-hall, August 19th, 1838.

Report of the committee of the new Bengal steam fund, to the subscribers to the fund and to the petition at the tenth half-yearly general meeting convened under the 10th regulation of the original meeting of the subscribers to the fund, held on the 22d day of June, 1838.

The report, presented by the committee of the new Bengal Steam Fund at the last half-yearly meeting of the subscribers to the fund and petition to the House of Commons, agreed upon at the public meeting of the 4th January last, communicated the despatch of the petition to Bombay for conveyance to England by steam via the Red Sea, and they have now to report that it reached London on the 3d or 4th of May. In the interim the committee have caused to be published in all the papers of the presidency, the correspondence had with the home committee. The committee regret to state, that that correspondence will have afforded to the subscribers and the public, no information whatever of the progress of the important question. Subsequent to the presentation on the report of the late select committee of the House of Commons by Lord William Bentinck at the close of the last Parliament.

In their last report, the committee stated, that they had received no communication from the home committee, by the immediately previous mail; and they, therefore, were ignorant whether or not it was the intention of lord William Bentinck to follow up that report by any motion on the re-assembling of Parliament, nor have they since received any communication as to his lordship's intention. This, however, is now of the less consequence since the presentation of the petition, agreed to on the 4th January last, will, of course, enable his lordship to proceed with greater confidence.

But the committee cannot conceal their regret, that from the date of the report of the select committee, viz. the 15th July 1837, to the 12th May last, the date of the last communication received (from Captain Grindlay) acknowledging the receipt of the petition, the question should have had no agitation at home. They cannot but think, if, on the publication of the evidence taken before the select committee, judicious selections had been inserted in the leading journals throughout the country, accompanied by apt comments, and occasional application of the evidence to Dr. Lardner's arguments, that the public, especially that part connected with India, would have been in some degree prepared to support the prayer of the petition. The committee feel if agitation and discussion are not kept up at home, between the intervals of the necessary movements in India, that but luke-warm and merely passing support can be expected when the question is brought forward at home. They feel that it is only by a constant and systematical course of proceeding at home as well as here, that success can be looked for; and they, therefore, cannot but repeat their regret that the question should have been allowed to subside for so long a period, indeed without demonstration of any intention of further agitation, not withstanding the ample materials furnished by the evidence taken before the select committee, and by Dr. Lardner's letter to Lord Melbourne.

From the date, however, of the presentation of the report of the select committee, the only communication received from the home committee, bearing on the question, is that from Captain Grindlay above referred to, which is as follows :

London, May 12th, 1838.

To C. B. GREENLAW, Esq.,

Secy. to the new Bengal Steam Fund.

SIR,—I am directed by the home committee to apprise you of the arrival of your communication to Mr. Mackillop, of the 12th February, transmitting the petition agreed to on the 4th January. I have directed attention to it by notices in the Atlas, of the 7th and 14th of April, and 5th May, and every opportunity which offers for renewing effectually the demand upon the public interest will be improved.

Lord William Bentinck has been for some time at Paris and only arrived in London on the 8th instant. He is and he has ever been, full of ardour in the cause, and prepared to exert all his power and influence to promote its complete success. The home committee meet next week, and I shall not fail to forward information of any thing that may occur interesting to the Indian community by the mail for June.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your most obedt. servt.

R. M. GRINDLAY.

It will be seen that Captain Grindlay states, that he directed attention to the petition by notices in the Atlas, of the 7th and 14th April and the 5th May, but, beyond this, nothing whatever appears to have been done by the home committee, subsequently to the presentation of the report of the select committee, even after a knowledge of the important proceedings had here on the 4th January last, which reached England early in April. Those proceedings have not been published, either by the committee or Captain Grindlay in any of the English papers. The Indian public are indebted to Captain Barber alone, that up to the 12th May, more than one month after their receipt in England, they were published in any English newspaper.

The committee cannot but again repeat their deep regret at this apparent general neglect of the question at home, from the date of the presentation of the report of the select committee to the receipt of the account of the proceedings held here on the 4th January, and also at the little notice taken of the subject during the following month. Captain Grindlay also states, that Lord William Bentinck is, as he ever has been, full of ardour in the cause, and prepared to exert all his power and influence to promote its complete success. The committee need not say that they have the fullest reliance on his lordship's zealous ardour in the cause, and that he will be ever found ready at his post when the occasion is made for his appearance. Such occasion, however, can only be produced by the continued and judicious public agitation of the question here and at home. Here it is the business of the committee to take care that the question is not allowed to slumber; at home it was the especial duty of their paid agent, acting, of course, with the general concurrence of the home committee, to do the same. The instrumentality of Lord William Bentinck in this matter is entirely distinct from that of the Calcutta committee's agent. It was and is the business and duty of the latter by constant agitation of the REAL question to inform the public mind as to the actual object sought to be attained, to explain its vast importance in contradistinction to the limited communication to Bombay, and to induce strong expressions of public opinion. This and this alone can arm Lord William Bentinck with power to act, and it is the want of this proper and judicious agitation of the REAL question at home that this committee so deeply regret. They are waiting with much anxiety the arrival of the June mail, when they hope to be able to communicate to the subscribers a favourable report of progress.

The committee have always been mindful of passing events bearing on the question; and when circumstances have seemed to require a renewed expression of public opinion, they have not hesitated to make the appeal, which they are happy to say has always been met to their entire satisfaction.

The late failure of the Semiramis to affect the passage from Bombay direct to the Red Sea in the S. W. monsoon, is an event which has necessarily attracted the attention of the committee. They are as yet ignorant of the actual particulars, but, be they what they may, the failure cannot in any way impugn the practicability of establishing the comprehensive scheme; for if, instead of proceeding direct from Bombay, the steamer had at the same period left Calcutta, she would have arrived at Galle with ease in nine days, including one day's stoppage at Madras; at Galle she could have been readily joined from Bombay even by a sailing vessel in seven days. Thence proceeding to the southward through the Maldives, and making a course to bring Cape Guardafui to bear N. N. W. about 300 miles, she would avoid altogether the strength of the monsoon in the Arabian Sea; and, from that point having a fair wind to the Cape, she might put out her fires, clean her flues and boilers, and be prepared in good steaming order for the entrance into Red Sea. No one yet has said that a proper steamer would have any real difficulty in passing from Cape Guardafui to Suez at any time of the year. While the steamer was thus passing from Galle to Suez, the Bombay vessel, whether steamer or sailing vessel, might leisurely proceed by the southern passage to Socotia, there to await the return of the Calcutta steamer, and thence proceed to Bombay with the packets, parcels, and passengers for that place, the Calcutta steamer, of course, proceeding on to Galle, Madras and Calcutta; and this is the operation of the comprehensive scheme during the S. W. monsoon; an operation at once furnishing the greatest possible accommodation to passengers, packets, and parcels to, and from all parts of India. This failure of the Semiramis, and its bearing on the main question as above noticed, will necessarily require attention hereafter, if a further expression of public opinion should be necessary. The disappointment and unnecessary expense, to which correspondents connected with the letters sent by her will have been subjected, will afford a strong argument for the communication being put on the most effective and comprehensive footing possible.

Again the committee have not been unmindful of the great length of time occupied in the transmission of the mails between Calcutta and Bombay; in the margin is a statement of the number of days taken in that transmission, during the year from June 1837 to June 1838, which the committee would beg the subscribers and the public in general to compare with the following extract of a letter from the then chairman of the Court of Directors to the address of the president of the Board of Control, dated so far back as March 1837; bearing in mind, at the same time, that the English mail for Calcutta is divided into three or more portions, (noted in the margin as "number of despatches") and forwarded on subsequent days; so that in the case of many letters some days are to be added to the number in the margin, as that of the transmission of at least a part of the English mail.

"The court are aware, that it will be necessary to promote, by every possible means, facility and quickness of communication between Bombay and Calcutta and Madras; and they have observed, by recent intelligence, that the Government of India has adopted arrangements for the acceleration of the dawk, by which packets may be conveyed from Bombay to Calcutta in from eight to ten days, and to Madras in about seven days, and which the court consider to be a much more rapid and certain and unquestionably more economical mode of communication than a steam conveyance."

It will be seen that this understood reduction of the time of the dawk from Calcutta to Bombay, to from eight to ten days, is expressly mentioned with a view to establish that letters by the English mail would reach Calcutta quicker by the Bombay route than by steam from Socotra, and therefore the actual number of days taken during the last twelve months, may fairly be employed to show that the route by steam from Socotra would be the quicker mode of conveyance, independent of other more important advantages. Assuming that a steamer in the S. W. monsoon would, from Socotra, steam at the rate of 200 miles per diem as well to Bombay as to Calcutta, the first part of the Calcutta mail would arrive via Bombay, according to the minimum time occupied in the transit from Bombay to Calcutta in eighteen days, and, according to the maximum time, in twenty-one days from Socotra, and the remaining parts from one to five days after; bringing after all nothing but light letters and newspapers at a heavy cost for postage, to the spot, moreover, to which and whence nearly one-third of all the letters to and from India are sent and despatched; while the whole would reach Calcutta by steam via Galle in seventeen days, allowing twelve hours' delay each at Galle and Madras; including in that whole letters, packages, and parcels, without limitation as to weight, and above all, that most important and indeed indispensable essential in any really beneficial mutual intercourse—MAN.

It is necessary also to bear in mind, that every improvement, whereby the speed of steamers is increased, is so much additional time gained, in bringing even the letters alone by steam from Socotra.

With respect to the transit of the mail from Calcutta to Bombay, the post-master general regularly gives notice that from thirteen days in the N. E. monsoon to fifteen days in the S. W. constitute the least safe period.

This fact of the more speedy course being by steam, especially during the S. W. monsoon, under existing circumstances, with the much greater reduction of time by steam, when the more speedy steamers, such as the GREAT WESTERN and VICTORIA are employed, combined with, it may be said, the impracticability of any arrangement being made whereby letters, newspapers, and monthly periodicals, to say nothing of passengers can be passed across the country to Calcutta, should also have attention and representation in the event of the last petition not being successful. The committee can only assure the subscribers and the public that while they have the satisfaction of enjoying their confidence, they will unflinchingly continue their exertions until success is obtained.

* Note.—This one-third of all the letters between England and India is not to be considered as including the letters received at Calcutta from, and for despatch to the musnisi, but expressly at the correspondence of Calcutta and its immediate neighbourhood.

The accounts are as usual laid upon the table. The balance on the 31st ultimo, was Co.'s Rs- 43,822 8-8, subject to a letter of credit for £1,000 on the house of Sir Charles Cockerell and Co. in favour of the home committee. The item on account of printing and advertising is very large. It has mainly been incurred by advertising in all the papers of India, the document connected with the conditional subscriptions of shares in a scheme for establishing a communication by steam from Calcutta, Madras, and Ceylon to England, by way of the Red Sea, by means of a company. The number of shares is 2,579, which at Rs- 500 per share, amounts to Rs- 1,289,500, subscribed by 758 individuals and firms. Mr. Turton, with whom the suggestion originated, having left England, the committee have made over the lists and documents to Capt. Barber; and they are satisfied, that when the matter is by him properly brought before the British public, it cannot fail to have a beneficial effect, as well on the public as on the authorities; on the public by shewing those who are willing to combine to establish the communication that they may depend upon efficient support in India; for although little aid has been received from Madras, yet the committee are quite satisfied that there will be no want of support at that presidency, when a well arranged and sufficient scheme is actually proposed. The authorities at home, it is presumed, will not fail to see in the general support given to the proposition and especially in the really moderate individual subscriptions, that the parties subscribing have not been led by enthusiasm or other motives to subscribe largely for shares; but that they have soberly, and with a fixed purpose to take up their shares, evinced the steady strength of their desire to have the communication established at the earliest period in the most perfect and efficient form possible.

The committee regret to report the death of their late colleague, Mr. Dobbs, whose attendance in committee and zealous interest in the success of the comprehensive scheme were unremitting. It becomes necessary for the subscribers to choose a successor.

UNCOVENANTED SERVICE FAMILY PENSION FUND.

There was a very full attendance of subscribers to the uncovenanted Service Family Pension Found, this morning at the Town-hall, when

Mr. N. CAMPBELL, was called to the chair.

The chairman having taken his seat, called on the secretary to read the report ; after which the following resolutions were moved and passed :

Proposed by Mr. C. Byrn, and seconded by Mr. R. Rose,

First.—That the report just read, be adopted and printed for the information of subscribers, carried.

Proposed by Mr. M. Cockburn and seconded by Mr. J. Madge.

Second.—That a copy of the report be forwarded to the right honourable the Governor General of India, as patron of the fund, carried.

Proposed by Mr. H. Andrews, and seconded by Mr. J. Madge,

Third.—That the amended code of rules now read, be adopted and published with the report, carried.

Proposed by Mr. W. Ryland, and seconded by Mr. H. J. Lee,

Fourth.—That the bye-laws passed by the directors, (just read) be approved of and published for the use of subscribers, and that the directors be at all times authorized to enact bye-laws for the settlement of cases arising out of the workings of the fund not specially provided for by its fixed rules and regulations ; such bye-laws to be duly recorded and submitted at the annual general meeting for the information of subscribers, carried.

Proposed by Mr. W. Byrne, and seconded by Mr. Aviet,

Fifth.—That this meeting earnestly calls upon the uncovenanted servants at large, to afford their aid to a fund which, from its present state, may reasonably be expected to realize every hope of success, carried.

Proposed by Mr. H. Andrews, and seconded by Mr. W. Ryland, Sixth.—That a copy of the report be forwarded to the president of the Council of India in Council for information ; and that his Honour in Council be requested to forward a copy to the honourable the Court of Directors, if deemed unobjectionable, carried

Proposed by Mr. Rose, and seconded by Mr. H. Andrews,

Seventh.—That the following gentlemen be appointed directors for the ensuing year, with power to add to fill up vacancies : Messrs. E. Wilkinson ; N. Campbell ; R. Kerr ; J. Madge ; H. J. Lee ; C. Kerr ; W. Ryland ; C. Smith ; W. Byrne ; M. Johnston ; T. P. Oxborough ; and H. Martindell, carried.

Proposed by Mr. W. Byrne, and seconded by Mr. Rose, Eighth.—That the thanks of this meeting be given to the chairman for his kindness in presiding on this occasion, and for his able conduct in the chair, carried.

This fund has only been in existence a very short time, and is but in its infancy, it has however during this time notwithstanding the very limited support that it has hitherto received from subscribers, only seventy-five having yet declared themselves as such, provided for future need a capital of Co.'s Rs-20,000, and a monthly income from subscribers of Co.'s Rs- 1738-73 ; while on the other hand there are but two widows and four children at present as incumbents upon the fund, the aggregate amount payable to whom is Co.'s Rs-130-10-8. The receipts on account of the widow's fund for sixty-five assured amounted on the 31st July last, to Co.'s Rs-15,479 10-1-1 and on account of the children's fund for one hundred and twenty-seven assured the sum of Co.'s Rs- 5,582 ; making an aggregate receipt in fifteen months of Co.'s Rs- 21,601-10-11.

We call on all the uncovenanted service, for all must be interested equally in its establishment, to exert their utmost in bringing about the speedy and permanent establishment of the above fund, and to afford it every encouragement that may lay in their power for the obtaining of such an end. The fund is at present in a most flourishing condition, but still requires further support to be able to stand without the assistance of Government. We shall endeavour to publish the new rules that were passed at the meeting of this morning in a day or two, when perhaps we may have something more to say on the subject, —*Cul. Cour. Aug. 28. CALCUTTA CHURCH MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

FOURTEENTH REPORT.

Another year having been added to the existence of the Calcutta Church Missionary Association, it becomes necessary to submit to its supporters an account of the transactions of the past year.

The last year has been one of trial and difficulty. The want of means to carry on the work of the association with efficiency has been sorely felt ; and the necessity of circumstances has induced the committee greatly to circumscribe their operations.

The balance against the association, as shewn in the account appended to the last report, amounted to Rs. 773-2-10, a debt of Rs. 800 was also contracted at the commencement of the past year, and the committee were in hopes that they would have been enabled gradually to liquidate the amount due to the treasurers; but the desire which they expressed of closing their connexion with the association, obliged the committee to devote the greater part of the subscriptions which had been raised, towards the liquidation of the claims of the late treasurers.

The committee were also necessitated to apply to the corresponding committee for aid, which was very kindly granted to the extent, on the first occasion, of Rs. 800, and on the next, of Rs. 500. The committee beg to express their grateful acknowledgments for the aid which was so seasonably afforded, without which the association would now have been in a far worse condition than it is at present.

In making the above statement, the committee do not desire to assume a discouraging tone. They wish only to recite the facts, in the hope that proper attention to them may lead to renewed exertions at a time when they are so much needed, and to greater dependence upon that blessed Saviour, for the furtherance of whose cause the labours of the association are carried on.

The express object of this association was to assist the corresponding committee in carrying on the work of native education on Christian principles in Calcutta and its neighbourhood. All the village schools about Budge-Budge and Dum-Dum which were at one time kept up by the corresponding committee were made over to the association, so that there were formerly about twenty schools under its care in various parts of the town and in and about the forementioned villages. Instruction has been communicated both in English and Bengallee, and the course of instruction has comprized the holy Scriptures, grammar, geography, ancient history, and arithmetic. There can be but little doubt that the use of such means must have had a beneficial tendency, and have collaterally aided in the furtherance of that great object which the gospel has in view; the knowledge of the way of salvation among men!

Although, compared with former times much is now being done to educate the natives, yet it is obvious, that the great mass of the population still continues in the most deplorable state of ignorance and superstition, living without hope and without God in the world; how greatly therefore is it to be deplored, that instead of about twenty schools, a still greater number could not have been established, when through this means so much good was likely to be accomplished! How much more is it now to be deplored that it should have been found necessary to reduce the number of schools that has heretofore been maintained!

The committee, proceeding according to the means at their disposal, have given up the schools at Baug-bazar and Mirzapore lane, which were those in the least promising state, the chapel at Hautkhoda, as well as all the schools in the villages, except those at Baraset, Digheerpar, and Borsah.

There are still retained and supported by the association, the English and Bengallee schools at Baraset, the chapel and Bengallee school at Pottuldanga, the schools at Simla and Shampooker, the female department of the Christian institution at Mirzapore, the chapel at Digheerpar, and a room used as a place of worship at Borsah near Digheerpar.

In consequence of the repeated applications for a school at Mawnicktollah, a sicar has lately been engaged to commence a school there, and there is every prospect of its being well attended. It is intended, so soon as funds may be available for the purpose, to erect a school-room for the accommodation of the scholars. Although, the funds of the association have been so extremely low, it felt itself justified in listening to this call, depending upon the Christian liberality of the people of God to enable it to carry on the work.

The association has also been recently engaged in erecting a suitable dwelling-house at Baraset for the use of the European catechist who has recently been placed there with a view to the efficient superintendence of the English and Bengallee schools, which, as they could be visited only once or twice a month from Calcutta, required more constant and efficient superintendence. In the English school at this place there were formerly about 100 scholars, but when last visited there were only about 70 in attendance, and this number has since been greatly reduced, owing to circumstances connected with the teachers; but it is hoped, that this reduction is only temporary, as, when the cause of this defection shall be remedied, there is reason to believe, that the number will again be equal to what it was formerly.

The English school at Allipore was supported, part of the year by the association, and in it there are about 100 scholars, most of whom acquitted themselves remarkably well, and were making very satisfactory progress in their respective studies. The state of the funds requiring a reduction in the expenditure, this school was transferred to the care of the Society, which has very kindly undertaken the charge of it, and continues to support it to the present time.

In the chapel at Pottuldanga, the gospel is preached to very fluctuating congregations of natives, who there on the opportunity of hearing of the way of salvation through faith in Christ Jesus.

The schools at Pottuldanga and Mawnicktollah are attended almost exclusively by Mussulman children, while those at Simla and Shampooker are attended by the children of Hindu parents.

The Christian institution on the mission premises which was commenced about five years ago, contain sixty-two boys, partly the children of native Christians, and partly orphans, has from the first been supported by the association, but this also has recently been transferred to the care of the Society. The children are educated in the Bengallee and English languages, and part of them in Hindi also, and it is hoped, that with the divine blessing, this institution will be instrumental in training up native Christian teachers and schoolmasters.

In the female department of the Christian institution, there are twenty-four girls, daughters of the native Christians on the mission premises and in the villages; these learn in the first place to read the Bengallee language, and having made such progress therein as to be able to read the new testament, they learn to read English also, in which language some are engaged in reading the new testament, and in committing catechisms and hymns to memory, while others are learning the first book. These children also devote a portion of their time to needlework.

At Digheerpar, Rutten, the eldest son of Madub Ghatta, the first man who embraced Christianity there, about six years ago, is acting as catechist; this young man was some time ago a pupil in the Christian institution at Mirzapore, but the sudden removal of his father by death rendered it necessary for him to return home before his education was completed. There is reason, however, to hope, that the instruction which he received in the Christian school, will enable him to teach the way of salvation to the native Christians, and others residing in that district, and to Europeans, and even to such natives as have not been brought up at that very unhealthy station. Two native Christian catechists, Jeebon and James, who had been sent from Calcutta to reside there with a view to ensuring the regular and efficient instruction of the native Christians and catechumens, fell victims to the unhealthiness of the climate, having both within a very short time departed this life, in consequence of illnesses which commenced there, and there is every reason to believe that they did so in the steadfast hope, through the merits of our adorable Redeemer, of entering upon that inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and which will never fade away. These circumstances led to a discontinuance of the practice of sending native catechists from Calcutta, and to the endeavour to supply the places of the deceased from among the native Christians, who reside in those parts. With this view Peerit and Jogomohun were sent for and detained at the mission premises until they were able to read the new testament and the book of common-prayer, and then engaged as readers and sent down with instructions how to proceed in teaching the people in their villages, and they continued to attend to their duty for two or three years, but Peerit having lately been engaged as a teacher to several native Christian families, who were obliged to seek employment at another station, another native convert, Petar Goopenauth, has consequently been engaged to succeed him; and recently Jogomohun having resigned his situation also, the above-mentioned Rutten was appointed, in his stead.

Opportunities have lately been afforded for the introduction of the gospel among a few of the native inhabitants of that part on the eastern side of Calcutta, called Tangra, and those who have manifested a desire for Christian instruction have lately been visited weekly by Mr. Sandys, by which means the people of that neighbourhood have had opportunities of hearing something concerning the way of salvation, and many tracts have been distributed among them. It is hoped that the generosity of the Christian public will enable the association to build a school-room, which may also serve as a chapel at this place, as the inhabitants have solicited that a school may be established for the instruction of their children,

Funds.—The total amount collected for the purposes of the association, including the grants from the Society, from January 1837 to the end of April 1838, is Rs. 4,066 0-6, and the amount expended is Rs. 4072 14 0, leaving a balance against the association of 6-13-6.

In closing their report, the committee beg to solicit from the Christian public, a continuance of that support which is so much required, in order, that the blessing of education on Christian principles may be brought to bear upon the great mass of the population of this city and its vicinity. Although much has been done to extend the blessings of education, yet it is still most obvious that great multitudes have not yet been privileged to enjoy its benign and cheering influence. The great body of the natives are still living in ignorance and superstition, for the amelioration of which the labours of this association are carried on. There is reason to believe that this association has been instrumental in awakening the native mind in some degree, and in drawing it forth to endeavour to participate in the blessing of education, it is therefore incumbent upon the association to persevere in its work of faith and to continue its exertions in dependence upon the blessing of Almighty God, until the people are brought from their degradation to the enjoyment of those privileges and hopes which the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ imparts.—Cal. Courier, Aug. 30.

A CURIOUS DOCUMENT.

We have been favoured with a document, which is too long for publication, but a résumé of which will, we think, prove of some interest. It is the returns for the month of July last, of the number of human bodies, dead cows, cats, dogs, horses, jackalls, and jackasses found floating on the Hooghly, and sunk by the moonrasher boats of the Calcutta police. There are five boats employed on this duty.

During the month of July, the first boat sunk,

Men.	Cows.	Dogs.	Cats.	Horses.	Jackasses.	Jackalls.
211	134	135	89	75	2	43

The second boat was rather more successful. The third boat still more so, and the fourth and fifth boat in a slight degree surpassing in the number of bodies sunk, the three first mentioned boats. The total number of human bodies found floating and sunk, is 1,095, and of dead cats, cows, dogs, horses, jackalls, and jackasses, the total numbers found and sunk in the same month amounts to 2,370. From the statement of the first boat's exertions, our readers will see the jackasses appear to have the wit to keep themselves on dry land. In all only 20 jackasses were found floating and sunk by all the boats; but, considering that the ass is an undying animal, and that no one save Sterne ever witnessed the obsequies of one, we think the fact of the police ferashes being in at the death of twenty in one short month, is not the least surprising fact contained in the statement of their labours. How far the purity of the water of the Hooghly may be affected by these masses of corruption it is for Dr. O'Shaughnessy to say. We state the fact from the police report, leaving it to the calculators to find out how much of dead animal matter goes the cubic inch of water, under the above data. We should, however, recommend the use of a filter to our Hindu fellow subjects, provided they like their water clean and as this is a mere matter of taste, we dare say we may be wrong. We hope, however, there is no harm in observing that the above statement considered, of all known waters, those of the Hooghly may fairly be supposed to contain more of the animal-culæ than any other waters.—Calcutta Courier, August 28.

ASIATIC SOCIETY.

The meeting of the Asiatic Society, on Wednesday evening was pretty well attended. There were present, Sir Edward Ryan, Drs. Evans, Greene, Spry, Stewart, Griffith, McLellan, Colonel Macleod, Captain Pemberton, the Rev. C. S. Mallan, Messrs. Speir, Ewart, Stocqueler, Rijnse, Stirling, Kittoe, Martin, &c. &c. The secretary laid before the meeting a report from a committee appointed to consider the propriety of translating and printing Hooper's Anatomists, Vade Mecum.

A discussion then arose as to whether the translation should be made in the Sanscrit or the vernacular tongue. On the one hand it was contended, that general utility would be consulted by rendering it into the vernacular; on the other, that, as the work was only intended for a small and learned section of the community, the translation into Sanscrit would suffice, and that moreover, the bonus of 1,000 rupees offered by Mr. Muir, for the translation would then become available. The discussion terminated with a resolution, passed by the meeting, that the question should be referred back to the committee. Baboo Ram Comul Sen was added to the committee, at the suggestion of Mr. Hare.

Amongst the numerous works presented to the Society, were Sir G. Haughton's vindication of Mr. Colebrooke's "Vedantas," in answer to Colonel Vans Kennedy; a volume of Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopaedia; Transactions of the Société Géographique de Paris; a number of Jardine's Ornithology; Recollections of the Deccan, by a Cavalry Officer, &c. Amongst the specimens of natural history, were the skulls of two enormous ourang-outangs, presented by Mr. Gregory, 61st N. I.; sundry skeletons of the bustard, monkeys, &c.; the coat of the armadillo, a skin of a civet cat, and some specimens of stuffed birds. The miscellaneous presents embraced arms, specimens of cloth manufactured from Indian caoutchouc, coins, &c.

The secretary read portions of a letter from Captain Burnes, communicating information which he had gathered from Dr. Lort, respecting the fate of Mr. Moorcroft, who, it is now ascertained, from a memorandum in Mr. Trebeck's hand-writing, died on 18th February, 1827. Some rude drawings, a map of Moorcroft's, and an account book, accompanied Captain Burnes' letter.

The sanction of Government to the payment (in arrears for 5 months) of the 500 rupees per mensem allowed to the Society by the Court of Directors was communicated. It appears, however, that the outlay is accompanied by some conditions which we did not exactly catch. Government intimates its readiness to subscribe to Mr. Tonnen's translation of the Alif Laila, as soon as it is informed of the probable cost of the entire work.

After the various presentations had been announced, Dr. Spry, as secretary to the subor statistical committee communicated the result of the labours of the committee, which appear, on the whole, to have been satisfactory. The committee have collected much information respecting the population, commerce, occupations, diseases of Calcutta, together with some statistical intelligence regarding Moorshedabad, Firhoot, &c. &c. all of which Dr. Spry was requested to suggest the committee to send up with a formal report.

After this, the meeting dissolved. — Englishman, August 3. [Hark. Aug. 4.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF INDIA.

A general meeting of the Society was held at the Towu hall, on Wednesday, the 8th August, 1838.

The Hon'ble Sir E. Ryan, President in the chair.

Present.—Dr. Wallich, v. r. Messrs. C. K. Robinson, v. r. W. F. Fergusson, W. Cracroft, A. Grant, N. Alexander, J. P. Alucus, John Allan, D. Hare, F. T. Fergusson, W. Storm, A. Harris, W. F. Gibbon, T. S. Kelsall, and R. Campbell; Col MacLeod; Capt. Pemberton; Dr. Stroug; Dewan Ramconul Sen; Messrs. T. Holroyd, A. Porteous, R. Wat-on, R. S. Strickland, W. K. Ewart, C. A. Dyce, E. Preston, F. Kirchhoffer, and W. Jackson; Capt. W. Spiers; Messrs. Chas. Dearie, and John Bell.

Visitor.—Alex. Greig, M. D. introduced by Mr. Allan.

The proceedings of last meeting were read and confirmed.

The following gentlemen proposed at the July meeting, were duly elected members of the Society, viz.

Jeffrey Finch, Esq; W. Bell, Esq., c. s. J. D. Herklots, Esq; Colonel G. W. A. Lloyd; Alex. Holmes, Esq; George Baiton, Esq; Captain C. Dallas; D. E. Shuttleworth, Esq; Dr. McCosh.

The following gentlemen were proposed as members, viz.

E. Mackintosh, Esq. (firm of Becher Mackintosh, and Co.) D. C. Low, Esq., proposed by William Storm, and seconded by the secretary.

James St. Pourçain, Esq., proposed by H. Piddington, Esq., and seconded by the secretary.

G. Gibbon, Esq., proposed by W. F. Gibbon, Esq. and seconded by the secretary.

G. H. Clarke, c. s. proposed by N. Alexander, Esq. and seconded by the secretary.

C. R. Richardson, Esq. (Tirhoot) proposed by the secretary and seconded by Dr. Wallich.

Motion of which notice was given at last meeting.

Mr. G. A. Prinsep's motion to set apart 1,000 rupees, answering for cotton seed, was brought forward, and, after some discussion, carried nem. con.

REPORTS.

The president brought to notice a second report drawn up by Mr. Bell, on the experiments which he had made with the cochineal insect committed to his care by the Society, which would duly appear in print.

In connexion with his inquiry, the president read a letter from Monsieur Bedier to the secretary, and extract of another letter from Monsieur Richard to Dr. Wallich, (see fuller extracts further on.)

And with reference to these communications, drew the attention of the meeting to a resolution proposed by Dr. Wallich at a general meeting on the 13th September 1837, to offer the Society's gold medal for delivery at Calcutta of a fair proportion of the cochineal insect in a living and healthy state.

The secretary informed the meeting, that he had received the chest of cactus and cochineal alluded to in the letters of Monsieurs Bedier and Richard, by the French ship Therence, Captain Caillaud; that the plants were very fine, although most of them were decaying at the root, and that they had very few insects upon them. That in concert with Dr. Wallich, whose opinion he had solicited, he had planted them out immediately on receipt, as the only means of saving them.

The president stated, that the evidence collected from various quarters, and especially from Bourbon, as to the source from whence the supply of cactus and insect was originally obtained, went far to establish it as the true grana fina, concerning which there had been a doubt raised by some members, and thought that as the former committee appointed to investigate the question in dispute had already considered that, as far as they could decide, the insects before them (those from Bourbon and the Cape,) were as distinct as the grana fina of commerce is described to be different from the "grana sylvestra!" it now become necessary to appoint a separate committee, for the purpose of carefully perusing all that had been said on both sides, together with the fresh evidence of identity now submitted to the meeting, and to report their opinion to the Society.

The following gentlemen being requested to act as a committee signified their assent, viz. C. K. Robinson, V. P. W. Cracroft, W. F. Feigsson, W. K. Ewart, and D. Hale, Esqrs., Mr. Hale consented to act as secretary to the committee.

Resolved accordingly, and that Mr. Bell be directed to make over to the new committee all papers connected with the subject.

Two reports upon samples of cotton were submitted, viz.

No. 1. Report upon samples, the produce of Egyptian nankeen, and South Sea Island seed, grown at Huzaarebaug, Meerut, Dacca, and Favoy, by Baboo Rajkissen Mookerjee. The Society at Meerut, Colonel Stacy and Captain Macfarquhar.

No. 2. Report upon samples, the produce of Upland Georgia, Sea Island, New Orleans, Peruvian, and Arracan seed, grown at Delhi, Singapore, Cossipore Beerbloom, Allahabad, Akyab, Cuttack, and Soonderbuns, by G. H. Smith, Esq., T. O. Crane, Esq., Dr. Haffnagle, the Beerbloom Society W. Lambert, Esq., Captain Bogle, the Cuttack Society, G. A. Prinsep, Esq.

Report of the Calcutta committee on samples of various sorts of wool received within the last four months, was also brought forward.

Report of the agricultural committee on the subject of a fruit tree nursery and the state of the sugar-cane plantation. All these reports have been confirmed, and directed to be made over to the committee of papers and acted upon.

The secretary intimated to the meeting that of four hundred packets of vegetable seeds received from the Cape, upwards of 200 parcels had been already distributed to members, and but few applications yet received from the mossul members. He wished to take the sense of the meeting, on the question of distributing any to natives this season as heretofore, with reference to the increased number of members during the last year, who might still call upon the Society for their respective shares.

The secretary further stated, that he had sent some parcels of seeds to Colonel Lloyd at Dorjeling, and that Dr. Campbell of Nepal and Lieutenant Kirke at Deyrah Dhoon, might wish for some to enable them to carry into effect the resolutions already passed, in regard to making those places available for the purposes of acclimating seeds for after cultivation in the plains; and it was ordered, on the recommendation of the president, that some parcels should be forwarded to those gentlemen for such purpose.

It was further proposed by Mr. Cracroft and resolved that an advertisement be issued to the effect, that unless members throughout the country apply for their shares before the 8th September next, the Society will be at liberty to dispose of the residue of seeds as they may think fit.

The secretary submitted medals engraved for Signor Matti, Messrs. G. W. Rose and G. Lay, and wished to know if he might deliver them to gentlemen authorised to receive them.

Proposed by the president and resolved, that the presentation of medals shall take place at the last anniversary dinner.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Messrs. Boyd and Co., presenting in the name of Messrs. Tredgold and Pocock, of the Cape, a parcel of squash seeds.

From F. J. Halliday, Esq. secretary to the Government revenue department, dated 29th May, received 14th July, forwarding for the use of the Society, in conformity with the wish of the Hon'ble the Court of Directors, two copies of reports on the culture and manufacture of cotton, raw-silk and indigo, in India.

From A. V. Dunlop, M. D., secretary to the Agricultural Society of Azinghur, dated 7th July. In reply to the secretary's letter of the 15th June, respecting the amount awarded by this Society, to encourage the growth of European vegetables, annexes a memo. specifying the manner in which it is intended to distribute the rewards.

Gives a favourable account of the guinea grass introduced into that district. States that almost all the Otahette canes have suffered from the ravages of white ants.

From T. O. Crane, Esq. secretary to the branch Society of Singapore, dated 23d June, presenting a chest containing five sour-sop plants, and one of the "numnam;" promising by next opportunity to send a second supply of mangosteen plants, and some plants of a superior description of pine, together with samples of cotton, and a general report upon experiments hitherto made in that island.

From Thos Leach, Esq. dated 17th July, presenting some strawberry seed just received from England.

N. B.—(At the service of applicants.)

From W. Storm, Esq. dated 24th July, forwarding a further specimen of the tussar-silk thread, wound off by Mr. Poulet at Bhauglepoore.

From the same, dated 6th August, presenting a citron grown in his garden at Chaudhari.

From Monsieur Bedier, late Governor of Chandernagore, dated Bourbon, 16th June, acknowledging the receipt of secretary's letters of the 16th February last, and with reference to the request therein conveyed, advises the despatch per French ship Therese, of a chest containing plants of the castilian nepal, with the cochineal insect thereon.

Monsieur Bedier, in reply to the several points of inquiry put by the secretary, informs the Society that the cochineal and cactus, upon which it is reared in the Botanic-garden at Bourbon, were originally introduced to the colony in October 1826, having been brought from Cadix, by a French ship of war, The Elephant, at the instigation of the French Government, and quotes the authority of the Count de Cheffautaine, in a discourse delivered on taking charge of the Government of Bourbon at that period, that every precaution had been taken to have the true nepal, and the fine cochineal. He, (the Count de Cheffautaine) having been charged to take care of these precious objects, introduced them into Bourbon.*

Monsieur Bedier answers the question put by the secretary, as to the cause of its being confined to the botanical-garden at Bourbon, thus "L'introduction de la cochenille à Bourbon, n'a pas eu les résultats qu'on en espérait; le pis du travail y en trop cleve pour que cette industrie puisse y être productive; en suite la regularité et la minutie des soins qu'elle exige, n'entrent pas dans les habitudes et l'esprit des petits creoles aux quils on la destinait."

Monsieur Bedier quotes the authority of Menonville, Monsieur Peroteli, naturalist to the French Government now at Pondicherry, and Monsieur Richard, in favour of the Bourbon insect being the true grana fina; all those authorities having had under their charge, both the finu and the zybestre, and after a very careful examination, Monsieur Bedier adds his conviction that the insect is the true grana fina.

From Dr. Wallich, dated 4th August, enclosing extract of a letter from Monsieur Richard to his address, dated Bourbon 20th June 1838, on the subject of cochineal. This gentlemen says,

* The cochineal cultivated at Cadix, from which the Bourbon supply has been derived, had its origin in a chest of castilian Nepal with the grana fina, presented to the Royal Economical Society of Cadix, by Don Idefonso Ruiz del Ros, to whom it was sent from Vera Cruz in 1820, by Don Pedro Jose Cuasol, under special charge of Don Josep Martinet, (Note by the secretary.)

"Since its arrival at Bourbon, this species has always been regarded in this country as the true fine cochineal, and I frankly confess my opinion, I have been in the habit for several years of seeing the cochineal called the sylvestre. The very remarkable difference which exists between the two species, does not admit of a doubt upon its identity with the grana fina."

From Major C. C. Smyth, dated Neemuch July 10th, presenting a few seeds of birch, beech, and alder trees, lately received from Van Dieman's Land.

From Dr. Wallich, dated August 5th, presenting in the name of Major Archer, a quantity of creole paddy, brought by that gentleman from Bourbon.

From T. H. Garduer, Esq. dated Augt. 6th, presenting a small samples of Assam tea, prepared by Dr. Scott.

From Major H. C. M. Cox, dated Barrackpore July 30th, forwarding a few observations on experiments made on the price of the berry or tint of the "passiflora minima," which has the property of yielding a fine purple dye, which turns on exposure to the sun to a brown colour similar to "sepia," enclosing a sample of mushin dyed purple, and paper tinted with the brown.

From James Prinsep, Esq. asay master, dated 6th August, forwarding three gold medals, struck at the mint for the Society, two engraved and one blank, the amount cost of which is Rs. 369-10 0.

From W. Bruce, Esq. dated July 27th, intimating his intention of entering extensively into the grazing of sheep at and in the vicinity of Dorjeling, mentions having already there a flock of Tantar sheep, of fine fleece, and is now taking up some Doowah, Patna, and Merino rams and ewels. Mr. Bruce is informed, that within a very trifling distance of Dorjeling, numerous tracts of grazing ground are within reach entirely free of forest, and is sanguine that at Dorjeling, he will be able to graze a very tolerable proportion, and from what he has seen of the country that he will succeed in his views.

From Captain E. Rose, commander of the John Fleming, dated July 27th, intimating that he has brought out six Norfolk rams from England, with the intention of competing for the premiums offered by the Society.

From M. G. Rose, Esq. dated Rannaghui 2d June, acknowledging receipt of secretary's letter of the 15th June, announcing that the Society had awarded him the gold medal for the best sample of raw-silk, and requesting the same may be made over to W. Storm, Esq.

From Lieutenant H. Bigge, dated Cowbath 1st July, forwarding a sample of cottons grown in his farm at Bissnath from Pernambuco seed.

From James Anderson, M. D. secretary to the Agricultural Society, Beerbhoom, applying for Otahite sugar-cane, &c.

From J. W. Wilson, Esq. M. D. secretary Agricultural Society of Commillah, dated 23d July, applying for Otahite sugar-cane and seed.

From Captain Lloyd, dated Dorjeling 23d July 1838, acknowledging receipt of cotton and garden seeds and transactions.

States his opinion, that coffee and tea plants are likely to thrive at and about Dorjeling.

From the Society of Natural History of Mauritius, its 8th annual report.

From the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain, its Journal, No. 8.

From Mr. Bell, a quantity of fresh guinea grass seeds, of the "Anbury" melon grown by N. Alexander, Esq.

From Major Sleeman, giving extracts from his Diary in 1835, on the subject of a blight which attacked the wheat and other grain crops, with some interesting details relative to superstitious notions of the native as to the cause.

(Referred to the committee of papers.)

From Samuel Smith, Esq. dated 8th August, presenting some very fine ripe figs.

A sample of wool, from Mr. Cope, of Meerut, referred to in his letter of May proceedings.

The thanks of the meeting were ordered to be offered for all these communications and presentations.

Town hall, 8th August 1838. JOHN BELL, Sec.

A special meeting was held in the Society's room, Town-hall, on Wednesday morning, the 29th August 1838, agreeably to the following advertisement, viz.

"To take into consideration such circumstances as may be brought before it, relative to the state and management of the nursery from the 21st August to the 18th September 1837."

PRESENT.

The hon'ble Sir E. RYAN, president in the chair.

Rajah Radakant Deb Bahadour; James Pattle, Esq.; N. Wallich, M. D. V. C.; Messrs. W. F. Ferguson and W. Crocroft; Col. McLeod; Capt Pemberton; Messrs. W. Ainslie, H. Cowie, Samuel Smith, D. Hare, R. Watson, A. Colvin, C. Haffnagle, M. D. D. B. Syers, and Thomas Leach; Captain Speers; Professor O'Shaughnessy; Messrs. W. Storm, W. K. Ewart, J. H. Stoeckner, A. Holmes, C. R. Prinsep, C. Dearie, W. Jackson, H. J. Leighton, C. A. Dyce, W. P. Gibbon, A. Grant, T. H. Gardiner, M. G. Ross, F. P. Morell, E. Preston, R. H. Stickland, M. G. Staunton, T. Bae, J. S. May, N. Hudson, T. S. Kellall, and John Jenkins; Lieut. Sibley; The Rev. T. Boaz; Dr. Egerton; Captains H. J. Woods and Carter; Messrs. J. W. Masters, Thos. Bracken, and G. A. Prinsep; Baboo Pearymohun Day; Mr. Colin Campbell; Dr. Macpherson; Messrs. W. Dowson, R. Smith, Jas. Crooke, and F. L. Beaufort; Baboo Dwarkagath Tagore; Lieut. Abercrombie; Messrs. A. Beattie and N. Alexander; Dewan Ramcomul Sen; Mr. R. Walker; Baboo Prosonocoomar Tagore; Messrs. W. Cobb Hurry, Thomas Holroyd, P. Sutherland, Rustonjee Cowasjee, A. Gouger, J. P. Marcus, A. Porteous, Thos. Palmer, and John Bell.—Visitor Mr. John Franks.

The president opened the business of the day by reading the advertisement calling a special meeting—and drew the attention of members to the following correspondence:

(No. 1.)

Mr. Crocroft's letter to the president.

To the Honourable Sir EDWARD RYAN,

President of the A. H. S. India.

HONOURABLE SIR,—1. In consequence of the publication of a pamphlet containing a certificate given by Mr. Masters, relative to our visit to the nursery garden, we have thought proper to put certain questions to that gentleman, to which he has declined to reply. We submit the correspondence for your consideration and that of the Society, before whom we request you will do us the favour to lay this letter.

2. We also think it necessary to offer a detail of what passed during our visit to the nursery, and of what we heard and observed therein regard to any change in its state, between 21st August and the time of our visit on the 18th September last. On the landing of the first party, consisting of Mr. Ainslie, Mr. Colvin, Mr. Gibbon, and myself, at the garden gate, we were met by Dr. Wallich, who accompanied us in the direction of the nursery, being in conversation with myself, and after pointing out the path leading thither, he left us, and no communication whatever took place regarding the state of the nursery. Mr. Masters met us at the gate with Dr. Wallich, and was in attendance the whole time. The nursery was afterwards visited by Mr. Hare and Mr. Stirling together, and subsequently by Mr. Watson, on the same day.

3. The secretary did not accompany either of the three divisions to the nursery as implied by Mr. Masters' certificate, and which implication he has not denied; the secretary was indeed there when the first party were about to quit the nursery, and he spoke casually to Mr. Gibbon, but not on the subject of the visit, and immediately afterwards walked away.

4. Mr. Masters gave the first party unequivocally to understand, that the nursery was substantially in the same condition in which it had been at the time of Dr. Griffiths' visit. Mr. Cracroft and Mr. Gibbon distinctly recollected that Mr. Masters was questioned on this point; and Mr. Hare, Mr. Stirling and Mr. Watson afterwards questioned the males, and received the same information. Mr. Masters was, of course, not understood to allude to a large patch of land, trenched or the reception of new importations, and on which labourers were seen at work; but principally to the cotton beds, which were the chief object of our inquiry.

5. I particularly questioned Mr. Masters, whether he experienced any clog from any quarter, upon his exertions in keeping the nursery in good order, or whether he met with any interference or opposition to his views and wishes, on these heads he answered by a decided negative. I repeated the question in a different form, whether he met with confidence and co-operation, and this met with as decided an affirmative; he added, that he acted under the orders of Dr. Wallich, who was head of the garden, but who readily attended to any suggestion which he offered; he also told the party, of which I was one, that any trees could be cut down if the situation was thought too confined, but, that he did not think that it was so.

6. Understanding that Mr. Masters was the principal manager of the nursery, and finding as we did, that his exertions have been perfectly uncontrolled, we cannot help observing, that if any thing was found to blame on the 21st August 1838, it must have been in consequence of Mr. Masters' neglect, and that he alone should bear the blame; and if any change had been made in the interval alluded to, it must have been with his knowledge and assent, but this, as above stated, he fully denied to the first visiting party.

7. We have thought it necessary on our own account to bring this statement to the notice of the Society, and we trust we shall not be considered to have troubled them unnecessarily.

8. Finally, we request, with reference to a report that you, honourable Sir, are likely to absent from the presidency at our next regular meeting, that you will have the goodness to call a special meeting of the Society, to take into consideration such circumstances as may be brought before it, relative to the state and management of the nursery from the 21st of August last year to the date of our visit, on any day which may appear convenient.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

W. CRACROFT,

Chairman.

Mr. Cracroft's letter to Mr. Masters.

To J. W. MASTERS, Esq.

DEAR SIR,—With reference to a pamphlet lately published by Dr. Griffiths, to which a certificate with your name is attached, I beg to make the following observations, and solicit information in reply to queries contained in this letter.

You were present at the meeting of the Society on the 13th September last, when Dr. Griffiths' letter of the 24th August, the secretary's reply and Dr. Griffiths' rejoinder were read, and when myself and other gentlemen were named as a sub-committee to visit and report on the state of the nursery, and it was observed on that occasion, that the nursery committee's hands having been tied since the receipt of Dr. Griffiths' letter, it was desirable that an early day should be fixed for the next meeting.

You were also present at the garden when myself and several others of the sub-committee visited it and accompanied us all over the nursery.

I observe further, and Mr. Bell's statement published in the papers, relates especially to the cotton beds having been left as they were for our inspection, whereas your statement published in Dr. Griffiths' pamphlet, certifies the employment of ten coolies and a boy generally in the nursery after his visit.

1stly,—If the ten coolies and boy were not the same as those previously entertained, and were employed during that time in digging and trenching the beds of sugar-canes, and that which we observed prepared for a new importation of canes, &c. and not in digging, weeding, or tinning the cotton beds, I shall be obliged by your certifying in reply that such was the case, and in that event no replies will be necessary to the following questions:

2dly.—If the ten coolies and boy were employed in addition to the hands previously entertained in the nursery, why did you not state that fact at the meeting of the Society on the 13th Sept when the hands of the nursery committee were declared to be tied till an inquiry should be made?

I put this question, because it appears to me, that as member of the Society, you should and might, under such circumstances, have prevented the appointment of a sub-committee, by mentioning that the nursery was no longer in the state in which Dr. Griffiths' had seen it.

3dly.—If the ground of the cotton beds had been turned up and weeded during the interval between the 24th August and the date of our visit, what might be your reason for keeping myself and the other members of the Society who visited the garden in the dark as to that fact, either at that time or subsequently?

4thly.—Your certificate states, that on the 18th September, the garden was "visited by the select committee and the secretary," implying as it seems, that the secretary accompanied the members of the committee on their visit, have the goodness to state if such was the case, and if any, and what communication passed between the secretary and any member of the committee, or could have passed without your cognizance.

I address you at the request of the members of the sub-committee who visited the nursery, with the exception of Mr. Stirling, who is not at the presidency, and by their desire beg the favour of an early reply.

I am, dear Sir, your most obedient servant,

DEAR SIR,—After receiving your reply, declining to answer any of the queries contained in my letter (dated I think the 20th), the select committee thought it necessary to address the president of our Society on the subject; as it appears just that you should be aware of the nature of that address, I communicate a copy of it for your information.

Nursery committee's letter to the president.

Calcutta, 21st August, 1838.

THE HON'BLE SIR EDWARD RYAN,
President of the Agr. Society of India.

HONOURABLE SIR,—We are compelled to bring to your notice the enclosed copy of a letter addressed by us to Mr. J. W. Masters on the 10th instant.

To this letter be have received no reply, indeed none could have been returned without Mr. Masters placing himself in a still more humiliating position than he already occupies.

We give the most positive orders to Mr. Masters not to allow any part or parts of the Society's nursery to be touched, to which allusion had been made, and our perfect conviction is, that if the nursery was in an "untidy state, as represented by Mr. Masters on the 21st August 1837, it must have been in a still more, untidy state when visited by the special committee on the 18th September.

We have nothing further to add, except the expression of our confident hope, that the Society will adopt some measure that will place our conduct and motives in an unquestionable light before the public.

We have the honour to be, Hon'ble Sir,
Your very obdt. servts.

Nursery committee's letter to Mr. Masters.

Calcutta, 10th August, 1838.

Mr. J. W. MASTERS.

SIR,—A pamphlet having appeared under the signature of Mr. William Griffiths, bearing the title of "supplement to vol. 5th of the transactions of this agricultural and horticultural Society of India," in which, at page 17, is a declaration signed "J. W. Masters," member of the agricultural and horticultural Society of India, bearing date Calcutta, 29th July 1838. We, who constitute the committee, appointed by the agricultural Society of India, to superintend and direct operations in the nursery at the time to which the said declaration refers, feel called upon to request that you will be pleased to state in the most unequivocal terms, by whose orders, or with whose knowledge, the simultaneous operations of digging, hoeing, weeding, and otherwise clearing the Society's nursery! were carried on?

2. We request you will inform us with reference to that part of your declaration,* what alterations had taken place (as we do not understand the exact meaning of the term "untidy," and whether during this interval you were not desired by the committee, and repeatedly enjoyed by Dr. Wallich not to allow any of those parts of the nursery to be touched to which Mr. Griffiths' animadversions especially applied?

3. Since you have noted particularly the number of labourers employed, you will be pleased also to state, whether those hands formed the establishment of July and August 1837, and whether any accession of labour was brought to bear on the nursery between the date of Mr. Griffiths' visit and the meeting at the garden, of the select Committee; and whether the "untidy appearance of the nursery was improved by the orders, or with the sanction of any of the undersigned, individual or collectively, or whether it was lessened by any orders emanating from yourself.

These are points on which we request you will be explicit.

4. As you have declared that the nursery was in an untidy state when visited by Mr. Griffiths, will you say whether you did at any time, bring this, your opinion to the notice of the committee, or to the notice of the superintendant of the botanical-garden, with whom you had daily opportunities of communication, and whether you never thought it a part of your duty to notice

* "And that the nursery did not exhibit, the same untidy appearance on the 18th September last, when visited by the select committee and the secretary, as it exhibited on the 21st August, when visited by Dr. Griffiths."

† Extract from letter sent in monthly under the signature of Mr. Masters, head gardener, and paid by the secretary on account of the Society's nursery.

"the untidy" state of the nursery in your journal and how you reconcile the statements hereunder in juxtaposition?

(Extract from Journal written by Mr. Masters, 27th July 1837.)

"All the canes, and all the cotton, with every other plant of interest, are looking very well. Two fine beds of asparagus plants from American seed, eight plants of Captain Stirling's cotton from Fernandopo. Nearly all the ground is trenched, ready for cropping."

Lastly, we request you will state, if, from a state of things which appears, by the above entry, to have called forth your unqualified praise on the 27th July, such a material change took place in the aspect of the nursery as to make you declare that when Mr. Griffith visited it on the 21st August, it bore an "untidy appearance," you can, in any manner account for such change? did it proceed from relaxed vigilance on your part, since the 27th July, when you expressed so favourable an opinion of things in general; or owing to what cause do you ascribe the sudden change of sentiment?

On the other hand, as the nursery is declared by you to have as suddenly recovered from an "untidy state" after Mr. Griffith's visit, as it had elapsed into between the 27th of July and the date of such visit, you are requested to state, if greater vigilance on your part was the cause, or owing to what circumstance this singular fluctuation of opinion has been effected.

Or, in other words:

With the same complement of labourers, as when the nursery was described by you to be in a promising condition, how do you account for its assumed unfavourable state, and for having allowed it to get into such a state, at that particular moment when Mr. Griffith's animadversions appeared, and by what extraordinary means was it brought back to its previously admitted promising condition when visited by the special committee?

We are, Sir, your obedient servants,

N. WATICH, M.D.

The above correspondence having been read from the chair, Mr. Masters addressed the meeting on the several points adverted to therein.

RESOLUTIONS.

No. 1.—moved by Mr. Cracroft, seconded by Mr. W. F. Ferguson, "that Mr. Masters, in giving Dr. Griffiths a certificate for publication at variance with the statements made by him to the members of the select committee, when he accompanied to the nursery, has acted with a want of regard to the interests and credit of this Society."

† "Journal of proceedings at the honourable Company's botanical-garden, in behalf of the Agricultural Society of India."

(Extract from Mr. Griffiths' Pamphlet)

"I hereby declare, having been called upon to do so as a member of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, that between the 24th of August and the 3d of October 1837, ten men and one boy were constantly employed in digging, hoeing, weeding, and otherwise clearing the Society's nursery. And that the nursery did not exhibit the same untidy appearance on the 18th September last, when visited by the select committee and the Secretary, as it exhibited on the 21st August, when visited by Dr. Griffiths."

No. 2. moved by Mr. C. Dearie, seconded by Mr. T. S. Kelsall,

"That as Dr. Griffiths' charge respecting the state of the Society's nursery, when he visited it on the 21st August 1837, is substantially correct, this Society expresses its regret, that, owing to some misunderstanding in the evidence upon the question submitted to the committee, whereby their report is at variance with his, the Society apologizes to Dr. Griffiths, for the discrepancy thereby occasioned in the committee's report, as well as or the rejection of his last communication."

Mr. Stocqueler moved the following amendment on Mr. Dearie's motion:

"That, as no evidence has been adduced to show that Dr. Griffiths had made a mis-statement knowingly, regarding the condition of the nursery on the 24th August, or regarding the proceedings of the committee (since it appears he had evidence on which he had then every reason to rely) that the reply to Mr. Griffiths' last letter be withdrawn."

Mr. W. F. Ferguson moved as an amendment on Mr. Stocqueler's proposed amendment, seconded by Mr. A. Beattie:

"That the Society adhere to their former resolution regarding the nursery, and also with respect to Dr. Griffiths' communication which they consider offensive in its language and wholly uncalled for on the occasion."

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of the meeting of the medical and physical Society of Calcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's apartments, the 4th August 1833.

Letters were read from Sir James McGregor, returning thanks on behalf of the library at Chatham, for the 3d and 4th numbers of the Society's Journal, and on his own part for the 1st part, vol. 8th of the Transactions.

From the secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society, returning thanks for the 8th vol. part 1st of the transactions, and the 1st and 2d Nos. of the Quarterly Journal.

From the Secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, presenting on behalf of that body, duplicates of some of Dr. J. R. Cox's publications lately received from Philadelphia.

From M. Desjardins, secretary to the Société d'Histoire Naturel at Mauritius, forwarding copies of the eighth report of that body.

From A. Halliday, Esq. requesting to withdraw from the list of members.

The following communications were presented :

A paper upon magnetism explanatory of his electro-magnetic Hemisphere, by the late R. Tytler, Esq. presented by the secretary of the medical board.

An account of some intestinal worms, and memoranda of cases of lithotomy, by J. Taylor, Esq. Dacca.

Dr. O'Shaughnessy read an extract from the last No. of Johnson's Medico Chronological Review, containing the important information, that the Peruvian Government had suspended the exportation of cinchona bark for a period of five years. Dr. O'Shaughnessy then laid before the Society the details of thirty-two cases of remittent and intermittent fevers treated by narcotine as a substitute for quinine, and of which thirty-one were cured.

The cases previously described in the first report of the pharmacopœia committee were twenty-seven making on the whole sixty, of which the narcotine was successful in all but two.

The cases now communicated were as follows :

Two cases by Dr. Goodeve. One of them the case of the late deputy collector of Chittagong. Quotidian of several months standing, spleen enlarged. Quinine was used without success, although given in every possible form. Arsenic was then tried and checked the fever, but did much mischief to the patient's general health. Narcotine was then given and with such success, that Dr. Goodeve concludes it thus : " I do not hesitate in saying, that this patient owes his life to the remedy in question." The other case was a patient labouring under inflammation of the bowels at the same time, where the administration of quinine would have been inadmissible.

Three cases are reported by Dr. Smith, of Hidgelee, who adds " as far as these three cases go, I cannot speak too favourably of the narcotine, and am very desirous of trying it more extensively, to Captain Marshall of Calcutta, communicated three cases of severe ague occurring among his servants: all were rapidly cured, and Captain Marshall says, " It would be presumptuous in me to offer any opinion as to the virtues of narcotine; all I can say is, that if ever I am ill of fever I shall unhesitatingly and confidently prefer it to sulphate of quinine or any other medicine I know of."

Mr. R. O'Shaughnessy described the case of a man on whom he had operated for stone, and who was attacked by violent ague on the day of the operation. The ague returned next day at the same hour. Mr. O'Shaughnessy considered it unsafe to employ quinine under these circumstances, and had recourse to narcotine, four doses of this medicine were given, and Mr. O'Shaughnessy states : " The fever did not return, the wound was not in the slightest degree affected; there was no excitement or headache produced. After he took the first dose, he slept soundly, which he had not done the two previous nights, and he was discharged cured of the effects of the operation on the fourteenth day after its performance.

Mr. O'Brien, the apothecary of the native hospital, reported three cases, Mr. Evans one, the Pandit Modosoodona Gupta one, all successfully treated. The Pandit's patient laboured under dysentery at the same time.

Dr. Chapman, a-sistant surgeon of the Calcutta general hospital, related the case of a European, who contracted violent remittent-fever at Kedgee on the 16th July, and was received in hospital on the 19th. Quinine was used in the usual manner on the first remission on the 20th, and again on the 21st, but the symptoms were rather aggravated than improved. The narcotine was then given, and its use was speedily followed by a complete remission. From that time the fever did not return with the exception of teardrops and slight headache on the evening of the 23d.

On the 28th, all medicines were omitted and the patient was discharged convalescent.

Dr. O'Shaughnessy further submitted two cases, treated in his own home among his servants, both of which were cured. Lastly, he communicated fifteen cases extracted from the journals of the medical college hospital. In five of these cases quinine and arsenic had failed, in eleven there was enlargement of the spleen or liver, in one inflammation of the knee joint. Seven of these cases were remittents and two of these had died. Of the two fatal cases one was admitted on the 7th day of violent fever and died next day. In the 2d (a child) the spleen, liver, pancreas, and mesenteric gland, were immensely enlarged, and the case hopeless upon the beginning.

Dr. O'Shaughnessy added, that besides the sixty cases now recorded over 100 ague patients had been treated by his pupils and acquaintance with perfect success by this remedy. He, therefore, felt warranted in proposing, that, in order to obtain, speedily, conclusive and unbiased evidence on the subject, the members of the Society resident in the most unhealthy parts of the country (and he specified Kyouk Phoo, Akyab, Chittagong, Tumlook, Rungpore) be invited to give the narcotine a trial and to report the results. Dr. O'Shaughnessy offered to place a sufficient quantity of the remedy at the disposal of the Society for the proposed experiments.

Mr. Hutchinson, the secretary to the medical board, objected to the proposition on the grounds that he considered that it was the province of the medical board to institute the suggested inquiry, and that consistently with due subordination it could not be attempted by the Society.

Considerable discussion ensued, in the course of which Dr. O'Shaughnessy disclaimed any intention of disrespect to the medical board, and stated, that he thought all societies and public bodies ought to co-operate cordially in such an important investigation. All he wanted was to arrive at the truth by the least circuitous route. Mr. Swayze, first member of the medical board then suggested, that the proposed reference to the medical gentlemen at the specified places, be made by Dr. O'Shaughnessy himself, as secretary to the committee, on Indian materia medica. This suggestion was adopted and the proposition accordingly withdrawn.

The report of the sub-committee appointed to inquire into the state of the Society, was then read.

The report stated, that it appeared to the members that the chief cause which had led to the late inroad upon the prosperity of the Society, were to be found in the discussions which had from time to time arisen up in the reduction of the medical allowances, and the increased calls upon the pay-bills of the members by the establishment of the retiring fund, and in the feelings that the Society did not afford sufficient advantages to the moribund members.

To remedy these evils it was proposed,

1st. To reduce the subscription to one-half of the present rates, or, for non resident members, one rupee per month; resident ditto two rupees.

2d. To reduce the establishment within fifty rupees per month.

3d. In lieu of the present journal, to return to the old plan of publishing transactions in monthly or quarterly parts.

First. To solicit all members of the service to join the Society in its remodelled form.

To invite all assistant-surgeons recently arrived from Europe, to be present at the monthly meetings, and subsequently to become members. It was stated that though the reduction of the present rate of subscription would materially cramp the resources of the Society at first, it might reasonably be hoped an accession of members would, in consequence, take place, which would eventually compensate for the temporary loss of income, and it was shewn that many of the expenses might be reduced in the meantime, especially the cost of printing, which it was believed might be effected at two rupees per page for the future, instead of the high price charged at the Baptist Mission Press.

The only member of the committee who objected to these rules, was, Mr. McClelland. He stated that he disapproved of the idea of remodelling any Society. He should prefer reverting to the original rules under which the Society had so prospered. He approved of a reduction of the subscription, but he thought remodelling a Society gave a bad precedent to enable any influential member at head-quarters to mould the body to suit his own view.

The members present for the most part appeared inclined to adopt the report, but its further consideration was postponed for the next meeting.

With reference to the third proposition, it was proposed by Dr. O'Shaughnessy, seconded by Mr. Egerton, and carried, That the Society continue to issue a quarterly publication to be called the Quarterly Journal and transactions composed of original papers and communications, limited in expense to 250 rupees per number.

SUPREME COURT.

ADJOURNED SITTINGS.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

This was the first day of the sessions, and also the day to which the sittings after the third Term were adjourned. The sessions having been opened and the charge delivered by Sir J. P. Grant to the grand jury, their lordships proceeded to give judgment in the causes standing over.

RADAKISSEN MITTER V. THE BANK OF BENGAL AND OTHERS.

This case was argued on the 12th of this month, and a full report of the argument may be found in the Hurkaru of the following morning. The bench being divided in opinion, their lordships delivered their judgments separatim.

Sir J. P. Grant. (After stating the facts of the case,) I conceive that there is nothing better established in equity, than that a surety is entitled to all the rights and remedies against the principal debtor that the creditor himself enjoys. Praythorne v. Swinburne, 14 Ves. Jun. 162, per Sir Samuel Romilly. If the creditor takes a new security from the principal debtor, without the privity of the surety, the latter is wholly discharged. Boultes v. Stubbs, 18 Ves. Jun. 20. Many authorities establish that a surety paying the debt stands in the place of creditor as against the principal debtor. Thus where the surety paid the debt of his bankrupt principal, after proof by the creditor under the commission, this was held to entitle him to stand in the creditor's place for the debt paid, not only in respect of dividends but of the certificate. Ex parte Gee, 1 Glyn and Jameson's Reports, p. 330. If, therefore, the creditor puts it out of the power of the surety to stand in his place, with respect to the debtor, the surety is discharged. Thus a release to the debtor without the surety's consent, discharges the latter. Upon the same principle, if the holder of a bill of exchange gives time to the acceptor by a binding agreement, this discharges the indorser. The rule is founded upon the principles of natural law and justice, because it is not just or right that any transaction affecting the rights of the surety should take place without his consent and privity. The surety only undertakes to make good the deficiency; and, where the principal has left a sufficient fund to pay the debt, in the hands of the creditor, and the creditor chooses to pay it back, without applying it to the liquidation of the debt, this is clearly a complete discharge. Law v. East India Company, 4 Vesey Junior. Now applying these principles to the present case, the complaint would be entitled to stand in the place of the Bank of Bengal, upon paying the debt, and if the bank has given up (as I think it has) available securities, not only without the consent, but against the remonstrance of the surety, the complainant as such surety is discharged. The copper and indigo were deposited with the bank, as a general pledge for all past and future advances, and the surplus value ought to have been applied in part liquidation of the sums due on the outstanding bills. Again, with respect to the bank share, the charter gives the Bank of Bengal a lien upon the dividends of shares, and this share was liable for the advances to the firm. They had no right, therefore, to surrender such lien. The deposit by the assignees in the name of Dornprian Gangooly, the indorser of the Company's paper pledged with the bank, stands upon a different footing. This arose from a mere accidental blunder on the part of the assignees, in allowing the transaction to take place in the name of a nominal party, who, in fact, happened to be under liabilities to the bank; and this I admit, raises no equity in favour of the complaint. I consider it unnecessary to enquire whether the knowledge of Mr. W. F. Fergusson, who was at once chief partner in the insolvent firm, and a director of the Bank of Bengal, is to be taken as constructive knowledge on the part of the bank. Upon the whole, I am of opinion, that the injunction ought to be granted, but as the opinion of the learned chief justice is the other way, the bill will, of course, be dismissed: without costs, however, according to the usual rule in equity where there is not unanimity of opinion upon the bench.

Sir Edward Ryan. I regret extremely the difference of opinion which exist in this case between myself and my learned brother, the more especially as it falls upon me, in the present state of the Court, to decide the question upon my own single opinion. (His lordship then stated the facts of the case, and read portions of the complainant's bill.) Now, there can be no question, if all the allegations of the bill had been admitted in the answer, or proved in evidence, that this injunction must have been granted, because not only it is stated that there was a positive and specific agreement between the firm of Fergusson and Co. and the complainant, that the latter was to be only a nominal party to the bills, and was not to be liable under any circumstances, but also that the Bank of Bengal was privy to the agreement. On the pleadings and evidence, however, it only appears that there was an understanding that the bills were to be taken up by the firm, and that the complainant would not be called upon by them; but there is nothing whatever to shew that the bank were parties to any such arrangement. There is nothing, therefore, to fix the bank with actual knowledge, and I am clearly of opinion, that the knowledge of one of the directors of the bank, which is a corporate body, is not in law the knowledge of all. It is different from a partnership, because a director cannot act alone and bind the rest, as in the case of members of a partnership. It seems, then, that upon the original bills, there are no equitable grounds whatever to entitle the complainant to relief; nor does anything appear to shew that at the renewal of the bills, the bank were parties to any agreement or understanding in favour of the complainant as drawer. It only appears, indeed, that the complainant was reluctant to renew the instruments, but was prevailed on by these representations of Fergusson and Co. Whatever equity exists, therefore, must be raised (if it all) by subsequent transactions, and the whole case stands upon the deposit bonds. Now, I will take the strongest of these, the copper bonds (schedules A and C annexed to the bill) to test the grounds of the supposed equity. These bonds give the bank a general power of sale, not only for securing the repayments of the specific sum advanced thereon, but as a security for any past or future advances; and I have no doubt, they were framed expressly to meet the case of Young v. The Bank of Bengal, I think that they do meet that case, and that the Bank of Bengal might have claimed a general lien on the copper, if they had chosen, and that they might have retained it in their hands to secure any other outstanding debts from the firm of Fergusson and Co. But in point of fact there is nothing to shew that at the time when the copper was permitted to be redeemed by the assignees, the bank could have made any profit by disposing of it at the current market rates, although it so happened that the assignees, by keeping it on speculation for some time, did actually succeed in eventually obtaining a profit. It does not appear, therefore, that there was any available surplus applicable even to the part liquidation of the outstanding bills. Again I admit that in bills of exchange and promissory notes, every subsequent party is a surety for the prior parties, and that every circumstance which in law or equity will discharge drawers or indorsers, who are mere guarantees for the acceptor. But in all the cases cited, where the surety has claimed to stand in the place of the creditor, the debt had been actually paid by the surety, and until he has paid the debt, he cannot insist upon equitable grounds to be placed in the creditor's position against the principal debtor. Discharge of the surety by "giving time" to the principal proceeds upon totally different grounds. The bill must be dismissed, and with costs; for I conceive that the rule mentioned by my learned brother is only discretionary. Mr. Colville, however ought not to have appeared and answered separately, and he must pay his own costs.

Sir J. P. Grant. I must protest against the bill being dismissed with costs, when there is a difference of opinion on the bench.

Sir E. Ryan. I have pronounced my judgment on the question of costs, as well as on the general question involved, and I must say that I do not at all understand the grounds of my learned brother's protest.

Bill dismissed with costs.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BARK "CALCUTTA."

Admiralty side.—Judgment.

Sir Edward Ryan. This case came on, upon a claim of salvage made by Captain West and the officers of the steamer Enterprise, for rescuing the bark Calcutta, from the perils of the sea. It appears to us unnecessary to go minutely into the circumstance disclosed in the affidavit, or to endeavour to reconcile the somewhat conflicting statements. It may be sufficient to express our opinion upon the whole, that the Calcutta was in considerable danger from her proximity to the sand-bank, that she was aided by the timely intervention of the steamer, and that if it had not been for such aid, the bark might possibly have been altogether lost. But although we are thus of opinion that Capt. West rendered valuable and efficient service, the question is whether he was not bound so to act by his positive duties to his employers, and whether he has done anything more than what his mere duty required. Now, the instructions of Government to the commanders of their steam vessels expressly direct them even to leave any private service upon which they may be engaged, when necessary for rendering assistance to ships in distress. We think, therefore, that Captain West was acting in the ordinary course of duty, and, that as he incurred no extraordinary risk, he is not entitled to the extraordinary reward in the shape of salvage. In the case of The Ruikes, 1 Huggard's Reports, which seems in some respects similar to the present, but which was not cited in argument, salvage was only granted on the ground that the steamer Monarch, was a private vessel, and not bound by any specific duty to act in the way of rendering aid. Each party must pay his own costs.

Judgment disallowing salvage.

F. P. MENDES v. LAWRENCE DE SOUZA AND OTHERS.

Sir Edward Ryan. In this case the bill was filed by Mr. Mendes, for a legacy of Rs. 20,000, which he claimed under the will of his uncle, Francis Mendes, deceased. The sole question which was, whether such legacy, being left to a lady for her life, provided she remained a widow, and, in the event of her death or remarriage, which ever should first happen, limited in remainder to the complainant, became, upon the re-marriage of the lady in the testator's life-time, a lapsed legacy altogether, or vested in remainder. We are clearly of opinion that the legacy does not lapse into the residuary estate, but vest in this complainant as legatee in remainder. The case of Humberstons v. Stanton, Vesey and Bramos, and all the cases cited for the residuary legatee, where the legacy was held to have lapsed are very obviously distinguishable from the case before the Court, for, in those cases the remainder never was to take effect, not on the occurrence, but on the non-occurrence of a particular event. The costs of the plaintiff, and of the two executors, DeSouza and Dow, must be paid out of the estate; but the executor, Mr. Douvett, and the residuary legatees, the Pereiras, must pay their own costs.

Legacy decreed to complainant.

LATHEY V. PITTAR.

The Advocate General and Mr. Marnell, as counsel for the complainant, shewed cause against the conditional rule obtained by Mr. Leith on the last day of the sittings, (see the Harkara of Friday last) for allowing Messrs. Savory and Moore, chemists and druggists of London, to come in and prove before the master a claim against the estate of Mrs. M. A. Fleming, deceased, of which estate complainant and defendant are co-executors. The learned counsel contended that the affidavit of the applicants was not positively sworn to be actually due. Moreover, these creditors had been guilty of laches in lying by for nearly ten years. They had either voluntarily slept upon their claim, else had virtually admitted by their conduct that the claim was nugatory.

Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Clark, as counsel for the defendant, concurred with complainant's counsel in opposing this application. They contended that no title was disclosed upon the face of the affidavits, and also that if there was any debt due at all, the estate of Mrs. Fleming was not liable; but the estate of her husband.

Mr. Leith supported his rule.

Sir Edward Ryan. The Court are disposed to grant leave to the creditors to come in upon certain terms. In the first place, they must pay all the costs of the present application, and those who act for them in this country, must give security for all future costs which may be incurred. If they are not now prepared to prove the debt, we cannot allow the cause to abide the long delay of reference home to procure the necessary evidence; but if they are prepared we shall allow them one month, at the end of which time the master must make his report.

Mr. Leith assented to the conditions, but inquired whether the Court did not consider four counsel an unnecessary number to oppose the application.

Sir Edward Ryan said, that, although the same object in fact was in this instance had in view by the complainant and defendant, yet that as they were hostile parties in the suit itself, each had a right to oppose the application by his own counsel.

Rule absolute on terms.

BONNERJEE V. BONNERJEE.

In this eternal cause, the Advocate General informed the Court that the parties were all at loggerheads once more, and that all hopes of an amicable compromise were at an end for ever.

Sir E. Ryan. Then they must wait for our decision until next term.—Harkara, August 3.

SUPREME COURT SESSIONS.

AUGUST 1, 1838.

The sessions commenced this-day, Sir J. P. Grant presided. The following are the grand jurymen:

Capt. H. L. Johnson, foreman.

August 1, 1838.

(Before Sir F. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant, Knights.)

After the grand jury had elected their foreman, Sir John Peter Grant, whose turn it was to preside during the present sessions, in his charge to the grand jury, said, that he regretted it was not in his power to congratulate them, during the present session, on the paucity of the cases which would be submitted to them. Amongst the cases they would find many similar to those which are usually brought before them every session, viz. burglaries, larcenies, &c. and on which he need not detain them, as, from their former experience regarding them, they must be fully competent how to dispose of them, without his assistance. But there were, he was sorry to observe, three cases towards which he felt it his duty to direct their attention. Previously to his specifying them, he would state to the jurors, that the indictments which they would send to the petty jury, for trial, would be indictments legally found by them; therefore, if respecting any of those indictments, they believed that the evidence adduced in support of them, either increased or diminished the crime of the individuals implicated in them, they were fully competent to throw out that indictment, and direct the clerk of the crown to frame a fresh indictment suitable to the nature of the case, according to their opinion. The first case on which he would comment, was one in which a gentleman, high in the civil service, was indicted on a very serious charge, and, he trusted that from their investigations in it, they would either be able to lessen the nature of the charge so as to divest it of its darker features, if not able to acquit the individual at once. Here the judge observed, that having been aware that this case would have to be tried before him, he had carefully abstained from noticing the detailed particulars of it, which had appeared in the public newspapers of Calcutta. He certainly condemned this erroneous practice of the press, as it tended, in some measure, to bias the minds of the community, a portion of whom have been empannelled in the jury, to whom he was then addressing himself, and some may be in the petit jury. He then entreated the grand jurymen, that if any of them had read any of these statements to which he alluded, that they would divest their minds from any impressions which they may have imbibed from their perusal. The individual he alluded to, has been indicted for a wilful homicide. Before going into the particulars of the case, as he gleaned from the depositions laid before him, he felt it his duty to explain to them the law of England regarding homicide.

Homicide, is either, 1st purely involuntary, as per infortunium, or by misadventure, 1 Hale, 424; or 2dly, partly voluntary and partly involuntary, or 3dly, purely voluntary, as murder and manslaughter. The second of these classes was formerly subdivided into two kinds; viz. "inducing a forfeiture," as homicide se defendendo, and not "inducing forfeiture," as homicide in advancement or execution of justice. But all punishments and forfeitures incurred by killing without felony, being now abolished, this distinction no longer subsists.

To constitute homicide for infortunium, three ingredients are requisite, first, an absence of all intention to do bodily harm; secondly, the lawfulness of the act intended to be done by the actor; and, thirdly, proper care and precaution in doing the act. It is sufficient merely to mention these points, and quite unnecessary to dwell upon them at any length.

In order to make the second species of homicide innocent and excusable, viz. homicide partly voluntary, and partly involuntary, in must be ex necessitate. Formerly, a distinction used to be taken between justifiable homicide and excusable homicide, for, it was considered, that in the former the slayer was in no kind of fault whatsoever; but in the latter the very name thereof imported some slight degree of culpability, 4 Blackst. Comm. 182. But this distinction no longer prevails. Now homicide ex necessitate might be homicide se defendendo, or in self-defence which is defined by Lord Hale (1 Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 477) to be "the killing of another person in the necessary defence of himself against him that assaults him." Regularly it was necessary that he who killed another in his own defence, should fly as far as possible before he turned upon his assailant, but to this rule there were exceptions. Thus in respect of the person killing, if a gaoler, sheriff, constable, or other officer of justice be assaulted in the execution of his office, he is not bound to give back to the wall, but may kill the assailant. Again, if a felon fly and cannot be otherwise taken he may be killed, without the act amounting to felony, Fost. Crown Law, p. 271; but if a prisoner, not being a felon, makes no resistance, but flies, and the officer kills him for fear he should escape, this is murder, or, at the least, manslaughter, according to the other circumstances of the case, 1 Hale, P. C. 481. So if one attempt to commit a felony accompanied with force, and is killed, it is justifiable; but otherwise if the attempt was without force as an attempt to pick a man's pocket. Again, if a person having, actually committed a felony, will not allow himself to be taken, but stands on his defence, or flees so that he cannot possibly be apprehended alive, his pursuer, although a private individual, is justified although he slay him. (1 Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown). And if an innocent person be indicted of a felony, and resist an officer who has a legal warrant for his arrest, he may be lawfully killed by the officer if he cannot otherwise be taken. Again, it is laid down by Hawkins, that if those who are engaged in a riot or a forcible entry, stand on their defence, and continue the force in opposition to the command of a justice of the peace, or resist him in endeavouring to arrest them, the killing of them is justifiable. And, where a sheriff attempts to make a lawful arrest in a civil action, or to retake a prisoner, and is resisted, it is justifiable though he slay the party in the affray; nor is he bound to give back. But no private person can arrest another for a civil matter; nor can the sheriff lawfully slay one who merely flies to escape civil process. Judge Foster laid it down, that where persons having authority to arrest or imprison, used the proper means, and were resisted, the party making resistance might be killed; and this holds in all cases whatever civil or criminal.

In the case of private persons using their endeavours to bring felons to justice, two cautions must be observed, both that a felony has been actually committed, and that it was committed by the party persued. If a supposed felon be killed by the private individual, upon mere suspicion, erroneous, though possibly well founded, it was said by judge Foster, that this would be felonious homicide, though not murder. Yet if a man, although innocent, is attempted to be arrested by an officer having a warrant against him by name, and he flees or resists, even a private person would stand justified in killing him while aiding the officer in the pursuit or struggle.

The warrant of a justice, although obtained by perjury, is a good warrant, as far as is necessary to justify the officer acting bona fide under it. A warrant will justify the officer in breaking open doors, after they have given due notice, and demanded an admittance, and if an officer be killed, it is murder; but bare suspicion, without the warrant of a magistrate, is not sufficient. A constable or officer, out of his own precincts, is a private individual, and if he have no special warrant neither he nor his assistants are under any special protection of the law in the apprehension of suspected persons, and the killing of them in resisting such apprehension, stands on the same footing as the killing of a private person under the same circumstances.

As suspicion will not warrant an officer in breaking open doors without the lawful warrant of a magistrate, nor a private person in attempting the arrest, so it should seem that suspicion will not warrant the sheriff in himself personally arresting for felony or breach of the peace, or giving verbal orders on the spot to arrest, unless such suspicion be communicated to him on oath sufficient to have grounded there on the issuing of a warrant, or such suspicion be created by matter within his own view. By stat. 3 and 4 Edw. 6 ch. 3 and 1 Mar. c. 12, sheriff were authorized to raise a posse comitatus for the purpose of apprehending rioters assembled together to the number of twelve, and if after proclamation the rioters refused to disperse and any were killed, or maimed, it was justifiable. This act was continued by Queen Elizabeth, but expired in her reign; but, saith Hale, "although per chance as to the killing of such persons, as do not presently retire upon proclamation, it needs the aid of an act of Parliament to indemnify them; yet if they attempt any riotous act, and cannot otherwise be suppressed, the sheriff or justice of the peace may make use of such a force upon them for the preservation of the peace, as well by the common law as by statute." By 13 H. 4 c. 7, it was enacted, that if any riot, assembly or rout of people, against the law be made, the justice of the peace and the sheriff or under-sheriff of the county, shall come with the power of the county, if need be, to arrest them and shall arrest them. Upon this, Lord Hale remarks, that "all men are bound upon warning to assist for suppressing of riots even by force, if it cannot otherwise be effected, so that the statutes are but pursuant to the common law." As to the point of indemnifying the rioters in assistance of the sheriff, &c. it is true that the killing of rioters barely for continuing together after proclamation, required a new law, to indemnify it; but if rioters resist the officer, or make head against him in attempting to apprehend them, or continue the riotous acting, he or his assistants would be justified in slaying them. And it seems the same law is for the constable of a vill. If a riot happens within his vill, he may assemble force to arrest the rioters, and if they resist and be killed by the constable or any of his assistants, these officers are dispunishable, for they are authorized hereunto by the common law, 1 Hale, P. C. 495. A constable has original or primitive powers, as a conservator of the peace, and is justified in imprisoning a person for breach of the peace, and he may at upon information, without having himself seen the offence committed. But he ought to inquire into and examine the circumstances and causes of suspicion. 2 Hale, P. C. 88, 91.

It is necessary to consider the difference between an arrest upon a warrant for felony and an arrest for a simple misdemeanor and also the difference between the cases where the officer killed the party during flight and where he killed him in making resistance.

If there be a warrant for trespass or breach of the peace and the party flies, and will not yield to the arrest, or being taken, makes his escape, without force, the officer killing him is guilty of murder. But if the party upon the arrest, or afterwards, assault the officer with intent to make his escape, and the officer standing on his guard, kills him, this is not felony. Were warrant issues against a felon or one suspected of felony, and either before or after arrest he flies and forcibly defends himself in such a way that the officer must give over the pursuit, or cannot take him without killing him, it is no felony if he kill him. 2 Hale, P. C. 118. But there must be these cautions first, he must be a lawful officer, or there must have been a lawful warrant; secondly, the party must have notice of the reason of the pursuit; and thirdly, it must be a case of necessity, to wit, that he cannot otherwise be captured. But, although a private person may arrest a felon, and if he flies, so that he cannot be taken without being killed, it is excusable in this case for the necessity, yet it is at his peril that the party really be a felon; for an innocent person is not bound to take notice of a private individual's suspicions. 2 Hale, P. C. 119.

Every British subject he observed, was in this country liable to be tried by the English law; but in his defence he was permitted to plead the law of the place where the crime for which he was to be tried was alleged to have been committed. The learned judge then remarked, that both he himself and his worthy co-adjutors on the bench, had made it their particular study to learn the mosaical law, because many cases connected with it were often decided by them; and they could not, on a reference, observe, that in the case before them it differed materially from the English law.

In this case from the depositions before him, he learnt that the magistrate had received information that an illegal assembly had collected. Acting on that information, he sent for aid to the military forces, which he by the law of this country was empowered to do, and went to disperse this assembly. When the magistrate arrived at the place, where this assembly was stated to be, they saw a body of men drawn out on shore, and they went on board the boats which were lying in the river, and saw a person named Pertabh Chund, who has stated himself to be the Rajah of Burdwan, lying in a boat. At this time no riot is stated to have occurred, nor any resistance offered to the authorities. Some shots were then fired by the party aiding in dispersing this assembly into the boats, and some persons killed. The accused is stated to have given the order for this firing, and to have been present on the occasion. It will be for the jurors to determine whatever the information which the accused had received, was of such a nature as to justify his proceeding with an armed force to disperse this assembly, and whether, under the circumstances of the case, it was lawful on the accuser to have given the order he is accused of having given on this occasion. If he (the judge) were to judge of it from the papers before him, he should say the accused was not justified in having giving the order to fire. But if the accused was present at the time these shots had been fired, and he had not given the orders, he cannot be implicated.

A magistrate in all such cases is placed in a very delicate and difficult situation, and has great latitude given him to exercise his discretion to the exigency of the case, for he is bound under penalties to use all his endeavours to quell all unlawful or riotous assemblies within his jurisdiction, by all the means in his power.

The present assembly, it seems, was at Culna, within the jurisdiction of the accused, and the assembly was ostensibly stated to have been met for the purpose of asserting the claim of the said Pertabh Chund to the goddee of Burdwan. The purport of Pertabh Chund's coming as he did, must be kept in view, and whether he came armed or unlawfully or peaceably, must be for the jurors to decide.

In conclusion, the judge admitted, that the case was one of very great difficulty, and in which a gentleman, high in the civil service, was very awkwardly exposed in the exercise of his duty; and it was for the jurors to determine whether, in exercising it, he had acted beyond what the circumstances of the case warranted or not.

The other case on which he had to comment, was one in which a European has been accused of murder. And the third was, in which a woman at the instigation of her paramour, had administered drugs unlawfully to another woman to cause an abortion, and shortly after which the pregnant woman died. True it is, that in this case the prisoner did not intend the death of the pregnant woman, but as that death was caused in the commission of a crime, which, by the English law, is in itself a capital felony, the woman, if the depositions are true, is guilty of wilful murder, and the jurors will return their indictment accordingly.

In conclusion, he said, he was sorry that he had detained them so long; he had nothing further to notice to them at present, but if they required any explanation or assistance from him on their duty, he would be most happy to afford it to them; and should any new case be brought to his notice, requiring him to direct their particular notice towards it, he would do so.

After this, the jurors, who had been permitted by the judge to sit down, whilst the judge delivered his charge to them, because of its length, retired to investigate the indictments which were submitted to them.

The judge then told the petit jurymen who had been summoned to attend at this sessions, that as he would not take up any of the criminal cases to-day, they were at liberty to retire, but must attend the Court at 10 o'clock A. M. to-morrow.

The Court then took up the postponed cases, during the investigation of one of which, Mr. Mainell, the barrister, was attacked with a fit and fainted in Court and was carried out in his chair by his bearers.—Hur-lan, Aug. 3.

August 2, 1838.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant.)

Mator was tried on a charge of having, on Friday the 22d June last, stolen from the godowns of Messrs. William Forbes Gibbon and George Gibbon, two sets of nails, value eight annas.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

William Forbes Gibbon deposed: He is a member of the firm of Watson and Co wine-merchants. Deponent and his brother are the sole proprietors. Deponent recollects he saw the prisoner on the 22d June last. He saw the prisoner at the door of his office in Clive-street, and asked him what he required. He said that he was in search of a sircar, and mentioned his name. Deponent informed him, that he had no recollection of that name in his service. About an hour after this, deponent saw him go behind a godown of his. Deponent then asked him what he wanted there; to this the prisoner made no direct reply. Deponent then desired his servants to search him and then turn him out. Deponent then observed the prisoner hold in his right hand something hid in a cloth, which he en leavoured to conceal. Deponent asked him what he held in his right hand. Prisoner replied, nails, which he had obtained from a sloop in the river, on board which vessel he had formerly worked as a sail-maker. Deponent had the cloth untied, and on examining these nails he discovered that they were some such nails which the prisoner had abstracted from a box in deponent's godown, lying close to the prisoner, and over which he had his hand when the deponent observed him the second time. He then wrote a letter to Captain Birch and sent the prisoner in custody to the police office. There is a slight difference amongst the one inch nails. The box was not full when the prisoner was detected, nor was there any thing in the appearance of the box to lead him to suppose that any nails had been abstracted from it. The nails deponent recognizes to be his property. When deponent gave the nails to the police chokeydar, he sealed the bag of the nails at the police office. Deponent by Mr. O'Hanlon's order took them down and gave them to Mr. McCann, the police officer. Mr. J. J. McCann then produced the bag of nails, and the prosecutor recognized them to be his property, because his seal was still on the bag. These nails may weigh about two seers, and their value might be near eight annas.

Buggen Doss, the prosecutor's bearer, deposed, that he saw the prisoner on the day in which he was taken into custody. This witness confirmed the evidence of the prosecutor regarding the arrest of the prisoner at the prosecutor's godown door with the nails in his hands.

The prisoner in his defence said, that in consequence of an altercation he had in the office, Mr. Gibbon charged the prisoner with having stolen these nails. The rest of the defence consisted in insinuations, that the case was made up against him, and the prosecutor's witness had been tutored at the police to give the evidence he had done.

The learned judge then summed up and gave a short detail of the leading features of the case as disclosed at the trial, and left the case to the jury, who, after a short consultation, returned a verdict of guilty.

The learned Judge then sentenced the prisoner to six months' imprisonment in the house of correction. As the prisoner is indisposed, the judge informed him that he would not undergo labour till he was cured.

Gungaram was tried for having, on the 7th April last, wounded with a knife a person named Sibboo Mudduck, on the face, nose, neck, arm, and right side, with intent to kill him.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Sibboo Mudduck deposed. That he has a confectioner's shop at Tauntuneeh in Calcutta. He has known the prisoner for about six or seven years. Prisoner is a seller of curds and whey, and lives near the police hospital. Prisoner was an acquaintance of deponent's. The prisoner had, some months ago, a dispute with the prosecutor regarding the interest due to the prosecutor from the prisoner on the mortgage of a silver key chain on the 16th April last. Prisoner on that occasion threatened him and said, "I will see how you abide in Calcutta." That very night the prisoner assaulted and wounded the prosecutor. The prosecutor and the prisoner in the quarrel alluded to, abused each other. Prosecutor called him satah. It was then the prisoner threatened him. Prosecutor then defied him and said, "Well, do your worst." Prosecutor at 3 o'clock A.M. of the morning of the 17th April, went to attend a call of nature against a wall facing to the east, and whilst he was in the act of urinating and turning to go to his house northward, he was struck by the prisoner under the right eye with a knife. Prosecutor immediately seized his assailant by the hair of the head and recognized him to be the prisoner. He then said Gungaram, "why have you murdered me." It was then clear moonlight. After prosecutor had spoken to the prisoner, the prisoner struck him another blow just below the ribs. Prosecutor then fell with the prisoner under him and fainted away. Deponent when he first recovered his senses, was at the police hospital, where he was surrounded by a crowd. Deponent believes that whilst he lay wounded at the place where he had been struck, an old woman poured some water down his throat, and gave the alarm at the thanna; but after this of what occurred to prosecutor that night he has no distinct recollection. The next day he was attended at the hospital by a European doctor, whose name he does not know, but could recognize his person if he were to see him. Prosecutor was about 15 or 20 days or one month at the hospital, where he saw the prisoner once, but no conversation occurred between them.

Radhamoney deposed: That she resides in Sibboo's house, and is acquainted with the prisoner. On the morning of the 17th April last, Sibboo went out for some purpose, and soon after she heard Sibboo cry out, "Gungaram why have you murdered me." On hearing this deponent went out and saw Sibboo lying wounded and bleeding on the ground, and Gungaram seeing her come, ran off. Deponent wept and lifted up Sibboo Mudduck, and examining him perceived a severe wound on his cheek bone and a slight one under his right ribs. Four pieces of cloth were drenched with the blood which flowed from the prosecutor's wounds. Deponent then had the wounded man removed by the chokeydars to the police hospital, Sibboo is a distant relative of the prisoner.

Mohomed Dorab, thanadar of Thuntunich thanna, deposed: That he is acquainted with both the prosecutor and the prisoner. On the morning of the 17th April, deponent, in consequence of information received, went to Sibboo Mudduck's house, and saw him lying senseless there wounded on the cheek bone and under the right rib. Deponent put him in a palkee and took him to the police hospital, where he recovered his senses by dawn; and the next morning, in consequence of what the prosecutor intimated him, deponent went to the house of the prisoner and arrested him, and took him to the police hospital to Sibboo Mudduck, who recognized him to be the person who had wounded him, but the prisoner denied the charge. Deponent then brought the prisoner back to his house, and, with the aid of the thanadar of the Cooloolollah division, where the prisoner resided, he searched the prisoner's house, and discovered two knives in his premises. These knives the deponent produced in Court. Gungaram acknowledged the knife to be his property, and said they were used by him for cutting curds. Deponent then took the prisoner to the superintendent of the police. On the way to the police office, the prisoner offered deponent a bribe, if he would get the charge hushed up. The smaller knife, when deponent discovered it, appeared to be slightly stained with blood.

R. H. Bain, Esq. deposed, That he is the police surgeon. He recollects that the prosecutor was, on the 17th April last, brought to the police hospital in the morning, and deponent attended on him. There were two wounds upon his person, one in his right cheek and the other round the right ribs. (Here deponent described the nature of these wounds.) Deponent did not examine the wound over the liver, for fear of producing an inflammation if he were to examine it. The wounds were inflicted with great force, and with a cutting instrument. The wound over the liver was a clear wound, and must have been a stab. Either of the knives produced in Court might have inflicted these wounds. The wounded man was in considerable danger from these wounds for several days. He was for sixteen or seventeen under medical treatment at the hospital; when he quitted it he was not cured, but out of danger. During the examination of this witness, as to the relative position the prosecutor and the prisoner must have been in, at the time the latter wounded the former, one of these questions deponent did not understand. The judge then remarked to Dr. Bain, that it is very unfortunate in this case, that he was not near at the time when the prosecutor gave his evidence, as he ought to have been, and then he might have understood the question put to him. The judge then read the prosecutor's depositions, and asked deponent whether the parties could have been in the position at the time the prosecutor has described they were, when he was wounded.

This closed the prosecution.

The prisoner, in his defence said, that the prosecutor's wife is a very incontinent woman, and has a gallant for whom she has thrice left the prosecutor's house, and it was this gallant that wounded the prosecutor and not prisoner. Prisoner was, at the time the prosecutor is stated to have been wounded at his house, attending a person who was indisposed with the small-pox. Prisoner said he had ten witnesses to prove his case.

Dulce Sing, Naib of the Coolootollah thanna, deposed, that he, on the night when the prosecutor is stated to have been wounded, went to the prisoner's house at 2 o'clock A. M. to see a person who was indisposed in the prisoner's house with the small-pox, and left at 3 o'clock A. M. The rest of his evidence bore no reference to this case. This witness prevaricated in his testimony, and was detected by the jury.

Ram Sabuk, chokeydar of Coolootollah. This witness's evidence did not elucidate any information relative to this case. Three or four more were then called, but they knew nothing about this case.

Lochun deposed, that one night he was indisposed with the small pox. The chokeydars inquired about his condition four times from the prisoner, at whose house deponent was then residing. At 2 o'clock A. M. the prisoner fell asleep near the deponent. Deponent did not sleep that night, being restless from the heat of his sores. At 4 o'clock A. M. prisoner awoke, smoked a chillum, washed himself and went out, near 5 o'clock A. M. There was no light in the room.

The prisoner then called four more witnesses, whose testimony elucidated neither any information in his favour and one of them contradicted Lochun in some material points of his evidence.

This closed the prisoner's defence.

The learned judge then summed up the proceedings. He detailed the nature of the indictment, which he said charged the prisoner with a capital felony, and then recapitulated the cases made out by the evidence pro and con, and commented on it, explaining the law as he went on, and then left the case to the decision of the jury.

The jury after a retirement of about one hour, returned a verdict of not guilty.

The judge, after this verdict had been recorded, ordered the prisoner to be released, after cautioning him to be more guarded in his future conduct.

In the case of Mr. Ogilvy, Mr. L. Clarke, the counsel for the prosecution, applied for a capias on a certificate of two bills being found, in order to make the defendant come into Court, and give, if requisite, a fresh and stronger bail to compel the party to proceed to trial during this term, and prevent his putting the trial off. He said that he was not so very apprehensive that Mr. Ogilvy would not take his trial during this session, but he required it more to uphold the practice of the Court.

Mr. C. R. Prinsep, for the defence, replied, and quoted Chitty's pleadings, to show that even a magistrate, was fully competent to bail before the bill is found, and it can hold good after bill is found; and no bench warrant, on a certificate for bill being found, can be issued, unless the defendant fails to come in cognizant to his bail, and take his trial, and have his bail estreated.

The judge then read the charge, and the commitment on which Mr. Ogilvy had been arrested and bailed, and the recognizance which showed, that he was bound by his recognizance to answer any indictments which may be found against him during this session, and asked what precedent Mr. Clarke could quote to show that the writ now demanded is requisite.

Mr. Clarke replied, that a magistrate by the 2d section of the act of Parliament might take bail, but his bail could not be considered sufficient after the grand jury have found the true bill, because the justice does not know on what evidence the grand jury have subsequently on their oaths found him guilty of the indictment preferred against him. He then quoted the case of Rajah Buddenauth, who, on his second indictment was bailed for 800,000 rupees with an injunction to come into Court and give either first bail or surrender and take his trial within twenty-four hours' notice; and he likewise quoted the case of Debre Abasse Khanum, from whom bail was taken by the Court in first instance, and then she was compelled to give first bail after a true bill was found. He then quoted the case of Mr. Drummond for manslaughter, who was likewise required to give first bail, after true bill had been found against him. Mr. Clarke further said, that with regard to the quotation from Chitty made by Mr. Prinsep, it only applied to misdemeanor cases; for at the time that clause was framed, no magistrate was competent to take bail for a felony. He likewise stated, that in misdemeanor cases no bench warrant can be issued until the last day of the sessions, and, therefore, the case could not be tried until the ensuing sessions, and as the sessions are by law looked upon as one day, the defendant has the whole of the sessions to come in and traverse, whereas felony cases must be tried in the sessions, in which their indictments have been found, and cannot be traversed.

The judge decided, that Mr. Clarke could enforce his motion, because after the indictment has been found, the case assumes a different nature; but he thinks there cannot be any very strong motive for enforcing the capias. He advised Mr. Clarke to consider of it before he would apply to enforce his motion.

Mr. Clarke replied, that he only made this motion; because Mr. Prinsep had supposed, that his client could not take the writ he had now applied for, and that he could put off the hearing of this case till the end of this sessions; and that his client could not make his client come into Court, and take his trial during this sessions by the writ he has now applied for; but as the judge's opinion must now have convinced him, that he was wrong in entertaining such an opinion, he supposed there would be no necessity for enforcing the writ he has now applied for at present, the motion can be postponed till to-morrow.

The judge after consulting counsel, fixed next Monday for the trial of this case.

On the following indictments the grand jury have returned true bills:

1. Boodhoo for burglary, committed on the 24th April last, in the house of Cossinauth Lalla, at Postah-bazar.

2. Kooshoe Ghore for a larceny, committed in the house of Soorjee, in Mirzapore street, on the 13th May 1838.

3. Gungaram for wounding and assaulting Seebou Muddak, on the 17th of April 1838, in Fauntunneah, with intent to kill or maim him.

4. Gohee for stealing from the office of the registrar of the Supreme Court, a silver hunting watch the property of L. Dickens, Esq. on the 14th of May 1838.

11. Mohon Doss with a larceny, committed on the 4th of June 1838, in the house of Hanteschunder Paul.

12. Euseph Beg for a larceny, committed on the 3d June, 1838, in the house of Cholee Sing.

13. Nuzoo with stealing from the custom-house two bank of Bengal notes of 25 rupees each and silver rupees, the property of Ramsoonder Doss, manjee, on the 13th of June 1838.

14. Mudub Shaw with stealing seven pieces of cloth from a godown in Cooloolallah-street, the property of Sheikh Hyder, on the 29th of June 1838. — Hurkari, August 4.

August 3, 1838.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight, Judge.)

Kooshoe, was tried for stealing, on the 13th of May last, a brass pot and other articles to the value of two rupees two annas, the property of Soorjee, widow, at Mirzapore.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Soorjee, widow, deposed, that she resides in Mirzapore. On the 13th of May last, at about 8 o'clock a n. a wedding procession passed her house. She went to see it, closing the mat of her hut after her, and, on her return, she perceived the prisoner, who was a stranger to her at that time, coming out of her hut. This raised her suspicion against him, and she therefore called a chokeydar who was near her at the time, to apprehend the prisoner. The chokeydar then seized him and found in his possession a brass water-pot and a bundle, which she recognized to be her property. The chokeydar then took the prisoner and the articles found on him to the police office, where she afterwards saw the bundle and the pot. The articles and the prisoner remained at the police office, and prosecutrix came away.

Ameer, chokeydar, who had apprehended the prisoner, produced the stolen articles, and the prosecutrix recognized them to be the property stolen from her house by the prisoner. The rest of the deposition of Ameer chokeydar confirmed the testimony of the prosecutrix.

The prisoner said, that he had an acquaintance with the prosecutrix; she met him at the marriage procession and took him to her house, where she said that she was in great distress, and, as she had long been a paramour of his, she begged him to give her some title to relieve her distress. Prisoner pleaded incapability, and she then requested him to get her brass pot and cup pledged or her for one rupee; and when he said that it would shame a person of his respectability to be seen hawking a brass pot and cup about the streets for pawn, she tied them up in a bundle, and then desired him to go with him. As he was proceeding with them at her earnest request to pledge them, the prosecutrix, when he had got out of her house, called to the chokeydar who is her paramour, and had him arrested on the present charge. He said he had no witnesses to prove his allegation; but added that if the judge chose he could make inquiries at the police office, and the would then ascertain that prisoner had never been brought up at the police office previous to this charge on any account.

The learned Judge then summed up the case briefly to the jury, who after a short consultation, without retiring, found the prisoner guilty.

After this verdict was recorded, the judge, in sentencing him said, that as his offence was aggravated by his having entered the prosecutrix's house during her absence, he would inflict a severer sentence on him than he did on the prisoner convicted for larceny yesterday. He then sentenced the prisoner to one year's imprisonment in the house of correction. After this sentence had been passed, the prisoner begged the judge to alter his sentence, and to order him to be transported, for he could not survive one year's imprisonment in the house of correction.

The Judge ordered him to be removed from the bar.

Horro was indicted for having, on the 23d of June last, burglariously entered the house of Ramnarrain Purrmanick, at night, in Putooldangah, and stolen therefrom several articles of brass, &c.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Ramnarrain Purrmanick deposed, that he resides in his own house at Pootoldangah, and his niece resides with him. When he retires to sleep at night he sometimes shuts the doors and sometimes his niece. On the 28th of June last, he shut one of the doors with a mat fastening it to a cross bar, and his niece shut the other. Prosecutor did not see her shut it that night, but she informed him she had done so. She is a purda-nashin, and therefore she is not in attendance in Court to-day. He retired at 10 o'clock p.m. to rest. He slept in one room and his sister and niece in another. At night he was awakened by some person entering the room in which he slept which faces the street. There is no communication between the room where prosecutor slept, and where his sister was, but through the compound. There were two persons entering his hut. One of them entered his hut by opening the mat door and the other was standing in the street close to the door. Prosecutor seeing them got up and called to the chokeydars for aid. When the thieves heard prosecutor's voice they both ran off, pursued by the prosecutor and Bishendeal, the chokeyder of his division. The man that was in the street escaped; but the one who had entered the hut and ran off with a bundle was caught by the chokeydar, who brought him to deponent's house and examined the hut to see how the hut had been entered, and they then perceived that it had been entered by digging a hole in the floor of the room where the prosecutor slept from the street. It was an earthen floor over which was the matted wall where the hole was made. The matted wall extended to the floor.

The chokeydar took the man he had arrested to the thanna. The prisoner at the bar is the man. It was about 3 o'clock a. m. when this occurred. The bundle and the articles in it were on examination found to be the prosecutor's property. The prisoner was taken from the thanna to the police office together with the articles found on him. The prisoner and these articles remained at the police office, and prosecutor came home. Prosecutor here enumerated the articles found on the prisoner and stated where they were kept at night in his hut when he went to sleep.

Beshendeal, the chokeydar of Putoolangah, produced the articles found on the prisoner, and the prosecutor recognized them to be his property.

The rest of this witness's testimony was in confirmation of what the prosecutor had deposed on the case.

Munsa Ram, the naib of Putoolangah, stated, in confirmation of the last witness, that he was present when the prisoner was apprehended and taken to the thanna, and thence to the police, up to his commitment.

The prisoner said that he had been on the night in which this theft is stated to have been committed to the Chandney chokey, and was returning home rather the worse for liquor, when, on passing near the prosecutor's house he heard the prosecutor who is an oilman, call out stop thief. Prisoner hearing the hue and cry, through fear, began to run off. He was challenged by the chokeydars and stopped, who charge him with the theft, and took him to the prosecutor's house near where a bundle of clothes were lying. They taxed prisoner with having stolen it from the prosecutor, and asked the prisoner who were his accomplices and where were his implements of house breaking. Prisoner denied the charge, and begged them to call some shopmen in the neighbourhood to bear witness to his character. Thus the police peons refused, but took him to the thanna and examined his hands and clothes and found no marks of mud on him. He was then taken to the police before Mr. O'Hanlon, the magistrate, who committed him to the sessions, prisoner called no witnesses to prove his defence.

The learned judge then summed up the case briefly, and the jury found him guilty.

After the verdict had been recorded, the judge sentenced the prisoner to be transported to the S. E. Coast of Martaban for 14 years.—Hurkarn, Aug. 6.

August 3, 1838.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight, Judge.)

Mohon Doss for stealing, on the 4th June, several articles of clothing, &c. valued altogether at Co.'s Rs. 240 or 250 rupees, the goods of Hurrischunder Paul, from his house at Hoogulporeah.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Hurrischunder Paul deposed, that he resides in his own house at Hoogulporeah. He recognizes the prisoner who was a khansamah in his service. Prosecutor lost several articles from his house on the 4th June last. On that evening prosecutor returned from his office at 6 o'clock p. m. and did not see Mohon at his house, and from the information he heard regarding the prisoner from his servants, he, on the following day, applied for a writ for his apprehension, more so as Mohon did not return all night, and as Mohon had locked his wardrobe room. He next day had it opened by a blacksmith, and missed several articles from it. Mohon used to have the charge of the key of that room. Mohon never returned to him. Prosecutor could not get a writ on the 5th June, because he did not know the name of the village where Mohon resided. Cassi is the name of the blacksmith who opened the wardrobe room. When the prosecutor entered this room he discovered that his writing desk, in which he kept his money, and his chest of drawers, in which his wearing apparel were kept, had been broken open and rifled of their contents. Prosecutor then made a list of the articles which he missed from that room before he applied to the police office. (Here the prosecutor detailed the articles which had been stolen from his house, and stated their value.) The next time prosecutor saw the prisoner and his lost property they were at the police office. He then saw the articles merely superficially, and therefore he cannot say whether they were all there. He did not see the ready money or the silver amongst them. The articles altogether were valued at 240 or 250 rupees—they certainly were worth more than 200 rupees.

Khan Mohamed, police peon, attached to the thanna of Oolobareah, in zillah Hooghly, deposed, that the first time he saw the prosecutor was at the police office about one month and a half ago. On that occasion he had brought the prisoner at the bar from the thanna of Oolobareah together with a pataarah sealed, to the Calcutta police office, by the orders of the jemadar of that thanna, who entrusted them to him. The pataarah remained sealed all the time whilst under deponent's charge. Mr. McCann produced the pataarah, and deponent certified it to be the same which he brought to the police office. It appears to have been opened at the police office since deponent left it there, as there are the seals of the police office on pasted papers on it.

Kristoo Mullick, chokeydar of Rajgunge, in zillah Hooghly, deposed, that he recognized the prisoner. He had known him from the date on which he first saw him at Rajgunge on a Monday, in the month of Joissee last. When he first saw him, the prisoner was carrying the pataarah now produced in this Court on his head. He knew it from the circumstance of its being sealed before him, at the thanna, by Mohon Sing, jemadar. That mark is still on it. On being challenged by deponent, prisoner said that he was a stranger in the village, and feared somebody would beat him, and put up at their house. This was towards the evening and he asked deponent to show him the quarters of the jemadar of the village, and deponent did so. Deponent again met him at the village bazar, as he was returning with a cruize of oil. Prisoner again addressed him and said, that he was the servant of Baboo Hurrischunder, a writer, and was proceeding to Tumlook. The baboo in his haste had left him behind whilst he was eating his victuals, and requested a place of safety for himself for the night. The deponent then took him to the police station and told him to stop there. He asked the prisoner what he had in the pataarah. Prisoner said that he could not show its contents to him then, as he had lost its key, but would show it to him before he left the place. Deponent then gave him his chillum to smoke, and went to keep his watch, and the prisoner staid all night at the police stand. The next morning deponent again asked the prisoner to show him the contents of the pataarah, and prisoner refused. Deponent then lifted up the cloth which covered the pataarah, and perceived that its hinges had been started. Deponent then left another peon with the prisoner, and the naib sent information to the jemadar of the thanna, who was out on an investigation, and went to feed his cow. When the jemadar came to the police stand, the prisoner, at his request, lifted up the lid of the pataarah and exhibited its contents to him. The jemadar then took down the prisoner's statement regarding himself, and committed it in writing together with the box, to the thannadar, Mirza Mogul, at Oolobareah, in deponent's custody, together with the three persons who witnessed the prisoner's statement regarding himself at the Rajgunge thanna. The darogah at Oolobareah, then questioned the prisoner, who said that he was a servant of Hattay baboo, who had gone off in a hurry with Mr. Cargant, and that he was going with the pataarah to Tundlook, and the pataarah had been broken by a fall in the boat at Rajgunge. Mirza Mogul took down the prisoner's depositions and forwarded them to another thanna in custody at Kootteerah, together with the witnesses to the deposition given by the prisoner at Ooloobareah. When they arrived at Kootteerah they were kept in custody all night, and from thence they were all forwarded to the village of Dingabangah, where a robbery had been lately committed, and the articles found on the prisoner, were exhibited to the person whose house had been robbed at Dingabangah to see if any of the articles stolen from his house were amongst them, and on his disowning these articles, the prisoner and the pataarah were sent back to Ooloobareah thannah. The thannadar of that place took charge of the prisoner and the pataarah; and deponent, by the thannadar's orders, returned to his duty at Rajgunge.

Mootee Mohammed, writer of the thanna of Ooloobareah, deposed, that he saw the prisoner in custody of Chutterdase Sing, a peon of Ooloobareah thanna, at Kootteerah, where the darogah and deponent were carrying on an investigation regarding a dacoity which had been committed there. There was a pataarah on the prisoner's head at the time. This was after their return from Kootteerah. Deponent was desired to compare the contents of the pataarah with his list describing it. Gurnee-ballah, chief moonshiee, then read the paper, with which deponent compared the contents of the pataarah and they talked. Deponent was then ordered to seal the pataarah and put it in the guard-room. Deponent did so, and the paper remained with the darogah. The prisoner and the pataarah were afterwards forwarded to the police office at Calcutta where deponent opened the pataarah, and again in the presence of the prisoner examined the contents with the list which had the darogah's seal and signature, and found them to be correct. Deponent then left them at the police office.

Mr. McCann then produced the pataarah which he had received from Khan Mahomed, and which was recognized by Mootee Mahomed to be the one he had been mentioning in his depositions. He again examined its contents and found them to be correct. The prosecutor then examined the articles and deposed they were a part of the property stolen from his house.

C. K. Robison, deposed, that the paper in his hand was the confession of the prisoner on this charge, after he had been duly cautioned by him. Mr. Holroyd read it. In this prisoner said, Donah, a person residing in Haut Kolaw, advised prisoner to rob his master, and one day whilst prisoner was asleep, Donah stole his keys and robbed Hurrishunder. Prisoner, when he awoke, he persued Donah and overtook him at Rajgunge, where, when prisoner made him over to the police peons there, they received a bribe from him of a silver salver and forty-eight rupees, and liberated him and sent the prisoner in custody to the Calcutta police office.

The prisoner made no defence.

The judge then summed up and stated the nature of the indictment and the facts adduced from the evidence, after commenting on which, he left the case in the hands of the jury.

The jury after a short consultation, found the prisoner guilty.

The judge after this verdict had been accorded, sentenced the prisoner to seven years' transportation to the S. E. Coast of Myrtaban.

Boodoo was tried for having stolen, on the 25th of April last, from the house of Cossinauth Lallah, in Postah-bazar, several articles of jewellery, valued at 80 rupees.

Prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Cossinauth Lallah deposed, that he is a burkendauze, employed in the export warehouse. Prosecutor, in April last, lived in the house of a brahmin in Postah-bazar, and he was robbed there. Prosecutor hired, at one rupee a month, one of the rooms of the brahmin's house. Prosecutor lost many gold and silver articles. He has a memorandum of the articles, which was made by him on the morning following the theft, which happened on the night of the 23d April last. Prosecutor was on that day in the export warehouse. On the morning of the 24th, an old woman gave him information, that his house had been robbed during the preceding night. Prosecutor, in consequence of this information, went home, and, on his arrival there, he discovered that his box, containing his things, had been stolen. He then went and gave information at the thanna, and the thannadar, naib, and some peons came with prosecutor to his homestead and made an investigation. [Here the prosecutor gave a detailed statement of the articles of which he had been robbed.] And they observed the mat which shut the door of prosecutor's room had been cut. The thief, it appeared, had entered by cutting the mat of a room, in which the brahmin's cow was kept, and had escaped by the door of prosecutor's room. The last time prosecutor had seen the box in his room, was on a scaffolding in his room, on the evening of the 13th April, when he left it to go to his duty, at the export warehouse. Prosecutor subsequently saw some of the articles which were stolen from his house, in the hands of the prisoner at the Burra-bazar thanna. Prosecutor had known the prisoner at Benares, where he had been punished for a robbery at the magistrate's court. Prosecutor was then a peon in the magistrate's service. Prosecutor had not seen the prisoner in Calcutta, before he saw him in custody at the thanna. Prosecutor's wife, daughter, and the old woman, slept in the room in which the robbery was committed on that night.

Goordial Sing, naib of the Burra-bazar thanna, deposed, that he first saw the prosecutor at his house, at two time he went with the thannadar and peons, to examine it, in consequence of its having been burglariously entered. Deponent has known the prisoner since he has been arrested. The prosecutor's and the prisoner's houses are close to each other, separated by a lane about two cubits in breadth. The hole that was cut in the prosecutor's hut, was in the direction of the prisoner's house. In consequence of what the prosecutor told deponent, he arrested four or five of the prosecutor's neighbours and took them to the thanna. Whilst they were at the thanna, one of these five men said, there is Boodoo going along. Hearing this, deponent then proceeded with Guneish chokkydar and arrested him. The prisoner at the bar is the person he then arrested. Deponent then took him to the thanna and searched him. He found on him some English pennies and some rupees. Both the prosecutor and the prisoner claimed these pennies to be their property. Deponent then perceived the prisoner slip a paper parcel under his shoe, and searched it, and on opening it he discovered some jewellery wrapped in the paper which the prosecutor identified to be his property. Deponent afterwards went with the prisoner to search his house which is an upper-roomed one and there discovered some implements used in cutting into a matted house, and some other articles belonging to the prosecutor. Deponent then took the prisoner in custody to the police office, together with the articles found in Boodoo's possession and in his house, and those articles have ever since that time been in deponent's possession, and he now produces them at the trial.

The prosecutor then looked at the articles produced, and recognized them to be a part of the property which had been stolen, on the night of the 23d April last, from his house.

Guneish, nephew to the prosecutor, deposed, that he is a kidmitgur in the service of Dinonauth baboo, and lives with him. He has seen the jewels now produced in Court on the person of his female relatives, and believes them to be a part of the property stolen from his house.

Mr. D. McFarlane produced the prisoner's depositions, and proved that the prisoner, after being warned, had given them voluntarily.

Mr. Holroyd read them. In them the prisoner had stated that he had lately arrived from Noabpurrah, his native village, in the zillah of Benares, and resided with a person named Munnab at the Rajah's post-house. On the day on which he was arrested, he picked up a bag on the road, containing the jewels now produced to their Court. As he was proceeding with them to give them to the thanna, the prosecution, whose house had been robbed, and who had a handsome wife, with whom the prisoner had an intrigue, immediately charged him with the theft, and he was beaten and taken to the thanna.

He in his defence added, that the property was deposited by the prosecutor to be gold, and these are guilt and prisoner's property, and if they be tested by fire they will be found to be guilt.

The prisoner said he has three witnesses.

Two of them said that they heard on the day the prisoner was arrested, that he had found a bag on the strand road, containing some coins and jewellery, but they did not see him pick it up. The third witness denied all knowledge of him. A fourth said, that one day the prisoner asked him the way to the thanna and he pointed it to him.

This closed the defence. The learned judge then summed up the case, read the indictment and the case as adduced from the evidence, and committing on it, left the decision of it to the jury, observing that the charge of burglary is not made out against the prisoner.

The jury, after a long retirement, acquitted the prisoner, and the judge, as the verdict had been recorded, admonished him to be more cautious in his future conduct, and ordered him to be released.

After this the Court adjourned till 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow morning.

August 4, 1839.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight, Judge.)

Juggomohon, sircar, was indicted on the 27th of July 1834, during the third sessions of that year, for having, on the 14th July 1833, counterfeited, against the statutes, four sicca rupees, for which he was convicted on his trial and sentenced for 14 years' transportation to the S. E. Coast of Maritaban. And that he in defiance of this sentence, and before its expiration, did unlawfully return to Bengal within the Company's territories, and was found and apprehended as a felon in zillah Hooghly.

The prisoner pleaded guilty of returning before the expiration of his sentence, and put in a petition, in which he said he had his reasons for returning fully set forth. After the judge had read this petition, he again gave him the option of pleading not guilty.

The prisoner again pleaded guilty, and wished the judge to investigate the severe ill-treatment he had received at the place of his transportation, but of this he had no proofs.

The judge replied, that the matter which the prisoner now wished to have investigated, could not be investigated here, because that could only from a consideration of the judge in passing his sentence on him, should he persist in his present plea, or be convicted after having taken his trial on the present charge. The only point now to be enquired into by the Court is, whether he (the prisoner) is not the same Juggomohon, sircar, who had been convicted of the crime already set forth in this indictment and explained to him, and who, after he had been sentenced to transportation for 14 years, on that former conviction of the 27th July 1833, did return to Bengal from the place where had been transported, before the expiration of the period of his transportation. And the judge, after having given him this explanation, again cautioned him, and gave him the option if he felt so disposed, to alter the plea he had just now pleaded, and take his trial on the indictment now preferred against him.

The prisoner, after this explanation and caution, still persisted in his plea of guilty.

The plea was then ordered to be recorded, and after this had been done by the clerk of the crown, the prisoner was ordered to be removed from the bar at present, and his sentence deferred.

Ameer, syrang was tried for having, on the 4th of June, 1838, at Mutchau-bazar, committed a rape on the person of one Golaub, wife of Kloo khalasee.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Golaub, deposed that she subsists by her labour; she sews clothes and does occasionally job work. She is a married woman, and her husband went to sea about two months ago. Other people live in the same house in the other apartments of it, but they are in no way related to her. Prosecutrix knows the prisoner, and has known him for about two months. Prosecutrix's husband is a seaman; the prisoner is of the same profession. Prosecutrix does not know the English months. Prosecutrix does not recollect the month of Jait. She recollects that upwards of two months ago the prisoner offered her some violence, a little previous to that time the prisoner proposed to prosecutrix's husband to leave the prosecutrix at his house with his family, during the period he then would be absent at sea. Prosecutrix did not hear this. Prosecutrix's husband did not consent to this proposal. Shortly after the departure of the prosecutrix's husband, prosecutrix one day called at the prisoner's house at Mutchau-bazar, to demand payment of four rupees due by him to her husband. Prosecutrix found him sitting at the door of his house in the verandah. The house has mud walls. In proceeding from the verandah it leads to the compound of the house. The compound is walled in, and has a gate-way leading to the street. When the prosecutrix had entered the prisoner's house, the outer gate was open. She has no recollection whether any person did shut it afterwards or not; she, on that occasion, only saw the prisoner by himself. On her entrance, she said to the prisoner, "give me the four rupees you owe to my husband." He refused to give it, and, on the prosecutrix reiterating the demand, he again refused to pay her. Prosecutrix then arose, and, as she was going to leave the house, the prisoner ran after her, seized her by the arms and legs and took her forcibly into an inner room of his house. [Here the prosecutrix after some hesitation, and being informed by the Court that in this case there was no shame nor occasion for delicacy, and the only thing for her to be ashamed of was speaking an untruth, as it was a crime the result of which might affect the prisoner's life, stated that the prisoner threw her down on the ground, and then, after some more interrogation, she described the perpetration of the violence towards her, the commission of which constitutes the present charge against the prisoner at the bar.] Prosecutrix further deposed, that she was not a consenting party to this act, which was forcibly committed on her, otherwise she would not have complained. She did cry out, struggle, and screamed in vain, and desired the prisoner to desist from his purpose, but he was obstinate and would not hearken to reason. There was no person in the room, but two females were in the compound at the time.

The prisoner's house consists of but two rooms. When the prisoner took her into the room she saw the two persons sitting in the compound. They could have heard her cries, but neither of them came to her assistance. One of the females was the prisoner's wife and the other maid-servant saw the prisoner seize on the prosecutrix and take her away, but the prisoner's wife did not see the prisoner overtake the prosecutrix in the verandah. On being questioned by the judge, whether she had not just previously stated that the prisoner first seized her in the compound, she replied that he first seized her in the verandah and then took her away from the compound. On being desired to explain herself, she said that the prisoner took her up in the compound and not in the verandah, but carried her from thence through the verandah to the inner room. The maid servant was at that time sitting in the verandah near the place where she was seized, and in taking the prosecutrix into the inner room, he passed quite close to the maid servant. Prosecutrix was screaming at the time, but neither the maid servant nor prisoner's wife said any thing, nor interfered in any manner on the occasion. After the prosecutrix had been freed from the prisoner's hands she went out into the lane crying. She observed in quitting the prisoner's house, that the maid servant was still sitting quietly at the place where she had been when the prisoner took her into the room, and the prisoner's wife was then sitting in the compound on the abutment of the well washing her mouth after having taken her meals. No conversation passed between the prosecutrix or any of them on that occasion. The well is about five cubits distance from the door of the room into which the prisoner took the prosecutrix. Prosecutrix cannot say whether the prisoner's wife heard her screams or not, the distance is so close that she might have heard them. Whilst prosecutrix was quitting the prisoner's house, she saw his wife go to the verandah of the house. The prosecutrix after she quitted the prisoner's house, went to a plain behind the prisoner's house and began to cry, and shortly afterwards went home. She then saw her landlady, she does not know her name. She related to her what had happened to her. She did nothing on that day, but the next morning she went to the police office and lodged her complaint before Mr. O'Hanlon, the magistrate. Prosecutrix's statement at the police was not so very elaborate, but the facts stated in these coincide with those she has stated here. Prosecutrix did not state at the police office that when she entered the prisoner's house, she saw him sitting with his wife and servant maid in the verandah, for such was not the fact; and if the magistrates had entered that in her deposition at the police, they must have done it erroneously. Prosecutrix did state at the police office, that when she demanded her diet money from the prisoner, he desired her to sit down on a cot in the verandah and he would pay her. Both the statements, viz. that made by the prosecutrix here and at the police are true, for at first he promised to pay her and then he refused to do so. Prosecutrix did sit down in the verandah. Prosecutrix did not state at the police office, that the prisoner seized her in the verandah, whilst she was sitting there, and carried her into the room. The fact is, he seized her at the entrance to the verandah, and she did state at the police office, that no conversation had passed between her and either the prisoner's wife or her servant, and if either of these two facts were otherwise entered at the police office, they are wrong. Prisoner after he took her into the room, shut the door of it.

Cross-examined by the prisoner. Prisoner was neither mad nor drunk at the time, and prosecutrix cannot say whether it was love or any other motive which impelled him to the perpetration of this crime. The prisoner's house is mud-walled and tiled-roofed. The doors of the house, room and compound are of wood. The compound is water surrounded. After the prisoner had shut the door he bolted it on the inside.

Chumpah, the next witness, when called to be examined, shook her hands and appeared to be either labouring under some illness or affected. She appears, however, appeared to have been examined at the police office. The prisoner said that she was a mad woman, and subject to temporary fits of insanity, and Mr. Neamy, the interpreter to Mr. O'Hanlon, said that she was sensible enough when examined at the police office; and the police peons who had brought her, said that they have seen her every day from the 1st instant, and she appeared well and sane; but since yesterday they have seen her in this state of insensibility. The judge, after intimating to the witness, that if she was ill, she could sit down or be examined hereafter, but if she affected to be so to avoid being examined, he would be compelled to send her to the jail. Notwithstanding this, the witness still continuing in a state of stupefaction and it appearing that she was really ill, she was removed from the witness box. The prisoner said, that she had been frequently bled and under medical treatment whilst in his service. The jemadar of the Mutchua-bazar thanna-aid, she had not been under medical treatment, to his knowledge, since these four days. On the 1st and 2d instant, he has seen her talking and sane to those near her, but these two days she has not spoken a word to any person. She comes every day to the court, and goes home in the evening to the prisoner's house. The prisoner's wife and mother-in-law, who are here, can be brought to the court and depose to the state of this witness's intellect.

The jemadar then deposed to the truth of what he had already stated, and said that he saw this witness home, yesterday, and believes her to be a woman of weak intellects, but at the same time he supposes her present conduct partly assumed.

Sahab Jaun, the mother-in-law of the prisoner, deposed, that she knew the last witness, Chumpah; she is a servant maid in her son-in-law's employ. She is mad occasionally and not able to speak. About eight months ago, she underwent medical treatment. The doctor shaved her head and bled her. She then recovered partially, but since that she has had a relapse about twenty days ago.

Dr Bain, the police doctor, having come into the Court, the judge ordered him to examine this witness.

Sahab Jaun's evidence continued. Deponent has known the prosecutrix about two months. She is her landlady. Deponent generally is out all day on her business, and the prosecutrix likewise goes about, therefore she cannot form an idea of her character, but from appearance. This any body else might do. On the day on which this crime is stated to have been committed by the prisoner, the prosecutrix came and stated the particulars of it to her. The judge remarked, that anything the prosecutrix might have stated immediately after the commission of the act is legally evidence. The prisoner has been married to the deponent's daughter about sixteen or seventeen years, and has always borne a good character. She would not suppose him capable of committing such a crime as this for which he is tried.

Buckteer, deposed, she recollects that about two months ago, on a Sunday, she saw the prosecutrix; beyond this as she neither knew the month nor the date of it, her evidence was of no avail in the elucidation of this case and it was consequently dispensed with.

In this stage of the proceedings, Dr. Bain returned, after having examined the witness Chumpah, and deposed, that he could not get any answer from her, and she appeared to him to be an idiot. This was inconsistent with her being a sane person, on the 11th June last.

After this Mr. Namey, the interpreter to Mr. O'Hanlon, who had translated the depositions of Chumpah, proved their genuineness. Mr. O'Hanlon, the magistrate, is, deponent believes, unwell, he has not attended office this week. Chumpa was then of sane mind, Mr. Holroyd then read these depositions. Deponent stated that she is the servant of Ameer, syrang. She receives no wages, only victuals and clothes; on Sunday the 3d June, prosecutrix came to Ameer's house and began to smoke tobacco. The prisoner asked her whose tobacco she was smoking? Prosecutrix replied not his but his wife's, nor was she in his house but his wife's. The prisoner then seized her and threw her from him. The crime the prisoner has alluded he did not commit, nor did the prosecutrix accuse her of it at that time, but merely of an assault.

The prisoner in his defence said, that the prosecutrix is the concubine of a lascar who is under considerable obligation to the prisoner. This lascar wanted deponent to go to sea with him. Prisoner declined to go in a small country ship; but that man went in the Indian Oak, on a salary of seven rupees per month, and desired him to give the prosecutrix four rupees a month on his account. After he had left the pilot in the ship, prosecutrix came every day during his absence for these four rupees. Prisoner refused to pay to her until her paramour was out at sea. One day she came to the prisoner's house and began to fight with him and made free with his wife's beadle and hookah. Prisoner desired her not to behave so disrespectfully towards him, nor so ungratefully to her paramour, as her present conduct indicated. Prosecutrix then began to cavil with the prisoner and began to be very obstreperous; he therefore seized her by the neck and turned her out. She then, in revenge, trumped up this charge against him. He, in conclusion added, that he had witnesses to prove both his character and that of the prosecutrix.

Bunoo proved, that the prosecutrix is a woman of loose character, and is the mistress of a khulasse. She once was a tenant of the defendant, and then attempted to extort some money from her son-in-law by raising a similar charge some time ago against him; they consequently turned her out of his neighbourhood. Deponent would not believe her on her oath. She is a woman of notorious character. The prosecutrix is the runaway slave-girl of a moonshie, living in deponent's neighbourhood. The prisoner is in no way related to the deponent.

Mahomed Tukie, the last witness's son-in-law deposed, that the prosecutrix was tenant of his mother-in-law for six months. Deponent did not see any thing unchaste in her conduct during that time, but the neighbours, and even her husband, often spoke of her as a woman of a very loose character.

Mahomed Ushroof, naib of the cazy of Calcutta, deposed, that he has known the prisoner, he is a native of Dacca. Deponent has known him for fifteen or sixteen years, ever since his arrival in Calcutta. He bears a very good character. He attends prayers in deponent's masjid, and hears deponent's sermons. He is a syrang by profession. Deponent never saw any thing lascivious in the prisoner's conduct, nor heard any reports against him of that tendency.

Meer Nussurut Ullie, Mahomedan priest, deposed to the character of the prisoner. He said he is a religious and pious man, having a wife and family; whereas the prosecutrix is a woman of loose character. He has seen her in the streets coquetting and jesting with young lads. Golam Mahomed, mahomedan tutor, deposed, that he has known the prisoner for a long time. He is a pious religious man, and shuns vice and women, but attends to the care of his wife and family.

This closed the prisoner's defence.

The learned judge then summed up the case, stated the nature of the indictment and said to the jury, that if they had any doubts as to their verdict or about the innocence of the prisoner, he would detail the evidence and the case as made out from it, and comment on it in his charge to them; but if they were unanimous as to his innocence, he would not do so.

The jury after a short consultation said, that they were unanimous as to the innocence of the prisoner, and returned a verdict of not guilty.

The judge remarked, that he entirely concurred with the verdict of the jury. The case, from the very nature of the prosecutrix's own statement, appeared to be a made up one; for it is not probable, that any man in his senses would, in the presence of his wife and family, commit the crime the prosecutrix had accused him of in open day. In discharging the prisoner, the judge said, that the prisoner in his opinion quitted the bar, without the slightest imputation on his character from the present charge.

Previous to investigation this case, the Judge intimated to the juvenile spectators, that perhaps it would be better for them to quit the Court-room, as there were circumstances in this case which might not be altogether proper for them to hear.

Soorooop was tried, for having, on the 1st of June last, stolen from the house of Gregory Chater and Anna Abraham, at China-bazar gully, a silver watch and several other articles of value.

Prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Gregory Chater, deposed, that he resides in Armenian-street. On May last, he resided in China-bazar lane. He knows the prisoner at the bar. He entered at the prosecutor's service a substitute for a bearer on the 31st of May last. On the 1st June last, prosecutor missed his silver watch with two gold seals, gold chain, one gold watch-key and one silver watch-guard, two gold rings, some gold studs, two brooches, and one pair of silver spectacles, &c. from the drawer of an almirah in the room which prosecutor occupied. The house at that time belonged to prosecutor's father's estate, and was in the hands of the registrar of the Supreme Court as administrator to the estate. Prosecutor and his sister had charge of it after his father's death, and lived there rent-free by the permission of the executor to the estate. On the 31st of May last, prosecutor's old bearer brought the prisoner as his substitute, and showed him the business he would have to do. The prisoner, on that day, and on the 1st June last, attended on the prosecutor to dress him, and saw prosecutor open the drawer in which the articles which have been stolen were kept. After prosecutor had addressed at 9 o'clock A. M. he shut the door of that room and went to breakfast, having previously deposed the articles aforementioned in the drawer, and locking it up the key of it in a small box on the top of the chest of drawers, and locked it and left the key attached to it. The prisoner quitted the room, together with the prosecutor. Up to the time prosecutor quitted that room only he and the prisoner had entered. Prosecutor likewise locked the door of this room and kept the key by him. After breakfast prosecutor went to his office, and returned home at 2 o'clock P. M. Prosecutor returned early by appointment to meet Mr. Kenderdine, Mr. Dickens' assistant, there to see the prosecutor's father's iron chest and value it, because the prosecutor's sister wished to purchase it, Mr. Kenderdine staid about one hour in the prosecutor's house on this occasion, and, after he had taken his leave, prosecutor unlocked his bed room and went into it. At about 5 o'clock P. M. the prisoner came to the prosecutor in his bed room and prosecutor asked him why he delayed coming from his office so long. Prisoner replied, that he was not aware that the prosecutor had returned home. The prisoner then replenished the lamp in the prosecutor's house with oil, and his nephews took away eight toys from his room to play with. The prosecutor then came out locking the door after her and sat down to converse with his sister. The children then returned prosecutor these toys, and prosecutor gave four of them to the prisoner. Prosecutor then went into his bed room, put four toys on a chair close to the door, and desired the prisoner to put the four by him in the same place. He replied, he would put it in the best place, and went, whilst prosecutor was standing outside, waiting for him. The room he was in was dark, and he stood there about twenty minutes. He then came out of the room. Owing to the darkness, prosecutor did not observe any thing peculiar in his appearance at that time. Prosecutor then looked the door and proceeded towards the door of his house, intending to go out. Prisoner met prosecutor in the way and requested permission to go and take his meals. This the prosecutor granted him. Prisoner then said he would not be able to return that night. Prosecutor said "you must," and then went out. Prosecutor came home at 10 o'clock p. m. and asked if the bearer had returned. The prisoner himself replied "yes." Prosecutor desired him to bring the light. Prisoner replied what is the use. Prosecutor then "insisted him," and then the prisoner brought the light. The prosecutor then saw his chest of drawers open and his articles not there. He missed them, and likewise the key. When prosecutor discovered his loss, he began to cry until his sister's servants came to his assistance. Deponent then insisted that the bearer had taken the articles, and his face became pale, and he wanted to run away. Prosecutor then had him detained, sent for some police peons and arrested the prisoner. They searched his clothes, but it was nothing was found. He was then sent to the police office, where deponent attended, and the prisoner was committed by Mr. O'Hanlon. Prosecutor never again saw the articles stolen from his bed-room. The room is an upstairs room, has a terrace from the hall to this bed-room. When the prosecutor returned at 10 p. m. he found the door of the room locked as he had left it. One of the windows of the prosecutor's bed-room which communicated with a verandah, was shut. The "prosecutor said to the man 'shutty his hand as you sees I shuts it.'" There was a passage from the hall to the verandah, "Nobody would open the room because prosecutor had the key by him;" and the prosecutor, in his confusion, getting into personalities, said to the judge, "you could not come to the room without my knowing it. All the articles stolen were valued at 100 rupees. Prosecutor valued the watch at twenty-one rupees. He bought it for sixteen rupees and he 'gilted' it, and the chain he made of six rupees which he also he gilted two rupees, therefore he valued the chain at ten rupees, but supposed the watch may fetch from sixteen to twenty rupees, and the chain eight rupees, which if sold will always fetch its value, two-gold bracelets and two rings, that is sixteen rupees each. This prosecutor having valued his second-hand articles at the same price which he had paid for them, the judge reproved him severely for the manner in which he gave his testimony, because the prisoner's sentence depended on the value of these articles. The prosecutor added, that he subsequently went to search the prisoner's baussa, i.e. his residence, as stated by him, and there learnt from the neighbours, that the prisoner had never lived there. The lock of his door was a common lock, and prosecutor does not know whether the other keys of the door might not have opened the lock of his bed-room. When the bearer was in that room, prosecutor "was not suspecting nothing." He did not suspect any thing "because the bearer had said he was put in best place, and he supposed the bearer was finding the best place, and he therefore did not say nothing to him when he came out."

Ekkor, the prosecutor's door-keeper, was next called. He could prove nothing beyond what the prosecutor himself had stated.

Koorah, servant of the prosecutor's sister, was then examined. His evidence likewise elucidated nothing.

The prisoner, in his defence, said, that his business consisted out of doors. He was never in doors except when the prosecutor was there likewise. During the day Mr. Chater sent several articles to the auction for public sale, perhaps the articles alleged to be stolen were sent there. Mr. Chater, after he had arrested the prisoner, searched his person, his home, and his box at Mrs. Goncalves' house, and nothing was found on him, nor were his clothes of that nature, consisting merely of a dhottee and a slight covering, in which he could not conceal any thing. He put in some certificates as to character from his former employers, and said he was only in the room half a minute at the time he put those mud images in the room, and Mr. Chater was in the room with him, and they left it together.

The nab of the Baria-bazar thanna deposed, that he, in company with the prisoner, and by the directions of Mr. Chater, in his presence searched three places where Mr. Chater said the prisoner had resided. They likewise searched his chest at Mrs. Goncalves' house in the Chandney, and a small box, and found nothing there. Mrs. Goncalves, on that occasion, told deponent that the prisoner had been long in her service, and she had discharged him in consequence of having stolen her earrings.

Francis Barretto Goncalves deposed, that the prisoner had been formerly in his mother's service. The certificate filed by the prisoner in Court was given to him by deponent, and is in his hand-writing, and deponent at that time believed him to be an honest, active servant, as he is stated in the certificate. Prisoner was twice in deponent's mother's service. What character he has borne subsequent to this certificate having been granted to him, deponent cannot say.

This closed the proceedings both for the prosecution and the defence.

The learned judge then summed up the case, adding that the crime as laid on the indictment, is a capital felony, because the articles are valued above 80 rupees, but if the jury believed them to be below that value, the crime would not then be a capital larceny. The judge then stated the case as made out by the evidence, detailing it and commenting thereon, and then left the case to be decided by the verdict of the jury.

The house is not the prosecutor's, as is stated in the indictment, but belongs to his late father's estate; and if it could be the house of both, it certainly could not be that of either individually, but must go to pay the debts of his father, if any, and until the estate's accounts are wound up, it main as assets in the executor's hands, and not as in England, where landed property is hereditary, necessarily devolving on the eldest son as heir-at-law.

The jury, after a short consultation, acquitted the prisoner, and the judge, after this verdict had been recorded, ordered his release.

True bills against the undermentioned individuals were found by the grand jury. Against Joseph Baig for violently assaulting Charles Stig, and stealing from his house in Goolah-bazar in June last, several articles of value.

Jessurhunder Kur with stealing from Deauth Ollah a cap, valued at 1-12, in May last.

Muddub Bonnergea for larceny, in a gown in Collooli-ch-street, and stealing seven pieces of cloth, the property of Sheikh Hyder Ullee.

No true bill against Munnee Tunkoor for larceny.

MONDAY, AUGUST 6, 1838.

There is an indictment, we here, preferred against a magistrate in the mofussil, for going into the jail in his zillah, and beating and otherwise maltreating some witnesses, who are confined in it, for want of sufficient bail.

for their appearance to give evidence in the case in which they are subpoenaed. The grand jury asked the learned judge, whether in the mofussil, a magistrate had, in the administration of his duty, the power to beat those confined in it, and whether the accused could plead the practice in justification of his conduct. The judge replied, that in all cases where they believed that any grounds whatsoever for the accusation laid was correct, it was their duty to send the case up to the Court for trial for their verdict did not finally decide the case, which was done by that of the petit jury. The verdict of the grand jurors only declares, that there were sufficient grounds to have the case investigated, and to send it therefore before the Court.

The grand jury brought in this day-two true bills against Mr. James Balfour Ogilvy, late magistrate of Burdwan, for an assault and false imprisonment. The cases against this gentleman are, we hear, to be tried next Monday. — Huskaru, August 7.

August, 8, 1838.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight, Judge.)

Pearymohun Bose and Thomas Gray, who did not answer to their names when called, were fined 50 rupees each.

Boghwan Ghose and Byrup Gangoollee were charged on the 7th of May last, with stealing from the house of Hurroo Khankee, and Fania Monnee, in Sheeboo Tankoor's lane.

The prisoners pleaded not guilty.

C. R. Prinsep, Counsel for the prisoner Byrup Gangoollee.

Hurroo Khankee deposed that she resided in Moodoo's mother's hut. She does not know the name of the place. Prosecutrix is a prostitute, she was acquainted with Moodoo, whilst she lived there, but she has left it fifteen days ago. She only occupied one room in the house. There were other tenants in the house who occupied the other rooms. The door of her room was in the lower apartments of the house. The door of it led to the compound of the house. Prosecutrix paid two rupees eight annas a month for the hire of it. The house is situated in Calcutta, in Sheeboo Tankoor's lane. Prosecutrix has known both the prisoners. They visited her three successive nights, and stole her property from thence. This occurred about four months ago in the month of Jyest. On the last day of that month, they visited her late at night about ten o'clock p. m. On the day last mentioned, the two prisoners visited the prosecutrix at about ten o'clock p. m., and, after they had been there about one hour, and had smoked a chillum and eaten some betel. Bhagwan Ghose prepared some woodapple sherbut, and put some deleterious drugs in it, and Byrup Gangoollee gave it to her to drink. Prosecutrix did not then know the name of the man who had prepared this sherbut. Prosecutrix declined at first to drink this liquor and said, that she had some of it ready prepared in her house, and would drink of it; but they pressed her to drink their preparation, and she, in compliance to their repeated solicitations, drank about one ounce of it. The sherbut, if prepared properly, has no intoxicating quality in it. Soon after prosecutrix had drunk the liquor the prisoners had prepared for her, she felt a sudden giddiness and become insensible. At this time prosecutrix had all her jewels on her body. What occurred during the time she lay thus in a state of stupefaction, prosecutrix cannot say. Prosecutrix's daughter had some jewels on her body at the time likewise, besides her and her daughter's jewels. There were some clothes hanging on a string in the room and, a silver mounted hookah, as the indictment stated, four sawrees and one dhootie. The judge asked her whether they were dhooties or sawrees. Prosecutrix said, there were no sawrees for she never wore a sawree; and the judge observing that the prosecutrix had on a sawree, asked her what clothes were those she had on in court. She said she called it a dhootie, others may call it a sawree. Prosecutrix's daughter is aged six years. She was at the time this occurred sleeping in another room. Prosecutrix recovered her senses six days after this had transpired, and then she discovered, that the prisoners had absconded from her house in the interval, carrying away all her's and her daughter's jewels, and the clothes lying in the room, likewise the hookah. The value of the property stolen by them on that occasion, might be 100 rupees, or thereabouts. One string of the waist chain and one dhootie, were found in the house of Gour, moodoo, in the presence of the prosecutrix, when she went with Ram Sing, the neta jemadar of the Cabberdangah thanna, to search his house. Prosecutrix immediately recognized them to be her property. The dhootie had the washerman's mark on it. There were more than one mark on it, because several washermen washed for her.

Randeem, jemadar of the police office, produced a dhootie and the one string of the silver waist band with the clasp on it. The prosecutrix examined them, and deposed, that they were her property.

Cross-examined by Mr. Prinsep. Prosecutrix deposed, that the mark on the dhootie is a triangular black mark in the corner. It is a very common one. All clothes sent to the same washer are marked similarly. There is no particular mark by which she can recognize the waist chain. It is a very common ornament, and almost every prostitute wears one like it. On the two former occasions, when the prisoners visited her, she lost nothing; they brought her some sacraments, and neither felt any effects from them, nor lost any thing on those occasions. The prisoners gave her one rupee in part payment of her wages. They had agreed to keep her in common, each to give her eight rupees a month, and the two rupees were paid in advance. Prosecutrix lives in the upper room of the house. There are four or five other prostitutes there in the same house, some of them are in keeping of baboo's, others receive visitors promiscuously; any person wishing to visit any of them, had only to go upstairs and walk without any hindrance in the room of any of them. Gour, moodoo resides about one coss from the place where this theft occurred. His mistress is Bedloomonee. What character either Gommohe or Pookoon Bear does not know, nor the name of the place where Gour, moodoo lived. The house where the robbery occurred belonged to Sheeboo Shaw. Prosecutrix occupied a room in the third story of it, and the door of it leads to the staircase. Moodoo's mother is the owner of the house prosecutrix occupied. Prosecutrix lived alone on the third story of Sheeboo Shaw's house. The other tenants occupied the second story of it. Boghwan Bose never visited her before the occasion just deposed to.

Tipporah, corroborated the statement of the last witness regarding the visits of the prisoners to her. Deponent said, that she is the servant of the prosecutrix. On the night of the last day of Joistee, deponent left the prosecutrix and the two prisoners in the prosecutrix's room and went to her house. When deponent returned to her duty next morning, she saw the prosecutrix lying insensible in the room and start naked, having been deprived of all her jewels which she had on the night previous. When deponent saw this, she gave information of it to the inmates of the house, some of whom came to see her; and leaving some of them with the prosecutrix, deponent went to the prosecutrix mother's house, and brought her to the prosecutrix's room. Prosecutrix's mother gave the prosecutrix some tamarand sherbut to drink, and prosecutrix then vomited some nauseating black stuff into a cup, in which there were the drugs of some woodapple sherbut. Deponent, by the order of the prosecutrix's mother, threw it away. Prosecutrix remained insensible for three or four days, and gradually, by constant cooling applications, recovered. It was about one week after the prosecutrix had drunk the sherbut given her by the prisoners, that she recovered perfectly. When the prisoners came the last time to see the prosecutrix, they brought with them some sweetmeats, two woodapples, in a hollow joint of a bamboo. Deponent did not see the prisoner throw up. The vomits of the prosecutrix were woodapple sherbut, mixed with some black drug. Deponent has been in the prosecutrix's service four months, and had never seen her drunk or in that state before this occasion.

Cross-examined by Mr. Prinsep. This examination elicited nothing by and what the deponent had already stated.

Byrub raur, deposed, that she is the mother of the prosecutrix, which was confirmed by the evidence of the last witness, and added, one Sheeboo doctor who lives in Sheebtollah cured her, but even now the prosecutrix gets deranged, and her eyes are inflamed, and she then talks at random. These symptoms she never saw in her previous to the date of the occurrence she has just related. This witness, as well as the one examined just previously, identified the jewels and clothes produced in court, to be the property of the prosecutrix.

Tarrah Monnee, deposed, as to the state in which she had seen the prosecutrix on the morning of the night after she had taken the woodapple sherbut.

Ramdeen, naib of the police office, deposed, that the articles he produced at the police office, were found by him on a search warrant in Gour, moodee's house. There were with him at the time the thanadar of the Jorasankoo and Cubberlangah thannahs, and an aurdauly of Mr. McCann, named Sham. Both the prisoners informed the deponent that the articles which had been stolen from the prosecutrix, and for the robbery of which they had been arrested, were in the possession of Gour, moodee. The silver articles were found by the prosecutrix on the top of the curtain, and the dhooties on the bedstead. The prosecutrix recognized them to be her property. Bhogwan Bose was present during the search, and when he saw the articles found, he said, "these are the things." Deponent arrested both the prisoners at the house of Byrub Gangoollee. When deponent arrested them they were lying on one bed. Deponent held out no promises or threats to induce the witnesses to confess. Deponent saw under the pillow of Byrub Gangoollee, a paper parcel, containing some poisonous powder, and a little in a rough state on a window, and in the place where he kept his firewood, deponent found a pick lock and a scindcuttee, used in burglariously entering a house.

Mr. J. J. McCann produced these articles, and deponent recognized them to be things he had discovered in Byrub Gangoollee's house.

Puddoo Moonnee deposed, that she is the mistress of Gour, moodee. The prisoner Byrub Gangoollee brought to her, some months ago, the dhooties and the waist chains produced in Court, to mortgage them to her for three rupees nine annas. Deponent referred him to Gour Mohun, and deponent afterwards, by Gour's direction gave the three rupees nine annas, and received the articles in pledge. Bupproo naib, and Mooncheeram were present when they were mortgaged. On a subsequent day, Bhogwan Bose came to deponent to redeem the articles, but deponent refused to part with them but to Byrub Gangoollee, as Bhogwan Bose was a stranger to her. Soon after the police jemadar came and searched deponent's house, and having found these two articles took them away.

Gour Kiawur Day, moodee, deposed, he is acquainted with Byrub Gangoollee but Bhogwan Bose is a stranger to him. On the 2d day of Joistee, Byrub Gangoollee brought the dhooties and waistband, and mortgaged them to him for three rupees nine annas. When property is brought to deponent to be mortgaged, deponent's inquires whose property it is. Deponent did so on this occasion, and Gangoollee said it was his, and as on a former occasion Gangoollee had mortgaged and redeemed a shawl, he from that circumstance believed him to be a respectable man and made no demur to the pledge. As the money lent on this occasion was to Puddoo Moonnee, deponent knew only of this loan.

Mr. J. J. McCann, deputy superintendent of the police office, deposed, that the articles produced by him in Court, he had received from Ramdeen Sing, police jemadar. The powders were never chemically examined. Deponent cannot give any reason why they were not examined. Deponent has heard that Mr. McFarlan did give orders to have examined them, but not to him, therefore he did not have them examined. The judge said, this was very strange, as the matter produced in Court resembled the stuff which had been given to the prosecutrix, therefore its nature or quality ought to have been examined by a medical person, to ascertain whether it had any poisonous qualities in it or not.

Mr. McCann then added, that he knew the stuff, it is called dhootoorah, and is an intoxicating drug; whether it is poisonous or not, deponent could not tell. Natives may be better able to speak of its qualities.

Ram Deen Sing recalled, deposed, that dhootoorah is an intoxicating drug and common in his country. Whenever any person wishes to commit suicide, he eats some of it and remains insensible for four or five days. He has never heard if any person had died from having eaten it. It might be poisonous, for doctors, whenever any person takes any of it, give them emetics to make them vomit.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

Mr. Prinsep for the defence said, that the indictment laid the stealing from the dwelling house of Hurroo Khankee, and of Tarrah Moonnee, but it appears the house was the house of Sheeboo Shaw, and neither of Hurroo Khankee nor of Tarrah Moonnee. The learned judge replied, that in the case of King v. Wm. Drey, the indictment laid, that the prisoner had entered the house of James Limond, whereas the house belonged to the Earl of Rodney, and was let to several lodgers, having a common door. The case was referred to twelve judges, and they decided that though the Earl of Rodney was the proprietor of the house, it was in law the dwelling house of each of the lodgers in it; and if were not so, there would not be any security to lodgers. In this case, as well as the one cited by him, all the lodgers entered by one door.

The prisoner Bhogwan Bose said, that on the night on which the robbery is stated to have occurred, he visited the prosecutrix. The next day, having heard of this robbery, he called first of all on Byrub Gangoollee, as he was a police informer, and having seen him on the fourth day, told him that if he could trace the perpetrators of the robbery, he would get ten rupees. He consented and desired prisoner to come the next day; prisoner did so, but did not see him. The next evening, he met Gangoollee in Gurrannah, and went home with him. Prisoner proposed to go and visit Hurroo that night. Gangoollee consented and said to wait till a person, who was expected, would come and then they would go altogether. Prisoner then having occasion to go out for a short time, did so, and left eleven rupees with Gangoollee, and on his return asked Gangoollee to return them. He refused and went to cook. Whilst Gangoollee was cooking, Ooky Doss came, and prisoner mentioned this circumstance to Ooky Doss, who replied, do you not know Gangoollee's character, and asked why he gave them to him, and advised him to complain at the thanna. Four more persons then came in, and they menaced the prisoner and kept him there during the night; but Ooky Doss went by prisoner's desire to the thanna and gave information. At midnight some police peons came to Gangoollee's house and took this prisoner into custody. The next day he saw at the police office a petarra and Hurroo, and there she accused this prisoner and Gangoollee of this theft; but if he had stolen any thing from her house, why did not she at once charge him with this crime, as both she and her maid servant knew him and his house, and the servant had met him the next day in the road. He concluded by saying, that Hurroo khaakee has a paramour named Petumber, and as this prisoner visited her by stealth, he believed that person had, in order to remove an obnoxious rival, preferred this false accusation against him; for when he was confronted with Hurroo at the police office, she replied that she had no charge to make against him. He said he had no witnesses to prove any of his allegations.

The prisoner, Byrub Gangoollee said, that the prosecutrix is a stranger to him and he knows nothing of this transaction. He called some witnesses to prove his character.

After some five or six witnesses had been called and did not answer to their subpoenas, a chokeydar of Cubburangah thanna, in whose beat the prisoner Byrub Gangoollee had lived, came forward and deposed, that he did not know the prisoner's character, but he has heard him declare that he has a situation at Hautkoolaw.

Ruggonauth Khan deposed, that the prisoner Byrub Gangoollee had been in deponent's service three years, and did his duty to deponent's satisfaction. Deponent is a salt merchant, residing in Hautkoolaw.

Roopchand Dutto gave the same evidence as the last witness.

This closed the defence.

The learned judge then summed up the case, read the indictment and explained its counts, then detailed the evidence adduced in this case in support of the prosecution, and how far it tended to establish the charges with which these prisoners are indicted; and after commenting on it and on the case made out for the defence, he directed their attention to the second count of it, which stated the theft had been committed in the house of Hurroo and Farrahmooness khaakee, whereas it appeared that the house was the property of Sheeboo Shaw, and the prosecutrix was a lodger in it. He then explained the case he had before quoted to Mr. Prinsep on this head, and observing, that unless they are certain that sawrees are identical with dhotees they are to leave their value out of consideration, because the indictment mentioned sawrees and the prosecutrix had stated that she never wore any sawrees. The judge added, he had mentioned this circumstance to the jury, because the value of the articles, if above fifty rupees, constituted a capital felony, if stolen from a dwelling house; and after he had stated that if all washermen's marks were alike, as the counsel of the defence attempted to show, there would hardly be any use in their affixing them; but they might in some cases resemble each other, he left the decision of the case to the discretion of the jury.

The jury, after a short retirement, found the prisoners guilty of a simple larceny.

The learned judge, after this verdict had been recorded, sentenced them both to two years' imprisonment in the house of correction with hard labour.

John George Ricketts was indicted for stealing a gold neck-chain, valued at 278 rupees, the property of Messrs. Pittar and Co. jewellers, from their shop in Old Court-house-street, on 30th June last.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Strettell appeared on behalf of the prisoner.

Charles John Pittar, deposed, that he is a member of the firm of Messrs. Pittar and Co. and the names of the other partners are Isaac Pittar and Robert Hamilton. Their shop is situated in Old Court-house-street, and they carry on the business of goldsmiths and jewellers. All the goods in the shop of the firm, belong in common to all the partners. Prosecutor, on Saturday the 30th of June, received a letter purporting to be written by a gentleman named Allan, an assistant in the custom-house, and requesting prosecutor to send him for inspection some ladies' gold neck-chains. Prosecutor then produced the note.

Mr. Holroyd read the letter, "Mr. J. Allan's compliments to Messrs. Pittar and Co. and begs that they will be kind enough to send him a few ladies' gold neck-chains, &c, for inspection, 30th June, custom-house."

This note was received at the shop, from a ticca bearer carrying a chaltah. In consequence of the receipt of this note, prosecutor sent four ladies' gold neck-chains for inspection. Prosecutor at the time he received this chit, supposed it to have been sent to the shop by Captain Allan, of the custom house. Prosecutor did not know Captain Allan personally, nor is he acquainted with his hand-writing, prosecutor sent these chains with Suddaram, his durwan.

"Mr. Allan has retained done chain, and will thank Messrs Pittar and Co. to send their bill for the same. 30th June, 1838."

The price of each chain was marked on it. Sooddaram, when he came with the second note, brought back only three chains. The one detained was, prosecutor believes, valued at 278 rupees, Sooddaram, prosecutor's durwan, was directed to take the chains with the bearer who had brought the chit, to the custom-house. On Monday following the bill was made out for the chain, and sent to the custom-house. Prosecutor gave orders for the bill to be made out and sent in the usual way, and prosecutor believes it was consequently taken to the custom-house by one of the bill-collecting sircars of the concern. All the bills are entered in a book and registered, and the bill in question was likewise made out, when the chain was sent on the 30th June last, and account must have been opened in the firm books as debtor to the amount of the chain. The bill for payment was seized by prosecutor in the name of the firm of Pittar and Co. Prosecutor did not get his money for the chain, and the sircar who went with the bill reported no person of the name of Mr. James Allan was to be found there. Subsequently, prosecutor ascertained that there was a Mr. Allan at the custom-house, for prosecutor received a letter from him, and it was signed W. Allan, and this gentleman himself subsequently saw prosecutor, and denied that the letters purporting to be written by him were his, nor did they bear his name. Prosecutor subsequently saw his chain at Mr. Hudson, his attorney, it was delivered to him by the prisoner, that was the first time. Prosecutor saw the prisoner, who was a total stranger to him. The chain is in the custody of Mr. McCann. The first chit was received by prosecutor at 3 o'clock p. m. the second not till past 5 o'clock, owing to some delay in sending the chain, because prosecutor was engaged in other business when he received the first chit.

Mr. McCann being sworn, produced the chain in Court. He said, he remembered the prisoner being brought to him at the police office in custody on that occasion. Deponent received the chain in question from Mr. C. J. Pittar at deponent's house. Prisoner was then in the custody of Mr. Hudson on the present charge.

Mr. Pittar looked at the chain, and testified it to be the chain belonging to the firm of Messrs. Pittar and Co. and it is the chain of which he has been speaking. Prosecutor does not recollect what the prisoner said to him at the time he delivered up the chain to him. He did say something, but with the exception of his having acknowledged that he had written for the chain, Prosecutor has forgotten the rest of his conversation on that occasion.

Cross-examined by the prisoner. Prosecutor did not go to Mr. G. F. Hudson's office, in consequence of any note received from the prisoner. He went because he had received a letter from Mr. Hudson informing him, that the prisoner was at his office. Prisoner was not then in custody. Prosecutor did not know until after he had arrived at Mr. Hudson's office, that he had been sent for by Mr. Hudson at the request of the prisoner to get his chain re-delivered to him. When prisoner returned the chain to the prosecutor, he was not in custody. The ticket showing the price of the chain in question is still on it.

The jury here requested to be permitted to look at both the chits, to see if they corresponded.

Prosecutor could not say whether the custom-house was open when he received the second chit. Prosecutor cannot say whether the bill for the chain had not been presented to the prisoner, previous to the prisoner having returned the chain to him. He does not know whether the bill was ever presented to the prisoner or not. The bill was made out on the 2d of July, last. The prisoner re-delivered the chain to prosecutor on Thursday the 5th of July last. The ticket on the chain must have been well known to the persons dealing with the prosecutors. Prosecutor believed, that if any person wished to dispose of the chain, he would let the ticket remain with the owner's name on it, in order to enhance the price for it by showing what he had paid for it. If the person went to sell it to an European shopkeeper, he might perhaps remove the ticket in order to avoid detection; but these kinds of articles are generally disposed of under false names in the bazars of Calcutta. Whether articles being manufactured by European jewellers fetch a higher price or not prosecutor cannot say. He has no practical knowledge of how these matters are conducted in the bazars. He only speaks from supposition.

Soondaram deposed, that he is a durwan in the employ of Messrs. Pittar and Co. He recollects on the 30th of June, that he went with a gold chain, by the orders of his employers, to the custom-house, in company with a bearer. On his arrival at the custom-house, deponent went upstairs and as directed by Mr. Lethbridge, the head assistant of Messrs. Pittar and Co. deponent put the chains before a gentleman, who the bearer pointed to the deponent. Deponent put the boxes with the chains in them on the desk before which the gentleman sat. The gentleman retained one of the chains which deponent had exhibited before him, and gave deponent a chit and desired him to return with it to Messrs. Pittar and Co. Deponent then left the custom-house, and was on his way to the shop in court-house-street, when the bearer who brought the chit to the shop came running after deponent, and told him that his master desired his return. Deponent then went back to the custom-house, where he met the same gentleman, with whom he had left one of the chains at the foot of the staircase of the custom-house. The gentlemen, when he saw the deponent, returned him the chain, which he had first returned, and informing deponent that he did not approve of it, desired to look again at the other three, out of which he selected another, and kept it. Deponent then returned with the other three chains and the chit, the gentleman had given him to Messrs. Pittar and Co.'s shop to Mr. Lethbridge, who received the three chains returned, and said, very well, go about your business to the deponent. The prisoner at the bar is the gentleman who returned the chain, and deponent identified the chain produced in Court to be the one the prisoner had received from him and returned. When deponent arrived at the custom-house, all the writers had let it except the prisoner, who was at his desk.

Cross-examined by the prisoner. When deponent went with constable Hamilton, he saw a gentleman sitting. Mistaking him at first for the prisoner, he pointed him out to the constable to be the person who had received the chain from him, but on perceiving the prisoner he corrected his mistake. When deponent took the chain they were in a large box. There was no name or address on it, nor any lock. Deponent carried no chit on the occasion. Deponent put the box before the prisoner, and lifted up the lid and showed the chains to the gentleman. No conversation beyond what the deponent has already deposed, occurred between him and the prisoner.

To a question of the jury, the judge replied, that the value of the article has nothing to do in this case, as it is a simple larceny.

Sreeram, bearer, deposed that he is a bearer who plies with a chattri for hire. A gentleman at the custom-house, one day at about one month ago, gave deponent a letter at half past 3, p.m. and desired him to take it to the shop of Messrs. Pittar and Co. and when he delivered it there, he was desired to wait a little, and then he would get an answer. After he had waited one hour, he urged Messrs. Pittar and Co. that it was getting late, and if he did not get an answer soon the custom-house would be closed.

Messrs. Pittar and Co. then called the first witness, and putting a chit and box in his hand, desired deponent to point out the gentleman who had given him the chit at the custom-house to the last witness. The rest of this witness's evidence corroborated the statement of last witness. This deponent further added, the prisoner was a stranger to him. When prisoner gave deponent the letter, he desired him, in case Messrs. Pittar and Co. should ask him who had given him the chit, to say Mr. Allan, of the custom-house.

William Hutton, constable of the police office deposed, that on the evening of the 5th of last month, he, by an order at the police office, went to the office of Mr. G. F. Hudson, the attorney, where he saw Mr. Hudson, Mr. C. J. Pittar, and the prisoner; and on his informing them, that he had come to arrest a prisoner, one of them pointed the prisoner to him and said, "we have delivered him over to you, you are now answerable for safe custody." Deponent had no warrant at that time against any one. Previous to deponent's leaving Mr. Hudson's office, Mr. Pittar handed a gold chain to deponent, and desired him to take charge of it. Deponent took it and delivered it to Mr. McCann. The prisoner subsequently wanted to give bail, but Mr. McCann desired deponent to take him at once to the town-guard. It was then between 6 and 7 o'clock p.m. and the police office had closed; therefore, it was too late to take the prisoner before any magistrate at that time.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner put in the following petition, which the clerk read to the jury in open Court.

My lord and gentlemen of the jury, I admit, I applied to the prosecutors for the chain in an assumed name, and I had an intention of paying them and not cheating them; I had formerly some business with them, but in consequence of my remissness in payment, they would no longer give me credit; therefore I maintain, without attempts to conceal from you, that I did this crime: I had formerly a situation in the custom-house, where I still attend, but as this was not the busy season the business was slack. My wife was about to be laid in and I was in distress, and had not the means of relieving my distresses. I, under the hopes of being soon able to pay the prosecutors, procured this chain with an intention to raise in the mortgage of it 50 rupees in the bazar, to relieve my present distresses. Having afterwards, on reflection, found that I acted wrong, I went in company with my attorney, Mr. Stuetell, and delivered up the chain to him, and desired him to write to Mr. Pittar to come and take it. I have never bore a bad character before, and I never attempted to hide or secret myself, therefore I hope when the jury will find me guilty of a wrong act, at least to bear my former good character, and my then distressed circumstances in consideration. He said he had some witness to call to support his case.

G. E. Hudson proved, that the prisoner called on deponent and expressed great contrition for his foolish act, and desired deponent to write to Mr. Pittar to come and take his chain. Deponent did so, and Mr. Pittar shortly afterwards called, and was followed by a constable. Deponent did not see the constable, nor he was then in his garden. Prisoner was under no restraint until Mr. Pittar came, and if he chose, might have left deponent's house with the chain any time previous to Mr. Pittar's arrival. Deponent did not witness the delivery of the chain by the prisoner to Mr. Pittar, but from what he has subsequently learnt he believes it was voluntary on the part of the prisoner.

John Cullodon deposed. He is a writer in the custom-house. He said that he has known the prisoner for the last ten or twelve years, and he believes he has always, up to the present transaction, bore a very good character, and conducted himself very well. For the last eighteen months, deponent has not had opportunities of seeing the prisoner often; previous to that he had known him intimately.

In this part of the proceedings, as the prisoner had called another witness to be examined, the jury addressed the judge and said that there was no necessity of going on further, because they had made up their minds already.

The judge said, that if they were disposed to acquit the prisoner, they could stop the proceedings but not otherwise: for if not prepared to acquit the prisoner, they must hear the whole of his defence. They cannot decide cases against any prisoner ex parte. One of the jurymen replied, that they had made up their minds to find him guilty; but, in consequence of his youth and contrition, they felt disposed to be lenient to him and recommended him to mercy.

The judge replied, that the jury had mislaid him, otherwise he would not have thus stopped trial and called on them for their verdict. They had nothing to do with larceny. They were sworn to dispense justice, and that is all that they have to do.

Mr. Thomas Lewis gave deponent a good character and said, from his long acquaintance with him he believed him to be incapable of committing a theft.

The prisoner wanted to put cases regarding the state of his wife. The judge said, if the prisoner chose it he may put this question, but he must recollect that the jury is to try a case of simple theft on a direct indictment. He then declined to put these questions, and observed to the judge, that he had several more witnesses to call as to character; but other examinations would occupy the time of the Court, too much and prolong the trial till a late hour.

The judge replied, that if he thought fit to call them, the court was bound to hear them how long soever the court may be delayed in examining them; but if the prisoner thought that the evidence as to character was sufficient, he may in that case stop his defence.

The prisoner declined to call any more witnesses, but closed his defence.

The judge then summed up the proceedings, and stated that the nature of the indictment, which was his having stolen and taken away from the house of the prosecutor's a gold chain, valued at Co.'s Rs. 278. The learned Judge then read the evidence for the prosecution, and commenting on it, explained to the jury how far the case made out tallied with the indictment, and where it differed. Here the judge remarked, that when a trader parted with his goods to the buyer, no matter under what pretences, there was an end of all theft. The legislator had certainly, to meet a case of this kind and protect trade's people from being imposed on, enacted a law by which the person so swindling trade's people was made liable to be indicted for misdemeanour, called "receiving goods under false pretences." If the owner of the property had, under misrepresentation, been induced to send goods, and had given instruction not to part with the goods unless he had received money for it, and the prisoner had taken and kept it, it would have been a felonious taking; but in the prosecution had opened an account and given credit to the supposed purchaser, then let the purchaser be who he will, and the credit, there is no theft, but the crime of taking goods under false pretences. If the jury believed the prisoner had, under these false pretences, obtained these goods to appropriate them and to sell them, then it is felony, which is not the case here; for there is no proof of his having attempted to sell it or secret himself; but had voluntarily afterwards himself restored it to the prosecutors. But it is for the jury to judge whether they believed he had the intention to steal it at first, and had repented of it afterwards, or whether the prisoner had resorted to these fraudulent means to get a credit under a false name, which he knew he could not get under his own signature from the prosecutors. In the latter case the prisoner cannot be convicted on this indictment. His crime will then be of receiving goods under false pretences, which although it is a heinous crime in itself, is not the crime charged in the indictment, and therefore he cannot be tried on it. He then dwelt on the nature of the defence the prisoner had made, and the witnesses he had produced to support his assertions, and the character they had given him, and thus left the case.

The jury, after a short retirement, returned a verdict of not guilty.

After this indictment had been recorded, the judge addressed him and informed him the verdict was correct from the facts described during the trial, and the nature of the indictment, but setting aside the legal points of the case, eliciting that he was guilty of an act of dishonesty, and if the indictment had been otherwise proved he must have been guilty. All he was a young man and in consequence of the circumstances in which he was placed, and his former good character and contrition, the judge would not, order an indictment for receiving goods under false pretences, to be proved against him; but hoping that this will be a warning to him and make him more careful in his future conduct, he ordered his release.—Hukara, August 8.

August 7, 1838.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight, Judge.)

Peary Mohon Bose and G. E. Dunbar, who were summoned on the petit jury, were called on their subpoenas and, not answering, were fined 50 rupees each.

Euseph was indicted for having, on the 23 of July, 1838, burglariously entered the house of Chaidas Sing, in Mutchua-bazar, and stolen from thence a brass water-pot and a brass-plate, valued at three rupees, and further having violently assaulted the said Chaudh Sing.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Chaudh Sing deposed, that he remembers, that one night in the month of Assaur last, the date of which he does not recollect, but it was on a Monday, he was sleeping in his hut in the Mutchua bazar road, when he was aroused from his slumber by hearing a jingling noise amongst his property. The night was a rainy night, and there was no light burning in his hut at that time. He got up and perceived a person grouping in the hut and seized him; the person on being seized, collared the prosecutor and threw him down in the compound of his house, close to a drain. This was at about two o'clock A. M. Prosecutor called for assistance and struggled with the thief. About a quarter of an hour afterwards Muneer, the chokeydar of the division, came to his assistance on hearing his voice, and seeing the situation, the prosecutor and his assailant were in which attempted to free the former from the hold of the latter; but not succeeding in the effort, he shouted for assistance to the neighbours, one of whom, named Nundoo Sing whose house adjoins the prosecutor's hut, and who is a peon in the salt department, came to his aid, and then they both, after a severe tussle, succeeded in releasing the prosecutor from the grasp of his assaulter, and took him into their custody. In this interval, the rain ceased, and the clouds which had obscured the moon, passed off. By the moonlight the prosecutor saw the features of the thief, whom he now recognized to be the prisoner at the bar. When the prisoner was arrested he had hold of the prosecutor's throat with his right hand and in his left he held a brass water-pot and a plate, the property of the prosecutor, valued at three rupees. The drain is distant three cubits from the prosecutor's door. On a subsequent examination the prosecutor ascertained that the prisoner had entered his hut by cutting the fastenings of the mats of his door towards this drain. The prisoner, when arrested, had on only a long gotee on his body. Prosecutor has been in Calcutta three months. He is a native of Patna. He pays one rupee a month for the hire of the hut. When he retired to rest on the night in question, he had put by his property in their usual place and fastened the mat door of his compound with a string. After the prisoner had been arrested, he was taken with the articles found on him to the thanna, where prosecutor, by the light of a lamp burning there, observed his features more attentively. Prisoner, when taken to the thanna, neither confessed nor denied the accusation against him. Prosecutor accompanied him that night to the office of Captain Birch, who ordered the prisoner to be taken to the town-guard. The next day the case was investigated by Mr. O'Hanlon, the magistrate in whose division the crime was committed, who, after taking the depositions of the parties, committed the prisoner to take his trial at the ensuing sessions. Muneer peon was going his usual rounds, when, hearing the prosecutor call "thief thief," he came to his assistance. The property said to have been stolen was produced by Muneer, police peon, and the prosecutor identified it to be the property found on the prisoner when he was apprehended and to have belonged to him.

Muneer chokeydar of the Mutchua-bazar thanna, and Nundoo Sing, chaprassie, both confirmed the statement of the prosecutor regarding them, and the latter added that he could hear from his hut the noise of the struggle between the prosecutor and the prisoner, and the gurgling noise the prosecutor made when the prisoner seized him by the throat. This ended the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner, in his defence said, that the prosecutor and his witness had all perjured themselves, and the former had trumped up the case against him in consequence of a private quarrel which had engendered ill will between the parties. On the night which this robbery is stated to have been committed, prisoner was sleeping in his room, having been unwell for three days previously. A hile after midnight he heard a houle in the streets, and, seeing a crowd at the prosecutor's door, he got up to see what had occasioned it, but he had scarce joined the crowd, when the prosecutor and his partizans perceiving him, taxed him with the theft, and arrested him in spite of all his remonstrances, and took him to the thanna. When prisoner was arrested, he neither had in his possession, nor did he see in the hands of any person, either a brass-pot or plate; but he was quietly standing spectator in the street. Seeing the prosecutor was bent on taking him to the thanna, he, on the jemadar's requesting him to go there, went voluntarily. Prisoner is a Persian and a foreigner and came to Calcutta to see Mirza Mhendeer, his countryman. The prosecutor and his witnesses are all strangers to him. He called Kurembux kidhantgar, his landlord, and Golam Hossain Khan and Mirza Farooth Ullee, his neighbours, to prove his assertions and depose as to his character.

These three witnesses, who were all serving men, long out of employ, proved, that when they saw the prisoner arrested he was standing in the street and had neither pot nor plate in his hands, nor were there any near him at the time. Whether he had been seized with any before they came to the spot they could not say. The prisoner's house is to the west of the prosecutors, and the thanna to the east of it. They are not aware of any ill will existing between the prosecutor and the prisoner. From the short acquaintance of a few months, during which time the prisoner has lived in their neighbourhood, they have not heard anything against his character. Prisoner was sick at the time he was arrested, his house is quite close to the prosecutor's hut.

This closed the case for the defence.

The jury, after a short consultation, found the prisoner guilty. After this verdict had been recorded, the Judge addressed the prisoner, and said, that he entirely concurred with the verdict of the jury, and, he believed, so must all those who had attested this trial. He then sentenced the prisoner to six months' imprisonment in the house of correction with hard labour.

After the sentence had been awarded, the prisoner requested the judge to commute it, as he was a foreigner. And transport him to his native country. The judge replied, that the safety of the natives of this country required, that the laws should be upheld, and all persons, whether natives or foreigners, were liable to the punishment prescribed against those who violated them. He ordered the prisoner to be removed.

During the investigation of this case, one of the jurors called the constable in waiting, and requested him to carry a chit to some person in the Court-house. The judge observing the constable talking to the jurors, rebuked him and said, that it was contrary to law for any person to converse with any juror whilst a case was under investigation; if any juror required any thing they must address the judge, who, if the request was reasonable, would accede to it.

Issurchuder Kur, was tried for having, on the 30th of April last, stolen from the shop of Dyanath Allah cap vender in Doomollah-lane, four military and one skull cap, valued at 8 rupees and twelve annas, the property of the prosecutor.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Sheekh Dyanath Allah deposed, that he is a cap vender and has a shop in Doomollah-lane. On the 30th of April last, on a Sunday, at 9 o'clock A. M. the prisoner, who is a stranger to him, and represented himself to be a hawker of caps, came to his shop and asked him if he had any military caps for sale, for, if so, and he would show them to him, he could get some sold for him, if he would give him his brokerage of two pice or the rupee for the amount of those sold. Prosecutor then showed him some caps, out of which the prisoner selected four military caps and one skull cap for himself; the prices of which, after some bargaining, were fixed at two rupees each military cap, and the skull cap at twelve annas. The prisoner then wanted to take these caps away with him, and when the prosecutor demanded the price of them, he replied that if the prosecutor would send a person with him to the fort, he, prisoner, would get the money from the officers, who owed him a considerable sum, and pay him. The prosecutor at first objected to this proposal, and said that he could not at that early hour procure any person to accompany the prisoner to the fort, but at the earnest request of the prisoner, the prosecutor consented and directed his servant Reazoddeen, who came to the shop at this juncture, to put the five caps which the prisoner had selected into a box, and go with the prisoner to the fort; who would then give him eight rupees and twelve annas, and when he should receive this sum he was to return four annas as brokerage to the prisoner, and give him the five caps, not otherwise. Prosecutor then made a memorandum of this sale in his day book, but no entry of it in his ledger, for he, on such occasions when he does not give credit to any person, only makes a temporary memorandum, which if the money is paid, he subsequently enters in his ledger as a ready money transaction; but if the goods are returned he cancels the memorandum. The sale to the prisoner was an outright cash sale, as the prosecutor had no dealings with him previously, he refused to give him credit. When the prisoner and Reazoddeen left the prosecutor's shop, the caps were carried by Reazoddeen. At about ten o'clock P. M. Reazoddeen returned to the shop crying and without either the caps or the money and unaccompanied by the prisoner. From what Reazoddeen told the prosecutor then, prosecutor desired him to return to the fort and search for the prisoner. Reazoddeen did so, and came back to the prosecutor's shop at dusk and said that he had not been able to find the prisoner. Prosecutor then desired him in all his perambulation about Calcutta to keep a look out for the prisoner. On the 5th of May last, Reazoddeen came to the prosecutor's shop about midday, and informed him that he had succeeded in tracing the prisoner, and had him confined in the old fort thanna. Prosecutor, in consequence of this information, proceeded there and saw the prisoner, and asked him what he had done with his caps, and requested him either to return them or pay their price. Prisoner, when he heard this, denied all knowledge of the prosecutor and the transaction regarding these caps, and called him a liar and abused him. Prosecutor finding it to be quite futile to argue the point with the prisoner, desired the thannadar to take him to the police office. When they arrived there, Mr. McCann recognized the prisoner to have been an old offender, and said to him, "you have only been released from the house of correction ten or fifteen days ago, and are now brought on a fresh charge to the police office;" and asked him what offence he had now been guilty of. The prisoner then acknowledged that he had purchased these caps and sold them to some soldiers in the fort, who had paid him nine rupees for them which money he had spent. Mr. McCann then referred the case to Mr. O'Hanlon, the division magistrate, who, after he had examined the parties, committed the prisoner to be tried at this session. Prosecutor has up to this moment neither seen his caps nor received their value.

Reazoddeen deposed, that he is a servant of the prosecutor, and he by the prosecutor's orders accompanied the prisoner with five caps to the fort, where he was to receive eight rupees twelve annas for them. On their arrival at the fort, the prisoner took deponent to the door of a barrack, where there were some soldiers, and requested deponent to entrust the caps to him, and he would go with them into the fort and bring from the officers the price of them and give it to this deponent. Deponent objected to this proposal, and asked to accompany the prisoner into the barracks with the caps; but the prisoner told him that he would not be permitted to go into the barracks by the sentry on the guard, for none but the barrack sweepers were permitted to enter the barracks and he represented himself to be one of them. After this explanation as deponent had never been inside the fort before, and he did not know whether the prisoner had stated a truth or a falsehood, he permitted him to take the caps into the barracks, and waited at the outside from 10 o'clock A. M. till 12 o'clock midday, when, as the prisoner did not return, he began to cry, fearing the displeasure of his master for what he had done. Some person seeing deponent cry, inquired the cause of his lamentation, and when deponent had informed them of it, one of them seized deponent by the hand, took him into the barrack which the prisoner had entered, and helped deponent to search for him, but without avail. He then advised deponent to return to his master and acquaint him with what had just transpired, and added that some swindler had cheated him. Deponent did as advised, and by his master's order he again returned to the fort, and searched vainly for the prisoner. As deponent's master had ordered him never to forget the prisoner during his rounds in Calcutta, deponent observed this order, and, on the 5th of May, as he was in company with another hawker of caps going his rounds, he saw the prisoner on the strand road opposite the Bankshall, leaning against the iron railings. When the prisoner perceived deponent he attempted to skulk away, but deponent went up to him and asked him either to return the caps or pay the eight rupees twelve annas. The prisoner then got angry, abused him and denied all knowledge of the deponent or these caps, and struggled to free himself from the grasp of deponent, who held him by the wrist. He likewise proposed to this deponent, that if he would accompany him to his house in Mutchua-bazar, he would pay him the nine rupees. Deponent declined doing this, and insisted on prisoner going with him to his master's shop and called Shumo to help him to take the prisoner there. As Shumo was coming to his assistance, prisoner, with a sudden jerk, freed himself from deponent's grasp and run off towards the north stairs and deponent followed him, both crying "stop thief," "stop thief." Some of the passers by hearing the hue and cry, and, seeing deponent and Shumo pursuing the prisoner, inquired of them what was the matter, and when they had ascertained the cause of the pursuit, some of them arrested the prisoner and made him over to the custody of a burkundaze, who had just been relieved from duty at the custom-house. Before this burkundaze, deponent preferred his accusation against the prisoner, who thereupon took him to the thanna and informed the thannadar of the reason of his bringing the prisoner there. At the thanna, the prisoner denied all knowledge of either deponent, the prosecutor, or the caps; and when deponent had brought his master, as directed by the thannadar, to the thanna and confronted him with the prisoner, he persisted in his denial and abused them both. The thannadar then took the parties to the police office. The rest of this witness's evidence was but a corroboration of what the prosecutor had just before deposed, regarding this transaction. On cross-examination, deponent denied, that he had consented to the prisoner going with the caps to Dum-Dum, and paying him the eight rupees twelve annas on his return from thence.

Shumo, the hawker of caps, who said he was a servant of the cap vender, and the burkundaze, alluded to by this deponent, confirmed his account of the capture of the prisoner in toto. Deponent does not know whether persons are not allowed to hawk goods in the fort without a pass.

This ended the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner in his defence stated, that he was long acquainted with the prosecutor, and had often bought opium on credit from him; that this sale was likewise a similar transaction, and he, with the consent of Reazoddeen, accompanied some soldiers who had purchased these opium from him to Dum-Dum. On the evening of the 1st May, he received the nine rupees from them, on the 2d he returned to Calcutta fatigued with his journey, rested on the 3d, and on the 4th he met Reazoddeen in the Strand road and offered to pay him the nine rupees if he would accompany him home. Reazoddeen refused to do so, and insisted on having the money then and there, and as the prisoner could not pay him instantly he abused and had him confined at the thanna, from whence he was carried before Mr. O'Hanlon at the police office, where the prisoner acknowledged his debt of nine rupees to the prosecutor, and Mr. O'Hanlon desired him to pay it instantly and would not permit him to go home and pay it; but as the prisoner could not pay it immediately, he confined him for three days at the town-guard, and then committed him to the sessions. He called no witnesses. This closed his defence.

The jury, after a short consultation, found the prisoner guilty.

After this verdict had been recorded, the judge remanded the prisoner till the last day of the sessions.

Nujroo was indicted for having, on the 15th of July, 1838, stolen two bank of Bengal notes, to the value of Co's Rs 25 each, and six rupees in silver, from Muddab sircar at the custom-house, the property of Ramchunderdoss, munjeet merchant.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Ramchunderdoss, munjeet merchant, deposed, that he is a Googhraatee merchant, and resides in the Moorgy-butta-lane. Prosecutor has never seen the prisoner before this day, and is a total stranger both to his name and profession. Prosecutor has a sircar in his service named Aluddab. Prosecutor recollects that about fifteen or twenty days ago, having to pay some duty at the custom-house to effect a clearance of some sugar, he gave Aluddab sugar two bank of Bengal notes of twenty-five rupees each, and ten rupees cash, and desired him to proceed with them to the custom-house, pay fifty-six rupees as duty on the sugar, and give four rupees to the sircar of that office, and procure a challan for the sugar. Prosecutor took down the number of these notes, but kept no memorandum of them; as it is not usual to keep any registry of the nos of notes below fifty rupees value, nor of the dates of their payment. These two notes were his property. He has not seen them since that day. He has heard that they were stolen at the custom-house.

Muddab Chunder deposed, that he is a sircar in the service of the prosecutor, and transacts his mercantile concerns. He perfectly remembers that on the 13th of July, at 10 o'clock A. M. the prosecutor gave him two bank of Bengal notes of twenty-five rupees each, and ten rupees in silver, with directions to go to the custom-house and obtain a pass for some sugar, and pay fifty-six rupees duty there, and four rupees for the minor expenses contingent thereto. When deponent received these notes, he made no memorandum of them, but wrapped them in a piece of paper, and tied them to the end of his coverlet, and proceeded to the custom-house. On his arrival there, he proceeded to the department where passes are granted, and having paid four rupees to a sircar there, he obtained two passes which he understood were the passes. After deponent had received these passes he proceeded to a window, near which there was ample light, and seating himself on the floor, he put the two notes and the six rupees tied in a bundle before him, took a pen which was stuck behind his ear, and, with it, pierced a hole in the corners of these two papers, and then, having twisted some thread, he got up, turned his face to the light of the window and in about two minutes, stung the two papers together with the thread. After this he tucked the papers in his waist cloth, and, on turning himself towards the place where he had placed the parcel with the notes and the six rupees, he missed them, and began immediately to search for them, making inquiries from the peons and the duffrees who were not very far from him at that time. In reply to his interrogation, one of them, named Sheikhr Keeno, a chaprassie attached to the custom-house, pointed to the prisoner who was then descending the staircase, and said, "I do not know what notes or monies you allude to, but if you mean the small paper parcel which was lying close to you on the ground, Nujroo has picked it up." His conversation between this deponent and Sheikhr Keeno, occurred at the head of the staircase. Whether Nujroo heard this conversation or not deponent cannot say. He was close enough to hear it, for they talked in their usual tones. Deponent, however, suspects that Nujroo did hear it, for he immediately afterwards began to descend hastily, and although the deponent repeatedly begged him to stop, as he had something to say to him, he paid no attention to the call, but only quickened his steps. Deponent then, accompanied by Keeno, pursued him, and reached for him all over the custom-house for a short time, but failing to find him, deponent went to Mr. Walker, the collector of customs, and related to him all that has just occurred. Mr. Walker desired deponent to search for him again, and gave a peon directions to assist deponent in the search. Failing to find the prisoner, deponent again went to the collector and intimated him of the result of his inquiries. Mr. Walker then gave him advice to go to the police office, and have the prisoner apprehended for the theft. Deponent, consequently went there, and having obtained a peon from Mr. McCann, he first returned to the custom-house, and searched again for the prisoner; but not finding him he took Keeno with him, and all three proceeded to the prisoner's house in Mutchun-bazar. When they arrived there, they, on inquiry, were informed by the inmates, that the prisoner had been there, but had just left it. As they were about to return, they met the prisoner in charge of Nowoware, peon of the custom-house, near a moddee's shop, close to his house. Immediately the prisoner saw this deponent and his companion, he, before ever they could address him, said to deponent, "I have found the money you have lost; it is in my house, what will you give me for having found it." He then desired one of the by-standers to go into his hat and bring the money from it, and that person proceeded by his directions and brought a red silk kerchief from thence, in which were tied fifty-six rupees in silver. He saw no more on that occasion. Prisoner gave the money to deponent, and said there is the money, I have exchanged the notes. Deponent took the money, counted and examined it, and finding it to be the exact sum he had lost, and good money, he took it, and then the two custom-house peons, the police peon, and deponent, took the money and the prisoner before Mr. McCann at the police office, who asked the prisoner where he had cashed the notes, and sent Henry Thurston, constable, with the prisoner, to the banker's shop where the notes had been cashed to recover and bring them to him. Prisoner then took them to the shop of a banker in Loll-bazar, nearly opposite the police office, and told the constable that he had exchanged the notes at that shop. The banker at the shop denied all knowledge of the prisoner or the transaction mentioned by him, and so the prisoner's assisting, the constable began to examine the banker's day book. Whilst he was so doing, the banker's assistant, Moodoo, came to the shop and said he had negotiated these notes during the banker's absence from the shop, on receipt of four pice brokerage, and had paid them to Gopaul Kisto Newgy, the bangan of a French merchant named Monsieur Teron, with Rs-200, and took the parcel to the house of Monsieur Teron. Gopaul Kisto Newgy said that he had paid the notes to Messrs. Jenkin, Lowe and Co. auctioneers, Lall-bazar, where they all went and eventually succeeded in getting these notes from the auctioneers. The constable received these notes from Gopaul Kisto Newgy and brought them to the police office and handed them to Mr. McCann. The case was then heard before Mr. O'Hanlon, the division magistrate, who, after he had taken the depositions of the parties concerned, committed the prisoner to take his trial at the ensuing sessions. One hour and half elapsed from the time this deponent first missed the notes, till the value was returned to him by the prisoner. Deponent has known the prisoner as a custom-house peon and no further.

Keenoo Shikih, custom-house peon, confirmed the statement made by the last witness regarding the part he took in this transaction, and added, that whilst Muddub was stringing the pass papers, he saw Nujroo approach the place where the parcel containing the money was lying, press it with his toes and then take it up and tuck it in his waist cloth and walk down with it. As Muddub had requested deponent to keep an eye on the parcel, when he saw Nujroo taken up and walk off with it, he followed him and requested of him to return it; but he, instead of minding what he said, took the parcel to an Arab ship captain, who had formerly been in the prosecutor's employ, and producing the two notes asked the value of this Arab, who told him they were two Bank of Bengal notes of twenty-five rupees each. Nujroo then put the parcel in his waist cloth and walked out of the office, and deponent saw no more of him until he was arrested at his house, by the order of Mr. Walker. After relating all he knew about this affair to him he was ordered to accompany Muddub sircar and show him Nujroo's house. Nujroo has been in the sea custom-house for about eight years, formerly he was in the inland custom-house. What character he bears deponent cannot say.

Rahman Khan, jemadar of the custom house, deposed, that he, by the orders of the collector, searched for the prisoner on the day in question, and having found him in the export department, he took him to the collector, who asked him regarding these two notes, and having ascertained that they were below in the prisoner's possession, ordered deponent to send two peons with him and take him to the police office, together with the money, on a charge of theft. He consequently made him over to the charge of Nowcoo vice chupfasse. He gave the prisoner a good character for honesty, and said he had known him for upwards of eight years.

Sheikh Nowcowrie deposed, that he, by the direction of the last witness, took the prisoner to the police office, where, not seeing Mr. McCann, the prisoner begged to be taken to his house, where he said he had the money and would return it to Muddub sircar. Deponent took him there accordingly, and when they arrived there saw Muddub and his party, who took the prisoner and the money under their charge. This witness likewise gave the prisoner a good character.

Mloodsoodoon, sircar, the banker's assistant, Gopaul Kisto Newgy, the bangan of the French merchant, Henry Thornton, the police constable, and Mr. J. J. McCann, the deputy superintendent of the police, each corroborated the evidence which had been given regarding the part they took in this transaction by the former witnesses, and the latter produced the two notes in Court.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner in his defence said, that he had found the parcel containing the two notes and the six rupees, which it is alleged he had stolen, lying in the custom-house, and had picked them up and informed Mr. Bracken, the deputy collector of the custom-house, of it, who desired him to keep it till it was claimed by some person; and when he ascertained that the money belonged to Muddub sircar, he voluntarily returned the money to him before ever he was arrested on this charge. Notwithstanding he was accused of the theft and taken to the police office, and thence committed to the sessions. The prisoner added that he had subpoenaed Mr. Bracken to prove the truth of his defence, and to depose to his character.

Mr. Bracken was then called on his subpoena, but did not answer.

Mr. King, the jailor, informed the Court, that Mr. Bracken was on the grand jury, where a constable had given him his subpoena in this case, and added that he had sent notice this morning to Mr. Bracken that this case would come on for hearing to day, but he has not seen Mr. Bracken in court to day.

The judge then wished to send a person to the custom house to desire Mr. Bracken's attendance at the court, but he was informed that as it was then past six o'clock p. m. the custom house had closed business for that day, and Mr. Bracken would not be found there then.

The judge then informed the prisoner that if he thought it necessary he could compel the attendance of the first person in the land in his case on his subpoena, or else give his recognisance on it estreated, and asked the prisoner whether he wished Mr. Bracken to be called on his subpoena and have his recognisance estreated. The prisoner replied that Mr. Bracken's evidence would have been of material service to him if he had attended, the court and testified on his behalf; but as he has not done so, and he is his master, he had no wish to deal harshly with him and compel his attendance. He then called several respectable native writers of the custom-house, who deposed that they had known the prisoner for upwards of fourteen years, during which period he had served both in the inland and the sea custom-house. He had always borne a good character, and had often been entrusted with large sums of money, but never embezzled any of it. They would not, from the knowledge of him, have believed him capable of committing a theft of this petty nature.

This closed the prisoner's defence.

The jury after a retirement of about half an hour, returned to the court and acquitted the prisoner.

The judge after this verdict had been recorded, informed the prisoner of it, and, after cautioning him to be more circumspect in his conduct, ordered him to be discharged from custody.

The court then adjourned till ten o'clock a. m. the next day.—Hincharu, August 9.

August 8, 1838.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight, Judge.)

Radanauth Paul not answering to his name as a juror, was fined forty rupees.

Muddub Shaw was tried for having, on the 29th of July last, burglariously entered the house of Sheikh Hydur Uily, and stolen from them several articles of cloths, &c.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty

Sheikh Hydur Uily deposed, that he resides at Colootollah, where he has a shop. He is a merchant and a native of Lucknow. Deponent had in his shop sixty bales of cotton cloth and each bale contained 140 pieces. Kakab, baboo, Gourmook Missar, and Soomarree lived day and night in that godown. Thirteen days ago, whilst prosecutor was sitting in his house, at 6 o'clock p. m. a person came and informed him that his shop had been entered by a robber and some pieces of cloths abstracted from it, and the thief had been arrested and was in custody. When prosecutor heard this, he became alarmed and ran to the shop, and perceived one of the bales of mahanipulee cloths had been cut open, and, on examination, he ascertained that seven pieces had been stolen out of it. The house where the prosecutor's shop is, is upper roomed, and the lower apartments are occupied by the prosecutor, and a compound adjoining it. The door of the compound, when he arrived there, was shut, as likewise the door of the room where these bales were kept; but a side door in the compound, which opens into a gully and a side door leading from another room to the room where these bales of cloths had been, were open, but prosecutor did not perceive any mark of violence on the door to suspect that these doors had been forced open. The robbery was committed on the night of Friday. At midday of that day, prosecutor had seen the bales in quest on board. On the Saturday when he heard of this robbery, and examined the bales, he discovered the fastenings of it and the wrapper to be cut, and seven pieces lying on the floor, quite close to the bale. The cloths are marked 25½. This is the prosecutor's mark. Prosecutor looks at the prisoner and recognizes him. Prosecutor recollects having seen him on the day when he was robbed, in the custody of Gourmook and Soomarree. He was a perfect stranger to the prosecutor. The cloths were the prosecutor's property. Prosecutor saw no breach made in the wall, and therefore he cannot say how the prisoner entered the house. Kakah, baboo, was directed by the prosecutor to shut the doors at night, but his servants used to perform their duty. Prosecutor did not see the prisoner till after his apprehension.

Gourmook Missur deposed, that he is the servant of Kakah, baboo, and lives in Colootollah-street. The godowns below are rented to Hyder Uly, the prosecutor, who keeps his merchandise there. Here this deponent stated the number of the bales which were kept in that godown. Deponent recollects the 13th of Shrawbon last. It was on a Friday. Deponent on that night shut all the doors at 11 o'clock p. m. and retired to rest. [Here deponent described the situation of the house and the doors, which corresponded with the prosecutor's description of them.] A part of the outer or the inner wall of the house or compound was broken. The room where the bales were kept is an open room, but the room adjoining it, in which the deponent sleeps, has a door. There is no direct communication between these two rooms. Whilst deponent was asleep that night, he was awakened by hearing a bale of cloth fall on the ground. Suspecting that all was not right, he listened, and, shortly afterwards, he heard another bale fall. Deponent could not see any thing, because he was sleeping within curtains. Deponent then roused Soomarree, who was sleeping beside, and they both then went to the room where the bales had fallen. Deponent and Soomarree stood there and called to Kakah, baboo, to come to them. Deponent saw nobody else besides Soomarree there. Kakah, baboo, then came down and desired Soomarree to light a candle and bring it to the place. Soomarree did so, and when the light was brought, they perceived that one of the bales had been cut open, and some of the pieces which were tied in it lying scattered in the road. After this, Kakah, baboo, ordered deponent to go and see if any of the doors were open. Deponent then went and ascertained that one of the compound doors were open. Deponent further, by Kakah, baboo's, orders, searched the house, but did not perceive any stranger in it. Shortly afterwards deponent said to Kakah, baboo, that he believed the thief must be concealed in the godown where the bales were kept. Kakah baboo replied, "If you think so go and search." Deponent consequently went and searched the godown, and on lifting up the blankets which covered the bales, he perceived the prisoner between two bales of cloths in a sitting posture. Deponent, when he perceived the thief, called out, "here is the robber concealed between the bales." Kakah, baboo, said "seize him." Deponent then grasped the thief's arm, and when he did so, the prisoner, whose face he then perceived, for the day had then dawned, gave a sudden jerk, forced himself from the deponent's grasp and ran out. Deponent is sure that the prisoner is the man whom he discovered there. As the prisoner was running out of the godown, deponent called out to Soomarree to stop him. Soomarree, hearing deponent's voice hastened to the spot, and seized the prisoner in deponent's presence. The prisoner when apprehended, said he had committed a great offence, and entreated the deponent and Soomarree to forgive him and release him, and he would never be guilty of the like crime again. Deponent by Kakah, baboo's, directions, searched the place where he had discovered the prisoner, and found there a two bladed pen-knife, which the prisoner owned to be his property. Kakah, baboo, then desired Soomarree to go and give information of this theft to Paunchoo, baboo, the proprietor of the house, and to Sheikh Hyder Uly, who, on receipt of information, came to the place. The thannadar of the Colootollah thanna came soon after sunrise. The prisoner was apprehended at about 4 o'clock a. m. in the morning. The thannadar came and questioned the prisoner. Deponent supposes the prisoner must have entered the godown and hid himself previous to the door being shut.

Soomarree deposed, that he is the servant of Kakah, baboo. The rest of this witness's deposition corroborated the testimony of the last witness. The cross-examination elicited nothing.

Gopaul Chunder Biswas deposed, that he is commonly called Kakah, baboo, but Gopaul Chunder Biswas is his real name. Deponent is acquainted with Sheikh Hyder Uly, but he is not the prosecutor's servant. Deponent is a commission agent by profession, and lives in Colootollah, and the house is the property of Paunchoo, baboo. Deponent rents it from the owner, and has under-letted the lower apartments to Hyder Uly. Deponent receives the rents from Hyder Uly and pays the rents of the whole house to the owner of it. Deponent has occasionally transacted business for Sheikh Hyder Uly, who lives in Moorglyhatta-street. Here the deponent confirmed the statement of the two former witnesses regarding the discovery of this theft, and the apprehension of the prisoner.

The thannadar of Colootollah thanna deposed, that being informed of this theft, he went to the place where it had been committed, viz. the residence of the last witness, where he saw the prisoner in custody. A bale of cloth was cut in a godown and some of the pieces were near the bale and a penknife, which was given to him by Paunchoo baboo. On being requested by the inmates of the house to inquire of the prisoner how he had entered the house, he asked him that question; and the prisoner replied, that he, in company of another person, came into the house where he was apprehended, shortly after gun-fire in the evening, and had concealed himself all night amongst the bales. That person lives in jaun-buzzar road, but the prisoner said he did not know that person's name. When the falling of the cloths alarmed the inmates of the house, that other person jumped down and opening the wicket ran out of the house; but the persons who arrested prisoner having arrived before he could follow that person, he retreated and hid himself amongst the bales, from whence he was found and given into custody. Beyond this deponent had no further conversation with the prisoner, but took him before Mr. O'Hanlon, the magistrate of the division to the police, who committed the prisoner to be tried at the ensuing sessions.

On cross-examination, deponent said, that when deponent called at the house where the theft had occurred, he met no obstruction, but was instantly admitted, and when he first saw the prisoner he was in the custody of the inmates of the house, and his hands were bound together. This deponent produced the seven pieces of the cloths found in the gown, cut out of the side by the prisoner, and said that they had remained ever since that morning in his custody.

In this stage of the proceedings Sheikh Hyder Ullly and Gopalchunder Biswas, recognized the cloths to be the property of the prosecutor, and the former showed the mark, 27½ on the pieces.

This ended the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner, in his defence, said, that Punchoo, baboo, to whom prisoner is indebted a small sum of money, sent a brahmin to call him. Prisoner consequently went to his house in his neighbourhood, from whence after the prisoner and Punchoo Shaw had smoked a chillum and conversed on in different topics, Punchoo Shaw demanded from the prisoner the money the prisoner owed him; and when the prisoner replied that he had already paid him five rupees and owed him only six rupees more, for which he requested him to wait a while, and take one rupee per month by instalments, Punchoo baboo said nothing; but, under pretence of going out on a spree, he enticed him near the house where this theft is stated to have occurred, and when they were quite close to it, Punchoo pulled the prisoner into the house, and shutting the door beat him most unmercifully, and said to prisoner, "villain, you have been abusing my wife, either pay me my money directly or else I will make you repent it to the latest day of your life." Punchoo baboo then sent for Hyder Ullly. After they had consulted for a short time, they bound the prisoner and accusing him of this theft they made him over to the custody of the thannadar of Colootollah as he could prove by his witnesses, one of whom can prove that the prisoner was in his company till past 11 o'clock of the night in which it is deposed he had hid himself, even since nine o'clock p. m. and they would testify to his character likewise.

The prisoner then called four or five witnesses, some of whom supported his defence and gave him a good character, whilst others said they knew nothing about him or the matter in question; and one of them, a stupid looking chokeydar, when questioned, lifted his hands and eyes towards the judge and said "you are the emblem of the fountain of justice," and remained dumb.

This closed the prisoner's defence.

During the trial one of the jurymen wished to ask the thannadar of Colootollah, whether the prisoner was well known to the police office as an old offender or not, in order to ascertain his former character.

The jury, after a short consultation, returned a verdict of guilty of a larceny only.

After this verdict had been recorded, the judge addressed the prisoner, and sentenced him to one year's imprisonment in the house of correction, with labour. The prisoner begged the judge to commute his sentence to transportation, as he could not survive twelve months in the house of correction.

Goohee, duffrey, was indicted for stealing on, the 12th April 1838; a silver guilt watch, the property of T. Dickens, Esq. from the office of the registrar to the Supreme Court, valued at Rs. 80. Another account stated the watch to be the property of floor.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

James Low, deposed, that he is the head clerk in the registrar's office, and has charge of the watches, jewels, trinkets, &c. which the registrar receives in his capacity of a registrar to the court. On the 12th April 1838, deponent received an engine turned watch belonging to the estate of Robert Pegan, indigo planter, by dawk. The No. was 2,350, and the maker's name, George Hedger, London. An entry of its receipt was made in a registrar's book, called the trinket book. All similar goods which come into the registrar's office, are entered in this book. Here the deponent produced the book and said, there is no particular person to keep this book, but it is kept under deponent's superintendence and it is deponent's duty to see that the entries are correctly made. The entry regarding the watch in question was made by Bonnerjee, a writer in the registrar's office in deponent's presence. Deponent did not compare the entry with the watch, because it was exceedingly late that day, but deponent did see the watch. Deponent never compared the entry, but left the watch on his desk for the purpose of comparing it during the next day; but he saw it corresponded with the letter of Mr. Morrison, the judge who forwarded the watch to the registrar's office from Jowpooi by dawk. It came in a small tin box and had two gilt seals, one water stamp, one chain, and one brass chain. Deponent does not know Mr. Morrison's signature, but the letter is dated the 14th of April last. Deponent subsequently compared the entry with the watch at the police office, when he found it to correspond. The watch was in this stage of the proceedings produced by J. Street, the police constable, and deponent identified the watch to be the one which he had received by dawk from Mr. Morrison. Deponent could not depose as to its value, not being a judge of the value of watches. Deponent, when he left the office, on the day on which he received the watch, locked it in his desk as he left the office to go home. Deponent never quits the office without locking his desk. Deponent received the watch on the 12th April, 1838, but he did not miss it till the 14th May, 1838. Deponent, about the latter period, in consequence of a suspicion arising in the duffrey's conduct, from circumstances which occurred, had a search made in the office for the several trinkets under deponent's charge, and, on inquiry, discovered that several articles, and the watch in question were missing. Previous to this search, which was made on Monday the 14th May, on the evening of Saturday the 12th of May, deponent had seen the watch late in the evening at the police office, where, as Mr. McFarlan was absent, deponent could not examine the watch and identify it; but had Mr. McFarlan been present and the watch submitted to him for identification, he could then have identified it. Seeing the watch at the police office on Saturday 12th May, was the cause of deponent's having the search made on the 14th May, Monday. Deponent, on a former occasion, mixed three gold coins, and had an inquiry instituted amongst the servants attached to the office, and the sepoys at the office to learn from them whether any of them had seen the doors of the office ever opened after or before office hours; but nothing was elicited from the inquiry. Several trinkets previous to this had been lost from the office. Deponent, on that occasion, ordered the prisoner to follow him to the police office, from whence an officer from the police office was sent with the prisoner to search the prisoner's and his brother's house, and to point the latter to the police poems. Prisoner did on that occasion follow deponent to the police office, and his house was searched. Deponent never parts with his keys to any person, and therefore no person could get access to any of the locked articles unless he previously got possession of the keys of the boxes and desks in which they were locked. On the 14th May 1838, when deponent had the search made, he found his desk locked as usual. Deponent was not an employed servant of the office; but he sometimes came to the office and assisted the duties of the office, named Meah Jaun, for six or seven days at a time, and stated himself to be that person's brother; and whenever he thus assisted Meah Jaun in his duties, he had access to the things in the office, the same as the other duties had. Deponent has the keys of all the boxes containing the trinkets, titles, and other valuables, and deponent never parted with them to any person, nor left the boxes in which these valuables were kept, unlocked. Deponent produced the administration in the name of F. Dickens, to the estate of Robert Pegan, in Court.

William Street police constable, deposed, that he, by the order of Mr. McLean, on the 12th May last, proceeded with the prisoner to his house in Pattuklangah, and a peon named Shium, and on his arrival there, he inquired for Meah Jaun, and found a man sitting in the house who answered to that name. Prisoner was then standing in the compound, but deponent cannot say whether he heard the conversation between Meah Jaun and deponent or not. Deponent, in consequence of what Meah Jaun said to him, entered the prisoner's hut and found a trunk, the key of which deponent obtained from the prisoner, and found a small box in the trunk in which he found the watch with its accompaniments. Several trinkets and parts of a broken watch were also in it. Deponent is not certain whether the prisoner was present or not when these things were discovered in the prisoner's box, but Meah Jaun was, and he might be able to state with more certainty. When deponent found the watch, he opened it and examined the number and the name of the maker. Deponent is sure that the prisoner gave deponent the key of the large trunk. He always gave the same account. It is true he did, in his deposition at the police office, first state that Meah Jaun gave it to him, but afterwards having recollected himself, he had that part of his depositions amended at the police office.

Kurransoonloo Bonnerjee deposed, that he is a writer in the registrar's office. Deponent remembers making an entry regarding a watch appertaining to the estates of Robert Pegan, indigo planter. Deponent is not sure whether Mr. Low was present or not when this entry was made by this deponent, but he examined it afterwards. Deponent recognizes the prisoner. He is reputed to be the brother of the office duties, Meah Jaun, and assisted occasionally in his official duties. Deponent did see the prisoner in the office between the 12th of April 1836 and 12th of May, 1838. Deponent has seen Mr. Low's desk occasionally open when he moved about in the office, but never when he was absent from it.

Mr. Charles James Pittar being disposed, and unable consequently to leave his house to day to come to Court on this subpoena, deputed Mr. Chance in his stead, who said, that by an entry in the books of the firm of Messrs. Pittar and Co. it appears that a silver watch had been sold to Mr. Robert Pegan, in January 1837, for eighty rupees, but he is not sure whether he was present at the time of the sale or not, and he could not identify the watch by seeing the entries made in the books. Mr. Pittar sent Dr. Craigie's certificate by the deponent to show that he was indisposed.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner, in his defence, said, the watch which the prosecutor has alleged that the prisoner had stolen about three months and three weeks ago, from the office, had been mortgaged to the prisoner by a person named Peeroo for twenty rupees, about eight months ago, and he called two witnesses to prove this fact, and, strange to say, two Mahomedan witnesses actually swore to this being a fact.

This closed the prisoner's defence.

The jury not being unanimous, retired after a short consultation to consider of their verdict.

Whilst the jury were gone, the judge addressed Mr. James Low, the first deponent in the case, and requested him in future not to keep any estate property in his desk, for he may, in the hurry of the moment, forget to lock his desk and thus expose the property of others, through his neglect, to be stolen. Mr. Low replied that he generally locks up all property in the several boxes allotted for their keeping; but as in this instance he had received the property very late and could not examine it with the number on that day, he kept it separate from the rest in his desk to examine it on the following day; but from the multiplicity of business on his hands, he forgot to do so. He promised to be more careful in future and attend to the judge's injunction on this subject.

The jury, after they had retired for about ten minutes, give their verdict of guilty against the prisoner.

After this verdict had been recorded and explained to the prisoner, the judge sentenced the prisoner to twelve calendar months' imprisonment in the house of correction, with hard labour.

Ramchunder Mitter, was tried for having, on the 15th of August 1836, taken from a person named Kallee in Olddeem, two rupees, under pretence of procuring for him a situation of seven rupees a month, in the service of a baboo as a sircar, at whose disposal the said situation was.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Kallee Oldern, peon, deposed, that he has known the prisoner ever since August, 1836. Prosecutor was formerly a peon in the Larkin's thanna. Deponent took leave and went to his house, from whence he returned in August, 1836. The day after his return prosecutor went to see his brother at the cocked hat. Prosecutor found the prisoner there in company of his brother. At the time prosecutor came up to them, he heard the prisoner say to his brother, "If you have any person out of employ, and I wish to procure one I can get him one." Prosecutor's brother replied in the negative. A person named Dhoochoop Sing, who was present, brought his brother to the prisoner and begged of him to get the situation for him. The prisoner, without returning any answer to Dhoochoop's application, asked prosecutor what was his profession, and whether he was in or out of employ, and required a situation. Prosecutor replied, that he was a police peon by profession. He had lately returned from his native country, where he had been absent on leave, and was out of employ and on the look out for one. Prisoner, when he heard this, replied, "What a person of your appearance and capability to seek so paltry a situation as a chokeydar at four rupees a month. If you will give me two rupees I will procure you a situation of seven rupees a month, and pickings besides, in the fort." Prosecutor consequently asked his brother to lend him two rupees. Prosecutor's brother said, he had only one rupee by him, and sent it to the prosecutor on their way to the fort, where the prosecutor then accompanied the prisoner. Prisoner informed the prosecutor, that one of these rupees was to be paid to a baboo, and the other to a sircar, and then they would give them the situation, and the badge of his office. In the fort the prisoner spoke something to a gentleman in English, who made a reply and pointed with finger towards some barracks, where the prisoner then proceeded with the prosecutor. When they arrived there, the prisoner took the rupee from the prosecutor and went into a godown in the barracks and spoke something to a baboo in English, after which he returned and informed the prosecutor that in consequence of another person having applied to the baboo and the sircar for the hurkaruship, which he intended to procure for the prosecutor, the baboo and sircar would not abate any fraction of two rupees, and added, that if he wanted the lucrative situation he had better make haste and get the other rupee, or else he had better take the rupee he had given him in part payment, and wish good bye to the situation. When prosecutor heard this, he ran off to his brother, who was a peon in the Larkui's lane thanna, and borrowed another rupee from him, returned speedily to the prisoner, whom he found seated in the place where he left him. He there gave him the other rupee. The prisoner then took prosecutor to the entrance of the barrack, desired him to wait for a short time, and then he would return to him. This happened at ten o'clock A. M. and, after prosecutor had waited till near four o'clock P. M. for him, he searched for him all over the fort, but not being able to find him, he abandoned all ideas of getting the lucrative appointment the prisoner had promised to procure for him, and returned to his former despicable situation of a police peon of four rupees per month, in procuring which he had better success. When prosecutor gave the two rupees to the prisoner in the fort, there was one person present, an acquaintance of the prisoner, but who was a stranger to the prosecutor. Prosecutor did not see the prisoner again till he met him at the Larkui's lane thanna, where he seized him and asked him for his money, one year and nine months after the first transaction. The prisoner, on that occasion, owned the receipt of the two rupees in the presence of all the persons at the thanna, and gave him a piece of cloth which he then had on his body, and said to the prosecutor, "This cloth I purchased only fifteen days ago, for one rupee six annas, take it in part payment, and I will pay you the balance." Prosecutor said, this cloth is worth one rupee. Hear brother chokiyars, this fellow owns the debt and has paid one rupee, when am I to get the other rupee? The jemadar of the thanna observed, that it was evident from the circumstance of prosecutor's having cried on that day in which he gave the money, that he must have given it, and asked if he would forgive prisoner the other rupee or prosecute him. Prosecutor replied that he would prosecute the prisoner, as he was not going to be imposed upon, and receive one rupee after having been cheated by the prisoner of two rupees. The prisoner hearing this, snatched the cloth he had put into the prosecutor's hand and said, "very well, if you are going to complain brother, you shall not get a piece of your money, and I will see what judge can get it out of me." The prisoner was then taken to the police office and put in "the railed place in Mr. O'Hanlon's division, where he said to the prosecutor and the jemadar, "what are your paltry police peons that I need fear you? I have choused you better and they could not do any thing to me for it. When the case was called on for hearing before Mr. O'Hanlon, prosecutor's brother mentioned this circumstance to Mr. O'Hanlon, who, when he heard it, immediately committed the case for trial for this session. The judge asked the prisoner, who every now and then kept telling the judge, that he had something more to add to his account of this transaction, whether he had stated all what he has done here to the magistrate at the police office. Prosecutor replied that he did, but nobody would hear him there. Hearing this reply the judge smiled and said to the prisoner, you see we are hearing you very patiently now, and added, that he believed that if all that the prosecutor had stated here he had said at the police office, he would have saved this Court the unnecessary trouble of bringing this case here. The prosecutor added that the prisoner is a notorious character, and has been repeatedly in the house of correction. The greater part of the prosecutor's depositions kept the Court in a roar of laughter.

Meah Jaun, the prosecutor's brother, corroborated, with many discrepancies, the evidence of his brother.

The prisoner observed, that the prosecutor and this witness are brothers, and the one will swear through thick and thin to what the other states.

Two or three more witnesses were then called, who said that they knew nothing of this transaction.

This ended the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner admitted, that there was a situation vacant in the office of Col. Sweeny, the principal commissary of ordnance, of seven rupees per month. Prisoner took him before Colonel Sweeny, and the babobs of the office, who required two rupees to be given them as a douceur before they would give him this situation; but as the prosecutor had no money by him to give to these babobs, he returned back to the thanna, and thus the matter ended. In conclusion, he denied that he had ever received any money from the prosecutor, and said that if he had paid prisoner the two rupees he has alleged to have paid it to him, where are the witnesses to prove the payment. He had no witnesses to support this defence.

This ended the defendant's case.

The jury after a short consultation, not being unanimous, retired for a short time and returned a verdict of not guilty.

The judge, after this verdict had been recorded, informed the prisoner of it and ordered him to be released from custody.

The grand jury this-day brought a true bill against the following prisoners:

Munnee Taukoor, &c. for an assault.

Ramchunder Mitter for obtaining money under false pretences.

Ramchunder Doss for a burglary.

This day the 8th instant, the grand jury returned a true bill against Bessokur for the murder of Jeetun.—
Hurkarn, August 10.

August 9, 1838.

(Before Sir. J. P. Grant Knight, Judge.)

Ramchaud Doss was indicted for stealing from the house of Jaudub Paramanick and others, in Haurkuttah-lane, several articles, the property of the prosecutor's, by burglariously entering it on the night of the 22d May last.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Jaudub Paramanick deposed, that he resides in Haurkuttah-lane, the prosecutor and two others have hired the house jointly, one of these, Maudub, is prosecutor's nephew, and the other Bheem, a distant relation. On the night in which this robbery had been committed, prosecutor and his two relatives went to Colootollah to visit the thakoor there, and returned to their homes at seven o'clock A. M. of the following day. On their arrival, they perceived the padlock to the door lying broken and the door open, and, on entering the house, they discovered prosecutor's and Maudub's goods had been stolen during their absence. Shortly afterwards they were informed, that the thief had been apprehended and was in custody at the Putuldangah thanna. When he arrived there, he perceived an English promissory note in the hand of the nab of the thanna. The note was for 100 rupees, lent by prosecutor to an English lady. Here the prosecutor detailed the articles belonging to him which he had seen at the thanna and their value, and said, that if he were to see them again he would be able to identify them.

Maudub Saud Khan, the prosecutor's nephew, confirmed the deposition of the last witness, and added, that when they left their house at 11 o'clock to go to the thakoorbarree, prosecutor locked the door of the house in his presence.

Bloodhoo, naib of the Puttaldangah thanna, deposed, that as he was on the night of the 22d May last, going his rounds at about 3 o'clock p.m. he met the prisoner coming down Ilarkutah-lane. When deponent saw him, he challenged him, and the prisoner answered, that he was a subject. Deponent desired him to stop, to be examined. When the prisoner heard this, he dropped a brass lotian and a bundle which were on his head and in his hand, and ran off with another bundle which was slung over his shoulder. The deponent followed him, and saw the prisoner leap over a drain and endeavour to get into a hut; but before he could do this, deponent seized him. The prisoner, when he was arrested, bawled out that the naib had forcibly entered his house, and was illegally dragging him to the thanna. Deponent, without attending to his protestations, took him to the thanna and locked him inside the thanna-guard. Whilst deponent was next morning showing an English paper to the passer by, to ascertain its nature, Jaudub came there and informed deponent, that the paper was the English bond granted to him by a lady eight months ago for 100 rupees, and added, that his house had been burglariously entered on the previous night, and he had been robbed of all the property in it. Deponent then took Jaudub to the thanna, where he and his nephew, who came soon after him, recognized the property found on the prisoner to have been those stolen from their house. Deponent then took the prisoner and the property to the police office, where Mr. O'Hanlon investigated the case, and committed the prisoner for trial to the sessions. The property found on the prisoner was assigned to the care of Mr. McCann. In this stage of the proceeding, Mr. McCann produced the property and deposed, that he had received it from Bloodhoo naib, Bloodhoo naib deposed, that it was the property he had found on the prisoner on the night of the 22d May last, and Jaudub and Maudub both recognized the property to have been theirs, and stolen from their house on the night in question, as likewise the promissory note for 100 rupees.

Bleem deposed, that when he went in company with Jaudub and Maudub to see the thakoor, he locked the out door, and saw the goods now produced in Court hanging from a string in the house. There are some doors and windows on the back of the house, which look into the premises of the landlady, who, to prevent her domestic concerns being overlooked, has placed padlocks on them from her side of the house, and keeps their keys by her. These doors are never opened. When deponent entered his house in company with his companion, and found the door open, and the padlock lying on the ground, he picked it up, and applied the key to it, and found that its works had been broken in the inside.

This closed the prosecutor's case.

The prisoner stated, that whilst he was sleeping in the house, the naib of Puttaldangah thanna, who owed him a grudge in consequence of a quarrel, as may appear manifest by the way he gave his evidence, in stating falsely, that he had formerly a purwanna forwarded to the police office from the magistrate of zillah 24-pergunnahs, came on the night in which the robbery is stated to have been committed, and forcibly dragging him out of it, without listening to him or even acquainting him of what crime he had been guilty, beat and took him bound to the thanna, where he, the next morning, sent for the prosecutors, and concocted this charge against him. Prisoner knows nothing of the articles now produced in court, which has been falsely sworn to have been stolen by him. He is a respectable man, and can adduce evidence in support of his assertions.

The jury, whilst the first witness for the defence was being examined, requested the judge to have prisoner's other witnesses put out of Court. The judge ordered a constable to remove them all out of hearing, with the exception of the prisoner's wife, who, he informed the prisoner, could neither be a witness for or against him in this case.

One of the prisoner's witnesses deposed, that he had seen the prisoner taken out of his house whilst asleep by some chokeydar and the naib of Puttaldangah thanna; but, when desired by the jurors to recognize the persons who had apprehended the prisoner, he could not identify any of them, although they were all standing before him at that instant.

The prisoner called two more witnesses, but they knew nothing of this matter. He then recalled Bloodhoo, naib, and asked him, when he took him into custody with the goods found on him, as he had stated, why did he not call some of his neighbours to witnesses his apprehension? The naib replied, that he did not think it necessary to disturb the neighbours at that unreasonable hour, as the two chokeydars who were with him, were sufficient evidence to prove this case.

The jury, in this stage of the proceedings, expressed a wish to examine these two chokeydars, putting one of them out of the Court, whilst one of them was being examined. The judge replied, certainly. He had, during the trial of this case, as their names were on the back of the indictment, called them to give the prisoner an opportunity of contradicting the evidence of Bloodhoo naib by their testimony, if he could do so; but as the prisoner declined to avail himself of it, the judge did not consider it necessary to examine them; because their evidence, as taken at the police office, is but a repetition of what the naib has already deposed; and in a such case, the evidence of one witness uncontradicted, being sufficient in law to establish the fact, attending the prisoner's apprehension, he did not think the examination of them unnecessary; but if the jury wish it, they can examine them.

The jury did so, and found their evidence corroborated the testimony of the naib Bloodhoo, almost verbatim.

This ended the case both for the prosecution and the defence.

The jurors, after a short retirement, convicted the prisoner of a simple larceny.

The judge, after this verdict had been recorded, informed the prisoner of it, and sentenced him to twelve months' imprisonment in the house of correction, with hard labour.

Munna Thakoor was indicted for having assaulted Lawrence Lall, on the night of the 24th of June 1838, at Barra-Bazar lane. The charge of larceny against the defendant having been thrown out previously by the grand jury, he was tried for the misdemeanor only.

The defendant pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Morton, the barrister, conducted the defendant's case.

Jowhurry Lall deposed, that he is a confectioner, and has a sweetmeat shop in the Barra bazar, but lives in Bauhtollah-lane. Prosecutor knows the defendant Munna Thakoor, who likewise is a confectioner and has a shop in his neighbourhood. Prosecutor knows Bolauky Doss, he is the defendant's servant. Bolauky owed the prosecutor two rupees. Prosecutor demanded payment of these two rupees from Bolauky. Defendant was not present when this demand was made. This occurred in Assau last, the day previous to the 14th-jautra. Bolauky requested prosecutor to wait four days and he would pay him. At this juncture the defendant came from his shop, which adjoins the prosecutor's, and, after abusing him, he gave him several blows and slaps on his face. Prosecutor fell on the ground and defendant struck him after his fall, prosecutor then got up and ran to the thanna. Defendant pursued him thither, but did not overtake him. On his arrival at the thanna, prosecutor complained to the thannadar of the maltreatment he had received from the defendant. The thannadar replied that he could not interfere in an assault case, but the prosecutor could go to the police office and take out a summons against the defendant if he choose to do so. On his way to the police office, prosecutor was threatened again by the defendant if prosecutor dared to complain against him. The next day prosecutor went to the police office, but he could not obtain a warrant, but he procured a summons in Mr. O'Hanlon's department, which the prosecutor served on the defendant at 4 o'clock p. m. and returned at his shop at 9 p. m. escorted by two friends for fear of the defendant's threats. At 11 p. m. that night, prosecutor shut up his shop and proceeded to his house. When he arrived opposite the office of Gourduhan Doss, a servant of the kotee met him and asked him if he was not apprehensive of being robbed going at that late hour of the night with his gold ornament on him. As the prosecutor was proceeding with Kissen Doss, the prisoner came behind him and struck him a blow on his head, with a stick, which felled the prosecutor. The defendant then got astride the prosecutor, and beat him severely. Prosecutor called for aid, and a chokeydar came to his assistance, seeing whom the defendant with a jerk snatched the gold ornament from the prosecutor and ran off, pursued by the prosecutor and the chokeydar. The chokeydar of the street down which the defendant had ran, hearing the hue and cry, inquired what had occasioned it; and when informed of it he held his stick across the line to stop the defendant in his flight; who, when he saw this, turned aside and ran into the house of a merchant in the Buria-bazar Cullerub, where the chokeydar refused to follow him, because it was not in his division, but another police peon arrested him. At that time there was no ornament found on the defendant, although he was searched. The thannadar then took the prisoner to the office of the superintendent of the police, who took his bail for the night to appear the next day at the police office, and Mr. O'Hanlon, the magistrate, after he had taken the depositions of the parties, committed the prisoner for trial during these sessions.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton, defendant's counsel. Prosecutor does not know who the grand jury are. There is a jury here and they may be it. Depo. out did charge the defendant with having stolen his gold beads, which were taken from his neck by the defendant. There were some gentlemen who called prosecutor into a room and asked him a few questions on this subject, and then ordered him out. Prosecutor afterwards learnt that they had expunged the count for the theft from the indictment. The first assault was committed on the 12th of Asaur, at 8 o'clock a. m. the second at 11 o'clock p. m. at night. It was a clear night, but not a moonlight. Prosecutor, when the deponent got on his breast, recognized him. The prosecutor fainted from the blow on the head with the stick, and was for some days ailing for it. Neither the stick nor the gold beads were found on the defendant when the deponent was first taken to the thanna. The thannadar asked the defendant what made him go towards the prosecutor's quarters at that late hour of the night. The defendant denied that he had been there; but when the prosecutor showed the thannadar the stick which the defendant had left in the prosecutor's hands, when he ran away from the chokeydar, he admitted that he had assaulted the prosecutor with his fists but had no stick, and that the hurt in the head of the prosecutor was occasioned, by his falling on the head from the severity of these blows. The first assault was witnessed by many persons, the second by Reperday, and prosecutor's servant Bagwar, who was following prosecutor; but when he saw this he ran away. Balauky was formerly in the prosecutor's service, but left it and entered the defendant's. This assault happened on a Saturday night, and he wished to show the contusion to Mr. O'Hanlon on the Sunday following; but the peons at Mr. O'Hanlon's house would not admit him. The stick was a very thick one, with which defendant struck him. Prosecutor, on Monday, went to a hospital to have his wounds dressed. Prosecutor's shop had been established previous to the defendant's, but there was no rivalry between them. The defendant never offered to pay the two rupees to the prosecutor on Balauky's behalf until after his arrest; then he only offered one rupee. Prosecutor fainted on receiving the blow on the head with the club; but when the head was wrenched, the force of the jerk revived him. Prosecutor called for aid, when he saw the defendant coming to strike him, before he was struck. Prosecutor never retained the blow, but struggled to free himself from the defendant's grasp.

Bhugwan Putto deposed, that he is the servant of Tarra-moonnee, the concubine of the prosecutor, and was sent by her to the shop of the prosecutor, on a Saturday night, to bring some sweetmeats for her from her paramour's shop. The Prosecutor gave deponent the sweetmeats and desired him to walk awhile till he had shut his shop, and then they would go together to the house of Tarra-moonnee, and deponent did so. After prosecutor had shut his shop they both went together. The rest of the witness's evidence was but a corroboration of what the prosecutor had stated, regarding him in his deposition, with slight variations, hardly worth noticing.

Kissen Doss was next called. His deposition confirmed the statement of the prosecutor regarding him, and added, that at the distance the prisoner was from the defendant he could have distinguished his features, unless the person came up and struck him before he had abused him. What effect a blow from a club would have on the head of a person, deponent could not say, as he never had been struck with a club.

Sheroutollah, the peon of the Buria-bazar, deposed to his pursuing the defendant on the night in question, and to his having gone by the order of the thannadar to the house into which the defendant had fled, in which they arrested him in a room in the upper story, into which he had fled for shelter and concealed himself.

Mahomed Moosau, the thannadar, confirmed the evidence of the prosecutor regarding him, and added, that he, in consequence of the prosecutor having charged the defendant with having stolen a string of gold beads, searched his person, and ordered the house in which he had been apprehended to be searched; but nothing was found either on the defendant nor in that house. In conclusion, this deponent said, that when the defendant was brought to the thanna, he, at first, denied both the assault and the theft; but when the prosecutor showed the defendant's sheet to him, the defendant acknowledged that he beat the prosecutor, and struck him a blow on the face in consequence of the prosecutor having showed him and taken his overcoat sheet from his person; the prosecutor fell on a stone when he received the blow and cut his head with the fall. There was an old quarrel between them, and as they met each other in the street they quarrelled. On cross-examination this witness said, that the defendant never acknowledged to him that he had struck the prosecutor; but said that he met the prosecutor in the street, who wished to renew an old quarrel with him, but defendant showed him and attempted to pass on. Prosecutor when shoved lost his balance and began to fall; to save or break his fall he seized defendant's sheet; this tore it, and it came into the prosecutor's hand, who fell with it on the stone pavement, and hurt his head with it.

Mr. Morton submitted, that as there was no case for the defendant having stolen the string of beads, and therefore there was a flaw in the indictment, and the case could not go before a jury, there not being proof sufficient of the defendant having taken this string of beads.

The judge said, that the defendant might have taken the beads and thrown them away, and that would not be a theft; but this indictment was for an assault, only of which there was certainly evidence sufficient for the case to go before a jury.

Mr. Morton then addressed the jury in a long speech, which would occupy too much of our space to give it in detail; but the purport of it went to make out, that owing to a rivalry in business and the defendant having enticed Bolauky, the prosecutor's servant, into his service, the ill-will which had been engendered between them in consequence of the defendant's setting up a rival collectionary shop close to the prosecutor's, was increased by this act, and they, no doubt, met with angry feelings, in the street, and taunting and abusive expressions passed between them; a scuffle ensued, and the prosecutor fell accidentally in consequence of a shove the defendant gave him in the scuffle, hurt himself by the fall; and, as the defendant had no witnesses to rebut the prosecutor's accusation, taking advantage of this circumstance, the prosecutor hatched up this case against the defendant. He called no witnesses to prove the defence for these very reasons.

The learned judge then summed up the proceedings. He explained the difference between an assault to do some injury and common assault and battery which he said was one of the slightest of misdemeanours, which even the showing of a person or holding a gun at him or a fist with threatening manners, was sufficient to constitute. He then said, the evidence in this case is so very distinct and clear, that he need not go over it in detail to the jury, or to comment on it, as it must be fresh on their mind; therefore he would with the observations already made, leave the case to their discretion entirely.

The jury not being able to come to a decision by consulting amongst themselves in the Court, retired and afterwards returned a verdict of guilty on the second count, viz. of a simple assault.

The learned judge then, in consideration of the long imprisonment the prisoner had already undergone, sentenced him to ten days' imprisonment in the jail of Calcutta.—Hurkaru, August 11.

August 10, 1838.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight, Judge.)

Radianauth Paul, not answering to his summons as a petit juror when called, was fined fifty rupees.

Besookha Bevah, was indicted for having, from the 1st to the 8th of July, 1838, administered several poisonous drugs whereby she did procure an abortion to Jeetun Raur, unlawfully, and from having taken which drugs, the said Jeetun died on the 10th July.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Nurain, chokeydar of Colootollah thanna, deposed, that he recollects the prisoner at the bar. On the 9th of July last, deponent went to the house of Jeetun, which is situated within his beat. He there saw a crowd at the door, and the prisoner sitting within the house. Jeetun is dead. Bolauky, Jeetun's paramour, was there likewise. Jeetun was the widow. Deponent inquired of Bolauky what was the reason of this crowd at his door, and the occasion of a midwife being there. Bolauky replied, Jeetun had been indisposed with a fever, which had taken an unfavourable turn. Deponent then remarked that there was no occasion to call a midwife in a case of fever. Bolauky made no other reply. Deponent seeing a fire and some medicines there, suspected the correctness of Bolauky's statement, and gave information of what he had witnessed to Kadurbux, naib of the Colootollah thanna, who ordered him to return to Jeetun's house, and bring the midwife to the thanna. Prisoner, when the deponent had communicated this message to her, rose and accompanied deponent to the thanna. The thannadar asked the prisoner the nature of the deceased's complaint, and what medicines she had administered to her. Prisoner replied, Jeetun had a heart-burn, and she had given her some cooling medicines which would relieve her. The thannadar observed, the chokeydar Seebou saw her at Jeetun's house, and suspects that she is endeavouring to procure an abortion, therefore she had better speak the truth, for he would send another midwife to inquire into the matter. Prisoner replied, that he may make what inquiries he pleased, for she had never been guilty of such an attempt as to procure an abortion. The thannadar then sent the prisoner accompanied by Kadurbux, naib, and two peons, to Jeetun's house, to inquire into the matter. Kadurbux asked Lutchmun what ailed Jeetun, her sister. Lutchmun replied, that she lived in another part of the town, and had just arrived there in consequence of having heard that her sister was indisposed. Kadurbux then directed Lutchmun to desire Jeetun to come to him and inform him of the nature of her complaint. Lutchmun went into the hut, and shortly afterwards returned and informed the naib, that she was too unwell to be able to leave her bed, but the naib could go to her if he desired it. The naib, the deponent, and the prisoner then went to the place where Jeetun was lying, and exhorted her to speak the truth and inform them, what was her indisposition. Jeetun replied, that she had been eniente two months, and the prisoner had given her for the last seven days some medicines to be taken internally, and made some external applications on her belly. On the 4th day she had a miscarriage, ever since which she has been very weak and ailing and cannot either speak or breathe freely, and she fears that she will not live long after this treatment. Kadurbux then addressed the prisoner and said, "you said lately at the thanna that you had never given any medicines to Jeetun to procure an abortion; you have heard what Jeetun says regarding you, pray what reply can you make to her accusation." To this observation of Kadurbux, the prisoner made no reply, but adhered to her former assertion. Many persons were present and witnessed these transactions.

Kadurbux, naib of the Colootollah thanna, confirmed the statement of the last witness, and added, that Jeetun informed him, that the medicines which were administered to her to procure abortion, were forced on her against her consent by the prisoner and a woman who sells flour, but she knew nothing about their quality. The prisoner replied, that Jeetun's statement was false. She had been but just called to see Jeetun and administer to her, and had given her some lime juice and Benares sugar to relieve her of heart-burn, for which she had been paid ten annas. Jeetun added, that she had been a widow for one year. Bolauky was a servant in her late husband's shop, and now managed the shop for her. A connexion had been formed between him and her, in consequence of which she became pregnant. Bolauky wished Jeetun to procure a miscarriage, to this she objected. Subsequently Bolauky consulted with Kullan, a woman who sells flour, and they brought Besookha to her to administer medicines to her for the purpose of procuring an abortion. After this, Jeetun complained that she felt her belly to be inflating, and she expected her dissolution was approaching. Deponent then ordered Dabee Sing, naib, to take Jeetun to the police hospital, and took the prisoner to the office of the superintendent of police, who ordered security to be taken for her appearance at the police office. He did so, and, having heard that the prisoner had absconded, he seized the securities who searched for and found her. She was then taken to the police office, and committed on the present charge, and has been in custody ever since.

R. H. Bain deposed, that he is police surgeon. He examined there the body of a middle aged woman named Jeetun, who had been admitted to the hospital on the night of the 8th July last. Deponent examined her corpse on the 10th, on the morning of which day she died. It was pointed out to him by Dabee Sing, nan of the Colootollah thanna. Deponent opened the head, chest, and bowels of the deceased. The brain was natural. The lungs were congested, and discharged a large quantity of dirt and blood, when cut into. The liver, the heart, and the spleen were natural. The stomach contained merely the medicines which had been administered to her at the hospital. The stomach, bowels, and omentum, were glued together by a considerable quantity of coagulated blood. There was also a quantity of cloudy looking fluid lying in the cavity of the abdomen. Deponent then examined the uterus and the vagina. The latter was very vascular. On one side of the mouth of the uterus, there was a sinus, one inch deep, about the size of a small crowquill. There was a dark fetid discharge from it. The uterus was considerably dilated at the mouth. The inside of it had a brownish character apparently the remains of the after-birth. Deponent could observe that the deceased had been gone in pregnancy and had an abortion. The sinus must have existed about eight days, it might have existed six, eight, or ten days. The deceased died from an inflammation of the bowels, and not the wound in the uterus. All the bowels were greatly inflamed which had proceeded to an effusion of lymph, which is a fatal symptom of inflammation of the bowels. The wound in the uterus may have led to the inflammation of the bowels. Deponent does not think it must have been of a necessity caused by that wound. The wound might have existed, and yet the inflammation might have been occasioned by some other cause unconnected with the wound, and yet might have terminated fatally. There are many natural causes which may produce inflammation. The death was not occasioned by the wound in the uterus unless the inflammation of the bowels was caused by it. Deponent cannot state to a certainty whether that wound caused the inflammation or not. The wound in the uterus may have caused the abortion. The inflammation must have been of some days duration, about three, four or five days. The deceased did not die of the abortion. The prisoner was not present when the corpse was examined. Deponent did not see any necessity for putting any question to him.

Previous to the examination of Dr. Bain, the judge informed the jury, that as it would be requisite first to prove the cause of the deceased's death, before the case would proceed further, he would, therefore, examine Dr. Bain as to the state of the corpse in Dr. Martin's presence, and then the latter can tell the judge the cause of death from Dr. Bain's deposition.

J. R. Martin, assistant surgeon, deposed, that he is in charge of the native hospital. From Dr. Bain's description of the state in which he found the corpse of the deceased, he agreed partly with his medical conclusion. He would infer that the deceased's abortion was caused either through accident or by chemical or mechanical process, or both jointly. That signs of inflammation were present in the womb and the passages leading into it, and there was a wound in the neck of the womb, circumstances unlikely to occur spontaneously. There was an inflammation of the covering of the bowels. All these circumstances led to the death of the deceased. Deponent believed there can be no doubt that both the wound and the inflammation tended to cause death. Which preceded the other, the history of the case can alone point out. If the abortion was the first occurrence, then the other symptoms are the general and ordinary results of it. However, the abortion might have occurred, particularly if it was produced by chemical or mechanical means. Deponent believed that the medicines which the deceased might have taken before her admission to the hospital, might have passed off from the stomach, and left no trace of them on it. Medicines which procure abortion occasionally produce vomiting, and thus efface all trace of their having been taken in the stomach. Abortion is dangerous to life under all circumstances, but especially so when procured by violent means. Pineapple may, by producing a diarrhoea lead to an abortion, not otherwise. Deponent does not know a root called chitta. A root of one cubit in length, if dry, might wound the uterus, as it is very tender, and that might cause an abortion. From the depositions of Dr. Bain as to the nature of the deceased's corpse, deponent should suppose death to have been caused by the inflammation of the several parts of the deceased's body internally. The inflammation of the bowels might in themselves have produced death, so might the inflammation of the uterus. The death, in deponent's opinion in this case was caused by the joint influence of both the causes. If the wound was the first event, the other symptoms would follow as a natural consequence, and he would, in that case, affix the primary cause of the death to the wound. There are many natural causes independent of this wound, which may cause an inflammation of the bowels. In this case, from the history he has heard of it, he believes the abortion from the wound in the uterus was the first event, and all the others were caused by it and led to the death of the deceased.

Dr. Bain recalled. Deponent knows the root called chitta. If it were used in a dry state, as deposed on in this case, it could cause the wound. Deponent has mentioned that the root, if mixed with water, would produce a blister, and from its irritating properties is liable to produce an abortion.

Draustollah, thanadar of the Colootollah, deposed, in confirmation of the testimony of the first witness's statement, regarding him, as likewise Dabee Sing, the jemadar and another peon of that thanna, who had accompanied the first witness and the prisoner to the house of Jeetun, on the 8th ultimo; but the nan admitted, that owing to the darkness, and the crowd and confusion he did not see the prisoner there. She might have been there at a distance from him, but was unobserved by him. He, on cross-examination, added, that on the day in which the deponent took the deceased to the hospital, Bolakty and Kullen both fled before deponent could obtain an order to take them into custody.

Lutchmann deposed, that she is the sister of the deceased. Deponent never saw the prisoner until the day on which she saw her at the house of her sister. She then related the account which the deceased gave regarding the prisoner in her and the police people's presence. The prisoner was then sitting at the head of the cot on which the deceased was lying. The deceased pointed to her; and when the prisoner denied the charge of having caused the abortion, and said that she had only administered and given cooling medicines, for the heart-burn, the deceased contradicted her and said, that she had given her compounded drugs internally.

Kullen, the flour woman, was then called; but as she had already absconded, she was called on her reconnaissance and not answering, they were retreated.

Mr. R. Crawford, assistant to the police hospital, deposed, that deponent remembers a woman named Jeetun being brought there for medical attendance under the care of a police peon on the night of the 8th July last. She did not then appear to him to be in a very bad state of health. She complained of a pain across her abdomen. Deponent ordered fomentations to her bowels and she appeared much better the next morning, when deponent gave her a dose of castor oil and repeated the fomentations. Prior to Dr. Bain's arrival, a change took place, and she appeared to become worse, and complained of very severe pains across the abdomen. Shortly afterwards Dr. Bain ordered her some pills, and ordered fomentations to be applied to her. This composed her somewhat. This was on the 9th, no change was visible during that night, but on the morning of the 10th, she complained of the spasms across her bowels. The fomentations were repeated, and she expired at half after 7 o'clock a.m. of that day. Deponent did not consider her in danger until the morning of the 10th, at 7 o'clock of that day, deponent considered her in imminent danger. The deceased ever since the morning of the 9th had an impression on her mind that she would not recover from the disorder of which she was then confined to her bed. Deponent did not think her in danger then, but, owing to a press of business, it did not occur to him to tell her that she was not in danger. Deponent cannot say at what period Dr. Bain considered her in danger. The exclamations of the deceased were not the mere expressions used by natives when they are in pain, but those of a person who was fully aware and had made up their mind as to their approaching dissolution. She did not think that she would die immediately, but that she would not recover of her disorder, and would ultimately die of it, and had, consequently, given up all hopes of recovery. On the morning of the 9th, the deceased made a statement to deponent of the cause of her complaint. The statement was made before she had made the confession of her having given up all hopes of her recovery to deponent. Whether she had confessed that to others previously, deponent cannot say. The deceased's confession to deponent was coupled with the statement she made to him. She said that a native midwife had given to her some medicine mixed in a pineapple to eat, and she had introduced the root of a chitta plant to the vagina for the purpose of causing an abortion. The deceased did not mention the midwife's name to deponent at the time, nor did deponent ask it of her. Deponent never asks questions unconnected with the complaint under which they labour from the patients who are admitted to the police hospital. When the deceased had finished her recital, she said that she, in consequence of this treatment, would never recover.

The judge, after Mr. Crawford had been examined, told him that it might be as well for him to keep in his mind, in the event of any other person coming into the police office under similar circumstances, should they make any declarations regarding themselves, and how they came, to that state, and happen in their disclosures to mention any person, to commit the statement to memory, and inquire and ascertain, as far as possible, the names and the residences of persons named by them; for the declaration of all persons made under the conviction of approaching dissolution, if those persons should subsequently die, are admitted by the law as evidence.

This ended the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner in her defence said, that she neither knew Jeetun the deceased, nor Bolauky, nor is she acquainted with any of the transactions with which it is alleged she had been implicated. Kullen, the flour woman, who has absconded, and with whom she had a quarrel regarding ten annas pice which she owed to prisoner for having cured a patient of hers of a heart-burn, and on which occasion she only gave lime juice and sugar, in revenge for this quarrel, maliciously instigated the first witness, to take her into custody on this false accusation, which she and Harram together hatched up against her; and, as she was going about her occupation as a midwife, they seized her, dragged her into a house, accused her of having administered deleterious and poisonous drugs to a woman, to cause an abortion, and thereby killed her, and then took her into custody. Prisoner had no witness to prove her allegations, but called four or five of her neighbours, gave her an excellent character from a long acquaintance of many years with her.

This closed the prisoner's defence.

The learned judge summed up the case, in which he said the indictment charges the prisoner of the highest crime an individual can commit, viz. of murder. Even old statutes of the English law—before abortion was made a capital offence, declared that if the death of the person whose abortion was sought to be procured happened, the crime was tantamount to murder; because the law considers that if any person causes death in the pursuit of any felonious action, the crime is murder, in which the legislature has made the crime of abortion itself capital. The statements of Jeetun, the deceased, made before her conviction of approaching death, go for nothing; for they were always rebutted and denied by the prisoner to be incorrect as she only admitted having administered to her some sherbet to cure the heart-burn; but all along denied the administering of any drugs, ointments or any other medicinal applications; therefore the only statement which can be admitted in evidence is, that which the deceased made at the police hospital on the 9th ultimo, before Mr. Crawford; for at that time she had given up all hopes of recovery, and all such declarations are evidence, because, in that case, persons are supposed to have divested themselves of all worldly connexions, and have directed their minds solely towards their maker and their approaching dissolution. In this the deceased still adhered to the statement which she made before the jemadar; but in this, unfortunately for the better elucidation of the case, she did not mention the midwife's name, nor did Mr. Crawford, as he ought to have done, inquire it of her. With regard to the case, the judge desired the jury to dismiss suspicions, but to confine themselves to what is strictly evidence. Summing up the case in this light, the statement of the deceased, made before the jemadar of the thirna, not being under conviction of approaching dissolution, cannot be considered as evidence against the prisoner; and as to the declaration she made before Mr. Crawford, when impressed with the conviction of death, in it she has charged a person, a midwife, with having administered these drugs, but did not name the person. Upon the whole, therefore, whatever suspicions there may be attached against this prisoner, still there is not in the judge's opinion, sufficient legal evidence to warrant her conviction of a crime, on the result of which her life must necessarily depend. The cause of the deceased's death has been clearly proved by the evidence of Drs. Bain and Martin, and the nature of the prisoner's defence. And he need not repeat nor recapitulate the evidence in this case, as he has observed, that the jury, as they ought very properly to be in a case of so much importance, were very attentive to it, and had most of them taken down notes of it; therefore it must be supposed to be fresh in their recollection. However, if they required it he would recapitulate it to them. The jury having intimated to the judge that there was no necessity for his doing so, he then impressed on their mind the character the prisoner's witnesses, who were persons in her rank of life, and those who were the most likely to be the best acquainted with her, and who had given her a very good character; and they were perhaps the only honest witnesses she could bring to prove that fact. After this he said that he left the case in their hands, advising them to consider maturely on their verdict, as on it the prisoner's life depended.

The jury, not being able to concur in their verdict, after a short consultation in their seats, retired to consider of it, and, after a retirement of about quarter of an hour, acquitted the prisoner of the crime brought against her.

After this verdict was recorded, the prisoner were arraigned on the coroner's commitment and acquitted.

The judge then informed her of the result of her trial, and ordered her to be released from custody.

The grand jury brought in true bills against Bonmo hummolly, for larceny.

Wailail Hossain, (a new commitment) for burglary.

Robert Barlow, for an assault.

George Cole King, no true bill for murder, but a true bill for manslaughter.

Toanoo, (for the murder of his wife). This man has absconded ever since the night he murdered his wife.

After this there being no other bill before the grand jury, the judge discharged them after thanking them for their labours on this occasion -- Hurkaru, August 13.

August 11, 1833.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight, Judge.)

Bihoo Peary Mohun Bose and Caboo Radanauth Datto, who did not answer to their summons when called as jurors, were fined fifty rupees each, and Mr Francis Patton having answered on the second calling of his name, namely, after the jury had been sworn, had his fine remitted after a reprimand from the judge.

Banmallie Boneyjee alias Gungagovind Bundopradha, was indicted for having stolen, on the 1st of February, 1833, ten pieces of unprinted silk pieces, called korahs, valued at sixty-five rupees, the property of Alfred Betts, his master.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Alfred Betts deposed, that he is a silk manufacturer, and his factory is situated at Moorshedabad. In February last, he resided in Clive-street. He had come to Calcutta to effect the sale of some silk korahs, which were entrusted to his charge by Nobinchunder Datto, a silk merchant residing at Cossimbazar. The silks were partly kept in the prosecutor's house, and partly in the godowns of Messrs. Eglington, McClure, and Co. his agents in this transaction. The prisoner, who had been recommended to the prosecutor by Mr. Urquhart, called on the prosecutor, on the 1st of February last, and, having represented himself to be a silk-broker, and his name Gungagovind Boneyjee he requested the prosecutor to entrust him with a few silk pieces, as patterns to be shown to intending silk purchasers. Prosecutor gave him four samples, which the prisoner took away with him, and shortly afterwards returned and informed prosecutor, that Messrs. Adam, Scott and Co. were willing to purchase silk pieces of the kind he had shown them, at the rate of Rs- 130 per corgie, (viz. twenty pieces.) Prosecutor consented to the bargain on which the prisoner was to get one rupee per corgie, and having given a letter to his banian Muddun Mohon Deb, he entrusted a chest containing ten corgies, to his charge, and ordered to take them with him to the office of Messrs. Adam, Scott and Co. which prisoner would point out to him. Prosecutor at the same time informed the prisoner, that he had twenty corgies more of silk korahs of a different kind, and if the prisoner could effect a sale of them at the same rate as he had of the kind he had sold to Messrs. Adam, Scott and Co. for him, he was willing to give him a chit to the address of his agent to deliver him ten pieces from those korahs as musters, to be inspected by silk dealers. The prisoner answered that he would endeavour, if these musters were entrusted to him, to effect a sale of the other silk, in which he flattered himself he would succeed. Deponent then gave him a letter to Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co. for the ten pieces. After this the prosecutor saw no more of either these silk pieces or the prisoner until he saw them both under the custody of the police authorities on the 5th May last. Up to this date he has neither received those ten pieces nor any money for them. This was the first transaction prosecutor had either with Messrs. Adam, Scott and Co. or the prisoner, who was, till then a stranger to him. Prosecutor never debited the prisoner in his books for any of these pieces, nor did he take any receipt from the prisoner for the muster which were entrusted to him. Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co. took a receipt for the ten pieces they gave to the prisoner from him, and the prosecutor considered this to have been sufficient to prove his having received them. This was the first transaction of the kind with the prisoner in Calcutta, to which place he is a stranger, and knows not the customary forms in practice here. Prosecutor never made any sale of the silk to the prisoner, who was only engaged by him as a broker. Two or three days previous to this transaction, prosecutor had a conversation with Mr. Ford, one of the partners of the firm of Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co. regarding these silks. The prisoner wished to ask the prosecutor the contents of the letter, in which he had authorized Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co. to give him ten pieces of silk korahs; and remarked that, by the prosecutor's own evidence, the silks were entrusted to him as a broker; so that he was neither the prosecutor's servant nor had he stolen the goods. Therefore the counts of the indictment coincide with the circumstances elucidated in the investigation of it. Even by the prosecutor's own showing, the crime would amount to embezzlement and not theft; but he would be able to prove hereafter by his witnesses, that he himself had bought these silks at Rs- 128 per corgie, and had, at two different periods, paid Rs- 1,550 to the prosecutor for them, as the transaction was a ready money one. Neither party either took or granted any receipt on the occasion.

The judge observed, that with regard to proving the contents of the letter, the best mode of doing that would be the production of the letter itself; but if the prisoner thought fit to ask the prosecutor any question regarding it, although it was not strictly legal evidence, yet in a criminal case he would not object to the prisoner's asking them. With regard to the other observations of the prisoner, he said, the prisoner could state them to the judge when he enters on his defence, and the judge, as it is a point of law he would pay attention to it and draw the jury's attention towards it.

The prisoner having, after this advice, persisted in questioning the prosecutor regarding the contents of the letter aforementioned, the prosecutor denied that he had ever in it stated that he had sold the silks to the prisoner, but through his medium, and then for ready money only. The price might have been Rs- 128 per corgie, but of this he is not very certain at this distance of time.

Muddun Mohon Deb, the prosecutor's sircar, recognizes the prisoner. Deponent recollects having accompanied him with 200 pieces of korahs to the office of Messrs. Adam, Scott and Co. If deponent were to see his master's korahs he would be able to recognize them again. They were marked in the corner A. Betts. Deponent then examined some choppahs or printed silk pieces, which Mr. McCann produced in the Court, and added, these are the goods of his master, and showed the prosecutor's name written on them, he likewise said, that when they were taken away from his master's possession by the prisoner, they were korahs unprinted. They have been subsequently printed, and are therefore now called choppahs i. e. printed.

Mr. McCann deposed, that the choppahs now produced in court, he had received in May last from Ramdhon Mookerjee, silk printer, and Enambux, thanuadar of Mirzapore, at the time the prisoner had been arrested. They have been ever since in his possession.

Gourmohon Gossain deposed, that he was formerly a baman in the service of Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co. Deponent remembers there were some silk korahs in their godowns in February 1838, the property of the prosecutor. On the 1st of that month, Mr. Ford, one of the partners of that firm, sent for deponent, and putting a letter into his hands which he said had been sent to him by Mr. A. Betts, by the hands of a person who was then standing in the room, and who deponent believes was the prisoner now at the bar, directed deponent to deliver to that person, according to the tenour of that letter, ten pieces of silk korahs, the property of Mr. Betts, in Messrs. Eglington McClure and Co.'s warehouse. Deponent after he had read the letter and entered it, delivered it to Nuboo Koomar Chatterjee, the warehouse keeper, and directed him to deliver ten pieces of these korahs to the prisoner, taking his receipt for them. Previous to this transaction, deponent did on the morning of that day receive from the prisoner a letter written by Mr. A. Betts, to Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co., informing him that he had sold 200 pieces of silk korahs, and not to deliver them to the prisoner until he paid their price to Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co.; but deponent does not recollect either the price of those korahs nor the name of the purchaser. The transaction was quite at arm's length from the delivery of the ten pieces as matters which happened subsequently.

Nubboo Komar Chatterjee, deposed, he is the godown sircar of Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co. Deponent received from the last witness a letter from Mr. A. Betts to the address of Mr. Ford, a partner of the firm, with instructions to deliver to a person who was pointed out to deponent by Gour Mohon Gossain, ten pieces of silk korahs, belonging to Mr. Betts, which were in Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co.'s godowns. That person was a stranger to deponent, he therefore could not identify him even if he were to see him. Deponent took that person's receipt on the back of that chit and gave him the ten pieces. The receiver signed his name Gungagovind Bundopadhia. That letter remained in deponent's possession until Gour Mohon was cited to the police office as a witness. Deponent then returned it to him. Deponent keeps the account books of the godown receipts and deliveries. When deponent delivered these ten pieces of silk korahs, he made a memorandum of their delivery to Gungagovind Bundopadhia in his day-book, but did not transfer it to the ledger, because the goods were not sold but merely taken away on inspection. These ten pieces were debited to Mr. A. Betts, but the memorandum mentioned through the medium of Gungagovind Bundopadhia by Mr. Betts' orders. Here the deponent read the entry, viz. 12th February 1838, Gungagovind Bundopadhia, Mr. A. Betts, silk korahs, ten pieces.

Ramdhon Mookerjee, deposed, that he is an assistant to the silk printing factory of Petumber Day, at Serampore. Deponent recollects the prisoner brought, on the 11th February last, 100 pieces of silk korahs and left them there to be printed in various patterns. A few days after they had been printed, the prisoner returned to the factory and paid deponent thirty rupees. The sum exceeded the charge for the printing of the 100 pieces; and, when deponent tendered him the balance, prisoner declined taking it, but requested deponent to accompany him to his residence in Mirzapoor, in Calcutta, where he would give him 110 more pieces to be printed. Deponent complied with this request, and received from the prisoner the 100 pieces, which the prisoner desired him, when printed, to bring to his house, where he would settle deponent's accounts, pay him up whatever may be the balance in his favour, and gave him some more to print. At that time prisoner represented himself to have extensive dealings in silk pieces. Soon after deponent had printed these 110 pieces, some sicars in the employ of Mr. Betts, having obtained secret intelligence that the silk pieces, which had been stolen from their master by the prisoner, had been delivered to deponent to be printed, came to him and concealing the real purport of their call, asked him whether he printed silk korahs. Deponent replied, "Yes," and showed them some he had printed. They examined them, appeared to approve of them, and requested deponent to take some with him to their house at Mirzapoor, and they would show them to their master, who dealt largely in silks, and no doubt he would employ him in all his work, if his terms were moderate. Deponent believing what they said to be true, took the 110 pieces which the prisoner had left with him to be printed, intending by this opportunity to deliver them to him and settle his accounts with him, and, on his arrival at Calcutta, selected ten of these pieces and took them with him to the house of the gentleman, where a sicar, when he had seen them carefully, sent for a police thanuadar, and made deponent and the ten silk pieces over to his custody. By the thanuadar he was taken to the police office, where he gave his statement regarding the ten silk pieces to the magistrate, who, when he had committed it to writing, had the other 100 pieces seized and removed to the police office, before deponent could deliver them to the prisoner, and sent a peon with deponent to the prisoner's house and had him arrested and brought to the police office, where his examination was taken by the magistrate regarding these silk pieces and how he procured them. After this the prisoner and the silks remained in the custody of the police office, and deponent was handed over to attend and give evidence against him during these sessions.

R. Habberly, clerk to the chief magistrate, deposed, that he recollects the prisoner being brought to the police office in March last, and accused of embezzling some silk pieces. * On that occasion deponent received a letter from Gour Mohon Gossain, one of the witnesses in the case, regarding the delivery of ten pieces of silk by Messrs. Eglington and Co. to one Gungagovind Bonnerjee. The letter was written by Mr. A. Betts to that person, and dated 1st of February, 1838. The prisoner was stated to be the person who had represented himself as Gungagovind Bonnerjee on this occasion at the police office. He said his name was Bun Mallie Bonnerjee. There was a Bengallee receipt for the ten pieces on the back of that chit, signed by the receiver of the ten pieces. This chit has ever since been in deponent's possession. Deponent then produced the chit, and it was successively identified by Gour Mohon Gossain, Nubboo Komar Chatterjee, and Mr. Betts, to be the letter they had deposed to, regarding the delivery of the ten pieces of silk to the prisoner, and the prisoner acknowledged the receipt, on the back of it, signed Gungagovind Bundopadhia, to be his, and which he said was his name and not Bun Mallie Bonnerjee.

This chit and receipt was then read by the clerk of the crown.

The letter informed Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co. that the writer has sold, through the medium of the bearer of the chit. Gungagovind Bonnerjee, two hundred pieces of silk korahs at Rs. 128 per corgo, on a commission of one rupee per corgo to be paid to the broker when the money for these goods was paid to them, and, desiring them, as the sale was one of ready-money, not to give up the 200 pieces until they received the price of them. The letter likewise directed that ten pieces might be given to the bearer of another sample, must be shown to intending purchasers. The latter part of this letter complained against the conduct of Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co.'s bazaar, and expressed a wish to have the transactions regarding these silk pieces brought to a speedy close.

D. McFarlan, the chief magistrate, deposed, that the prisoner at the bar, was brought before him in March last, on the present charge. He, on the 8th and 11th of that month, after having been duly warned, and being sane and sober at that time, made the confessions which deponent now held in his hand, and which deponent faithfully translated into English and committed to writing. Mr. Habberley was present, and interpreted on the occasion.

The clerk of the crown read these confessions thus:—
“The silk korahs spoken of by Muddun Mohon Deb, I bought from Mr. A. Betts for Rs. 1,321, viz. 200 pieces. As the transaction was a ready-money sale, neither party took nor granted any receipt on the occasion. I further received ten pieces from a gentleman at Messrs. Eglington, McClure and Co.'s office, for which I granted a receipt. I gave them all to Petumbar Day to be printed at his factory at Serampore. The other 190 pieces I received from him printed and sold them to several Malay and Pegue traders, whose names I do not know. I am an indigo broker to Messrs. Jenkins, Low and Co. but I occasionally act as a broker and deal in indigo, silk, and shell lac, on my own private account.”

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner, in his defence, declined saying any thing further than what he had already stated during the investigation of this case, regarding how he became possessed of these 210 pieces of silks, and called three or four witnesses to corroborate his assertions.

Some of these deposed, that they had seen the prisoner pay Rs. 736 to Mr. Betts, at the door of Messrs. Tulloh and Co.'s auction. Mr. Betts was in his palkee at the time he received this money, and after he had examined and counted it and found it to be correct, he told the prisoner, who asked a receipt for it, “This is no place to grant receipts, go to my office and I will give you one.” Prisoner borrowed the money from them at twelve per cent. interest per annum.

This closed the prisoner's defence.

The learned judge then summed up the proceedings. He informed the jury that the indictment stated prisoner to be the servant of the prosecutor, and charged him with a larceny, the property being laid to Mr. Betts and likewise to Nobinchunder Dutt, and stated the prisoner was the servant of Mr. Betts. He added, that in the manner in which the property was placed under Mr. Betts' charge, it would, although it was actually the property of Nobinchunder, be as Mr. Betts' property, and as the prisoner was to have been paid for his labour in procuring a sale of it, he was legally for the time being an employee of Mr. Betts, and therefore his servant; and whenever any servant, even with the consent of his master, obtains possession of any property for any specific purpose, and without his master's consent disposes of it for his own use and purpose, it is legally, by the 100 section of the criminal act of George 4th, which extends to this country, a larceny. Having thus explained the law of this case, he detailed the evidence both for the prosecutor and the defence, and having commented on it and showed the jurors how far it tended to establish the case for and against the prisoner, he left the case entirely to their discretion.

The jury, after a short consultation, without retiring, found the prisoner guilty.

After this verdict had been recorded and the prisoner informed of it, the judge removed him and desired him to be brought up on the last day of the sessions to receive his sentence.

Wallajah Hossein, was indicted for having, on the night of the 8th August, at 2 o'clock A. M. broken into and entered burglariously the house of Syud Abdool Raheem, in Soonderputty-lane, and stolen from thence, two boxes containing several articles, the property of the prosecutor.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Syud Abdool Raheem deposed, that he is a Mahomedan fakeer, and resides in three rooms on the second story of a house which is situated in Soonderputty-lane, the proprietor of which house is Baboo Nimmo Mullick. The top of the staircase which leads to these rooms by an open verandah, faces the door of the room in which prosecutor sleeps. This room at the opposite end has a door communicating with the adjoining room, which has two doors, and is by a mat partition divided into two apartments, in one of which he keeps his stock of dull, wire, &c. the door of which facing the verandah, is constantly locked in the other apartment, where his washing and hooka apparatus is kept. The door facing the verandah is kept open during the day, but invariably locked by his cookwoman, Pootesal, at night; behind these two rooms there is a third room in which the cookwoman and an old Mogul woman always sleep during the night. This room in his cookroom has no direct communication with either of the other two rooms, but opens to the verandah. There is a window in the room in which he sleeps to the southward blocked up by the wall of an adjoining house, so that neither light nor air can come through it. The thanadar of the Amrahtollah, lane thanna, has a map of the premises. There is a staircase leading down to the compound of the house. There is a narrow portico on the back of the house leading to some bath, which form a part of this house, and are hired by another tenant. The compound leads directly into Soonderputty-lane. On Wednesday night, the 8th instant, prosecutor, after his cookwoman had locked the door of the second room at 10 o'clock P. M. bolted the outer door of his bedroom from inside and retired to sleep. At about two o'clock, he was disturbed by a rattling noise in his bedroom, and on awaking perceived the outer door wide open. He got up and by the light of the moon, saw the prisoner, whom he had known before, and recognized, proceeding hurriedly down the steps with the two boxes one under each arm. The prisoner had on only a pair of loose trousers tucked up, the rest of his body was naked and smeared with oil. Prosecutor bawled out to him and ordered him to stop, but this only increased his pace. Prosecutor then rose and pursued him downstairs, and having overtaken him near the well in the compound, seized him by the wrist. The prisoner struggled to free himself from the prosecutor's hold, and struck him with the larger of the two boxes which dropped from his hand. The blow knocked the prosecutor down and he hurt his knee by the fall. The prisoner then opened the compound door and ran down the lane. Prosecutor followed him shouting, “stop thief, stop thief,” and saw him turn down the lane, and leap into the premises of a prostitute named Theetah, or a fence and feet high. At that instant, prosecutor heard the noise of something falling heavy; and Thootah immediately cried out, "landlady, mother, landlady, mother, a thief has got into the house." Prosecutor stopped at the door of this house until the naib of the thanna, who had heard his cry for assistance, came to his aid. They then entered the house by pushing the door open, and asked Thootah where the thief was. She pointed into a hut where a child had been sleeping on a platform. They then searched the room with the light which was burning in this room, and found the prisoner seated crouched between the platform, and the mat wall, trembling from head to foot. The naib went up to him, and arrested him, and brought him into the compound, where the boy who had been sleeping on the platform, told them that the prisoner had, in his haste to hide himself, stumbled over him, and hurt his foot, and this had occasioned the noise which they had heard. As the other box was not found on the prisoner, prosecutor asked him what he had done with it. Prisoner denied all knowledge of it, and said that he had never entered the prosecutor's house, but was passing the night with Thootah, and had been mistaken by the prosecutor for some other person, and falsely apprehended on this charge. By this time the naib of the Burra-bazar thanna, and a crowd, together with the prisoner's mother and sister, joined them. Prosecutor suspecting the prisoner might have thrown the other box into a well in Thootah's compound, had the well and the reeds which grew round it searched, but nothing was found there. Thootah denied that the prisoner had come to pass the night with her. Prosecutor then left the prisoner in the custody of the police peons, and returned home, accompanied by the naib of the Aumrahtollah-lane thanna at 3 o'clock. A. M. On arrival home, he picked up the larger box in the compound, and exhibited its contents to the naib. He afterwards, together with the naib, examined his rooms, and ascertained that the prisoner had climbed over the wall of the house towards the baths, by fixing a ladder from the street to this wall, and then jumped from the wall to the terrace of the first floor, as a part of the cement of the wall where the prisoner had jumped, was broken and lying on the terrace. He had then picked the padlock of the second room which was lying unbroken in the verandah, and entering it, cut the mat partition with a penknife found there, and thus entered the prosecutor's bed room. As the larger box contained many nick-nacks which the prosecutor required for constant use, he retained that box in his possession until he produced it, together with the smaller box, at the police office before the magistrate. This box was found by the prosecutor the next morning lying open at the door of the portico leading to the baths, in the presence of many witnesses. The prisoner who had remained in custody at the thanna during the rest of the night, was taken next morning to the superintendent of the police, and thence to Mr. C. K. Robison, the division magistrate, who, after he had taken the depositions of the parties, committed the prisoner to take his trial during this session. Here the prosecutor detailed the articles which were in the two boxes, which were stolen from his place, and Baudoolah, the naib jemadar of the Aumrahtollah-lane thanna, produced the two boxes with their contents. Prosecutor took out each article according to his description of them, and identified them to be all his property.

Baudoolah, naib of the Aumrahtollah-lane thanna, Pooteah, the prosecutor's cookwoman, and Thootah, prostitute, were then called successively, and they all confirmed the depositions of the prosecutor regarding this robbery as far as they had witnessed it; and the latter, on cross-examination added, that the prisoner was not her paramour, nor had he paid her one rupee to pass the night with her; and that after the prisoner had been taken to the thanna, his friends and relatives, during the rest of the night, kept watch round the mouth of the well in her compound by the prisoner's direction, because the prisoner intimated that the prosecutor and this deponent had conspired maliciously to trump up this charge against him; and he was apprehensive that they might throw during his absence something into the well, and then picking it up accuse the prisoner of having thrown it there. After this witness had concluded her evidence, she began to cry, and informed the Court, that the prisoner's relatives and friends had, in consequence of her having given testimony in this case against him, vowed vengeance and threatened to beat her and trump up some charge against her and get her transported. The judge informed witness that she need not be alarmed, as the laws of this country would protect her from their machinations and to rely on them.

This closed the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner, who was very conversant in the mode of conducting his defence, which he had managed with much skill and more abuse and vituperation, failing to elicit any thing from any of the witnesses to impugne their testimony and bear in his favour, called the prosecutor a sorcerer and Thootah his concubine. Being informed by the judge, that his repeated interruption in the proceedings would be of no avail to him, but merely protract the investigation, and his violent conduct tended to injure his case, he shifted his tact and falsely accused the interpreter of incorrect and partial translation and misrepresentation of the evidence given against him, and appealed for the accuracy of his charge to the jurors. Their not having responded to his desire, and Mr. Smith having challenged him to show any single question or answer he had misrepresented to the Court, the prisoner said, "you have not misrepresented them, but you put such questions to the witnesses as tend to elucidate the facts of the case in all its bearings, and this bears against me and does me injury." To this remark the judge informed him, that the object of the present inquiry was to ascertain from the witnesses all the facts of this transaction, and all the circumstances connected with it, to get at the truth; and as to the questions which were put to the witnesses they were not framed by the interpreter, and he could not be answerable for them, as they were dictated by the Court, and the interpreter was in duty bound to put them verbatim, and to translate the replies to them literally; and if he were to deviate from it, he would swerve from his duty. The prisoner then said, that the depositions had been so lengthy that he could not possibly remember one-fourth of them, and he felt inclined to ask the judge to read each question and answer separately over to him, whilst he would form his opinion of them, and as they tended to bear for or against him, cross-examine the witnesses over again. The judge informed the prisoner, if he had doubts regarding any particular deposition, if he desired it, the judge would read it, or any portion of it which he may wish to be read to him. The prisoner then observed, that as he had not been detected in the prosecutor's house by any of the witnesses, nor any of the property alleged to have been stolen by him found on him; and as the prosecutor could not be a witness in his own case, there was not evidence sufficient to support the indictment against him. He would not, therefore, press that point, but he certainly, under the last mentioned circumstances, considered himself entitled to an acquittal on this indictment, and his immediate release.

The Court informed the prisoner, that in the present case, the Queen, and not the man, whose house he had robbed, was the prosecutor, and therefore this was not like a civil case, when the plaintiff could not give evidence in the case; but in all criminal cases, the party being injured, could give their evidence in support of the prosecution. However, as these were matters which the Court could adjudge better than him, he had better enter in his defence, and leave all points as to law to be decided by the Court, merely directing its attention to any he may consider beneficial to his case.

The prisoner then said, that in the evening of the night on which this robbery has been alleged to have been committed by him, he was returning to his home from the Chandney, where he had been to purchase some trifling articles. On the road he met some of his companions, and they proposed to him to go on a spree and visit the girls in Souderputty-lane. Prisoner acceded to the proposal and they all proceeded thither. On their arrival there the other boys accommodated themselves and prisoner forced his old flame, Thootah, the witness in this case, and putting a rupee into her hand said, that he would go home and take his meals and return to her at one o'clock A. M. and desired to her to be prepared to give him a cordial reception. Prisoner then returned home, took his meals, and having put on his clothes, viz. a cap, a waistcloth, and chupku and a pair of trousers, he proceeded at one o'clock A. M. to Thootah's house. When he entered it, he perceived Thootah in company with a short, squat, fair man. This discovery raised his anger, and he taxed Thootah with duplicity and infidelity towards him. Thootah then being drunk, abused him, and when the prisoner rebuked and felt disposed to chastise Thootah for her impudence to him, her gallant interferred and struggled with the prisoner to keep him off. At that very instant, Thootah, hearing the hue and cry opposite her house, that a thief had escaped and got into a house in the neighbourhood, cried out, here he is, he has jumped over my tatters; and having by this noise got the police people, and the prosecutor into her house, showed them some foot marks near the well, which, as they correspond with the prisoner's feet, the prosecutor, who had only by his own account beheld the back and not the face of the thief who had entered his house, mistook the prisoner for him and had him apprehended. He then observed to the judge that by his own account, he was clothed, and not naked, as the prosecutor had deposed, and pointed out a trifling discrepancy which had been elicited from the witness as to the exact spot and posture the prisoner was in when seized by the police peons. In conclusion, he said, that Thootah, out of malicious feelings arising from the quarrel aforementioned, has involved him into this dilemma.

The prisoner called several witnesses who, by piece meals, corroborated the circumstances related by him from the time he had been seized by the police peons. The prior transactions none could depose to except his mother, sister and wife, and these merely said that he had returned from the Chandney at eleven P. M. that night, and after taking his meals left the house again at midnight of the 8th instant.

This closed the prisoner's defence.

The learned judge then summed up the proceedings. He said the indictment charged the prisoner in one of the counts with a larceny. In this case the theft of the property, and the accused and its value to distinguish it from petty and grand larceny was requisite, but the leading counts of the indictment charged the prisoner with a burglary, to constitute which offence it was not requisite that any property should be found on the accused, the mere act of forcibly breaking into a house in the night with intent to steal or even breaking violently out of it after one has feloniously entered, was sufficient to constitute a burglary. Now, in the present case, although no property was found on the prisoner, nor did any of the witnesses examined see him enter the house, yet it has been distinctly proved by the prosecutor, who is a respectable looking person, and has given a clear and distinct testimony to his having seen the prisoner in his room at night, walking away with two of his boxes and recognized him having known him before; and that the prisoner after assaulting him forcibly broke away from his hold and quitted the premises with the other box, if his testimony is to be received, and the prisoner has not adduced any testimony to shake it, the forcible exit has been clearly proved. The learned judge then read the evidence both for the prosecution, and the defence to the jury, and explained how far each testimony tended to support the case for either party, and then explaining the prisoner's defence, he left the case to the discretion of the jury who, he said, appeared to have been very attentive to its details.

The jury without retiring, after a short consultation, convicted the prisoner of the burglary.

After this sentence had been recorded and explained to the prisoner, he asked on what grounds the jury had convicted him. The judge replied that was best known to them; but he, from the result of the investigation, was fully convinced that the verdict was a correct one. It was not for him now to enter into explanation of the case, but to pass the sentence on the prisoner a very unpleasant task; but after what he had seen of the prisoner's demeanour, he would not waste his time by very lengthy discourse with him as it would be unavailing. He then sentenced the prisoner to fourteen years' transportation to the S.E. Coast of Mauritius.

No sooner was this sentence announced to, the prisoner, than he, his mother, grandmother, wife and sister, all began crying in the court-house and raised such a noise and clamour that the judge, after calling to Mr. Bird, attorney at law, the deputy sheriff, and severely reprimanding him for not having a sufficient force in attendance to prevent and quiet instantly this uproar in it, added, that if any repetition of it were ever to take place, he would inflict a fine on him so heavy as to make him more attentive to his duty in future. He then ordered the sister to be turned out of the court instantly, and this could only be effected by main force, in doing which constable Street had his finger bit by the prisoner's mother, who fainted away in the compound of the court.

The prisoner, at the commencement of the trial, requested all the witnesses for the prosecution to be put out of the court, and kept apart from one another. The jury recommended that the prisoner's witnesses be kept aloof in like manner, and they were all kept, by the order of the court, distant, and out of hearing from one another. —Hurkaru, August 15.

MONDAY, AUGUST 13, 1838.

(Before Sir J. P. Grant, Knight, Judge.)

James Balfour Ogilvy, c. s. was indicted for the manslaughter of Tarrachand Chuckerbutty, at Cuddah, on the 2d May 1838. The indictment contained two counts, one for shooting him with a pistol, and the other for aiding and abetting persons to the jurors unknown, in shooting him with a musket. Two other indictments similarly charged Mr. Ogilvy with causing the deaths of Serajee Majee, and Govind Sing.

Mr. Ogilvy pleaded not guilty.

Counsel for the prosecution, Messrs. Clarke and Leith.

Counsel for the defence Messrs. Prinsep and Morton.

Several highly respectable European tradesmen were upon the jury. One native name was called, but challenged by the prisoner's counsel. Mr. Ogilvy was stated to be, and indeed appeared in a very delicate state of health, and was accommodated with a chair near his counsel, placed without the doors. The Court was deeply crowded throughout, and the deepest interest excited.

Mr. Clarke. Gentlemen of the jury. The case that now comes before you is in every respect most important —important as it affects the public, and most important as it affects the prisoner at the bar. You have, doubtless, heard various contradictory rumours and statements connected with this matter. I need scarcely remind you how desirable it is that you should endeavour to consider this a new case altogether, and dismiss from your minds all that you have heard without the walls of this court.

Gentlemen, the prisoner is a mofussil magistrate, and stands charged with having caused the death of Tarachund Chuckerbutty, at Calna, on the 21 of May. If the assembly at the place was an illegal one—if they came for an unlawful purpose and could not possibly be dispersed without the interference of a military force, I admit that Mr. Ogilvy stands justified in having had recourse to that force. The first point therefore is, to ascertain for what purpose the assemblage was collected, and how they comported themselves. I need scarcely inform you, that a person called Pertaub Chaud, is the claimant of the Burdwan property, being alleged to be the son of the late Rajah Tejchunder Bahadur. The income of this property is said to be about fifty lakhs per annum. Persons of wealth and respectability have supported the claims of Pertaub, and have advanced funds in his aid. This, although it may be an offence according to English law, is perfectly legal according to Hindoo law. Pertaub engaged the services of an attorney, and instituted a suit of ejectment in this Court, to recover certain property belonging to the Burdwan family, situated in Calcutta. Mr. W. D. Shaw first acted as his attorney, and afterwards Mr. R. Graham. About two years since, I may mention that Pertaub was arrested on a charge of disturbance and breach of the peace, and under some mofussil regulation or other he was convicted, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. Last April, he came to the resolution of proceeding to Burdwan, for the purpose of being recognised by his Rawness, and other relatives, and thus procuring evidence to support his case. He had applied for aid and safe-conduct from Government, but this had been refused. All these circumstances shew that his intentions were peaceable and his object legal. He was accompanied by several followers and boats, but in no very large or unusual number. It was only upon one occasion that he went on shore, and no disturbance or breach of the peace was committed then or at any other time. At Calna, he remained from 11th of April until the 21 of May. Mr. Shaw went up as his legal adviser, and by his recommendation letters were written expressing a readiness to comply with any orders issued by the magistrate. On Monday the 30th of April, it seems that Captain Little, who was then escorting treasure to Barrackpore, was applied to by Mr. Ogilvy, to aid him with the military force under his charge, and, on Wednesday morning, the 21 of May, they arrived at Calna. Evidence will be given to shew that Mr. Ogilvy gave directions that the troops should load with ball-cartridge, and that he had previously said that Pertaub should be taken "dead or alive." At Calna, when the troops were drawn up on the bank, the boats of Pertaub and his people, where in the middle of the river; it was an early hour, no disturbance whatever was taking place, and most of the people were sleeping. Two shots were ordered (not by Mr. Ogilvy) to be fired in the air, upon which a slight stir was observed, and somebody was seen to jump overboard. A cry then arose of "maro," "maro," in which the magistrate himself joined, and several shots were fired in succession by the line of soldiery. Mr. Ogilvy had a double-barrelled pistol, and is said to have discharged one barrel. Captain Little ordered the bugle to sound, and the firing ceased. This, gentlemen, is a simple statement of facts, and I shall abstain from all harsh comments, and all attempts to press the case against the prisoner at the bar.

W. D. Shaw, examined by Mr. Beith. I have been professionally engaged for Pertaub Chaud since May 1835. Mr. Graham was attempted to be made his attorney last September or October, but my costs not being paid, it went no further than an order. I saw Pertaub at Calna on the 30th of April last. I was requested to go by a native gentleman who took an interest in him. I filed a plaint in ejectment on his behalf in this court. The property belonged to the Burdwan raj, and Pertaub claimed it as the person entitled to succeed to the raj. The present possessor is a son of Prawa, baboo, and he is the adopted son of Rajah Tejchunder. The young Rajah is a minor. I went to Pertaub in 1837, when he was in jail at Bancoorah. After he was liberated, he lived with Radakissen Bysack, the dewan of the general treasury. He was offered pecuniary assistance both by Europeans and natives of great respectability. My servants went on before me to Calna. I reached Calna in the evening at nine or ten. I saw Pertaub there on the following day, the 30th of April. I took a walk in the morning. The place did not appear disturbed. I saw no crowds. In the evening when I went on board the Pertaub's boats, I saw Mahaboolah, the darogah of Calna. He had a bundle of papers in his hand. One was a perwannah from the magistrate of Burdwan to disperse the followers of Pertaub. This was read. On hearing it, I said that it was an extraordinary order, but I was sure that Pertaub would send away any person he chose to point out, even to his kdmutgar or hookahbuidar. Pertaub repeated this himself. I spoke myself, and also directed my native writer, Joynarain Chunder, to interpret. I think he spoke in Bangallee. The darogah said that he had no complaint to make, nor any orders to issue, and that the proper party to receive the proposal was the nazir. The nazir was called, but did not come. I then requested the moonshee, Hurrochunder, to write a letter to the official authorities at Calna. The letter was drafted, and I think copied and read over in my presence. The fair copy is among the proceedings at Houghly. I am speaking of the recent prosecution, still pending against Pertaub, before Mr. Samuells. I directed the letter to be given to the nazir. Next morning I went to the factory of Mr. Lyall, my friend. I first wrote an English letter addressed to the magistrate of Burdwan. This was on Tuesday the 1st of May. I have seen it in the possession of Mr. Samuells. I returned on the following day. Some natives told me something about what had happened at Calna. I was arrested on my return on a charge of sedition, by Mr. Ogilvy. I recollect speaking about the letter written to the nazir, and Mr. Ogilvy said, "the letter will speak for itself." I am not sure whether it was the letter to the nazir, or my own English letter. I saw Pertaub and several of his followers, marched to prison under guard. I was myself taken to Burdwan on the Friday. After being in prison a week, I was released under the writ of habeas corpus from this court.

Cross examined by Mr. Prinsep. I found Pertaub when first acted for him, in prison at Bancoorah. He had been charged with disturbance and breach of the peace. I was with him a week. When he was going to Burdwan, I understood that he went for the purpose of being identified by the Rawness. He never informed me that he was going to be placed on the gallees. There were about forty boats with men in them. I saw a rather large collection of people on the bank. I have heard since that there prevailed much excitement. I did not know this before. The Rajah Pertaub has given a bond to Radakissen for some thousand rupees, but not for any number of lakhs. I claimed about Rs. 40,000 for my costs. The securities were Radakissen. Dr. Jackson and Rustomjee Cowasjee. I do not recollect whether there was anything in the perwannah which I heard read, about arresting Pertaub. I know that an application was made to Government and refused, to give Pertaub safe-conduct to Burdwan. The darogah did not when he was leaving the boat, ask anything about the answer which he was to take back. I saw a man enter with a tulwar, and I suggested to the Rajah that the arms should be removed to my boat. The Rajah gave orders, but it was not done. I was present at the office of Mr. Secretary Prinsep on one occasion, when the Rajah attended, in hopes of being recognized by certain gentlemen of the civil service, Mr. Trower, Mr. Hutchinson, and Mr. Patla. I think he recognized Mr. Trower. I believe he confounded one gentleman with another. After that meeting I took no further step in the ejection action. Radakissen Bysack pays the costs of this prosecution. There are three indictments, but only two warrants filed. I preferred a charge of murder against Mr. Ogilvy before Mr. Barlow. There were several notices of action (perhaps twenty) serving upon Mr. Ogilvy and Mr. Barlow. I was the attorney. My costs in the ejection action amounted to Rs-40,000; but the taxing officer cut them down to 7,000. There are no actions that I know of instituted on behalf of Pertaub in any mofussil court.

Re-examined. There was some dispute about the serving of the notices in the action of ejection. The actions against Mr. Ogilvy were commenced to recover damages on the part of the owners of the boats at Culna, on account of their detention.

By a juror. I believe I was speaking at Culna of the English letter, but that Mr. Ogilvy's answer referred to the Persian letter. I do not know this of my personal knowledge. The words "English letter" were not used. Mr. Ogilvy said "your letter."

Pertaub Chund examined by Mr. Clarke. I was arrested on the 21st Bysack three years ago at Bancoorah. I was released from jail after six months' imprisonment. I then went to reside at Calcutta, I went to Burdwan last April, to see my Rawnees and other relations, and get myself identified as the Rajah Pertaub Chund. I presented a memorial to Government for aid and protection. This was refused. I went up to Culna and staid there seventeen or eighteen days. I wrote to Mr. Shaw and Mr. Graham to come up. I landed one day from my boat. I had a drawn sword in my hand. The nazir remained with me while I was on shore, I was in a Tonghah. He saw me back into the boat. There was no riot or disturbance on the shore, I saw Mr. Shaw there two or three days before the 21st May. He came on board my boat. He came again afterwards before the firing. The darogah was once or twice on board. He came on board the second occasion of Mr. Shaw's being there. A perwannah of the magistrate was read. Mr. Shaw desired the nazir to be called. The perwannah contained an order to disperse the assembly. I wrote a letter saying there was no assembly, but only my own servants, Hurrochunder, moonshir, wrote the letter. The nazir was sent for but did not come. Mr. Shaw wrote a letter in English but no other Persian letter was written, I did not see Mr. Shaw the next day. On the second day, after the firing and other occurrences took place, it was very early and I was asleep in my budgerow, I heard first the report of a gun; this awoke me. I know Tarachund Chuckerbutty. He came to me that morning. He served out my meals. He is dead; he was shot at Culna. I saw him struck by a ball. He was hit in the chest, I am not sure which side. He called out, that he was shot. I jumped into the river, and was swimming over to the opposite shore. When I was seen, the sepoys began firing ball at me. I looked round, and, seeing the flashes, I dived. The bullets fell near me. I escaped, but was afterwards arrested. I had about forty-five boats and two hundred men. There were women and children. I know a person called Radakissen Gosaul, my moaktear. He was with me at Culna. I sent him to Burdwan. This was four or five days before the firing. It was to present a petition. Another person went before, named Juggomohun Sing. Deenanauth Sing accompanied my moaktear. I was guilty of no riot or disturbance whatever. A number of people belonging to Prawa, baboo, came there. I cautioned my people not to interfere with them.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. I have never been known by any other name than my present. There was a report that Pertaub Chund died and was burnt according to Hindoo ceremonies. I have heard of this, but it was not true; for here I am. This was a great many years ago, I was taken down to the river side. I jumped into the river and dived. I was not ill, only feigning. The history of my reasons for this is a very long one. I was not on good terms with my relatives. When I jumped into the river there was a concourse of several thousand people present. I was not carried down to the river side, I walked.

Sir J. P. Grant here interrupted the examination and asked how all this was precisely relevant to the question before the court, since even if the claim of this person was rightful, the act of asserting it by force would be wrongful.

Mr. Morton submitted that if the chief witness to prove the lawfulness of the Culna assembly, could be clearly shown to be an impostor, this must throw a slur upon the whole case. The evidence went to his credibility at all events.

Sir J. P. Grant said that he did not wish to prevent the line of examination taken, but only to suggest its apparent irrelevancy.

Cross-examination resumed. After escaping, I went to other countries, where I continued to be known by my friends, as Rajah Pertaub Chund. It is only during the last three years that I have re-appeared in that character in this country. I allowed my beard to grow, and passed for a saquer part of the time. I was not then known by any particular name. Anybody called me what they pleased. I was convicted about two years ago of a disturbance and breach of the peace at Bancoorah; but I was not really guilty. I had assembled some people, I was sentenced to imprisonment for six months, and bound over to keep the peace for a year. It was very soon after this time expired that I went to Culna. I left this house of Radakissen Bysack, with whom I lived in Calcutta, because I chose it, and was tired of living in the same place. I was not turned out. I know that the Burdwan district was excited in my favour. All the country is in my favour. I wrote letters to the Ranees of Puchet, and to the Rajah of Bishenpore and others. I did not invite the Ranees to come with her attendants to see me reinstated on the guldce. The darogah came two or three times on board my boat, before I saw Mr. Shaw. He showed me perwannahs of the magistrate. Mr. Shaw came twice on board. The perwannah ordered me to disperse my assembly of followers, but I said that there was no assembly. When I landed, I had a drawn sword in my hand. It came out of the scabbard by accident, I had then with me fifteen or twenty followers. Some of my men had sticks, but no other weapons. I saw a sepoy of Prawa, baboo's, near the Sumaj Barree. I did not give orders to disarm him. The darogah did not remonstrate. I was not drunk at the time. On board my boats, there were ten or fifteen tulwars or swords, three or four guns, one pistol, and two or three spears. There were no more in mine. There were some in a boat belonging to the Rajah of Hurdhan and others who come to me on a visit. When the firing took place at Culna, my boat was fifty or sixty cubits from the shore. I know Dwarkanauth Tagore by sight, (points him out in Court.)

Re-examined. I have not seen Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore for many years until to-day. I recognized him on seeing him. I used to see him when I lived at Short's

Edward A. Samuels, examined by Mr. Leith. I was officiating magistrate of Hooghly. The original letters of Pertaub and Mr. Shaw are in my possession. (Persian letter produced from Pertaub to the nazir of Burdwan, Persian letter from Pertaub to the same, English letter from Mr. Shaw to Mr. Ogilvy.)

Cross-examined by Mr. Pinsep. I have been officiating magistrate since 1835. I was nearly a year and half in the district of Burdwan. There appeared then to be a good deal of excitement, about the claims of Pertaub, the common people were hostile to the present family, and disposed to assist Pertaub. This feeling was very extended. I was at Hooghly at the period of his conviction for breach of the peace. (Record of conviction put in and proved of Aluckshah alias Rajah Pertaub Chund Bahadur. Also the orders of Government, and certain reports of the nazir and darogah, and other documents.) The reports made by the subordinate officers are made upon their own observation; and upon the receipt of the reports. Purwannahs or orders are made accordingly. On the execution of the purwannah, the officer makes his return or report thereon. When it cannot be executed, it remains in the record-office of the thannah. An interlocutory report is sometimes made, stating that the purwannah cannot be executed and praying further order.

Re-examined. The reports of the darogah are sometimes written by the mohurri, or assistant mohurri. I have heard that the Culna darogah cannot read or write.

Cornelius Smith, was called to prove that one of the documents (an answer to Pertaub's memorial) was produced from the office of Mr. Halliday, the secretary to the Government of Bengal. The document was an official one and signed by Mr. Halliday and countersigned by the Deputy Governor.

Trial adjourned at half past seven o'clock, P. M.

SECOND DAY, TUESDAY, AUGUST 14, 1838.

The adjourned trial resumed this morning at ten o'clock.

Francis Curwen Smith examined by Mr. Leith. I am superintendent of police for Bengal. (Production of Pertaub to the Governor in Council, the Hon. A. Ross, and a letter addressed by Mr. Halliday to Mr. Ogilvy, received by witness as superintendent of police.) All the magistrates are subject to my orders and jurisdiction. I addressed a letter officially to Mr. Ogilvy before the Culna affair. I also addressed one after the affair. (Letters put in.) Mr. Ogilvy was bound to investigate the case as a magistrate, and he had my order, besides. When I went to Burdwan, I directed him to continue it. I did not know Mr. Ogilvy in the slightest degree personally. I have also been subpoenaed to produce some papers delivered to me officially by Captain Little.

Edward A. Samuels, again examined. I have in my possession a petition from one Radakissen Goswul for leave to file a nooktearnamch on behalf of Pertaub.

Cross-examined. I have had delivered over to me officially, the arms stated to have been seized at Culna. They were delivered to me in June by Mr. Shaw, the then officiating magistrate of Burdwan. I have a list of them, drawn up by the nazir, when counted over in my presence. I could state from memory, having seen them counted.

Mr. Clarke objected unless the witness had counted them himself.

Mr. Pinsep. Can you state about how many from your own observation.

Witness. There were ten guns and three pistols and about ninety-seven swords, and eight or nine spears, a few ladders, several lances or clubs and a few miscellaneous weapons. This is to the best of my recollection, from my own observation. Altogether some 390 stand of arms. Of the men in custody, about 170 are fighting men by profession. It is by no means an essential qualification that the darogah should be able to read or write. The mohurris are kept for the purpose. A return in the hand of the mohurri, and sealed with the thanna seal, is received as an official document, and as evidence in the mofussil courts of justice.

Re-examined. There were 310 men sent down in custody from Burdwan. Some are in jail, others out on security. A very few were manjes or boat-men.

William Nelson Helger, examined by Mr. Clarke. I have been twenty-three years in this country. I have been frequently at Burdwan, with the last ten months. Prawn, haboo, has great influence there. I have heard from Mr. Ogilvy that he believed all the native officials there were under his influence. He assigned no other reason than has great wealth. I was at Burdwan when Mr. Shaw was confined, and on the day when he was liberated. He underwent a long examination before Mr. Ogilvy. Two or three letters were spoken by Mr. Shaw, one written by himself to the magistrate of Burdwan, another written in Persian by his directions. Mr. Ogilvy said, "I have your letter." Mr. Shaw said, "I do not mean that letter, I know you did not receive it." Mr. Melis has that, I mean, a Persian letter, which you told me would speak for itself. I believe this was not written down. Mr. Shaw seemed to be a little angry, and said "I insist upon this being taken down." I heard the examination read afterwards, and I believe this was not in it. Mr. Melis is acting or assistant collector of Burdwan.

Joynarain Chunder, examined by Mr. Leith. I am a head native in Mr. Shaw's office. I went up to Culna in April last, I saw Pertaub Chund there on Monday the 30th April in his bungalow. I went to inform him that Mr. Shaw had arrived. We went at dusk in the evening, on board. The darogah was there, there was a good deal of conversation. Mr. Shaw asked him, how he had got so fat. The darogah produced a purwannah, and desired that it might be read, it was read. I directed the assembly to be dispersed. The Rajah said he had no assembly, but only his own servants. Mr. Shaw said to the darogah, "see if there is any assemblage." He said "the nazir is the principal person." Somebody was sent to call the nazir, but he did not come. The darogah said that he made no complaint. A Persian letter was written by the moonshee, addressed to the nazir. I remained. Mr. Shaw went away after this letter was drafted. I delivered this afterwards to the nazir. The nazir read it, and said "very well, I will send it." This was in the darogah's presence. I was accompanied by Harris-chunder, moonshee, and two other persons. The day after, I was told at the thannah that another purwannah had just come ordering the Rajah to be taken to Hooghly. This was not read. The darogah said that he could not act without the order of the magistrate. Mr. Shaw wrote a letter to the magistrate of Burdwan, I went to deliver this to the nazir, but he would not receive it, because it was an English letter, by an attorney, and he had no orders. I sent to the magistrate. Mr. Shaw went to a factory three or four days from Culna, I remained at Culna, until the next day at noon. That evening I was in Mr. Shaw's boat, and about half past four I was awoke by my servant who told me the sepoy's were come. The sepoy's discharged muskets. Most of the people to the boats were asleep. After the firing, Mr.

Ogilvy came on board Mr. Shaw's boat. He had a double-barrelled pistol in his hand. He asked me where Mr. Shaw was. I said, "he had gone to the Pygachia factory." He appeared to be angry. He examined some of the papers in the boat. I fled that day, and came down in a boat to Calcutta. I saw no multitude of people at Culna, only in tens and twenties. It is a very populous place and has much trade. It is customary for merchant-boats to carry pilgrims, I have been on a pilgrimage. I had twenty-four or twenty-five men with me I do not think that Pertaub's train was disproportioned to his assumed rank.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton This is the letter written by Mr. Shaw (letter produced.) The person to whom it was given was not regular a runner. I can not tell when it arrived. The whole of the purwannah was read: Mr. Shaw understood most of it, and I explained the rest. I did not explain anything about arresting the Rajah or taking him to Hooghly, because it did not contain that. When I heard of the other purwannah at the thannah, I did not mention it to the Rajah nor to Mr. Shaw, I was not told to mention it. I did not forget the circumstance, but I had no reason to consider it sufficiently important. I went into the Rajah's boat and Mr. Shaw's that evening, but I did not see them. I saw Mr. Shaw the next morning. I do not know whether there were any purwannahs before. I should not know the purwannah if I saw it again. I did not read it myself. There were bonds and other papers in Mr. Shaw's boat. I do not know whether any of these bonds were from the Rajah to Radakissen Byack. If you shew me one, I will tell you. I cannot say for what purpose they were brought upon that expedition. I am one of the persons now charged at Hooghly with being accessory to a disturbance and breach of the peace. I am now at large on security.

By the judge. I saw the prisoner while I was at Culna not before the time when he came into the boat after the firing.

By the juror. I had not the purwannah in my hand, nor was I close enough to see it, so as to recognise it.

Hurrechunder Ghose, examined by Mr. Clarke.—I am in custody of the mofussil police, I was arrested on the 21st By-ack (the 2d of May) at Burdwan, I was liberated on security, on the 16th of July, I was again arrested on the 27th, presented a petition to the magistrate to come down to Calcutta. I know Pertaub Chund. I am his moonshiee. I accompanied him to Culna. (A letter shewn, purporting to be to the nazir.) I wrote this at Culna, and Joynarain took it, and went with me to the nazir. This was after dusk on the 30th April. The nazir read it and said that no answer to it was required. The nazir and darogah had been that morning on board Pertaub's boat. The nazir put a purwannah into his hand. He said that he had not eaten his victuals that morning. Pertaub said that his vakeel would come in the afternoon, and the nazir might then return. The nazir never came again. The darogah came that evening. I wrote the second letter that day. I generally wrote the Rajah's letters. No one else did. He had one pinnace seven or eight budgerows, and three or four rowing boats. There were lists of the boats and of the men. These were seized and are at Hooghly. While I was at Culna, the Rajah went once on shore, in a tonjohn. There was no riot or noise, nor any disturbance while I was at Culna. Between Monday evening and Wednesday morning, neither the darogah nor the nazir came on board. The Rajah had sixty or seventy burkendauzes with him. They mounted guard, but they were not all armed. They guarded his boats containing birds, music, women, &c.

Cross-examined by Mr. Peinsep. (Four letters shewn.) The first is not the Rajah's, it purports to be the writing of Radakistno Gosaul's, the Rajah's mooktear. He is the mooktear, who was sent to Burdwan; it is not his hand-writing. The second letter is my hand-writing, and signed by the Rajah, and was written at Santuore. I know Ram Bux Tewarry. He used to go on errands. The third letter is in my hand-writing. The writing on the outside is not mine; I do not know whose. This letter was written at Calcutta, before I left Calcutta. The direction is mine. The fourth letter I do not know. I do not know whether these were given to Ram Bux Tewarry. All the Rajah's papers were kept in the duffierkhanah boat. I heard nothing about the taking of the Rajah to Hooghly. I was at the thannah with Joynarain. The darogah had brought and shewn to the Rajah two or three purwannahs before. One related to the dispersion of the people. This was five or six days before the reading of the other purwannahs in the boat. To this the Rajah made answer that the people were his own attendants, and could not be denominated a concourse assembled to make a disturbance. The Rajah did not dismiss any of his people, but sent a mooktear with a petition to Burdwan. Those persons who are in the jail at Burdwan, were the persons in the Rajah's service, except four or five who happened to come to bathe on the morning of the 2d May. We were going to Burdwan to indentify the Rajah among his relatives and then to adopt measures for recovering his property. He was not going to seat himself on the guldsee. There is nothing about that in the letters I wrote. The Rajah ordered his sword to be brought. When he landed he had it drawn as he walked on the bank, not all the time. When he was coming back, he returned it to the sheath. Some others had swords. I saw a sepoy at the Suntaj Barree. The Rajah did not give orders to disarm him. I should have heard it, if given. There would have been a halt.

There was no firing of guns nor beating of drums, but there were huge crowds of people on the banks. Bamboo fences were put up by the darogah to prevent people tumbling in.

Radakistno Gosaul examined by Mr. Leith. I am a mooktear of Pertaub. I was at Culna in April last. I went to Burdwan by his directions. I saw Mr. Ogilvy in his cutcherry. I took a dawkiah with a mooktear-namch from the Rajah. He said that he would not accept them, but that I must go to the judge. I said the Lord saheb had written to afford protection to the Rajah and it was incumbent on him to receive them. He told me to make out a petition in my own name. There was no stamped paper there, and this caused a delay, and by the time it was obtained, the cutcherry was shut and Mr. Ogilvy gone. On the Monday following as I was going in a palkee along the street, I was met by Mr. Ogilvy, Mr. Shaw, Dr. Cheek, and a mooktear of Prawn baboo's. They were in a carriage and alighted. They stopped the palankeen, and examined my papers. I was then arrested and pinioned.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. I did give three letters once from the Rajah to Ram Bux Tewarry. I do not know what they were about, I should not know them if I saw them. One was to the Gosein of Beroor, I think one was to the Rance of Puchet. I am one of those charged at Hooghly, I am now at large on security.

John Allen was called to prove the jurisdiction.

Bheek Sing, subadar, examined by Mr. Clarke. I am a subadar in the 3d regiment. I was at Culna on the 2d of May. I was coming from Byoonchee, where we were escorting treasure. There were two officers with two companies of sepoys, each eighty in number. I did not know Mr. Ogilvy by sight. Two gentlemen came, and I heard from the captain that one was the doctor and the other the magistrate. Byoonchee is six or eight coss from Culna. We reached Culna at three

In the morning. Captain Little ordered us to load with ball. Five gentlemen were then present, the two officers, the magistrate, the doctor, and a padre, and all were standing close together. After we had loaded, we proceeded to the bank. The captain told us, that a great many people were assembled there, and that he expected there would be a battle, and that we were to be upon our guard. The companies were drawn up in a long line, double files, eighty in the front rank, eighty in the rear. This was along the bank of the river. It extended 6 or 700 paces. I stood on the left flank of the first, and on the right of the second; between both. I saw no people on the banks. I saw fifty or sixty boats. It was said that the Rajah and his people were in them. The few people that were visible when we arrived got under the roofs. The captain took fifteen of the grenadier company, and fifteen of the light company, and proceeded to the left with them. He went on, till he came opposite to where the budgerows were, and all the gentlemen were with him. They were about three or 400 paces from me. Two small dinghies put off from the middle of the stream. The burkhdazas called out to them to stop. One stopped, the other did not. I heard a small report first, then several muskets in succession, to the number of about fifty. I saw no commotion or disturbance among the boats. I heard an order given "maro," "maro," preceding the firing. How could it take place without an order? This came from the place where these gentlemen were. I heard the cry, "golee maro woosko," I was not near enough to hear who spoke. The firing stopped when a bugle was sounded, "cease firing." The captain then ordered two havildars to proceed with two sections of sepoy to the other side of the river. The river was of very broad. Arms were found in the boat, swords and clubs. The people were taken prisoners.

Cross examined by Mr. Prinsep. The line was drawn up some space from the edge of the water. The police people were standing behind us, when the firing commenced, and none were before. Some were alongside, on the left, when they cried out to the boats to stop. They were where the gentlemen were standing. I would not have fired without the order of the officer. The officer's order to fire is given in Hindoostanee. The word "fire" is now never given, it is "jacet," (present.) When successive or running shots are to be fired, an order is given beforehand for file firing. After that there is the beat of a drum. If there is no drum, it may commence by word of mouth or by a bugle if there is a bugle. I was examined before at the police office. I cautioned the men not to fire. This is usual. When the second firing took place, the captain ordered me to go to the left and forbid it, I did so. I cannot tell who gave the order "maro."

The trial was adjourned at a quarter before eight o'clock p.m.—Hurkaru, August 17.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1838.

THIRD DAY.

The trial recommenced at nine o'clock.

Lauchlan Alexander Maclean, examined by Mr. Clarke. I am an ensign in the 26th regt. N. I. I know the prisoner. I was at Culna on 2d of May; with troops. I saw Mr. Ogilvy about sixteen miles from Culna, at six in the morning. He wished Captain Little to march to Culna. There was a letter before from Mr. O. to Captain L. I left at five in the evening with Mr. O. The latter had remained at that place since the morning.

I do not recollect the name of the place. We reached Culna about twelve o'clock at night, or one in the morning. I saw the troops at Culna about three o'clock. The number was from 130 to 150. They were then remaining a short distance out of the village. With them were Captain Little, Mr. Ogilvy, Dr. Check, and Mr. Alexander. Captain L. ordered the sepoys to march to the river side. Previously to that Captain L. asked Mr. O. whether Pertab Chund was to be taken dead or alive, and Mr. O. said yes. (The witness added "it" or some other words, in this answer after the words "dead or alive;" but upon being again questioned, he said he had recalled the word, and that he did not add "if he attempted to escape," but checked himself before doing so. Upon further questioning, the witness said, that if he added the words, he did not intend it, that in fact Captain L. did not say the word, though it was so reported afterwards.) Captain L. ordered the troops to load at the choke. The order was given in English "prime and load." This implied to load with ball-cartridge. They loaded with ball. Mr. Ogilvy could have heard the order at the time. When the troops reached the river side, they filed along the shore. The length of the line was 2 or 300 yards perhaps, but I am no judge of distance. I saw some natives on the shore, they began to collect; but there was no great crowd together. There were boats in the river, and alongside, and they appeared crowded with people moving about. Captain L. called out in Hindoostanee, but I do not understand enough to know what was said. I then went to my company to a different end of the line. Previously to that I heard nothing said by Mr. O. There was firing. When I reached my company I was about fifty yards from Mr. O. Before I reached the end the firing commenced. I heard one musket fired, and shortly after, several others. The single musket was fired rather to the left of the centre; the other shots were a running fire along each side. About twenty or thirty muskets, I believe, were fired. I saw somebody go on board the boats, but I do not remember whether it was after or before the firing. The bugle sounded "cease firing." Captain L. then went on board. There was a search for arms made by Mr. O. I saw some collected on the bank. There were swords, shields and clubs. No resistance was offered in my sight. I saw no riot. Mr. Ogilvy had a double barrelled pistol.

Cross examined by Mr. Prinsep. It is a very short time since I joined the Bengal army. This is the first time I was on active service. We were exciting twelve lakhs of treasure, when we were called away. I followed my superior officer, of course. Whatever orders were given, were given to Captain Little, and he can best speak. There was no medical man of our corps. Dr. Check was there; he came from Burdwan. The order to load was given; we had no blank cartridge. I do not know whether sepoys will obey any other order than one of a military officer. I saw a letter from Mr. Alexander to Dr. Check. I cannot say whether the firing commenced accidentally or otherwise. I heard no order given. Captain L. was close to where the first shot was fired. I heard no signal to fire by bugle.

By the judge. I heard no persons call out anything before the firing.

Buboo Tewarry, examined by Mr. Leith. I am a sepoy in the 3d regt. N. I. I was with my company at Culna on 2d of May. We were on the bank of the river early that morning. I was on the left side of the line in the light company. We came along in sections. I saw boats and budgerows in the midstream. A boat was proceeding, and not attending to the prohibition to proceed, the magistrate fired a pistol at the boat. I was at that time moving up to the line, which was not completed. I was passing close by the magistrate. At this time that the pistol was fired, every body was talking.

The magistrate, the darogah, the nazir and others were calling out "maro," "maro." After the order to fire with ball, the muskets began firing. The magistrate and the other gentlemen gave the order to fire with ball. The people in the boats were sitting out. There was no kind of riot or disturbance. I did not go into the boats. Forty or fifty muskets were fired, when the bugle sounded to cease firing. I saw about twenty or twenty-five old broken swords. There was a second firing after the first had ceased on the sound of the bugle. This second firing took place on the Rajah's jumping into the river. The gentlemen, that is the magistrate, the captain, and the rest, cried out "the Rajah is escaping, golee sa maro." This was the occasion of the second firing; ten or twenty shots were fired by the sepoys. The gentlemen taking the muskets out of the hands of the sepoys also fired. It ceased when the Rajah got over to the other side out of reach. He was afterwards arrested, with several men.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. By the "gentlemen," I mean the magistrate, Captain Little, Ensign Maclean, Dr. Cheek and the Padre Alexander. They all took muskets and fired. I saw the Padre fire. When the magistrate fired, he gave his pistol to a servant to hold, who fired also. The pistol-shot fired by Mr. Ogilvy was the first shot I heard fired.

Khoda Bux, examined by Mr. Clarke. I am a havildar. I was with my company at Culna on the 2d of May. Mr. Ogilvy was there. Early in the morning, we went to the banks of the river. Captain Little told the sepoys, that they must be careful, because the Rajah was present with many armed men. The troops were ordered to draw up in two lines or ranks. The length was about 400 paces from one extremity to the other. I was in the middle of the line near the captain. I saw fifty or sixty boats in the river. We had extended to the right and left opposite the boats. The boats were forty or fifty paces from us. Nobody called out to the people in the boats in the middle; but when the boats near shore were moving off, they were told not to go. Upon a dinghy in the midstream moving away, orders were given to fire ball, to frighten them. The order was to me in the air over the boats. Upon this, three or four shots were fired. But upon this having no effect in stopping them, orders were given to fire upon them, that they were taking away the Rajah. The magistrate was about seven paces from me. He was moving about, giving directions, and arranging matters. The order was "maro," and then balls were fired. Fifty or sixty muskets were discharged. The bugle sounded and the firing ceased. After that I know of no other firing, for I then went by the captain's orders to the other side. I arrested the Rajah. I saw sixty or eighty weapons, chiefly swords, two or three guns and one pistol. One gun was rotten, another was an English double-barrelled. The swords were native six-anna tulwars. The troops loaded with ball before leaving Culna, by the orders of captain. Mr. Ogilvy was present.

Cross-examined by Mr. Prinsep. I am an old soldier, and I have been in some battles. Sometimes we fire with word of command, but if the enemy come suddenly, we do not wait. I did not hear what directions were given to the nazir and darogah. My duty was to attend to my commanding officer. I did not see the padre fire; but he may have fired.

By the judge. I was standing seven or eight paces from the gentlemen behind them when the firing took place. All five were together, until Ensign Maclean went away to the left. The ensign went away after the firing commenced. I did not see the magistrate fire anything. I was looking sometimes to the right and sometimes to the left. The order was given by the captain to fire overhead, when the boats were in the midstream. Three or four muskets were then fired. Afterwards, when the boats got close to the others in the midstream, the magistrate said "maro." He also said, that the Rajah was getting away in the boats. I distinctly recollect hearing the magistrate using those words. I do not confound what the magistrate said with what the others said, because the voices of natives is very different from that of Europeans. The other Europeans were not standing close to the magistrate. Upon this being said, the balls were fired. When the other was given, the Rajah was in the boat. No one else gave an order. There is some difference in the account which I now give, and the account I have given before, because I only speak to the questions put to me. The questions are not the same. I do not recollect, whether I said that the captain joined in the cry, "maro." He did not join. I never said at the police, that we would not have fired on the orders of magistrate.

By a juror. I saw a pistol in the hand of the magistrate, but no musket.

Gourdeen Deday, examined by Mr. Leith. I am a sepoy in the 3d N. I. Last May I was at Culna, I was with my company early in the morning. I saw Mr. Ogilvy, the magistrate of Burdwan, there. He was moving about. I saw boats and budgerows in the river. There was firing upon the orders of captain and magistrate. A boat was coming from the eastward, which was forbidden to proceed to join the budgerows. It went on, and the magistrate said in Hindoostanee "fire at the banchoots, they will not obey orders." Upon that ten or twenty balls were fired. The captain then caused the bugles to sound "cease firing." Before this, there was no firing. The captain gave no order until the boat disobeyed. He then said, "fire at them with ball; they will not obey orders." The magistrates was four or five paces on me.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. There were no muskets fired before the ten or twenty of which I spoke. I have always given the same accounts of this transaction. At the police office. I only answered to the questions put to me, and I do the same here. I do not recollect having said that any muskets were first fired in the air. (After some prevarication the witness confessed, that an order was first given by the captain, to fire three or four muskets in the air, and that he had stated this at the police.) There was no interval between these discharges and the ten or twenty muskets. I do not know whether the first three or four were aimed at the boats or fired over. The magistrate was not standing in front of us; if he had, he might have been shot. (The witness was asked whether he had not said at the police office that all the European gentlemen were standing together; this he at first seemed to deny, but after some shuffling, admitted.) I suppose all the others must have heard the magistrate give the order "maro." I saw the magistrate with the pistol in his hand. I did not see him with a musket. I did not see him fire the pistol. I did not see the padre or the doctor take a musket and fire on the boats.

By the judge. Immediately upon the three or four muskets being fired, the other ten or twenty were fired; there was no interval. The captain gave orders to two or three to fire overhead, and, immediately after, the general order to fire was given. The captain did not join in this second order. (The judge remarked that this was a contradiction of himself in express terms.)

Dwarkan Singh, examined by Mr. Clarke. I was at Culna with my company on the 2d of May. We were in line. I was in the centre. Some boats were moving on the river. The magistrate desired them to be brought to the shore. The captain, the lieutenant, (ensign) the doctor, the magistrate, and the padre, were all together. An order was given, when the boats would not obey the orders, to fire at them with ball. The magistrate fired his pistol. About forty muskets were discharged. The bugle sounded to cease firing. After that five or ten muskets were fired on the right. The bugle did not sound again. There was no riot, and no resistance offered. There may have been 250 or 300 police people, and chuprasses altogether.

Cross-examined by Mr. Prinsep. I did not see the pistol fired. I said so at the police. (This is different from the deposition taken.) All the gentlemen were together, ten or twenty paces from me on my right, I should have got into trouble, if I had fired without orders. There were vacant spaces between the sepoys in front of the magistrate. He aimed between the sepoys, through these spaces. I saw him. The captain gave the first order. I attended only to his order.

By the judge. No other person gave the order, but the captain.

Golaum Hyder, examined by Mr. Leith. I am a havildar in the 3d regiment. I was at Culna on the 2d of May with my company. We were in line on the banks of the river. Mr. Ogilvy was there. There were five gentlemen. The magistrate was moving backward and forward. I heard firing. The shots were first fired by order of the captain. He told them to fire over two boats making off. The magistrate said "maro." Several shots were fired. The firing ceased when the bugle sounded. I saw, afterwards, some guns and broken swords; I saw a man in the boats who was shot through the chest. I do not know his name. I afterwards heard that he was a brahmin. The man was still alive.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. I heard the magistrate give the order. The captain gave an order to fire two guns over, to the sky (asmanko). I gave the same account at the police office. I did then say that the magistrate said "maro." (There was nothing said about the order of the magistrate, in this witness's deposition at the police.) I also stated at the police, that Mr. Ogilvy said, the Rajah is escaping, follow me to the boats. After the two shots were fired to the sky, I heard no other order given. I saw the magistrate with a pistol, but I did not see him fire it. I did not see him take a musket or fire.

Captain William Little. (not examined in chief.)

Cross-examined by Mr. Prinsep. I commanded the detachment at Culna. I was called upon by the magistrate of Burdwan, to give aid. I was escorting treasure to a large amount. I have a letter, which I then received from the magistrate, Mr. Ogilvy. In consequence, of this I halted. Mr. Ogilvy joined me at Byoonchee. I proceeded to Culna in the evening. The troops were drawn up on the banks of the river. A firing took place. I should say, decidedly, that the firing was the consequence of a misapprehension of the orders on the part of the sepoys. Nobody, to my knowledge, or in my hearing, gave any orders to fire at the people in the boats. I never heard Mr. Ogilvy give any orders to the sepoys. I understood from Mr. Ogilvy that his intention was to arrest Pertaub and his followers. I apprehended that there was a great probability of resistance being offered. I did not see the magistrate fire a musket or pistol, nor Mr. Alexander, nor Dr. Cheek. The first time I met Mr. Ogilvy after the firing, he expressed his regret. The transaction displeased me very much. I took the sepoys to task. Between 90 and 100 arms, chiefly swords, were taken from the sepoys who had taken them from Pertaub's people. This was besides the weapons taken by the burkendsuzes. I saw a seik chukka (a sharp disk) among the weapons. I delivered 337 prisoners over. Nearly 300 were fighting men. After Pertaub was in my tent, a prisoner, there was a large concourse of people. Some 30,000 between twelve o'clock and sunset. There were great crowds on the march with him to Hooghly. I heard no cry of "maro, maro," before the firing. The running shots followed the first two immediately. I believe this arose from a misconception of orders.

Re-examined by Mr. Clarke. There may have been a cry of "maro" after the firing. There was a caution given to the boats, not to move off. The crowd did not attempt to rescue, but they were rather insolent. The fighting men were of various castes. About thirty were body servants of the Rajah. They were under my charge about five days, and none of them denied belonging to Pertaub. I am not aware that any inquiry was instituted as to the breach of military discipline on the part of the sepoys in firing without orders. The firing was from mistake.

Muddnowoodun examined by Mr. Leith. I am a doctor. I went to Culna last May. I saw Terrachund Chuckerbutty; he had been shot in the left breast, and was in a very dangerous state. I saw him at the padre's school on the 4th of May. It was by the order of Dr. Cheek. He died on the 20th of May. He died in the hospital of Burdwan.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. There is a regular European surgeon attached to the hospital. His name is Dr. Cheek. My reports are regularly made to him. I made my reports to him in this case. I was not present at the moment that he died; nor was I present at the post mortem examination. The body was opened and examined by Dr. Cheek.

By the judge. I was not present when the body was opened by Dr. Cheek. The man told me, when he was in a dying state, that he was wounded at Culna. I do not think he had then any expectation of recovery.

Sir John Grant said that he thought Dr. Cheek must be called, as the best evidence procurable must be given by the prosecution of the death, and of all facts to be determined.

George Nicholas Cheek, called, examined by Mr. Clarke. I am the civil surgeon of Burdwan. Terrachund Chuckerbutty was in the hospital there 1st May. He died on the 20th instant of a gun-shot wound on the left side below the collar-bone, breaking the second rib, passing through the upper lungs, and going out at the back, breaking the blade-bone. I examined the body after death. I have not the slightest doubt of the cause of his death. He received the wound at Culna on the 2d of May. I saw him fifteen minutes afterwards.

Cross-examined by Mr. Prinsep. I accompanied Mr. Ogilvy officially from Burdwan. I was aware that no medical man was with Captain Little's party. It was in consequence of this circumstance that I was taken. At Byoonchee we fell in with Captain L. I heard Mr. O. say that there were 250 men at Culna, and he required Captain L.'s assistance in apprehending them. He said, "I think they will resist the police, but with the military there will be no resistance," or words to that effect. At Mr. Alexander's house we had a conversation, at which Mr. O. Captain L. and myself were present. I had written a letter to Mr. Alexander by the directions of Mr. Ogilvy. I received an answer to this, which answer was delivered to Mr. Ogilvy. This took place through me, because Mr. O. wished it to be kept secret from his darogah and nazir. (These letters were put in and proved.) When we went to Culna, we first went to the thanna. The nazir spoke to Mr. O. but I do not know what he said. About half an hour or more after we arrived, the detachment came up. This was about midnight. About day-break we went to the chake. Before that, Mr. Ogilvy said to Captain L., "I shall call upon the soi disant Rajah to surrender, and tell the men to lay down their arms; and I shall then send the darogah to apprehend them. That failing, I shall make the matter over to Captain Little." After the firing I saw the nazir. The darogah and some of the police were there. A few minutes after the troops were drawn in line along the top of the bank, I heard some persons bawling out. I was too far off to hear the words, or to see the persons. I was a con-

FOURTH DAY, THURSDAY, AUGUST 16.

THE DEFENCE.

The adjourned trial re-commenced at ten o'clock this morning.

Sir J. Grant asked the prisoner whether he had any thing to say in his defence as his counsel were not permitted to address the Court on his behalf except on points of law.

Mr. Ogilvy said, that he had written out an address, which he was afraid he was unable to undertake the exertion of reading, and he hoped the Court would allow a friend to act as his substitute.

Sir J. Grant said, that the Court would willingly allow the address to be read by any gentleman whom Mr. Ogilvy might choose to name.

A. E. Samuells, Esq. c. s. was then named by Mr. Ogilvy and read the following address :

My Lord, and gentlemen of the jury.

After all that has been said and published respecting this unhappy affair at Culna, singled out and pursued as I have been by every kind of charge, I yet owe to my prosecutors, whoever they be, my thanks for this opportunity of bringing the whole matter to a public judicial investigation. The result, I trust, will satisfy not only you, gentlemen of the jury, whom it is my first object to convince, but the Government and the public at large, that throughout the whole transaction, I did nothing but what my duty as a magistrate, and the official orders and reports on which I was bound to act, compelled me to; and that even the misapprehension of orders which Captain Little has deposed to and which led to all the mischief that ensued, is one for which I can in no sense be held responsible, either legally or morally.

I presume there are few of you, gentlemen, who are ignorant that the duties of a mofussil magistrate are far more varied and more anxious than those of an English justice of the peace; that his authority is to be exercised over a far greater space, his responsibility far more serious; and that his neglect of duty would probably induce not local inconvenience, but general danger and confusion; yet, even in England where all is well ordered under domestic tribunals, with a numerous magistracy always at hand, tumultuous, and still more, armed assemblages of people may be put down and dispersed by the magistrate in person without any formal warrant; and in case of disobedience, he may resort to force to disperse or arrest the refractory, and, should death ensue, the magistrate would be liable to no charge, even of manslaughter. His lordship will tell you that such is the law of England, and will further inform you that a state of active riot or disturbance is not necessary to give the magistrate such authority, but that the existence of an assemblage of persons sufficient for the purposes of terror and intimidation is quite enough to authorize the magistrate to act. Such, too, is the law of all nations where civil policy prevails. In no place is such power more necessary to the magistrate than in provinces acquired and held by conquest; where every local affray may swell out into general tumult, and speedily assume the character of sedition or rebellion. Some of you, gentlemen, may, perhaps, recollect, as a case in point, the affair of the Moulvees in the neighbouring district of Baraset, and there are not wanting many similar instances.

You have it in evidence, that I was magistrate of the populous district of Burdwan, the residence of the most powerful zemindar under the Company's dominion, whose possessions extend far and wide over that and the adjoining zillahs. You have heard that the present zemindar is an infant, an adopted son of the late Rajah Tejchunder, still under the tutelage of his natural father.

siderable way to the left of the line; Mr. Alexander was with me. Captain L. and Mr. O. were on my left. I am speaking as I stood, facing the water. The magistrate was too far from me to hear what he said, I saw the darogah stepping from the bank into a boat. I heard one musket shot at the end of the line. Soon afterwards, two more shots, then a running fire down the line. After this I saw three or four men swimming, at whom some shots were fired. The bugle did not sound until the end of the firing. After the firing, Mr. Ogilvy said when I met him, "how very unfortunate the firing was! I never gave any order." It was not then known that any one had been hurt. Mr. Ogilvy had a double barrelled pistol belonging to Mr. Barlow, the judge of Burdwan. Mr. Barlow at his house gave one to Mr. O. just before we set out, and the other to me. I handed it to Captain L. with all the powder, caps, and balls. Both were loaded by Mr. Barlow. Mr. Ogilvy's pistol was not discharged to my knowledge. I have frequently heard Mr. Ogilvy express a disinclination to employ the military. In consequence of a note which I received on a slip of Bengallee paper from Mr. Ogilvy, I went to him, and found him and Mr. Shaw together, Mr. O. showed me a letter from Captain Harrington. Previous to this, I was not required by Mr. O. to attend him to Culna.

Re-examined by Mr. Clarke, I have heard that Padie Alexander was once in the artillery. I should have been surprised, however, to have seen him take a musket. I did not see the boat push off, which the darogah was getting into. Captain Little gave the order to load. We were then standing all together in the choke. I do not know whether any one was sent to summon the Rajah to surrender before the firing. I do not know whether Mr. Ogilvy examined any one upon oath. I saw no great crowd upon the boat before the firing, and no tumult or disturbance.

Mr. Clarke now proposed to read the following documentary evidence put in :

The memorial of Pertaub Chund to the Hon. A. Ross, deputy Governor of Bengal, for aid and safe escort to Burdwan. The minute upon this, refusing the prayer of the petition.

Mr. Halliday's official letter to Mr. Ogilvy forwarding a copy of the memorial, and preparing him for the possibility of disturbance.

The two letters written by Pertaub Chund to the naib and darogah. These were objected to, on the ground, that it did not yet appear, that they had ever reached Mr. Ogilvy himself before the transaction, and that they could not therefore be identified with him, until some ground was laid for the presumption, that they had influenced this conduct. On the other hand, it was submitted, that these letters were admissible evidence at all events: that, in the first place, there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury of the fact of their receipt by Mr. Ogilvy before the transaction, and that, secondly, even without such presumptive proof, the letters were evidence to show, that Pertaub was not acting in disobedience to the orders of the magistrate. Sir John Grant thought, that as part of the case related to the question of the legality or illegality of Pertaub's acts and intentions, the letters were clearly admissible in reference to that matter.

The English letter written by Mr. Shaw to Mr. Ogilvy, was not tendered, and it was admitted not to have reached Mr. Ogilvy until after the Culna transaction.

This closed the case for the prosecution, and the Court then adjourned about eight o'clock P. M.

Prawn baboo, whose administration of these vast possessions has rendered the family unpopular in the extreme. You have heard that a pretender to the raj, started up as it were from the grave, under circumstances marvellous even to the absurdity, but not the less likely on that account to excite the passions and credulity of such a population. That he appeared in Ban-eoorah in 1835, in the character of a faukeer, and gathered a tumultuous rabble about him, with which he paraded the district, and, but for the decisive conduct of the magistrate, would have spread confusion throughout the whole country. That he was arrested, tried, and convicted. The record of conviction has been produced and will be read. You will find it to have been for the same offence of tumultuous assemblage and resistance to the constituted authorities for which he was arrested by me at Culna, and is now taking his trial. He underwent his sentence of six month's imprisonment, and was discharged on recognizance and sureties of the peace for twelve months more. That period had scarcely expired, when you find him at Culna, with a fleet of forty or fifty boats, and a retinue of people armed and unarmed, stated, by himself, in his letter to the nazir, to amount to 342, of whom no less than 170 confess themselves to be fighting men, and avowed his intended progress to Burdwan for the ostensible purpose of procuring evidence in his identity; but, as it would seem from intercepted letters to the neighbouring Rajahs and zamindars, with the real purpose of seating himself on the guddee of the raj, on which he invites them with their followers to see him reinstated.

Gentlemen, you will not suppose that the public authorities could sit idly by while such doings were in hand. You have already before you the minute of the deputy Governor of Bengal upon the pretender's application, with the orders of Government to myself thereon, a previous order had been received by me which will also be laid before you, as well as the letter of the superintendent of police, the perwannahs or warrants issued by myself, the returns or reports, at first of the darogah, and, ultimately, of the darogah jointly with the nazir, whom I had been obliged to despatch to the spot. You will find that my orders in the first instance were to prevent the invasion of the district by this disorderly concourse, and, afterwards, to disperse them. Those orders being reported to have been set at naught, my last perwannahs were to disperse them and arrest the pretender. One of these orders is that which has been served in the presence of Mr. Shaw; you will judge whether it has been truly represented.

The last report received by me was on the 30th of April, apprizing me of the continued contumacy and resistance to both darogah and nazir, and that the arrest could not be made without bloodshed or even loss of life. This also you will have before you. I had scarcely received it when a communication reached me from Captain Harrington, assistant under Captain Wilkinson, the political agent for Maubhooin, which likewise shall be presented to you. Its alarming tenour determined my proceedings. After consulting with the other official gentlemen of the station, I wrote to Captain Little to halt his treasure party, joined them myself at Boingheer, and, having there received a communication from the only European gentleman resident at Culna, which confirmed the former reports, I proceeded to that place as you have heard deposed.

Before adverting to the evidence of the transaction itself, allow me to request your attention to a misstatement in the opening of the counsel for the prosecution, by no means unimportant. He told you that it was I who ordered the men to load with ball at the clocke, a statement wholly unwarranted either by the depositions at the police or by any you have heard in this court. You will, therefore, dismiss from your minds this gratuitous misrepresentation.

The evidence of the occurrence at Culna, with which the prosecutor would have closed his case, had he not been compelled, very reluctantly, to produce Captain Little and Dr. Cheek, must be too fresh in your memory to require much comment. It was that of persons under trial themselves, and implicated so deeply in the transaction, as to have the strongest possible motive for perverting the truth; or of sepoys in whom you cannot but have remarked a strong anxiety to rid themselves of the consequences of a misconception of orders, which had proved so disastrous, and threatened them with heavy responsibility. There is no other way of accounting for the labyrinth of contradictions in which their statements have involved the case. As to the evidence of Ensign Maclean, there is really nothing in it that can affect me. My plan of proceeding, which I openly and repeatedly expressed at Culna, was to take the offenders and transmit them to Hooghly and Burdwan for trial, to do so by means of the civil power if possible, but if that should fail, to hand the matter over to Captain Little and his detachment. The circumstances of the case fully warranted my calling out the military, but they were called in more to overawe resistance than for any active purpose. The expression deposed to by Ensign Maclean of taking the prisoners dead or alive, had reference only to the case of resistance which you have heard that we all anticipated, and which, as his lordship, I doubt not, will tell you, would have justified me in proceeding even to extremities. That my intention was to resort to military force only in the event of resistance, must be clear from the fact which you will already have inferred from Dr. Cheek's deposition, and which will be fully confirmed—that when the firing unfortunately commenced, the darogah was in the very act of stepping into a boat to summon the party to surrender. A few minutes later, and he would himself have been exposed to the fire of the troops. But what say the other English gentlemen, who were present on the occasion, and whose production as witnesses was extracted with so much difficulty. Their statements, I submit, entirely exonerate me from this charge. I will not detain you with commenting on their evidence, or on that of Mr. Alexander, which remains to be heard. I leave it to yourself to give it the weight it deserves. I am sensible that it may appear to you, gentlemen of the jury, that the object in view might have been effected without the employment of military; but I beg you to observe, that such is not the opinion of Captain Little; and it would have been highly culpable in me to expose my authority to the hazard of a repulse. But, in truth, the question is not whether the actual state of matters at Culna required the interference of the military, but whether the nature of my information was such as to warrant my resort to a measure so much against my inclination. That information will be fully before you. It will be for you to pronounce your judgment upon it. On that information I was bound to act by the laws and regulations which I was appointed to administer.

It is hardly necessary for me, after Captain Little and Dr. Cheek's evidence, to disclaim having myself either fired or ordered others to fire. The imputed cry of "maro," "maro," as proceeding from my lips, is equally destitute of reasonable or consistent testimony to support it. My conduct and expressions both before and after the transaction will, I should hope, convince you of the utter falsehood of the allegation. One word, and I have done. If anything in my conduct on this occasion or in any act of my previous life has led you, gentlemen of the jury, to believe for one moment, that I could be capable of anything so wanton, so reckless, and so un-English, as to have proceeded to the river side with a deliberate intent to direct a military fire upon a sleeping crowd, I am content to be delivered over to every penalty the law can inflict for such an outrage on humanity.

The record of conviction of Pertaub Chund was then put in and read; by which it appeared that in 1836 Aluck Shah alais Pertaub Chund, had been convicted of assembling men in arms and setting at defiance the constituted authorities, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment, and to find sureties to keep the peace for one year.

An order of Government in the form of a letter to Mr. Ogilvy in June 1837, approving his conduct towards Pertaub, and directing care to be taken that no disturbance should arise.

Luckeynarain Ghose, the Foujdarry sheristadar of Burdwan, was called to prove the purwannahs issued by the magistrate, Mr. Ogilvy, and the reports received at Burdwan from the darogah and nazir of Culna. The official seal of the thannah was appended to all the reports: unusual despatch had been employed in forwarding the purwannahs relating to Pertaub, expresses having been used instead of the regular dawk.

Captain John Colfield Harrington, examined by Mr. Morton. I am deputy political agent to the Governor General for the S. W. frontier, I have been in this district about three years. On the 26th of April last, I wrote a circular to the magistrates of Burdwan and Bancoorah and other adjoining districts, inclosing a copy of a letter written to Captain Wilkinson the Governor General's political agent (letters put in and proved.) This was in consequence of the apprehension of a man called Ram Bux Lewarry, who was carrying several letters from Pertaub Chund to the wealthy zemindars of the districts in question. I remember Pertaub Chund making his appearance in my district about three years since with a large assemblage of followers. He had been a faqueer and was known by some as Aluck Shah. This may mean "invisible king." He made himself known to me as the claimant of the Rajah of Burdwan. The whole district was in a considerable state of agitation and excitement. I think this has been very much the case since, and there would be much ground for alarm, if he made his appearance in those parts. It was shortly after his first appearance in my district that he was arrested for the disturbance at Bancoorah.

Robert Barlow, examined by Mr. Prinsep. I am judge of the zillah of Burdwan. I remember Mr. Ogilvy going from thence to Culna. I know he received two or three Persian reports before he started. I saw Captain Harrington's letter in Mr. O's hand then. We had a conversation at the time. He is my subordinate officer. I do not know that the conversation was official. Mr. Shaw, the assistant magistrate was there. I advised the military to be called in when we went. I gave him one of my pistols, and the other to Dr. Cheek. I think they are quite new pistols. I received the pistol back from Mr. Ogilvy, loaded. There was a strong feeling prevailing in the district concerning Pertaub, I have known Mr. Ogilvy since last February. I should certainly not say that he was reckless of human life!

Maryrick Arthur Coffin Shaw, examined by Mr. Morton. I was assistant magistrate at Burdwan last April and May. I have since been officiating magistrate. I remember seeing Captain Harrington's letter in Mr. Ogilvy's hands, on Monday the 30th of April. Dr. Cheek came in afterwards. I know that it was in consequence of this letter that Mr. Ogilvy determined upon going to Culna.

The letter of Captain Harrington to Mr. Ogilvy, with the inclosed communication from the former (a very strong letter) relating to the probable intentions of Pertaub Chund, derived chiefly from intercepted letters to zemindars and others, was put in and read. Captain H's opinion seemed to be that there was something like a widely extended plot in embryo, to support the claims of Pertaub. Also a letter from Mr. F. C. Smith to Mr. Ogilvy, giving directions to the latter.

The purwannahs of the magistrate and the reports of the darogah were tendered. The latter were objected to. After some argument the learned judge overruled the objection, considering that the magistrate was justified in acting on the reports prima facie. The objection taken, was, that there was nothing to show that these were the reports of the darogah, and that, on the contrary, it was proved that he could neither read nor write. On the other hand, it was admitted, that these reports were not evidence of the real state of the country, or even of the darogah's belief on the subject; but that the magistrate was nevertheless justified prima facie in acting upon them, whether true or not, as a constable is justified in acting upon a forged warrant, if he acts bona fide. Mr. Clarke also objected to some of the purwannahs being read, and not the whole. He said that several were kept back, and that some three or four had been carefully picked out, to support an untrue presumption that resistance had been offered to the authorities. Mr. Prinsep said that this was the first time he had ever heard so extraordinary an objection, especially in the case of a prosecution for felony. Could it be pretended that the prisoner was not at liberty to select whatever portions he considered material to his case? Much expense had been incurred in getting the numerous documents which had been put in, translated, and if the prosecutors considered any others essential to their case, let them get them translated, and put them in themselves. Sir J. Grant said that he could not see any objection whatever to the counsel for the defence selecting such as they might deem material to their own case. These purwannahs did not constitute an entire record, but were separate documents. His lordship added, that in a prosecution for felony, he should not hesitate to direct any document to be translated, at the time, if it should happen to be necessary, by the interpreter in court.

These purwannahs were to disperse the assemblage, and if this was resisted, to arrest Pertaub. The reports set forth a history of the different events, and the last return informed the magistrate that the dispersion could not be effected without his presence, and that there was great danger of armed resistance and consequent affrays and bloodshed.

Assand Ally, nazir, examined by Mr. Morton. I am the Foujdarry nazir of Burdwan. On the 29th of April last, I was ordered by the magistrate, Mr. Ogilvy to proceed to Culna with a purwannah. The purwannah directed me to disperse the assembly, and to arrest Pertaub, and take him to Hooghly. I went accordingly. I went on board his budgerow one day about noon and shewed the purwannah. He did not disperse any of his men. I made a report accordingly to the magistrate. I received two Persian letters from Pertaub, one the same evening, and another the next morning. I did not send these to the magistrate until the 10th or 11th of May. My report was written and sent before these letters came to me. I thought it was a mere pretence, and that Pertaub did not really intend to obey the magistrate's orders. I afterwards sent the darogah on board, but I did not again go myself. I remained on the bank of the river, I saw the magistrate on the following night, about midnight at Culna. I went with him to Mr. Alexander's house. From that we went to the choke. There were some troops. I heard the captain give the order to load. They afterwards formed in lines on the bank of the river. I heard the captain give an order to fire a musket in the air. At that time I saw the darogah just stepping into a boat. The magistrate and others had called out to the boats in the river, but they did not obey. After the order to fire in the air, I heard no other order given. Immediately afterwards two guns were fired, and then there was a ding "pop, pop," all down the line. I was standing about eighteen or twenty paces from Mr. Ogilvy. I was on a high bank, and could see him plainly, all the time. I was close to the captain. Mr. Ogilvy never cried out "maro." He did not fire off his pistol, nor did he give any order whatever to fire. When the bugle was sounded, the firing ceased.

Cross-examined by Mr. Clarke. I saw Pertaub once about the middle of the day. He had asked me to return in the evening. I came to the bank of the river. Pertaub's people objected to our going on board with our arms. I am the darogah's superior officer. Before I received the Persian letter, I knew that Pertaub had seen Mr. Shaw. The night after, when I saw the magistrate, I gave him a summary of the letters I had received, and he said that he should arrest him because he had often acted disobediently. No message was sent to Pertaub after the receipt of the letters until the firing, when the Rajah jumped into the river. Just before the firing, I heard every one cry out "They are running away." The magistrate may have joined in this. The Captain gave the order to fire in the air after this. I saw some men swimming before a gun was fired.

Alfred Alexander, examined by Mr. Prinsep. I have resided at Culna ten years. I am catechist to the church missionary Society. Pertaub came to Culna in April, and remained until the 2d of May. I was resident there during his stay. When he made his entry, there was a concourse of some 7,000 persons. The mission bungalow is on a high bank about 200 yards from the river. There was an unusual assemblage and still at the time of Pertaub's stay; people used to come daily and return daily from and to various parts. I heard an occasional firing, and beating of drums. There were arms among them, sticks, and shields, and swords on their shoulders. They were coming towards Culna from the direction of Santipore. I consider that there was much ground for alarm. I have communicated with Mr. Ogilvy on the subject. I have written to him (A letter shewn, and proved), in the end of last March. I only knew him as a public servant, not personally. This was in answer to a note from him to me (note produced.) Before I wrote it, I saw a concourse of people above mentioned pass the mission-house; and, in consequence of this, I wrote. I received a letter from Dr. Cheek on the night of the 1st of May, and thus I answered. This was partly from what I heard from the nazir, and partly from my own observation. On the night of the 1st of May, I saw Mr. Ogilvy at Culna, also Dr. Cheek, Captain Little, and Ensign Maclean. The darogah and nazir were at my house that night. I heard Mr. O. say that he would take Pertaub with his police, if he could, and if not, he would apply to Captain L. to take him by force. I accompanied them in the morning to the creek at the instance of Dr. C. I went thence to the river side. Dr. C. and myself remained on the left away from the sepoys. After the drawing out in lines, we five were never all together, I could see the magistrate, with a pistol in his hand. He was beckoning to the boats, and I heard a shouting, but I could not distinguish what. I saw a boat putting off, with the darogah. The boats in the river were twenty or thirty yards from the edge. I heard a single shot fired, and the ball dropped a head of a small boat instantly after two other shots, and then in a few seconds the fire ran down the line. I heard the bugle sound to the left of Dr. Cheek. I saw Mr. Ogilvy presently afterwards. He said "there had been firing, and he was very sorry that a shot had been fired, he had given no order." I think all the other Europeans were there, including Captain Little certainly. I saw a pistol in Mr. O's hand. I did not see him fire. At the mission-house the magistrate laid the pistol on my desk. It was a new double-barrelled pistol. I took it up and looked at it, with a view to put it in the desk out of harm's way. I took out the ramrod, and found both the barrels loaded. I put my finger in both barrels and found them perfectly clean. I admired the finish of the interior. I have once been a military man, in the artillery. I did not, nor did Dr. Cheek, take up a musket in that morning.

Cross-examined by Mr. Leith. It was about two hours after the firing that I saw the pistol on my desk. I cannot say that I saw him lay it down. The width of the river was perhaps 100 yards or more. Dr. Cheek may have seen or not the darogah in the boat. I am certain that when the first gun was fired, the darogah was in the boat, at least, ten yards from the shore. He may have been nearly half way. I am not speaking of exact measurement, he was on his way. Mine is the only European house at Culna gunge. There is another European house at old Culna, belonging to a Mr. Maclean, an indigo planter, who I believe is now at sea.

This closed the case for the defence, Sir J. P. Grant was about to sum up, but the jury were too exhausted to attend further that night, and an adjournment was found to be indispensable. The Court adjourned accordingly at half past seven o'clock, P. M.

FIFTH DAY, FRIDAY, AUGUST 17, 1838.

The Court met this morning at 10 o'clock.

Two letters were read, one from Mr. Alexander to Mr. Ogilvy, the other from Mr. Alexander to Dr. Cheek, describing the state of Culna, and the proceedings of Pertaub Chund, in parading about the place with numerous armed men. Some other documents were also read, which it was intended last night to have put into the hands of the jury, without reading them in Court, as the gentlemen of the jury appeared at that time so much exhausted, and it was desirable to close the case as quickly as possible; but this morning Sir J. Grant said, that the same reason could not now be given, and it was more regular to read all the documents that were to be put in.

Sir John Grant commenced summing up at half past ten o'clock. His lordship began by observing, that he was anxious to make his address, occupy as short a time as possible; but, considering the length to which his notes of the evidence extended (two manuscript books) he might possibly trespass upon their attention at greater length than he at present anticipated. His Lordship then proceeded to say, that he should first direct their attention to the most important portion of the case, the death and the cause of the death of the individual mentioned in the indictment to have been killed at Culna. Much of flippant and extraneous matter had been mixed up with the real case before the Court, arising on the one hand from a desire on the part of the prosecution to shew, that a person calling himself Pertaub Chund, the claimant of the raj of Burdwan, had endeavoured in a peaceable and legal manner only to make good his claim, and a desire on the other side, to meet this case so set up, by evidence of his imposture and illegal intentions and conduct. In this case, the court and jury had really nothing to do with the rightful or wrongful claim of this person. The main question was, whether the death arose from the firing, and whether the firing took place by the orders of the prisoner. The former point is clear. (The learned judge then commented on the evidence of Bheek Sing, and Ensign Maclean.) It seemed to be immaterial, whether the words "lead of alive" were or were not coupled with the contingency or "attempting to escape"; because the order to kill, in the mere event of an offender (guilty of misdemeanor merely) running away and attempting to escape, would have been illegal, and if acted upon, it might have been murder. But, if the order was intended to be acted upon, only in the event of resistance, this would have been legal and justifiable. (His lordship then commented upon the evidence of Dr. Cheek, with respect to the instructions given by Mr. Ogilvy to Captain Little, and this he said was important, as shewing Mr. Ogilvy's intention of first resorting to the civil force.) There was no doubt, that the military force was there by the order of the prisoner, and for the purpose of dispersing the concourse and arresting the person called Pertaub. Now, it might be altogether unimportant, whether that purpose was lawful or unlawful; because, even if it was unlawful, the prisoner would not be answerable for consequences not contemplated, and which he did not authorise. If the guns were fired without the express request or participation of the prisoner, he could not be answerable under any circumstances for a result not contemplated by him. (As to the lawfulness of a magistrate's acting on the reports of his police officers, his lordship referred to regulation IX of 1807, sec. 4, which expressly directs the magistrate to act thereon.) Considering the powers vested in the nazir and darogah, it was even immaterial to this point, whether their reports were true or false. If false, those officers would be amenable to severe punishment, but the warrant of the magistrate, acting bona fide upon the report, was nevertheless legal and good. His lordship then said, that he should confine the rest of his remarks and comments on evidences, to the question whether the prisoner was a participator in the offence, by actual firing, or ordering, aiding, abetting, or encouraging any one to fire. (The learned judge here took occasion to observe, that no doubt the grand jury had conscientiously performed their duty, but it appeared to him to have been done in a very extraordinary manner; for, if there had been any crime at all, he was at a loss to know how it could be any thing else than murder.) His lordship then commented at great length upon the evidence of the sepoys, reading the greater part in detail. As to the evidence of the man, called Baboo Tewarry, he observed, that the matters sworn to by him were of such a striking character, that if untrue, the misstatement could not possibly have been by mistake, but must have been gross and wilful perjury. In England and most other countries, if there appeared to be a wilful falsehood in a material part of a witness's testimony, the rest was considered tainted, and altogether unworthy of belief; but in this country, unfortunately, so lax were the notions of the natives concerning veracity and sincerity, that if this rule were acted upon, it would often be impossible to arrive at any conclusion whatever. It was, however, quite beyond all doubt, that the whole testimony of this witness was utterly absurd and incredible. His lordship then pointed out some discrepancies and contradictions in the evidence of each of the other sepoys and native non-commissioned officers, and also showed, that some parts were in direct opposition to their own statements respectively upon the examination at the police office. It was impossible to help suggesting an obvious reason, which might influence the evidence of the native soldiers, viz. their apprehension that their unwarranted conduct (if it were so) in firing without orders, might subject themselves to punishment for breach of military discipline. Sir J. Grant's own opinion was, that the first two guns ordered to be fired in the air, were the cause of the unfortunate result, and that this order (he was bound to say so) was most ill-judged and mistaken. If the jury were of this opinion, it was clear, that although some blame might attach, there was nothing whatever, to involve the prisoner in criminality; he was not even a party to the order which appeared to have been unfortunately misapprehended. The learned judge then commented on the evidence of Captain Little, which altogether supported the presumption, that the fatal firing was purely accidental, and he was sure, the jury would pause before they cast any imputation upon the statement or the conduct, or the motives of an English officer. (His lordship then offered to read over the evidence of the other Europeans, but the foreman of the jury,

Mr. Cameron, said, that it was unnecessary, as the jurors were agreed upon their verdict. This was at half past twelve o'clock.)

The jury then immediately returned a verdict of not guilty.

Mr. Clarke then rose and said, that as the verdict of acquittal had been pronounced on the merits of the case, and not from any flaw in the evidence, he should certainly not offer any evidence in support of the two other indictments for manslaughter.

Sir J. P. Grant said that the learned counsel therein exercised a sound discretion.

Mr. Ogilvy was then arraigned on the two other indictments, for the manslaughter of Serajee, manjee, and Govind Sing, at Culna, on the 2d of May, and a verdict of not guilty was recorded in each.

Sir J. P. Grant, then addressed Mr. Ogilvy to the following effect:

"Mr. Ogilvy, your conduct has been the subject of a very long and very careful investigation in this court. Your trial exhibits the instance of a gentleman of high station, arraigned for the imputed crime of unlawfully causing the death of a very humble individual, and I hope the fairness and justice of the administration of the laws will be thus made apparent to all the inhabitants of this country. In the mode of trial, and the measure of justice which you have received, no distinction has been made between you and the meanest of her Majesty's subjects. I fully concur in the sentiment contained in your own written defence, that, although the ordeal which you have gone through, is most painful, it is matter of congratulation that you have had an opportunity of subjecting your conduct to the scrutiny of this public investigation. You now stand quite free from all charge and imputation, and if there have been any little error of judgment, you are still most clearly proved to have had no participation whatever in the act itself, which resulted so fatally, and to have been actuated throughout by no feeling or motive, other than becomes a gentleman."

His lordship then thanked the gentlemen of the jury for their patient attention throughout this protracted investigation.

The verdict of acquittal, and the judicious and feeling address pronounced by his lordship, appeared to produce universal satisfaction throughout the crowded Court.—Hurkaru, Augt. 18.

CROWN SIDE.

THE QUEEN ON THE PROSECUTION OF GOOROOCHURN DOSS AND HURRYCHURN DOSS versus RAMSUNKER MULLICK * AND OTHERS.

The defendants in this case were indicted for assault and false imprisonment, and to which they severally pleaded not guilty. Nominal fines were levied on three of the defendants and the others were found not guilty. The particulars of the case being of no interest but to the parties immediately concerned, we took no notes of them.—Hurkaru, August 21.

August. 20, 1838.

George Cole King, was placed at the bar this morning to stand his trial for causing the death of one Ghanoo Sheikh, a labourer in Mr. Watson's silk factory at Chelia, in the district of Moorshedabad. After the indictment had been read over to the prisoner by the clerk of the crown, he pleaded not guilty. The Advocate-General, with whom was Mr. Cochrane, opened the case. He stated to the jury in a brief and explicit manner, the crime of which the prisoner then at the bar stood charged; after which Mr. King, the jailor of the Calcutta jail, was called upon to prove the prisoner being a British subject, which he did. A number of witnesses were afterwards examined, and cross-examined, by Mr. L. Clarke, who was counsel for the prisoner. The evidence given by the native witnesses differed some little. Those who did differ, were those who stood at a distance, when the maltreatment took place. There was not, however, that wide difference between them all, that would at all diminish the crime of which the prisoner was charged. It appeared from the general evidence, that the deceased had, in some measure, brought on himself the melancholy fate he met with, by disobeying his superior's orders; as in the first instance, the prisoner desired the deceased to go for a basket to a village near the factory. He refused to go, under the plea that he could not get one if he went. The prisoner in reply told him, that he always made some frivolous excuse when he asked him to do any thing, and added, "I will keep you no longer in my service." On the prisoner's saying this, the deceased replied, "who are you, that I should wish to serve you." This sort of conversation passed between them for some time, which aggravated the prisoner so much that he struck the deceased, and the deceased returned the blow. It was, therefore evident to the Court, that a sort of fist-cuff affair had taken place, between them. In the struggle the deceased seized the prisoner round his waist, and in that position they both fell. The deceased got up and ran away, and a man went after him, and, on his getting near him, the prisoner called out to him to bring him back, which he did, and the prisoner struck him again three blows about the shoulders. The deceased was then in a sitting posture, and the prisoner was standing. The deceased fell over, and never spoke afterwards.

George Gordon Macpherson, was examined on the matter. He is a surgeon in the Company's service, and civil surgeon of Moorshedabad. He stated that he had examined the body of the deceased, and that he saw no outward injury on the body. On his opening the cavity of the abdomen, he found a quantity of blood which appeared to him to have flowed from a rupture of the spleen. He did not think it could have ruptured of itself. It might have been caused by a blow or kick, and that it might have taken place without showing outwardly, considering the state in which deceased was, and, in his opinion, had been in for a long time. The natives, he observed, in that part of the country, were generally affected with disorders of the spleen, and but few in that part had healthy spleens. He further said that when persons were so affected, a very slight cause would cause rupture and death. He examined the body on the third day. It was then swollen in consequence of being carried so far in the heat of the sun, but the body had not swollen so much as to prevent his seeing whether there had been external injuries. The blows which he had heard from the witnesses had been given, he said might have caused the death of the deceased. In his cross-examination by Mr. Clarke he said, the fall which took place, might have caused the rupture. He had been in the district seven years. He never heard that the prisoner was not a peaceable character.

Mr. R. Watson was next examined. He said that he was engaged extensively in the manufacture of silk and indigo, and the prisoner was his head assistant at his silk factory at Cheliah. The prisoner had been in his employ since the year 1834, and had always conducted himself with the greatest propriety, and he had never heard a charge of violence being brought against him before. This closed the evidence on both sides, and his lordship in summing up, recapitulated and commented in a very lengthy and able manner on the whole of the evidence which had been heard, and recommended the case to the careful consideration of the jury; who retired for a short time, and, on their return, gave their verdict of guilty; but in doing so they particularly recommended the prisoner to the mercy of the court.

His lordship replied, that their recommendation should receive due consideration from the court. Sentence was then passed on the prisoner, accompanied with some very appropriate remarks, by his lordship, on the precaution which ought to be taken in striking natives.

The sentence was one month's imprisonment and a fine of one rupee.

James Talbot was fined the usual fine for not answering to his name, when the jury were being impannelled.

The other cases which were set down for trial this sessions, have been traversed to the next.

August 21, 1838.

The following prisoners were brought up this morning to receive their sentences for the crimes of which they have been found guilty.

Juggomohun sircar, for having returned from transportation before the time for which he had been sentenced had expired. Sentence eleven years' transportation to the East Coast of the Bay of Bengal, south of the Gulph of Martaban.

Gungagobind Bonerjee, for embezzling Korahs. Sentence seven years' transportation to the same place as above.

Issenchunder Kur, for larceny. Sentence, six months' imprisonment in the house of correction.—Hurkaru, Aug. 22.

INSOLVENT COURT.

August 18, 1838.

Thomas Wilson, of Dhurrumtollah, a paper manufacturer, was this-day reheard on his petition. Mr. Prinsep opposed him, under the impression that he had not given a true account of an estate, of which he was executor; but the insolvent having satisfactorily cleared up every doubt that existed on the matter, Sir Edward was pleased to inform him, that he was happy the inquiry had terminated so much to his credit, and that he was therefore entitled to the benefit of the act. The assets on his schedules exceed one-half the liabilities.

Moodosoodun Addy applied for his discharge from jail, but he was opposed by Mr. Judge, on the grounds that he had not given a full detail of his estate in his schedule; he was therefore remanded to amend the same.

Bissonauth Holdar was heard on his petition, and their being no opposition, he obtained his discharge from confinement.

In the matter of Shaik Mohamed Massoom sircar.

The adjudication obtained in this matter was, after a number of witnesses had been examined, ordered to be revoked.—Hurkaru, August 21.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CALCUTTA.

ICE.—The stock of ice is expended; but two vessels loaded with this commodity, are daily expected.

EXEMPTIONS OF ICE SHIPS FROM PAYING PILOT DUES.—We understand that Government, in acceding to the presentations of the ice committee, gave them the choice of exempting American ships from paying pilot dues, or from mooring dues; but they recommended the mooring charges as the least troublesome. The committee consequently selected this portion of the harbour charges, from which the ice ships were to be exempted. Upon examination, however, it turns out that the charges for mooring do not in general amount to more than fifteen or seventeen rupees per ship, whereas the pilot charges amount to about four hundred rupees per ship, the fifteen rupees bonus would, of course, be of no value to the American ship-owner, but the four hundred rupees might be worth his consideration. For our own part, we think that Government ought to remit every description of duty, if it consult the health and comfort of its ice-consuming population.

THE NEW STEAMER ENTERPRISE.—The new steamer Enterprise is now taking in her boilers; she is getting ready as fast as she can, but it is feared she will not be able to make her first trip before February next.

GENERAL ALLARD.—From our letters from the up-country we learn, that it has transpired, that General Allard feels himself uneasy in his advanced position on the other side of the Indus, in the neighbourhood of Jellalabad, and has intimated that unless materially reinforced, he will find it necessary to put the Indus, between him and the enemy.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL AND RUNJEET SING.—It is said that the right honourable the Governor General, has appointed the meeting, between himself and Maharajah Runjeet Sing, to take place on the 1st of November next.

THE NAWAB OF MOORSHEDABAD.—His Highness the Nawab of Moorshedabad, is at present on a visit to Calcutta,

LOSS OF GUNPOWDER.—Three hundred barrels of gunpowder, the property of Government, have been lately lost by the sinking of the boats on which they were laden, in their passage up the river to the different stations in the upper provinces; and orders have been issued, in consequence of the frequency of accidents of a similar nature, that the persons whose duty it is to despatch all such articles, shall send them for the future in the iron-steam boats. Great preparations are accordingly being made and much activity prevails in the arsenal, for the purpose of putting this order into effect.

AMERICAN SHIP GASPER.—The American ship Gasper, with her stores, &c. &c. which was sold by Messrs. Jenkins, Low and Co. during the course of last month, realized the handsome amount total of a lac and forty-six thousand rupees.

SHIPWRECKS.—The Raj Ranee was lost on the 1st instant, on the Eastern Reef, and all on board of her, with the exception of Mr. Man and six men, who escaped in a boat, were lost. Mr. Gurr, the pilot, and Mr. E. Parbury, a passenger, were among the drowned.

On the 10th instant, the Sir Herbert Taylor, was totally lost off Middle Point; but, except a little boy, who was drowned, all on board escaped.

The Africa, Captain Skelton, was lost on the 19th ultimo, in Venloos' Bay. The captain, crew, and passengers were all saved.

THE NOUVELLE LOUISE.—The hull of the French ship La Nouvelle Louise, of five hundred tons, which was put up to sale by public auction on the 4th instant, fetched about six thousand rupees, and her stores upwards of five thousand, total eleven thousand.

ACCIDENT.—A large blur ran against the hull of the steamer Enterprise, and immediately swamped.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—Mr. Nisbett the second officer of the Cowajee Family, was drowned on the evening of the 9th instant. He fell overboard from a dingy that was conveying him on shore.

DUEL.—A letter from Upper India, under date the 21st ultimo, states, that an affair of honour had then recently taken place between a captain and a subaltern of the 16th lancers, and that the cause of the hostile meeting was understood to be the transfer by the lady of the latter of her person and affections to the superior officer.

INDIGO.—The out-turn of the Dacca and Jessore factories, is expected to be 12,505 maunds.

The last accounts from Jessore state, that a great part of that district had been laid nearly under water. The indigo crop of this season was expected to be very short, and probably below the lowest estimate hitherto formed of it.

SIR JASPER NICHOLLS.—It is said that official information has been received by Sir Henry Fane, that Sir Jasper Nicholls succeeds Sir Peregrine Maitland at Madras. In the event of an army taking the field in support of Runjeet's operations against Dost Mahomed, a large contingent of the force will be supplied from Bombay; Sir John Keane will command it.

CAPTAIN BUCHAN.—It is said that Captain Buchan, of the ship Kellie Castle, now lying in the port, has been appointed Governor of Bathurst, New South Wales. He is requested by Government to return immediately to England, and has taken his passage on board of the Upton Castle for that purpose. The command of the Kellie Castle, will devolve on Mr. Johnstone, the chief officer.

DEPUTY AUDITOR GENERAL.—The Court of Directors have recently increased the salary of the deputy auditor general from 666-10-8 a month to Rs. 800, and that of the deputy quarter master general, which in cantonment was 599-5-4 and in the field 709-5-4 to an equal amount, to be uniformly drawn in all situations.

COUNCIL FOR PAUPERS.—The office held by Mr. Marshall, the late council for paupers, is abolished.

POLITICAL RESIDENCIES.—It is in the contemplation of Government to abolish the political residencies at Gwalior and Indore, and to substitute for them one general agency in Ajmere.

COMMITTEE FOR THE INVESTIGATION OF THE COOLIE QUESTION.—Government have appointed the following gentlemen J. P. Grant, Esq. c. s. ; T. Dickens, Esq. ; Rev. Mr. Charles ; W. Dawson, Esq. ; Major Archer, and Baboo Russomoy Dutt, a committee for the investigation of the coolie question, with reference to the circumstances lately elicited at this presidency, in connection with the exportation of coolies.

The feeling against the coolie trade seems to be daily increasing, and, in consequence of some petitions being presented at the police office, Messrs. Henly, Dowson and Bestel, large coolie traders, have cried out pecavi, and begged non-interference on the part of the magistrates. That the condition of the poor coolies, has, however, lately been much improved the following document tends to show :

Extract of a letter to Captain Birch:—" Isle of France. It will, I am sure, afford you satisfaction to know, that since your superintendence there has been a most sensible change in the appearance of the labourers on landing, and that few complaints have been made and those of a very trifling nature."

LIGHTNING.—During the thunder storm on the evening of the 7th instant, lightning fell on an upper-roomed house belonging to a Mr. Clarke, of the pilot service, materially injuring a part of the upper floor, and killing an adjutant which was sitting on the terrace patiently enduring the pelting of the rain. Another bolt fell on a brick-built house at Nabootoloh, adjacent to St. James's church, doing no other harm than making its surface bow a little.

HERAT.—The following are details of the force at Herat. The force consists of pieces of artillery, and 5,000 men with provisions for 8 months ; the Persians have 20,000 men round the place, with a good many guns but all in bad state. Mr. McNeil came with the Queen of England's letter, against the Shah's wish, pitched his tent close to him, but was four days without delivering it. At last he got his audience, was most coolly received, and actually obliged to leave the camp after waiting six days for an answer. Lieut. Todd was in the city of Caubool, and Dost Mahomed knew it, and winked at it, from which it is inferred, we understand that this chief is not ill-disposed, as represented, towards British.

PERTAUD CHUND.—The soi disant Rajah of Burdwan, and some of his followers, were brought down on the 10th instant from Hooghly jail, in charge of the joint magistrate. Mr. Leycester, and some of the Hooghly police. The prisoners, have been lodged in the Allipore jail, whence they are to be brought up, when required, to give evidence on Mr. Ogilvy's trial.

THE HOUSE OF CORRECTION AND THE JAIL.—The house of correction and the great jail are completely crowded with prisoners, the poor debtors being the most numerous of those in the jail.

RUSTONJEE COWASJEE'S FAMILY.—The ladies of the family of Rustonjee Cowasjee, together with his kinsman Frommusee Sorabjee, have arrived in Calcutta.

RISE OF THE RIVER AT SOOK SAUGOR.—It is said that the river is making such encroachments on the land at Sook Saugor, great portions of which have already been washed away, that it is feared the splendid and capacious dwelling house, now in the occupation of Mr. Larulett and which cost the former owner a lac, and an half of rupees to build a many years back, will completely disappear within a month hence ; indeed, so bad are appearances, that the present occupier is making preparations to remove himself and property from the house before it should fall about his ears.

CHAPLAIN'S MEMORIAL.—A memorial has been sent to Government by the Reverend Henry Fr. and the other presidency chaplains, against the reduction of the surplice fees, from eighty two to fifty rupees for interment in a pukka grave, in order to reimburse the Government for the outlay in the purchase of the new burial-ground.

EGYPT.—It is said, that the Pasha of Egypt has declared his determination to place himself in the rank of independent Sovereigns, and no longer to acknowledge himself as a tributary of the Sultan.

CASES OF MESSRS. BARLOW AND OGILVY.—The indictments against Mr. J. B. Ogilvy, for imprisonment, and assault and imprisonment, have been traversed to the next sessions, as well as the indictment against Mr. R. Barlow, for an assault on a prisoner a vakeel of Pertaud, Chund's confined, at the time, in the jail of Burdwan. The reason assigned for the traverses in Mr. Ogilvy's case, is the difficulty of getting the witnesses for the defence down to Calcutta ; and that in the mean time, the court would be left without business.

A DAILY PAPER IN BENGAL.—A prospectus for establishing a daily newspaper in the Bengallee language and character, is now in circulation, to obtain subscribers. The charge is to be only at one rupee per month, and the paper will appear as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers have been secured. It is to be called "Goonodoy."

THE NEPAULESE.—The subjoined extract of a letter from Goruckpore, dated the 16th instant, throws some further light upon the proceedings of the Goorkas. " We have yet had no inundation, but the rivers are full to the brim, and, whether they overflow or not, will depend entirely on the future weather. The Nepaulese are certainly assembling a large force at the pass of Butwel, and making there extensive magazines. Mr. ——— thinks that their object may be only defence against our suspected designs, but it has been remarked that in that case they would form their magazines in the interior and not at the entrance into the plains, and that they must intend offence. At any rate the fact of the assemhly of a large force of picked mountaineers is certain, and it is equally certain that we cannot muster 200 men in this district to oppose them, and, therefore if we are not supplied with troops before the end of the rains, we are in a state of very great danger; but of troops coming there is no intelligence nor does there appear to be any force within a reachable distance, sufficient to oppose the large numbers which are said to be assembling. There is a rumour of the King's 16th coming here from Cawnpore, but if the Nepalese are quick in their movements they will sack Goruckpore before they can arrive. Some eight or ten more regiments too will be necessary for the defence; where are they to come from? The prime minister of Nepal is said to have made a vow that he will not remove his turban from his head until he has said his prayers and made his ablutions at Gorucknath, a celebrated shrine in this town."

THE AGRA BANK.—The Government have admitted the Agra bank to compound for the stamp duty on a certain description of promissory notes, payable ninety days after sight, which the latter propose to issue on its own responsibility, and this composition is to remain in force for the period of one year from this date.

TROOPS FOR CANDAHAR, CAUBUL, &c.—The following is a list of the troops which it is said are to constitute the force to be furnished by this presidency for the operations in Candahar, Caubul, &c. &c.

The European troops are to consist of four troops of horse artillery, making a force of	480 men.
Two companies of foot artillery.....	160 ditto
16th lancers.....	400 ditto
3d bufs.....	800 ditto
13th light infantry	800 ditto
A wing of the Company's European } regiment.....	500 ditto
The native troops are to consist of the } 3d and 4th light cavalry	800 ditto
The 2d, 5th, 16th, 27th, 28th, 31st, } 35th, 37th, 44th, 43d, 48th, and 53d } regiments of native infantry, making in } all.....	8,500 ditto

The total amount of force being consequently,..... } 12,440 men.

PREPARATION FOR WAR.—The subjoined extract of a letter from Agra of the 12th instant, indicates the commencement of "business."

"Matters begin to assume a business-like aspect. Cartwright received a despatch from head-quarters yesterday evening, enclosing sealed orders to the commanders of the European regiment and 37th native infantry, who are directed "to hold their corps in readiness for active service. I am told that the country in which operations will be carried on, is unfavourable to the transit of wheeled carriages. The officers are directed to pay the utmost attention to the accoutrements and arms of the men, who are prohibited from taking with them their wives or families, or encumbering themselves with any articles not absolutely necessary in the field. The European officers are urged to set the men an example of marching in the lightest possible order, and employ camels only for the transport of the requisite baggage. They are enjoined to make the regimental bazars as efficient as possible, and I am informed that a route will be furnished from the quartermaster general's department, pursuing which the corps will reach the rendezvous at Karnaul on the 31st October. They are directed to pay particular attention to the men's shoes, and to see that each soldier shall be provided with two strong new pairs! (To get over the sand I suppose.) It is intimated in conclusion, "that all heavy baggage" (ladies and children of course included) "is to be left behind under a small guard." Thompson, of the European regiment, is appointed field surgeon to the force, and is informed, that "his charge will amount to about 12,000 men, and directed to put himself in communication with your old friend Playfair, who is named superintending surgeon of the grand army of Caubul."

MOFUSSIL.

DELHI.—THE KUMAON BATTALION.—It is said, that the Kumaon battalion will shortly be disbanded, and their place supplied by a corps of the line. Extra establishment of bullock-drivers will be sanctioned for the civil duties of the province.

There have been several recruiting parties from different corps in the neighbourhood of Allyghar, Hattarass, and Saisnee, places well known of old to have the finest fighting men in India, but at present these men are very backward to enlist. Were it not for the distressed state of the country for the past two years, we should not, perhaps, get a man. This looks as if our service were not very popular at the present time, or at all events not popular in those quarters."

It is said, that Mr. Macnaghten, the chief personage in the late embassy to Runjeet Singh, had been impressing on the Maharajah the benefits likely to accrue from the policy proposed by us, and, in the course of conversation, mentioned, that in the projected interview by Lord Auckland, that nobleman would be attended by a considerable body of troops. After Mr. Macnaghten had left the "the presence," his highness expressed fear, that some duplicity was intended by Lord Auckland, adding, "however, I'll make arrangements to be accompanied by 10,000 horse; but what if the British should bring 20,000? (!!!)" General Ventura assured his highness that the utmost confidence might be placed in the British, and that he himself would become their pledge; when, after some desultory conversation, the Maharajah expressed himself as perfectly coinciding in the gallant general's opinion.

Mr. Macnaghten arrived at Loodseanah and intended departing for Simla immediately. With Captain Wade and Dr. Drummond. Mr. Macnaghten paid a visit to Shah Shoojah, and was introduced in all form by the prime minister.

It is said that Lord Auckland will leave Simla immediately after the rains.

Capt. Nicholson has been robbed of property worth one thousand rupees.

EARTHQUAKE.—A smart shock of an earthquake was felt at Delhi, at before 5 p. m. on the 14th ultimo.

CHOLERA.—Cholera is reported to be very prevalent in this zillah, and its virulence increased by the obstinate refusal of the natives to take European medicine, tendered by the surgeon attached to the division.

MEERUT.—Cholera is very prevalent in Meerut, and several European females and children have fallen victims to it.

AGRA.—Government have at length come to the determination of placing Shah Soojah on the throne of Caubool, and an army for this purpose is forthwith to assemble. The force will be considerable, with an unusually large proportion of European troops. The corps of which it is to be composed are to move the 1st of October on Lodeenah, where they concentrate. Meerut and Kurnaul will supply the main strength of the force; but troops it is said are not to proceed from Agra, or other station to the eastward. No foot artillery will accompany the army, but all the available horse artillery at Meerut and Kurnaul join it. The command will be taken by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in person. Runjeet Singh has consented, at earnest persuasion, to allow us a passage to Caubool through the Punjaub, and will himself accompany us with a body of his own troops. The price he demanded for this concession and assistance, was the possession of Sindh, to be conferred on him by the British, after they had reinstated Shah Soojah. He was, however, refused.

AUGUST 2d.—A council assembled at Simla on the 20th ultimo. There was a stormy discussion. The Governor General proposed furnishing Shah Soojah with British officers and money. Sir Henry violently opposed the measure; declared it would compromise our dignity, and acted altogether like a fine old conservative as he is, declining to adopt the half measures of your unhappy friends the whigs. The council met for several days consecutively, and your belauded whigs at last proposed to raise 8,000 men and offer them from the Company's service. Sir Henry objected to this, saying, if the measure was determined on, on the functions of the civil authorities were at an end; and it was for him alone to determine the amount of force necessary to carry it into effect. That to send new troops for that purpose would be an act of folly, (he might have added whig folly) and involve the probable sacrifice of our fighting fame. The lord then proposed sending 3,000 regular. The old chief appeared to agree cordially, but took the Shabbyites a-back by asking with great simplicity, after a pause of some minutes, "Well, my lord, and with what force do you propose following up this advanced guard of 3,000 men." The Governor General looked aghast, and said he thought 3,000 men would answer all purposes. Sir Henry tucked up his gouty leg and coolly remarked: "I shall have nothing to do with your proceedings in that case." The Shabbyites at last yielded to the conservative, and a force of 25,000 men, headed by our gallant chief, is, they say, to march to Caubool, slick as Jonathan says.

We have already had more rain here than has fallen in any one season at Agra within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. The maidan under Shahguda Mundee and the parades was under water, and two pleasure boats were sailing about for some days in the very heart of canionments. Price of grain still keeps up. Mansell, our collector, is one of your speculative benevolent men. The buncahs tell him the rains have fallen too late, and he, good, easy soul, swallows their creed. He is just now in rather bad odour, having, it is supposed, prevented the buncah assaulted by Captain Wilson, lately of the European regiment, from compromising a matter. He told a friend of Wilson's, that he thought beneath the dignity of a magistrate, to allow a compromise between the assaulter and assaulted!

ALLAHABAD.—The rains have been so abundant at this station, that it is likely as much injury will be done by them to the crops, as the want of rain will cause in other districts. There has been abundant falls every day for about three weeks, and there is yet no prospect of dry weather.

MUSSOORIE.—The cholera has appeared here. It committed great ravages at Deyrah, Sabarunpore, and Kurnaul.

The report of Mr. Macnaghten being made Lieutenant Governor of Agra, in reward as well of his general services, as especially for his conduct in the late embassy to Lahore, is revived.

SIMLA.—The following on dits are mentioned in a letter from Simla, dated 30th July 1838.—"The Caubool and Lahore missions, with Captains Wade and Mackeson, arrived here between the 18th and 22d instant. Mr. Macnaghten has, it is believed, effected every thing that was required of Runjeet, and the only subject which the hon. of the Punjaub would appear to be tender on and hostile to, is the permitting British troops to pass through his territory. Be this as it may, however, it is decided, that an army of reserve will hang in his rear on his entry into Caubool, either to divide the laurels of its conquest or to make sure work of thrashing the Affghans. Mr. Mackeson is off to save the way on the Indus for the Bombay troops, which will be coming up to Shikorpore, which it is understood will be their place of rendezvous. Mr. Macnaghten, with Shah Soojah and twenty British officers, to discipline troops, will proceed with Runjeet's army, and, if unsuccessful, in placing the deposed king on the throne, will immediately have the aid of the British auxiliaries. Sir Henry, it is understood, desired to recall his resignation and march at the head of 15,000 men to the relief of Herat; but our policy is not to act as principals in the war but as auxiliaries, the plea of the British cabinet will be that the dominions of our ancient and steady ally, Runjeet, was threatened with an invasion by the Persians and Affghans, and that we had no other course open to us than the rendering him every assistance in our power to repel aggression!!

The Governor General, it is confidently asserted, has been authorized to act as he thinks fit by the court. Herat has not fallen, and the 20,000 half starved and despicably equipped Persians who surrounded it, have neither powder nor shot wherewith to make any impression. Lieutenant Todd, an officer in the Persian service, has brought this intelligence, and he imagines that if they do not raise the siege that Herat can still stand for six months. General Duncan, will, I believe command the British troops from our side. Four European regiments are talked of, a dozen native and a suitable number of guns, &c. Sir P. Maitland, it is supposed, will succeed Sir Henry in the event of his departure before the new chief's arrival, in that case his presence in these parts will be essential at the present crisis, although under ordinary circumstances, he would remain where he is. The weather has cleared up a little after 18 days' incessant rain. Councils of war, being daily held, Captain Burnes and Lieutenant Todd remain here for some time. It is thought, that both camps will be up here next year."

NATIVE STATES.

JOODPORE.—Maharaja Mhan Singh sent for Dhau Singh, of Runtum Ghore, and informed him that his son should be appointed killedar of the fort. At this moment a hurkaru presented a khureeta from Colonel Alves. The Maharaja ordered that it should not be opened until the Durbar had assembled. About evening all the thakooris being in attendance, the khureet was read. It was to the following effect: that twenty-three lacs of tribute was then due, and of which the payment of thirteen lacs had been promised on the 23d June. "The Maharaja must now furnish the amount forthwith; otherwise the British Government would take possession of Malwa, Kurwa, Deedwana, and purgunnah Buddera, belonging to the Joudpore state."

The Maharaja asked what should be done, to raise thirteen lacs of rupees: he knew not how that sum could be procured. The thakooris recommended that the amount should be levied from the Jogees and paid to the British authority at Ajmere, after which, should any attempt be made to deprive their sovereign of his possessions, they would, one and all, fight for his rights; but until the tribute should be paid they would not interfere.

The principal Jogees were then summoned, and after a long altercation, they consented to advance the amount, as also a sum for the payment of the sepoys' wages, who had lately mutinied for their arrears. Jogee Ram Nauth promised to deliver in the cash forthwith.

ULWAR.—The mookhtar or dewan, lately appointed by the Rajah of this district, has withdrawn himself to Delhi, from whence he has forwarded his resignation to his royal master. This step was taken in consequence of his not executing a simple order of the Rajah, to pay the army of Ulwar, out of an empty treasury.

YAREUND.—Forty-thousand victims are reported to have lately carried off in this province by cholera in its worst form. This mortality is the more extraordinary, as there are neither doctors nor medicines to be found, the vis medicatrix of nature being the only cure.

CAUBOOL.—Since the visit of Captain Burnes to this country, a rigid embargo on all news, correspondence, cattle, &c. has been established by Dost Muhamud. Two scribes disobeyed the order, and were appropriately punished by the loss of that member, without which, in these mountains at least, it is believed letters cannot be written,—to wit, the head.

LAULPORE.—Intelligence has been received that Mahomed Khan, the younger brother of Shaudut Khan, the ruler of Laulpore Dahks, was dissatisfied with him, and proceeded to a place called Mocheeny, situated on the banks of the river Gunda, about fifteen koss distant from Peshawur, and forwarded a message to Mr. Vintaila, the nauzem of Peshawur, stating, that if a lac of rupees, cash, would be transmitted to him, he would procure the possession of Caubool to the arms of the ruler of Lahore, without the trouble of fighting for it. The nauzem well acquainted with the character of the Afghans of Khybur, paid little or no attention to the promise thus held out.

HERAT.—Letters from Loodhiana give the following account of a sortie recently made by a party of the garrison on the besieging troops, which is perfectly well authenticated, and which, consequently, leads to the inference that so long as Prince Kamran has provisions, for so long the Persians may besiege Herat, with about as much chance of success as if they sat themselves down before the rock of Gibraltar.

Five hundred Afghans made a sortie from Herat, attacked a corps of 2,500 Persians, put them to flight and made good their retreat into the city, almost without loss, leaving 300 of the Persians dead in the trenches. By the same letters we learn, that the force in Herat is estimated at about 8,000 men, and that of the besieging army at something under 25,000, but in wretched condition, and with a park of artillery, which is in every way contemptible.

KANDHAR.—The chieftains of Kandhar lately sent a person named Poordel Khan with some valuable presents to the King of Iran, in consequence of the ruler of Caubool having broken through the treaty they had entered into, and offered to assist him, adding that they were making preparations for that purpose.

RUNJEET SING'S PRESENTS.—A great variety of articles, consisting of jewels, hoises, honorary dresses, inkstands, &c. were presented by the lion of the Punjab to the gentlemen composing the mission to that court, from Lord Auckland.

SHAH KUMRAN HUMBUGGED.—It appears that a native of Pushing, took a letter to Shah Kumran, purporting to have been written by the ruler of Caubool, in which the bearer was described to be a great man and the consequence was that the Shah gave him a very respectful reception, and made him a present of about Rs. 4,000 in money and goods. After the man took his leave, the letter was discovered to be a forgery. The fellow subsequently attempted to play a trick of the description with the ruler of Caubool; but he proved too knowing for the cheat.

ENGAGEMENT BETWEEN THE SEIKHS AND IRANIES.—On dit, that a letter has been received at Calcutta from Iran, stating that an engagement was lately fought between the troops of the king of Persia and those of the lion of the Punjab, at a place called Oozeerabad, at which a great number of the latter fell, some were taken prisoners by the Persians, and the rest took to flight.

MADRAS.

CHANGE OF EDITOR.—The Madras Herald has undergone a change in its editorial department.

THE WHITE ELEPHANT.—The white elephant was nearly lost in the surf, on an attempt being made to ship it on board the Tenueserin.

CAVALRY REMOVAL.—Four regiments of Madras cavalry are to be sent to Bengal, and it is said that the Court of Directors have fixed upon their numbers, the 1st, 2d, 7th, and 8th.

SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND.—Sir Peregrine Maitland awaits the next overland mail at Bangalore; and, should he receive advice that his successor will be sent out promptly, his Excellency will visit Madras by the end of this month. If delay, however, take place, then he will probably stay at Bangalore till the close of the year.

DEPUTY COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.—The deputy collector of customs has been appointed to the charge of the marine police, during the absence of the master attendant.

CHARGES AGAINST G. GARROW, ESQ.—The committee appointed to investigate into the charges against G. Garrow, Esq., of the civil service, has decided against that gentleman.

REVENUE OF THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY.—The Court of Directors have ordered a commissioner to be appointed for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of the late decrease in the revenue of the Madras presidency, and Mr. Cotton, second member of the board of revenue, has been appointed to conduct the inquiry.

A GOOD SWIMMER.—(One of the crew of the Orestes, which vessel was lying at anchor about a mile and a half from the shore, jumped overboard, and despite sharks and the surf, landed in safety.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—A fire took place near the Monegar Choultry, by which about two hundred and twenty houses were burnt to the ground. One of the huts, which was situated almost in the centre of the others, did not take fire, and two boys and a girl, who were in the hut, with some poultry, all escaped uninjured. No lives were lost, but the principal sufferers on this occasion are some of the rice merchants.

BOMBAY.

RUSTOMJEE COWASJEE'S LADY.—The lady of Rustomjee Cowasjee, Esquire, the distinguished and liberal-minded merchant in Calcutta, was about to sail from Bombay for Calcutta, in a few days, accompanied by the wife of her son, and a cortege of female attendants. To those who remember that but a few years ago no Parsee females of respectability would proceed even to the Deccan, the contemplated trip of these fair voyagers will afford much food for speculation upon the rapid change which the march of opinion has effected.

THE SEMIRAMIS.—The Semiramis, in consequence of not having a sufficient quantity of coal on board to enable her to steam to the Red Sea, returned to Bombay on the 26th of July. Her mails are to be despatched to the Red Sea, next September.

MR. DUNLOP.—On the 25th of July, Mr. Dunlop was sworn in a member of council.

APPOINTMENT OF A MINISTER TO THE COURT OF INDORE.—After so much confusion and mismanagement which have long since been prevailing at the court of Indore, through want of a good minister, the long contemplated arrangement for restoring peace and tranquility has been carried into effect by the appointment of Abba Sahib of Turana, a gentleman of a very respectable character, to the ministerial office of that court.

PERRIA.—The following interesting extract, is from a letter, dated Bushire 23d July. "No news have been received from Herat, but that the city still holds out, and is likely to do so. The besiegers are very much straitened both for money and provisions, six rupees being the sum total that each man has received since the troops sat down before the walls in November last. As to provisions, Providence is their only commissary; the King says, he will take the place or lay his bones before it. He had not then heard of our sending a force up to Kurrack, which, no doubt, when reported of to him, will be greatly magnified. What will he say when he is informed of it, and the additional news that Timour Mirza had come from Bagdad to Bussorah in the little steamer? This latter, though an affair of pure accident, as the Persian princes had no intelligence of our arrival at the time Timour left the city of the Caliphs, will doubtless be magnified into an affair of wondrous importance, and nothing less will be conjured up than a coalition between the British Government and the unfortunate prince in question, who is known to be a very obstinate fellow, and not at all an unlikely person to contend for a share of what he considers his patrimony. It is certain that with the aid of Timour and his brother backed by a few thousand sepoy, he would very soon deprive Mahomed Shah of all authority in the south of Persia. We learned the other day that the packet brought up by the Semiramis had been plundered between Bussorah and Bagdad, and very few of the letters reached the latter place. This it appears is owing to the Arabs, supposing the boxes to contain valuables. The bags they merely examined and returned them to the messengers. The people on Kurrack are very healthy. Captain Farly who came over this morning, says they have only six men sick out of 7,000. Provisions have risen in price but are not scarce. The people of the island complain of the economical habits of the present visitors, as compared with those of the days of other years.

Thus far we have had a very mild season, the thermometer rising seldom above 90 at Kurrack. In general it is even cooler. The Choe and Tigris are both, neither of which the resident is willing to spare. If things remain quiet, I am not certain, but as people say, the resident may visit the island after the Hugh Lindsay sails. The Governor of Bushire has issued a proclamation that none of the inhabitants are to write any news to Shiraz under penalty of 100 tomanas.

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS.—Warlike preparations appear to be the order of the day. It is said that an order has been for some days in Bombay, to have all the steamers held in readiness at an hour's notice to start for Rangoon, to proceed thereafter up the river and blow Phraawaddy to the devil.

BURMAH.

DESERTION.—Three soldiers of H. M. 62d regt. have deserted from their colours and crossed over to Martaban.

COL. BENSON.—M. S. Rattlesnake, with Colonel Benson the British resident to the Burmese court, arrived off Rangoon on the forenoon of the 16th of July. Long before she anchored, the wharf was crowded with spectators, many of them, no doubt, feeling somewhat uncomfortable at the sight of a man-of-war sailing proudly up in the wake of the H. C. S. George Swinton, without the assistance of a pilot. After a short delay to allow some of the resident's suite to communicate with the authorities, and settle certain points of etiquette, &c. H. M. S. Rattlesnake saluted the Burmese flag with thirteen guns, which were returned by an equal number.

THE WHITE ELEPHANT.—The barge Tenasserim from Madras, has brought over the white elephant, which about two years ago was destined as a present from the British Government to the late King of Ava.

1838.

Boston, April 12, 1838.

DEAR SIR,—I have dates from Calcutta unto December last, from Dr. Hufnagle and Mr. Ladd. I am advised by the latter, that nothing is done towards the enlargement of the ice house; although there were arrangements making for that purpose.

I am also without any letters from you as Chairman of the Ice Committee, relative to any proposition to them under date in February of last year.

The news which I get of the successive happy arrival and good delivery of several of the latter of the "ten experimental cargoes," renders it expedient and at once needful, I should take measures for the establishment of this undertaking on a permanent foundation. My success is incomplete, as I have often said, that then shall be no interruption whatever to the supplies, unless the commercial intercourse between this country, and India shall be interrupted.

I must bring to the recollection of the gentlemen of Calcutta, that before they can receive this letter, the thirty-third year, since I commenced this ice enterprise, will have expired; and taking human life as it is, but little time is left me if I would bring the undertaking to the desired perfection; I must now, therefore, hasten to the accomplishment, and should wish to carry with me the good will and the good wishes of all my most excellent friends in Calcutta. They must not, however, seek to place any, however slight, impediment in the way, which may impede the most free, vigorous and independent action. It is by this alone their wishes and mine can be accomplished.

Of the ten experimental shipments, the plans of the fitting of the first five ships, was not sufficiently good to admit of the ice being sold at the desirable rate of three annas the seer. The losses up to that time were quiet heavy. The four following ones began to sustain the undertaking, by the increased quantity which was delivered, and in part to pay up losses. The first Calcutta shipment was made in May 1833, and distinct success, may be said to have come, at the termination of the sale of the cargo by the ship Republic in January 1838.

The great difficulty has been in discovering a means of averting the altitudinal pressure of the heavy mass of vapours in a body of ice, on board ship and on shore. A course of experiments have been instituted, with a result highly satisfactory, and for which I have thought it advisable to secure the protection of the Government at Washington. This, on account of the remarkable disposition of my countrymen for going into every and all enterprises which promise a profitable return. In this there have already been five ships dispatched to India in which I had no interest—three to Bombay and two to Calcutta. They resulted in five failures; but these very failures have operated against the successful progress of the undertaking, by increasing the doubts of ship-owners as to the safety of their ships. I have endeavoured, therefore, to place some check upon such idle undertakings as would be injurious to the enterprise itself. It seems a pity doubts should still exist to prevent ship owners from taking ice on freight to your distant country; but such is still the case.

Considering it, however, now as a matter of certainty, that ice can be transported to the East Indies, can there be preserved a sufficient time, to admit it to be sold at a low price, so as to yield a profit on the cost and expenses of the business, I have now to go on to do what is needful to a continued supply.

As there is every reason to suppose the result of nearly five years' operations, and the shipment of ten cargoes, will have brought up all losses and lead with the following cargo to a decided commencement of a moderate and reasonable profit, I now wish to make return to the subscribers to the ice-house and replace in their hands the money which they have expended and risked in the foundation of this enterprise.

With the permission, therefore, of the committee, I propose to ask to know the sum which has been expended on the buildings, over and above what I have myself expended. I shall then instruct my agent to commence making deposit gradually in a safe place, of such monies as can be spared to form a sinking fund for the repayment of the cost of the building, which monies I shall more rapidly increase from my own funds here; when it is more distinctly apparent, they will not be lost by a future failure, either by the inhabitants neglecting to sustain the undertaking, or any new difficulty occurring to interrupt the regular pursuit of the enterprise. This risk I still wish the gentlemen of Calcutta to bear; at the same time that it is wholly repugnant to my feelings and wishes that I should be realizing a profit, while they remain with no remuneration, or any return whatever, for the important aid which they have rendered in the days of doubt and uncertainty, when all the world claimed for this undertaking a total failure, they will allow me to remind them they consented at my request to forgo any advantage in price or preference to themselves. This at the moment was a point of great value; had it not been accorded, the undertaking would have failed.

There now comes new questions, to insure continued success. They resolve themselves mainly into this. That the subscribers to the house must receive back the money which they have adventured and leave the further progress of the enterprise to the unaided efforts of a white-headed man, who intends always to bear in mind the open-handed liberality with which they have sustained his enterprise in the hour of peril and the long days of disaster.

The proposition which I have to make I shall place with greater distinctness than was done in my letter, which I had the honour to write on the 24th Feb. 1837, but to which, I regret to say, no answer has yet reached me.

There seems to have been some misapprehension as to the aid which has been rendered to this undertaking, which it is proper I should place right. Aid was asked, tendered and accepted; not because my own means were insufficient to carry through this enterprise, but that I wished to ascertain the disposition of the gentlemen of Calcutta to have the undertaking succeed and to secure their active good will, by asking them to open their purses, as well as to give me their hearts and their voices in aid, while I contemplated and encountered the great dangers which I was in every direction to meet. Thus they did, and I accord them my most entire thanks. I now intend to make return to them of the monies which they have advanced. I further intend that object and mine shall be carried into effect, by the establishment of a perpetual supply, if possible, but if not possible, a perpetual low price when there are supplies.

I earnestly invite the subscribers to the ice house to review the advantages which have resulted to the enterprise, by their giving up all individual advantages, at my request, in the question of the equal price. I look upon it, as to that is mainly to be placed the spread of the demand. Had the invidious distinction of price been continued, I have no question the enterprise would have been a failure, for want of the wholesome and sustaining support of the community at large.

I have now to ask the subscribers to make another personal and individual sacrifice; that of being any longer patrons of the enterprise. To resolve themselves into friends merely, receive back the money they have paid for the ice house, and leave me free and independent of all control to manage this business as long familiarity with the subject shall dictate. I shall give a pledge by bond or any other way, in accordance with the letter and spirit which my intercourse with the Committee shall make apparent respecting price and supply. I will carry into effect to the utmost of my ability, all these engagements, in which I have always seen my own interest and their comfort essentially to rest.

I now distinctly propose, that the subscribers shall convey to me their rights in buildings used as an ice house in Calcutta; at the same time that they inform me what has been the amount of the expenditures, beyond what I have myself contributed in the erection of them.

I shall send out by the opportunity which conveys this, a power of attorney to Mr. Ladd, to execute the necessary papers, which may be required in furtherance of these, instructions also to admit and acknowledge me as indebted for the full amount of the costs of which I speak. His directions will be to commence depositing money from the sinking fund. An obligation respecting the price of the ice will also be given. Should it unfortunately happen, that any of the subscribers should feel or express an unwillingness to come into this arrangement and to give me this further proof of their confidence in the integrity of my intention, I must then make my own arrangements, send out materials such as the country does not afford, correct the errors in the construction of the present house, and build one for myself. I have one in Savannah built on Government land, but with my own means, capable of containing four to five cargoes, and in N. Orleans, the largest of the five permanent buildings I have there, cost me forty-three thousand dollars, and will contain twelve cargoes of ice.

The buildings are necessarily a subject of great cost; but I suppose by remitting to Calcutta fifty or sixty thousand rupees, I should be able to erect one of sufficient capacity to cover four or five ordinary sized cargoes.

To all of which I have now to request very respectfully the attention of the Committee, my fellow-labourers and powerful aiders in founding this enterprise. I trust them as too high minded men, to feel any offence, or misconstrue the position I now take. I shall most sincerely regret it, if they do so; but conceiving, as I do, that the most free and unconstrained action is necessary to me, to reach the last and highest point of success in this undertaking, I must proceed in carrying out my views and plans, leaving the future to determine the correctness of my cause in seeking freedom from control and offering to pay back, whether I do that which is, just to the original patrons of the enterprise. I think such a course needful to secure a low price to the community of Calcutta and the use of ice from this continent for the present generation and for the generations of a long time to come, without regard to the founder of the undertaking, whether he shall long survive to see and feel its success, or at an early day go hence to be no more seen.

Being very respectfully and sincerely your servant, and that of the patrons of the enterprise,

FREDERICK TUDOR.

UNCOVENANTED SERVICE FUND.

Proceedings of a general meeting of subscribers of the Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund, held at the Town-hall, on Tuesday, the 28th August, 1838.

Mr. N. Campbell having been called to the chair, requested the secretary to read the report of the directors, upon which it was Moved by Mr. C. Byrn, and seconded by Mr. R. J. Rose, and resolved unanimously.

I. That the report just read be adopted and printed for the information of subscribers.

Moved by Mr. Cockburn, and seconded by Mr. James Madge, and resolved unanimously.

II. That a copy of the report be forwarded to the right honourable the Governor-General of India, as patron of the fund.

This meeting being made special for the consideration of the new code of rules and regulations of the fund, the chairman proceeded to read the new rules as altered at the suggestions of a number of the subscribers, and each rule having been separately discussed, it was moved by Mr. H. Andrews, and seconded by Mr. James Madge, and resolved unanimously.

III. That the amended code of rules now read be adopted and published with the report.

The chairman then read a series of bye-laws enacted by the directors, and it was moved by Mr. Ryland, and seconded by Mr. H. J. Lee, and resolved.

IV. That the bye-laws passed by the directors just read, be approved of and published for the use of subscribers, and that the directors be at all times authorized to enact bye-laws for the settlement of cases arising out of the workings of the fund, not especially provided for by its fixed rules and regulations. Such bye-laws to be duly recorded and submitted at the annual general meetings for the information of subscribers.

Moved by Mr. Wale Byrn, and seconded by Mr. Aviet, and resolved.

V. That this meeting earnestly calls upon the uncovenanted servants at large to afford their aid to a fund which, from its present state, may reasonably be expected to realize every hope of success.

Moved by Mr. R. J. Rose, and seconded by Mr. H. Andrews, and resolved.

VI. That the following gentlemen be appointed directors for the ensuing year with power to fill up vacancies :

Messrs. N. Campbell, E. Wilkinson, R. Keer, James Madge, H. J. Lee, C. Kerr, W. Ryland ; Carr Smith, W. Byrn, C. Byrn, —Johnston, T. P. Oxborough, and H. Martindell.

Moved by Mr. H. Andrews, and seconded by Mr. Ryland, and resolved :

VII. That a copy of the report be forwarded to the President of the Council of India in Council for information, and that his Honour in Council be requested to forward a copy to the honourable Court of Directors, if deemed unobjectionable.

Moved by Mr. Wale Byrn, and seconded by Mr. R. J. Rose, and resolved :

VIII. That the thanks of this meeting be given to the chairman, for his kindness in presiding on this occasion, and his able conduct in the chair. Carried unanimously.

THE COOLIES.

On Wednesday, Mr. David Hare and Mr. Longueville Clarke, waited on Mr. C. K. Robison at the police, and stated that a circumstance had come to the knowledge of Mr. Hare, yesterday evening, which, on consulting with Mr. Clarke, they both agreed ought to be immediately brought to the notice of the magistrate in whose district it had occurred. The following affidavit was then sworn to by Mr. Hare :

David Hare, of Hare-street, in the city of Calcutta, Esquire, maketh oath and saith, that he, this deponent, was passing through Tauntaunia-street, at about the hour of four o'clock yesterday afternoon, when he, this deponent, saw a large crowd assembled round a house, which was late in the occupation of one Prawnkissen Holdar, and on the top and inside of which, were a number of persons having the appearance of coolies. And this deponent further saith, that the said house was guarded by several chowkeedars attached to the Calcutta police ; and that this deponent went into the house when he was immediately surrounded by great numbers of the said coolies, many of whom took hold of this deponent's feet, after the manner of natives when supplicating, and entreated this deponent to get them set at liberty. And this deponent further saith, that he, this deponent, was informed by several of the said coolies, that they had received an advance of eight rupees each, had been sent on board of a ship, without any knowledge that they were to proceed to the Mauritius, and that they had been beaten, and very much ill used on board the said ship, particularly by a person whom they called maullim saheb. And this deponent further saith, that the said coolies were unable to tell this deponent the name of the said ship, but stated, that she had become leaky, and that they had been reloaded and ever since kept in confinement ; and that the said coolies further stated to this deponent, that they were unwilling to go to the Mauritius, not only because they never had intended to go there, but also on account of the ill usage which they had received, and the manner in which they had been beaten. And this deponent lastly saith, that he, this deponent, verily believes, that the said coolies are confined against their will, and without any legal authority for their detention.

DAVID HARE.

Sworn, this 12th day of Sept. 1838. }
before me C. K. Robison. }

Mr. Robison, stated that the affidavit was very insufficient as it did not give the name of the street; for Taurangai was a district containing many streets, nor did it mention the names of the parties detained, nor of the persons detaining them. Mr. Clarke urged that the affidavit was sufficiently full to authorize the magistrate to adopt some proceedings. There was a street of that name in the district, and it would be found in the map of Calcutta. The very house was particularly pointed out, as lately occupied by a well known character. The name of the parties could not be given as they had not then been discovered, but names had nothing to do with the offence; the commission of it was distinctly sworn to, and that was quite sufficient to enable the magistrate to act. Mr. Robison said that all he could do, was to send Mr. McCann to make inquiries and report to him. Had the names been sworn to, he would have issued summonses at once. Mr. Clarke stated, that if Mr. McCann was directed to set at liberty any persons whom he found confined against their will, or to bring them to the police to make their own complaints, it would be sufficient; but Mr. Robison declined, casting any responsibility on Mr. McCann. He could then make an order himself, on so defective an affidavit, but he would have it remedied by Mr. McCann's report, and then proceed in the case. Mr. Clarke and Mr. Hare expressed themselves perfectly satisfied, and on Mr. McCann appearing he stated, that he had been at the house yesterday, between three and four o'clock, and on the coolies telling him that they were unwilling to go to the Mauritius, he had ordered the chowkedars to withdraw. Mr. Hare said he had been told that Mr. McCann had been there and that he, Mr. Hare, had gone to the house some time after, and the chowkedars were still guarding the door. Mr. Robison asked who had sent the police there, and for what purpose? Mr. McCann replied that, he believed it was Capt. Birch's order. The coolies were to have embarked yesterday evening, and the chowkedars were sent to see them safe on board; but on finding that they would not go, Mr. McCann directed the chowkedars to leave. Mr. Robison said he believed, that there were a set of coolies belonging to Mr. Brown, and against some of whom a complaint had been made to him of violent conduct. Mr. Brown was before him on that occasion in support of the complaint, when he, Mr. Robison, had cautioned Mr. Brown against confining any person, and told him that if he did so, he would subject himself to punishment. Mr. McCann was then directed to call on Mr. Brown and likewise to go to the house and report the circumstances.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. Hare having waited some time to permit Mr. McCann to see Mr. Brown, proceeded to the house. On arriving there, they found the door open and four powerful burkaundozes sitting at it, and several others in the street all armed with heavy lanties. They then called a chowkedar who was sitting on the opposite side of the road, and inquired for Mr. McCann, but found he had not arrived. They then determined to go into the house, and having asked for the coolies were told they were in the upper rooms. No objection was made and one of the burkaundozes shewed them the way. The stairs were long and narrow and at the top there were two more burkaundozes with lanties. This opened on a terrace, on which they no sooner appeared, then they were assailed with loud cries of dewai Company saheb, dewai, dewai. These cries proceeded from some rooms at the end of the terrace, the door of which was locked, and a burkaundoz sitting at it. On the gentlemen approaching, the burkaundoz opened the door, when a crowd of coolies and women rushed out, exclaiming for justice and protection, and declaring they would sooner have their throats cut than be sent on board of a ship again. After a little time silence was obtained, and Mr. Clarke wrote down the names of several coolies who asserted they were detained in the house against their will. He then bid them point out who detained them, and they fixed on two of the brejobausis, who they alleged had beaten them on their attempting to go down-stairs. Mr. Clarke then took the names of these men, but they denied that any of the coolies had been beaten, or prevented from leaving the house. Mr. Hare then explained to the coolies, that as the brejobausis denied that they detained them, those who liked to go away, might do so at once. This was received with a great shout, and in few minutes the whole of them, men and women, without one exception, gathered their bundles, and rushed down the stairs. Mr. Clarke and Mr. Hare followed, when they found the door from the street into the house locked outside, and four brejobausis guarding it. These men were ordered to open the door, but they would return no answer. The chowkedar was among the crowd and was spoken to, but the brejobausis threatened him on his approaching the door. He was then told if he did not do his duty his conduct would be reported, when, after some remonstrance, he succeeded in opening the door, when the brejobausis outside the house immediately ran off at full speed, but those in the house took no part whatever. Mr. Hare then explained to the coolies that if they wished to complain of their imprisonment, or of having been beaten, they ought to go to the police. Many declared that they were afraid to venture there, as they would be sent on board a ship; but others said they would go, and a number did attend and were seen getting petitions prepared in the compound. Mr. Clarke and Mr. Hare returned to Mr. Robison, and stated what had taken place. Mr. Robison said that at present he had nothing more to do, as the people were no longer in custody. He advised Mr. Clarke and Mr. Hare to take no further steps on behalf of the coolies, as he considered they were undeserving of any sympathy, as he believed they had broken the contracts which they had voluntarily made; this, however, did not justify any persons in depriving them of their liberty, much less in forcing them out of the country, and he was determined to punish to the utmost, any persons convicted before him of such conduct. Mr. McCann then returned and reported, that he had gone to the house with Mr. Brown and found it empty.—Hurkuru, September 15.

BENGAL MILITARY FUND.

The directors beg to submit to the subscribers of the military fund, the case of Mrs. Mayer (late Mrs. Bagnold) claiming the pension she enjoyed from the fund, in right of her first husband the late Lieutenant T. N. Bagnold, 13th regiment native infantry.

This lady was a pensioner of the late Military Widows' Fund, the rules of which institution did not admit a widow on second widowhood, to the pension she might have enjoyed in right of her first husband, as already stated in the case of Mrs. Kelly (late Mrs. Graham) which was circulated in February last.

Mrs. Mayer states in support of her claim, that in the year 1833, she became the wife of Mr. N. Mayer, of the medical profession, having previously heard from the brother of her second as well as from the brother of her first husband, that she was entitled to her pension from the fund, in case of her becoming a widow a second time each of the gentlemen above referred to having made inquiry at the office of the agents of the fund in London, and each having received the same reply, that but for this assurance she would not have married, Mr. Mayer, who died on the 3d November 1837, leaving her destitute. In consideration of these circumstances, which are more fully detailed in the annexed statement No. 1, she now solicits re-admission to the pension she enjoyed before her second marriage.

It will be seen by the solemn declaration made by Captain Thomas Maxwell Bagnold, of her Majesty's royal marines (vide No. 1), that he personally called at the office of the agents of the fund in London in 1832, and (without mentioning the name of Mrs. Bagnold in particular) asked whether a widow on the Bengal Military Fund remarrying would be restored to her pension in the event of a second widowhood, and received for answer, that a widow so circumstanced would be restored to her pension, and this was correct, as far as widows admitted since the establishment of the military fund (1st November 1824) are concerned. In the manner the question was put by Captain Bagnold to the agents, the reply was perfectly correct, but a majority of the directors are strongly of opinion, that it was the duty of the agents to have made Captain Bagnold acquainted with the rules of the Military Widows' Fund which apply to such circumstances, and therefore consider this a proper case for the decision of the subscribers.

TO THE COMMITTEE OF THE BENGAL MILITARY FUND.

GENTLEMEN,—Trusting in the kindness I ever experienced from Indian Society whilst I was a member of it, and finding myself reduced to poverty unless you take pity on my situation, I raise myself from the state of dejection into which recent affliction has thrown me, to beg your kind consideration to my case, and entreat you to grant my petition. I was formerly the wife of Lieutenant T. N. Bagnold, interpreter and quartermaster of the 13th Native Infantry, (most probably known to some of your committee) but from extreme exertion at Fort William, during an unusually hot season, I was soon left a widow, and in addition to that misfortune, lost the property I had before I married, by the failure of Messrs. Palmer's house. In the year 1833, I became the wife of Mr. N. Mayer, of the medical profession, having previously heard from his brother Mr. T. E. Mayer, now surgeon on the Madras establishment, and from Captain Bagnold, brother to my former husband, whose statement accompanies this, that I was entitled to my pension again from your Fund, in case of my becoming a widow a second time, they each made the inquiry at Messrs. Cockerell and Trail's office, and each received the same reply. I could not doubt the truth of their report, as the remarks in the directory do not in any way refer to any distinction of widows who are or are not entitled to receive the pension again, and I most solemnly assure you, I should not have married Mr. Mayer but in the firm belief that what Messrs. Cockerell and Trail asserted must be correct. On the 3d of November last, my beloved husband had the misfortune to prick his hand whilst examining a body which died from poison at the Charing cross hospital, from the effects of which I lost him the following month, after much severe suffering respected and lamented by all who knew him. But merit does not procure wealth, and his medical career being short, he left me dependant on your fund, with one child, the daughter of Lieutenant Bagnold, who has now just entered her 17th year, and will consequently soon be off the orphan fund, the donation from which, liberal as it is, has long been inadequate to procure her those accomplishments so necessary for her future welfare. When my friends applied to have my name placed on the list of widows again, they learnt, to my inexpressible grief, that your rules did not admit it, as Lieutenant Bagnold died before your present arrangements came into force. In pity then to my helpless situation, and in consideration of the error into which I have been led by those immediately employed by ourselves, gentlemen, I entreat you to make my case an exception and restore to me the pension. I humbly suggest, it could not injure others, as all widows under the former rule might be made acquainted with their position. Having intruded so long on your valuable time I will only detain you to say, if you deny my petition you reduce to poverty the widow of one of your own community, a man who was ever respected among you, and who ever did his best to support your institution.

In the deepest anxiety for a favourable reply, and in the firmest dependence on your liberality and kindness,

I remain, &c.

(Signed) MARY ANNE MAYER.

Putney Surry, 20th February, 1838.

Middlesex to Wit. I, Thomas Maxwell Bagnold, a Captain in her Majesty's Royal Marines, formerly of Knightsbridge, in the county of Middlesex, but now of Blackheath villa, near Saxmundham, in the county of Suffolk; - do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare, that I am the brother of John Henry Bagnold, who was Lieut. in the Bengal army, and died there in the month of June 1821, leaving a widow, who afterwards became the mother of a female infant now in her seventeen year. That in the year 1832, I did personally inquire at the office of Messrs. Cockerell and Trail, in London, whether a widow on the Bengal Military Fund, remarrying, would be restored to her pension in the event of a second widowhood; and that I then received for answer that a widow so circumstanced would be restored to her Military Fund pension but not to Lord Clive's annuity.

And I do further declare, that my informant at the said office, did not point out to me that there was any difference or classification of widows; that I was not then aware nor have I ever known since that time (until within this present month) that any such difference existed, but on the contrary fully believed, both from the verbal information I received at the office of Messrs. Cockerell and Trail, the agents of the Bengal Military Fund, and from the regulations published in the East India Directory, that the said regulation was general and without reservation or distinction.

And I furthermore declare it to be my firm and conscientious belief, from conversations I held with the parties, that the said widow of my late brother and her then intended husband, the late Henry Mayer, would have refrained from intermarrying if they had not been thus assured from a source of information they considered official, that the said widow in the event of his death would certainly return to her pension.

And I further declare it was to satisfy my family and the parties concerned that I made the inquiries, and that I fully know and believe the answer given influenced the determination of the said widow and said Henry Mayer to intermarry.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an act made and passed in the sixth year of his late Majesty, King William the Fourth, entitled "an act to repeal an act of the present session of Parliament, entitled an act for the more effectual abolition of oaths and affirmations taken and made in various departments of the state and to substitute declarations in lieu thereof, and for the more entire suppression of voluntary and extrajudicial oaths and affidavits, and to make other provisions for the abolition of unnecessary oaths."

(Signed) T. M. BAGNOLD.

This declaration was made before me by the above named Thos. Maxwell Bagnold, this fifteenth day of February 1838.

STEAM MEETING.

The Committee of the new Bengal steam fund, with reference to the 5th resolution of the half-yearly general meeting of subscribers to the fund and the petition, held on the 18th ultimo, have much pleasure in publishing for the information of the subscribers and the public, the following correspondence with the supreme Government:

TO THE HONOURABLE ALEXANDER ROSS, ESQ.,

Vice President of the Council of India in Council

HONOURABLE SIR,—In accordance with the directions contained in the accompanying copy of a resolution, unanimously passed at a general meeting of the subscribers to the new Bengal steam fund, and to the petition to the House of Commons, we have the honour to submit the following statement.

2. In consequence of a notification from Bombay, that it was intended to despatch the honourable Company's steamer Atalanta, to the Persian Gulf, on the 30th July, the 15th of June was advertised by the post master general at Calcutta, as the latest safe date for the despatch of letters to be in time for the steamer, when 2,530 letters and newspapers from Calcutta and its neighbourhood, and 127 letters from the Mofussil, were forwarded to Bombay.

3. The Semiramis, however, arriving from the Persian Gulf on the day of the intended despatch of the Atalanta and the services of this latter vessel not appearing then to be required in the gulf, it was resolved to substitute the Semiramis, and to despatch her to Suez on the 12th of July; she did not, however, leave till the 15th of July, and being unable to proceed on her voyage, it is said from want of fuel, returned to Bombay on the 26th. It appears, however, that her mails have been considered too bulky to be forwarded on the Atalanta, which vessel left on the 1st instant for the gulf, and in consequence they have been detained at Bombay, and are to be sent on by a steamer via the Red Sea on the 8th proximo, or eighty-five days from the date of the Calcutta mail leaving this place.

4. We would respectfully submit to the consideration of your Honour in Council, the enormous inconvenience, disappointment, and useless expence occasioned by this occurrence—an occurrence the repetition of which cannot be effectually guarded against in similar future attempts to reach the Red Sea from Bombay in the S. W. monsoon, that is to say, for one third part of the year; while on the other hand it is, we believe now universally admitted, that no difficulty would occur in passing from Calcutta to Cape Guardafui, and Suez.

We need not occupy the time of your Honour in Council by entering into any detail of the course to be pursued from Calcutta in the S. W. monsoon; but we may say generally, that it would be such as to avoid entirely the strength of the monsoon in the Arabian Sea; and we are of opinion that either of the large steamers now at Bombay would not occupy in steaming from this port to Suez more than from 31 to 33 days, exclusive of the time it might be necessary to stop at Madras, Galle, and perhaps the Southern Maldives.

5. In conformity with the unanimous resolution of the general meeting of our constituents, we venture on their part, and on that of the public in general, respectfully to urge upon your Honour in Council the heavy disappointment both here and at home, the arrangement of commercial and individual plans, the discredit cast upon the scheme of Indian steam navigation, and the absolute loss incurred on this occasion, as strong additional reasons which press upon every class of the community, for urging on the home authorities the immediate establishment of an efficient steam communication with the principal ports of India, a communication the vast importance of which, in a political, commercial, and general point of view, was perhaps never more clearly demonstrated than at this period, when so signal a failure has attended its merely partial adoption. We are indeed unable to believe that, in the face of this failure, it can long be overlooked, that a port, from which steaming direct to the Red Sea is for one-third of the year "impracticable," is not well adapted for a general starting point; or that it would not be incomparably more advantageous to extend to all the ports and presidencies of India, the incalculable benefit of steam communication.

We have, &c.

RESOLUTION.

of a public general meeting of the subscribers to the new Bengal Steam Fund, and to the petition to the House of Commons, held at the Town-hall on the 18th August 1838.

Resolved, that the Committee be instructed to address the supreme Government, urging the recent failure of the Semiramis, and the heavy disappointment and loss thereby inflicted upon the whole community as an additional strong reason for pressing earnestly upon the home authorities, the prompt and efficient establishment of the comprehensive plan.

GENTLEMEN,—I am directed by the honourble the President in Council to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 24th ultimo, enclosing copy of a resolution passed at a general meeting of the subscribers to the new Bengal steam fund and to the petition to the House of Commons on the recent failure of the Semiramis, to proceed on her voyage to Suez.

2. In reply, I am directed to state, that the inconvenience referred to, in this representation, was fully participated by the Government, and his Honour in Council will forward your representation on the subject with a strong expression of his own sentiments in support of the views and conclusions which this further disappointment is calculated to establish and confirm.

NEW CALCUTTA LAUDABLE SOCIETY. *

The following propositions are published, for general information,

By authority of the Directors, New Calcutta Laudable Society,

J. CULLEN, Secretary.

Proposition for the Application of the Surplus Fund of the New Calcutta Laudable Society at the end of the year 1839, and for other Modifications in its Constitution, with a view to render the Society Permanent; enhancing greatly Advantages of all concerned in it, combined with Unquestionable Security.

PROPOSITIONS.

First.—That, prior to any division of the surplus funds there be set apart one-third the amount of extraordinary risks arising from individuals holding more than ten shares on one life to meet such extraordinary risks.

Second.—That one per cent. on the outstanding risks to be denominated the 'premium fund,' be carried forward to the current premiums to meet unknown lapses.

Third.—That the remaining sum be held to be the individual property of the surviving policy holders at midnight of the 31st December 1839, in the ratio of the amount premium respectively paid, subject to retention to individual credit to the extent of ten per cent. on each individual's risk, for the purpose of forming a guarantee fund; any surplus which may remain to any individual's credit, after such ten per cent. has been thus set apart as his proportion of a guarantee fund, to be paid to him or applied in reduction of premium. Should the surplus of any individual at the close of the term not amount to ten per cent. on his individual risk, his future surplus to be added thereto until it does so amount to ten per cent. on his individual risk.

Fourth.—That a statement of the accounts be prepared on the 31st May and 30th November, in each year, for the purpose of ascertaining the then state of the funds; that in the event of there being a surplus over and above one per cent. on the amount of outstanding risks for the "premium fund," the excess, provided it amounts to five per cent., or more, on the amount premium received during the current half-year, be divided as above among the surviving policy holders at those dates respectively in the following manner, viz. that after ten per cent. on the premium paid during the half-year shall have been so divided, the remainder be carried to the premium fund, unless it shall amount to enough to allow of an additional one per cent. on the outstanding risks for the premium fund and five per cent. on the premium paid during the half-year, in which case the one per cent. shall be so carried to the premium fund and an additional five per cent. shall be divided as above! and in the event of there still being a further surplus admitting a third one per cent. being carried to the premium fund and an additional five per

REMARKS.

First.—These risks, when they fall, are very severely felt, and we must make some special provision for them. The way I have proposed appears to me to answer every purpose; each year as they lapse, or are withdrawn, the amount to be set apart will of course decrease, and eventually cease entirely.

Second.—This is not only necessary for the purpose indicated; but, carried on it is calculated to have a very beneficial effect by strengthening the current premium, and rendering any call on the guarantee fund even in extraordinary bad years less likely.

Third.—This seems to me the simplest course to obtain and maintain a security fund. Ten per cent. on individual risks would, at the commencement of the society under these rules, afford, I think, a guarantee fund of 9½ per cent. on the outstanding risks; but of course as the original policy holders, who, on establishing the Society on its new system thus make a direct subscription to the guarantee fund, fall off, this percentage on the outstanding risks will be reduced; but I do not think it will ever be below eight per cent. unless there should suddenly be a large accession of subscribers, which would of itself render the reduction harmless.

Fourth.—This half yearly adjustment of surplus is very important; it serves to keep down the premium as it is required to be paid to its lowest possible rate; it is necessary to ascertain the amount, if any, divisible prior to the date of payment of premium, in order, that the amount of surplus due to each and deductible from his forthcoming premium, may be known.

I am induced to limit the return premium to twenty per cent. on the fixed rates, until a premium fund might be collected to the extent of five per cent. on the outstanding risks, in consequence of having, with a view to arrive at something like a practical result, applied my present propositions to the actuals of the past seven half-years of the present laudable Society, reducing, however, the premiums actually received by fifteen per cent., being about the difference between the present and the proposed rates; I then found that without taking into account interest on the funds, there would have been, after setting apart one per cent. on the outstanding risks, divisible surplus in each half year as follows:

cent. on the premium paid during the half-year, making in all twenty per cent. on the premium paid, a further division to that extent shall be made; but no division or return premium beyond twenty per cent. shall be made unless the premium fund amount to five per cent. on the outstanding risks; in which case the whole amount surplus shall be divided or returned as above; the amount belonging to each individual being either carried to his credit, or applied to the reduction of the premium, according as it may, or may not be required to maintain his portion of the guarantee fund at ten per cent. on his individual risk.

By dividing the surplus in the manner proposed, and restricting the return to 20 per cent. on the premium paid during the half-year, the result would have been as follows :

Half Year	Return on amount premium paid during half year.	Amount carried forward to premium fund.	Per cent age of amount carried forward outstanding risks.
1st.....	10 per cent.	Rs. 90,806	1 14
2d.....	5 "	76,060	1 2

6th.....	13 "	1,50,128	2 65
7th.....	20 "	1,83,414	3 1

The effect of this arrangement would be to maintain the return premium at a more equable rate, as well as to spread the good or ill success of one half year over several.

Fifth.—That in the event of the guarantee fund being at any time treasured upon, the amount withdrawn be made good at the commencement of the succeeding half-year out of the current subscriptions; so that every surviving subscriber at the time of the repayment to the guarantee fund shall have his full amount made up to him, as it stood at the time the fund was drawn upon; and in case of lapse, after the guarantee fund may have been so treasured upon, the full amount to the credit of the individual risk be paid as it stood at the commencement of the half-year, notwithstanding the temporary reduction in the total amount of the guarantee fund.

Fifth.—The object of taking the amount in the aggregate from the guarantee fund and replacing it also in the aggregate, out of the current premiums when collected, is to simplify the operation, by rendering it unnecessary to calculate the amount required from each individual; nor is there any actual difference in the effect on the security of the Society. It will, however, be necessary, if the Society adopt the present rules, that subsequently contingent rules be added, such as a provision that in the event of the sum required to make good the guarantee fund at any time exceeding a certain per centage on the current premium, the directors be required to demand increased premium, in a certain ratio. But this and other similar contingencies, had better be left for future consideration.

Sixth.—That the whole amount standing to individual credit be paid, in the event of lapse, at the same time as the amount assured; and that this payment be made immediately on due proof of lapse.

Sixth.—This also seems to me to be a very advisable course of proceeding. The length of time under the present system before which the amount assured is paid, is a great drawback on us.

Seventh.—That in the event of a party being desirous to cease to be a mutual assurer by withdrawing from the Society, the amount to his credit in the guarantee fund be paid to him, subject to a fine of twenty-five per cent. to be carried to the premium fund; and that a proportionate payment be made in the event of a party reducing the amount of his assurance, provided that in such case no payment shall be made unless the account at his credit shall equal ten per cent. on his reduced risk. Parties withdrawing at the close of the present term also to forego twenty-five per cent. of their surplus.

Seventh.—Objection may possibly be made to the latter part of this rule, but I think unfairly so. We united together as mutual assurers for mutual purposes of benefit. Those parties who withdraw could not have had assurance during the term, with power to continue without fresh certificate of health, and a right to this refund, without the joint operation of us all; and, therefore, if they elect to withdraw, for their own individual purposes, from such mutual assurance and reciprocation of benefit, and thereby prejudice those that remain, they ought to pay forfeit.

Eighth.—That instead of shares of 6,000 rupees assurance be taken on even hundreds, not under 500 Company's rupees, nor above 60,000 Co.'s rupees.

Eighth.—This will be more convenient on every account. There is nothing particularly desirable in having the shares.

Ninth.—That the accounts be converted from sicca into Company's rupees it being optional with existing insurers to have on value an equivalent in Company's rupees to the nearest hundred for his present insurance in siccas, or to hold the same number of Company's, as he now does siccas.

Ninth.—This of course is now quite necessary.

Tenth.—That the rates of premium be those of the oriental life insurance Company, as below; the existing military lives insured in the laudable paying only civil rates; but all military lives, insuring subsequent to the 31st December 1839, to pay the military rates.

Tenth.—The oriental rates have now stood the test of experience, short, indeed, but long enough to warrant our adoption of them. The returns which have been made by that Company, shew that we may fairly calculate on having at least annual surplus to refund, thereby in point of fact reducing the rates of premium to a minimum.

* Note—A Table of Rates for life increasing annually, to correspond with the fixed rates for life, is preparing by Mr. Vernon. It will, of course, be optional for parties to subscribe for life under either the one or the other.

† Parties insured under Policies of seven years, may, by giving up their Policy at the expiration of six years, have a renewed Policy without fresh certificate of health, paying the rate of premium as annexed to their then age.

Eleventh.—That such other modifications be made in the existing rules as are necessary to bring them into correspondence with the above.

Twelfth.—That the Society be called the "India Lovable and Mutual Assurance Society."

Thirteenth.—That this paper be circulated by the secretary to every individual policy-holder with a request that he will either vote at a special general meeting to be called after six months' notice from the date of 120 circulation, or send proxy under the 32d rule in for or against these propositions, order that at least two-thirds of the Society may be represented.

Fourteenth.—That in the event of the propositions being carried, they, together with the existing rules, be placed in the hands of a professional gentleman for the purpose of a correct set of rules being prepared for general information.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Calcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's apartment, 1st Sept. 1838.

A Morrison, Esq., Assistant-Surgeon, Bengal service, was proposed a member of the Society by Dr. O'Shaughnessy, seconded by Dr. Goodeve.

A letter was read from J. McCosh, Esq., requesting to withdraw from the list of members.

The report of the Committee of Enquiry into the present state of the Society read at the last meeting, was confirmed and the following resolutions, proposed in that report, were unanimously carried, viz.

1st.—That the subscription be reduced to one-half of for resident members 24 rs.; non-resident 12 rupees per annum.

2d.—That the establishment be reduced within 50 rupees per month.

3d.—That all members of the service be solicited by the President to join the Society in its remodelled form.

4th.—That all Assistant-Surgeons recently arrived from Europe, be invited to be present at the monthly meetings and subsequently to become members.

It was resolved also, that a monthly sheet of election from the European journals be circulated to the Member-at-large members, in order that the latter might derive some benefit from the home periodicals received by the Society.

The Secretary stated, that three Union Bank shares had been purchased in the name of the Society at a very favourable rate, 1,094 per share. These shares will yield about 500 rupees per annum.

He also reported that the present establishment and monthly expenses had been reduced to 50 rupees per month (During Dr. Barlow's lifetime these charges averaged 120 rupees.) By the new arrangement for printing, it was believed that the Society, under the reduced rate of subscription, could well afford to publish annually from 200 to 300 pages of large type in the shape of the original matter contained in the transactions and journals, besides several pages of closely printed selections for the monthly meeting above-mentioned.

Dr. O'Shaughnessy stated to the meeting, that Dr. Christison mentioned, in a late paper in the Edinburgh Medical and Surgical Journal, that scammony was generally found to be largely adulterated with chalk in England, but that he, upon examination of the scammony of the Indian bazar, ascertained that the drug in question, is brought nearly pure to this country. The low price obtainable for the article in England, is the case of the adulteration. The scammony in the Company's dispensary, which was brought from Europe, contained the impurities mentioned by Dr. Christison.

The following communications were presented.

Cases with remarks to illustrate the similarity in the symptoms and morbid changes which occur in cholera, fever, coup de soleil, death from intemperance, and that these diseases chiefly present marks of congestion rather than of inflammation, by W. A. Green, Esq., Howrah.

This paper was subsequently read and discussed.

The following papers were similarly disposed of.

1. An account of an intestinal worm of rare of species—the distoma imbecile, by—Taylor, Esq., of Dacca.

2. Report of four successful cases of lithotomy, by the same gentleman.

3. Report on Cholera by Mr. Brown.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF INDIA.

ON THE 12TH SEPTEMBER, 1838.

Proceedings of a general meeting of this society was held at the town hall.

PRESENT.

The honorable SIR E. RYAN, President, in the chair.

Dr. Wallich, Esq., J. C. K. Robinson, Esq., W. Cracroft, W. F. Fergusson, W. Storm, Colin Campbell, G. A. Painsen, E. P. J. S. May, T. P. Morell, C. Trebeck, G. T. F. Speed; Dywan Ramchund Sen, Di. Strong, Capt. Spens, Messrs. W. Spier, W. G. Roe, D. B. Syers, J. P. Marcus, Robert Waton, Robert Campbell, A. G. Harris, D. Hare, W. K. Ewart, and John Bell.

Visitors.—Dr. Helfer and Major Archer.

The proceedings of the last general meeting, and of the special meeting of the 29th August, were read and confirmed.

Members elected.—The following gentlemen, proposed at the August general meeting, were elected by ballot, as members of this Society:

E. MacIntosh, G. Gibbon, D. C. Low, G. H. Clarke, c. s., J. St. Pourcain, C. R. Richardson, Esquires.

Members proposed.—The following gentlemen were proposed as members, viz.

Baboo Sree Kissen Mullick, proposed by Capt. H. J. Wood, and seconded by the Secretary.

Edward Bathurst, Esq., of Mirzapore, proposed by the Secretary, and seconded by Mr. Storm.

James Mackenzie, Esq., of Howrah, proposed by the Secretary, and seconded by Mr. Storm.

James Stewart, of Furreedpore, proposed by W. Speir, Esq., and seconded by the Secretary.

W. Dunbar, M. D., proposed by the Secretary, and seconded by Dr. Wallich.

Henry Cope, Esq., of Meerut, proposed by W. F. Gibbon, and seconded by the Secretary.

G. Rogers, Esq., of Bowring, proposed by W. G. Rose, and seconded by W. Storm.

P. Rayson, Esq., of Cossipore Factory, proposed by W. G. Rose, and seconded by W. Storm.

W. Byrne, proposed by Mr. G. Rose, and seconded by Mr. Storm.

F. H. Souter, Esq., proposed by Mr. Storm, and seconded by E. Preston.

Baboo Koomar Lall Churn Ghosal, proposed by Rameemut Sen, and seconded by the Secretary.

The President opened the business of the day, by reading the report of the last appointed Committee, on the subject of investigating the various documents laid before the Society, since the question was first agitated, with a view to determine the point in dispute between Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Bell.

The Committee, after a careful perusal of the papers submitted to them, state,

"We have no reason to doubt that the insects in our possession, are derived from those imported from Cadiz to Bourbon, and are the grana fina."

Proposed by Mr. C. A. Prinsep, seconded by Dr. Wallich, that this report be confirmed.

Mr. G. A. Prinsep, offered a few observations on the subject of the opinion formerly expressed by him, as to the insect brought from Bourbon, on the Alceid, not being the grana fina.

Mr. Prinsep adverted to certain papers, which he had made over to the Secretary within the last week, in which some points were noticed that had escaped his recollection, since he visited South America, and this circumstance, caused him to declare his alteration of opinion, in favor of the insect being the true grana fina of Ousaca. The points that had escaped Mr. Prinsep's recollection were the chaux, to which the insect was subject to, in one stage resembling in its downy coat, the salvestre, while in another it was covered with white powder; and the state in which the importation of the insects on which Mr. Prinsep's first opinion was based was affected, caused him to mistake them for and pronounced them to be the salvestre. He had since seen a more recent importation per Therence, at Mr. Bell's house, and was now prepared, as well from the evidence before the Society, as from his own personal inspection of the insects, to revoke his former opinion, and to concur with the Committee that the insect, now under Mr. Bell's care, is the true grana fina.

Mr. Prinsep, in conclusion, drew attention to a motion passed by the Society on the 13th September last, awarding the Society's gold medal to any captain or other person who shall bring round a certain quantity of the living insect, male and female, in a healthy state &c. and proposed that the commander who brought round the last supply, which was in accordance with the condition of that resolution, should be entitled to the gold medal.

The President having stated to the meeting, that as the insect was now admitted to be the grana fina, as well by the concurrent reports of two Committees as by the important admission of Mr. Prinsep who now supported the report, it was for the Society to decide, whether the commander was entitled to the medal, and if so, whether the Secretary had any doubt as to the ship and commander. The latter doubt having been set at rest, by the Secretary, who stated that he had no doubt, and that he knew Captain Caillot, who had called beforehand and given an order for the delivery of the insect.

Proposed by Mr. G. A. Prinsep, seconded by Dr. Wallich, and resolved, that the gold medal be awarded to Captain Caillot, commanding the Therence.

The President proposed, and was seconded by Dr. Wallich, that the Society's special thanks be offered to Monsieur Bodet, for the great assistance he afforded in influencing the first supply of cochineal from Bourbon.

In connexion with this subject, the President submitted a memoir of a Monsieur Peiotet, translated by Mr. Bell, on the means of freeing the salvestre cochineal of its cottony envelope, in order to become a merchantable article.

Mr. Prinsep also submitted, a method of cultivating the cochineal in Ousaca, in a letter from himself to Mr. H. F. Prinsep, dated London 1823.

No. 2.—Measures pursued by the Court of Directors, and the Governor of India, with a view to the introduction of the true cochineal insect.

No. 3.—A paper in Spanish, on the nature, habits, &c. of the cochineal, by Carasco.

No. 4.—Notes on No. 3, by ditto.

The President stated, that what had fallen from Mr. Prinsep was very satisfactory, and suggested that it would be more confirmatory of his views and present conclusions, if he would be so good as to favour the Society, with his sentiments in a written form, which Mr. Prinsep agreed to do.

NOTICE OF MOTIONS.

No. 1.—Proposed by Dr. Wallich, seconded by G. A. Prinsep, Esq., that a gold medal of the Society be presented to Monsieur Richard, of the Royal Botanic Garden, St. Denis, Bourbon, for the prompt and effectual manner in which he has met the wishes of the Society on the important occasion of introducing the true cochineal into this country, and for the success which has thus far attended the valuable exertions of that gentleman."

No. 2.—"Proposed by Mr. G. A. Prinsep, seconded by Dr. Wallich, that until the end of the year 1839, a silver medal of the Society be given to the commander of every ship in which a supply of the grana fina or fine cochineal shall be brought to Calcutta, in a healthy and fit state for propagating the insect, and that a silver medal of the Society be given to the commander of the vessel who brought the first supply of plants and insects in February last, though the insects perished soon after their arrival.

Read the Agricultural Committee's report of proceedings of 3d and 5th September 1838, in the last of which some extra expence is suggested with respect to the Nursery.

Resolved, that the expense being trivial and the occasion imminent, it is not necessary to give notice of motion, and that the expense be sanctioned.

MEDALS AND PREMIA FOR THE BEST SAMPLE OF STAPLE PRODUCTS.

The discussion in Mr. Balestier's letter having attracted particular attention to the existing condition under which premia are awardable,

Mr. D. Hare proposed, and was seconded by Mr. Storm, and it was resolved, that it be referred to the Committee of Medals and Premiums to revise the condition on which premia and medals shall be offered, in experiments in silk, cotton, sugar, and tobacco, during the year ending 30th April next, with liberty to suggest the addition of other articles, or the exclusion of any of those above named.

The original Committee, who framed the existing conditions, viz. Messrs Robinson, Prinsep, and Walters, being now reduced to two, by the absence of the latter, the President suggested that the old Committee be increased by the addition of three new members, viz. Messrs. W. F. Fergusson, W. Cracroft, and R. Watson, who agreed to act.

Cape Seeds.

With reference to a Resolution of last meeting, the time having expired which admitted of members claiming their quotas from all parts, it was resolved,

"That the details respecting the residue be left to the Secretary."

Flower seeds from Deyrah Dhoon. A very fine, though limited, collection has been received from Lieutenant Kirke, of Dayrah Dhoon, which will be ready for distribution agreeably to a public notification.

Communications.

Read the following communications.

From J. Thomason, Esq., officiating Secretary to the Governor-General, North West Provinces, dated 25th July, in reply to the Secretary's letter of the 4th July, respecting the permission of Government to indent on the Botanical garden at Saharunpore, for supplies of fruit-tree grafts, &c. Forwards copy of a letter addressed to Captain Cautley, requesting that gentleman to comply with the Society's requisition.

From Colonel Dunlop, dated Simla, 26th July, enclosing a note to his address from Colonel Tapp, respecting vine cuttings from Koonawur, who states that the small produce of the same description of vine at Simla, would scarcely warrant the despatch of a supply for the Society.

From Captain Cautley, Acting Superintendent of the Botanical Garden, Saharunpore, dated July 30th, intimating, with reference to Mr. Secretary Thomason's letter to his address of the 25th July, his readiness to transmit occasional supplies of trees and shrubs, when required by the Society.

From Captain J. Hullock, commanding the Dona Pascal, dated Port Louis, Mauritius, July 15th, advising despatch, to the care of Captain Richards, of the Carnatic, of a bundle of Mauritius sugar-cane.

From J. Balestier, Esq., dated Singapore, July 11th, presenting two bundles of two varieties of sugar-cane, grown on his estate in the island, one called the "tabootelore" or "egg-cane," and No. 2, considered identical with the Otaheite cane.

Forwards, by the same opportunity, a small sample of Muscovado sugar made from the Otaheite cane; and enters into a detailed account of its manufacture.

Requesting to be informed, if he can enter the lists as a competitor for the premia offered by this Society to encourage the cultivation of Otaheite cane, and for the medals awardable to the producers of the best samples of Muscovado sugar.

Resolved, that Mr. Balestier, is entitled to be a competitor for premia offered for the best samples of sugar, under existing conditions, but not for the cane cultivation, which is limited to Bengal.

From Major Sleeman, dated Jubbulpore, 18th August, giving cover to two papers, viz. one a letter addressed by him to the editor of the Agri Ukhar, in reply to observations lately made in that paper regarding the culture of the Otaheite cane, and the other containing translation of a report upon the number of persons living in the pergunnah of Dharoon, in the sugar district, who lost the use of their limbs from eating the feora gram, when in a diseased state.

From Captain H. Kirke, to Dr. Wallich, dated Deyrah, 7th August, forwarding a small sample of Muscovado sugar, the produce of an acre of country cane grown in his garden. Promises to send next year for the use of the Society, a general assortment of seeds, N. B. Two small boxes of flowers seeds have just been received and in excellent condition.

From N. Alexander, Esq., dated 24th August, presented in the name of Mr. William Bennett, (late of Demerara) a practical treatise on the management and drainage of lands, by which much soil may be successfully brought under sugar cultivation in Bengal, which is now unfit for such purpose, by means of the retentive nature of the soil, and the subsequent sudden evaporation, which causes the surface soil to cake and crack. Mr. Bennett's memoir is styled "A practical treatise on the cultivation of the sugar-cane and manufacture of sugar, interspersed with remarks on the present system of the ryots in the lower districts of Bengal."

From Colonel Skinner, dated Hansi, 9th August, enclosing a statement showing the outlay and produce of American cotton (Upland Georgia) grown on his farm in 1836. Adds a small sample of the cotton to which his remarks refer.

From Major J. D. Syers, Secretary Agricultural Society of Cuttack, dated September 8th, forwarding another sample of cotton (Upland Georgia) for the Committee's opinion.

From A. Colvin, Esq., dated 8th September, enclosing copies of a letter and memorandum received from Claude Hamilton, Esq., respecting the introduction on a larger scale and by more direct efforts than heretofore pursued, of foreign cotton in the upper provinces and in central India,

From James Crooke, Esq., date September, in reply to the Secretary's letter, requesting his aid in influencing the despatch of a supply of Peruvian cotton seed, states that he has already written to a friend on the subject.

Mr. Crooke notices a circumstance worthy of record. The Secretary, advertising to the supply of Peruvian cotton seed, presented to the Society by that gentleman, stated, that with one or two exceptions, the seed had failed; but that the little which had vegetated, was highly thought of. To these observations Mr. Crooke remarks.

"When I sent the seed to you, I retained about two seers for my own purpose, intending to sow a beegah or two with it. I placed about 40 seeds in my compound in Clive-street, as soon as the seed was landed (June) and they all thrived wonderfully, some being fully 15 feet high in 12 months. The rest of my retained seed I delayed sowing till the rains were over, and then not one would vegetate. I have now about a beegah of plant at Ishera, raised from seeds from the trees grown in my compound, and about 30 or 40 very thriving plants from seed from the second descent."

From Dr. A. Campbell, of Nepal, dated 27th August, requesting that the amount (200 rupees) allotted to him with reference to motion No. 1, of a general meeting of the Society on the 11th April, may be paid to Messrs. Presgrave and Co. on his account.

Presents a cannister of yellow turnip seed from Cape seed furnished by this Society.

Dr. Campbell writes: "the largest turnip measured 28 inches round. They are not good for the table but a prime article for cattle."

From J. B. Spencer, Esq., dated Blackheath, June, 5th, acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter of the 12th January last, and in reply expresses his willingness to be of service to the Society, and to influence the speedy despatch of the trial consignment of seeds ordered from Messrs. Noble and Sons, of Fleet-street.

Dr. Hufnagle, informed the Secretary, that the seeds he had ordered from America through that gentleman's agency, were on board a vessel that had sailed from Boston, some time before the departure of the ship United States, and might be hourly expected.

From his highness Nawab Tuhower Jung, dated Benares, 29th August, presenting four pears grown there, and offering his services to procure for the Society, grafts of this pear-tree, and of other fruits, obtainable in that part of the country.

From Colonel Rehling, Governor of Tranquebar, dated 16th July, acknowledging receipt of the several varieties of seeds, forwarded to him by this Society, which have been distributed amongst Europeans and natives in the vicinity.

Gives a most favourable account of the Egyptian, Bourbon, and Seychelles cotton-seeds, particularly the former, which had vegetated freely.

From Lieutenant Munro, secretary to the Mysore Agricultural Society, dated Bangalore, 15th August. Promises, in reply to the Secretary's letter of the 2d April last, to give some information on the subject of cattle and on the improvement of wool, together with a report of proceedings up to this time. Asks for guinea-grass seed and roots of the Jamaica ginger.

From Captain W. McFarquhar, dated Tavoy, 23d June, advising despatch of four plants of a shrub common to the coast, which bears a very beautiful flower, also some seeds of the "theesee," the tree which produces a beautiful black varnish.

States that the specimen of cotton forwarded by him on a former occasion, was the "South Sea Island."

Memo.—The Secretary, in sending for the plants, was informed by Captain Ovenstone that they were all dead, and the seeds of varnish shrub on being opened, were found to be mere husks and mould.

From Dr. W. Dunbar, dated Porunda, 20th August, promising to give some information on the state of agriculture in Chota Nagpore. Alludes to a disease termed "mhata," which is even more fatal to horned cattle than the "Goorgoora," treated of in his previous communication.

From Dr. Wallich, dated 20th August, forwarding six nutmegs lately received from Mr. W. Huxham, and annexes extract of a letter to his address from that gentleman, dated Puttaraveram plantations, Quilon, giving some information regarding the culture, &c. of this production.

From Jeffrey Finch, dated Tirhoot, 11th August, promising to send a few grafts of apple-trees, for the Society's fruit tree nursery.

From W. G. Dowson, Esq., dated 7th September, requesting that his name may be registered as an applicant for sugar-cane, sufficient to plant 300 beegahs, intended for his plantation at Ceylon.

Resolved, that Mr. Dowson's application cannot be registered, the object of the Society being to encourage the growth of Oithene cane in Bengal.

From Dr. Helfer, dated 10th September, giving the Secretary the result of his examination of certain parasitical animals found on the fleshy lobes of the Cactus, on which the cochineal insect has perished; and referring to a paper which Dr. H. proposed to read to the meeting.

Dr. Helfer, who was present, addressed the meeting on the subject of his views in respect to the coasts of Tenasserim, which he described as endowed with the richest resources, which required only labour and capital to develop them. Dr. H. seemed to rest his hope of amelioration of these provinces, on the efforts and assistance of this Society, and expressed the anxiety of Mr. Blundell and other residents, to co-operate at any measures that might be adopted, in furtherance of his object.

The President was quite willing to admit that much good might be done hereafter by the Society, and as far as the supply of seeds and plants could assist, he thought the Society would do their utmost, and that with right good will; but people were required in the first place to cultivate those seeds, and in this the Society could be of service. If, as Dr. Helfer intimated, one experimental nursery should be organized with or without the aid of Government in any of the provinces, he might reckon upon the zealous co-operation of the Society, in promoting the object in view; but until these preliminaries were entered upon, nothing could be done.

Mr. Cracroft suggested, and it seemed to be the opinion of the meeting, that Mr. Blundell might get up a small branch Society, even though the members were scattered far apart, so as to be a medium of correspondence with this body, and lead to arrangements that might eventually prove useful to a country represented by Dr. Helfer as full of hope.

Mr. Cracroft presented 13th volumes of London's Gardener's Magazine from the year 1826, up to 1837, some of the Nos. wanting.

Proposed by Dr. Wallich, seconded by Mr. Storm, that the best thanks of the Society be offered to Mr. Cracroft, for this valuable addition to its library.

From W. R. Ewart, a parcel of standard mulberry-tree, seed.

From the Secretary, a further supply of guinea-grass seed.

From J. M. Mackie, a sample of very fine country wheat.

From W. Storm, dated 15th August, forwarding extracts from Hoare, on the culture of the vine, which Mr. Storm recommends to be transferred to the transactions now publishing.

Referred to the Committee of Papers.

The thanks of the meeting were ordered to be offered for all these communications and presentations.

CORONER'S INQUEST—ILLEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

To the Editor of the Bengal Hurkaru.

Sir, — Under the supposition that you will, according to your usual practice, furnish a report of the inquest held last Thursday evening, and continued, by adjournment, to this-day, consequent to the death of a native named Mudodeen, and conceiving that a summary detail of circumstance which were brought to light in the course of the investigation, would not be unacceptable to your readers and the public, I trust you will allow me to occupy a small space in your columns for that purpose.

It appears, that in consequence of an affray which took place last Saturday, two men who were severely assaulted and maltreated on the occasion by a party of lallas or cloth merchants from the Chandney-bazar, applied to Jaun-bazar thannah for protection, and subsequent apprehension of the assailants, which was afforded, and both complainants and defendants were taken to the police, from whence they were afterwards sent to Captain Birch, who directed that those parties who had been injured, or hurt, should be removed to the native hospital, and the others to be released on bail. On the following Monday morning, the entire party, consisting of seven persons, two complainants and five defendants, were ushered into the presence of the sitting magistrate, who, upon the oral and "ex parte" statement of the latter, without a single deposition, or one title of sworn evidence, forthwith committed the two former to comfortable lodging in the town-guard, where they continued for four successive days, when the demise of the wounded man in the hospital brought the matter to the cognizance of the coroner, and the subsequent investigation of a jury.

After the empannelment of the jury, and on opening the case, the coroner discovered, by a few preliminary inquiries, that the two men, charged with the commission of a most serious crime, had been incarcerated for a succession of days, without a Magistrate's warrant, or any documentary testimony in the slightest degree to inculpate them.

The Coroner made some appropriate remarks on the character of the proceedings which took place at the police, and expressed some surprise at the undue exercise of magisterial authority discoverable on the occasion.

The jury, fully coinciding in the sentiments and opinion of the Coroner, conceived it a matter of paramount public duty, to address him officially on the subject, and an address was accordingly presented to him at the close of the proceedings.

I beg to hand you a copy of that letter for publicity, or otherwise, as you may think proper, and in doing so, I beg to assure you, that I am not influenced by any inducive motives or from any desire to cast a reproachful implication on the conduct of the magistracy.

The rights of the subjects, which had been unjustly invaded, and the proper ends of justice, imperatively demanded a public notice of the matter.

Your obedient servant,

Sept. 1, 1838.

ONE OF THE JURY.

To C. B. GREENLAW, Esq.

Coroner of Calcutta.

Sir, — In giving in our verdict on the investigation instituted, consequent to the death of Mudodeen, we cannot refrain from expressing our extreme surprise and regret, that in a matter of such importance, as involving the death of a subject, that two men should have been imprisoned for a succession of days, upon the ex parte statement and unsworn testimony of parties, who have been discovered to have been principally instrumental in causing the affray, and who, under circumstances which were developed, appeared to have made themselves obnoxious to some severe punishment. We lament to observe the extraordinary laxity which characterizes the proceedings which took place at the police on the occasion, and feeling that both life and property are and would be endangered by the countenance of the lax system, which has justly merited your censure and our confirmatory disapprobation, we trust you will be so good as to adopt measures to prevent the recurrence of similar proceedings on the part of the police authorities, which impose much trouble upon you and unnecessarily tax the patience of the jury. We conceive that no man, be he ever so humble or poor, should be incarcerated for a succession of days without a single deposition, or title of sworn evidence.

We have, &c.

(Signed) H. B. GARDENER,

Calcutta, Sept. 1, 1838 Foreman, for self and Jury.

THE INQUEST.

On Thursday last, the 30th of August last, a jury was impannelled by the coroner for the purpose of holding an inquest on the body of a native named Maulondeen, who was admitted to Chandney hospital at about six o'clock, on the evening of the twenty-fifth of August, instant, when he was in a state of insensibility from the concussion of the brain. He had a contusion and slight abrasion of the skin on the top of the forehead, his eyelids were swollen and black; he expired about midnight on the 29th of August. Dr. Bain, the police surgeon, who made a post mortem examination of the body of the deceased, saw a pair of black eyes and a bruise on the forehead. On removing the scalp there appeared a considerable extravasation of blood found on the left side of the head. The frontal, left parietal, and left temporal bones were fractured. There was a thick layer of coagulated blood lying between the skull and the membrane covering the brain on the left side. There was another large coagulation of blood found at the base of the brain. The vessels of the brain were all gorged with dark blood. The doctor was of opinion, that the deceased died from concussion and compression of the brain, which might have been produced by the same blow that caused the fractures.

Goburdhun, a cloth merchant, knew the deceased. He did not know where he lived, nor had he been very intimate with him. About six days ago, at about four in the afternoon, witness was sitting in his shop; there was also a man of the name of Shumboo there, a milkman, who lived opposite witness's shop. At this time a Dacca dandy came to witness's shop, asking if he had any good nyansook for sale. The answer being in the negative, the dandy went away. Shumboo asked witness why he did not shew the cloth to him. Witness replied, that the dandy was not likely to buy the cloth; for he would offer two annas for what was worth four. Shumboo said, you are up to the ways of the Baungals, meaning natives of the eastern part of Bengal. The deceased, who was sitting in the next shop, abused Sumboo for making use of these words. Sumboo said, I did not allude to you, I spoke to Gobardhun, why do you abuse me." The deceased got angry and said, "you did make use of such improper language to me. I am a Bramin." The deceased then came to witness's shop and struck Sumboo with a shoe. Sumboo got up and said, "thackoor, why did you beat me, I did not say any thing to you?" The deceased then called Lallajee, in whose shop he had been sitting, to come and seize Sumboo. Lallajee came and did so, and Madoodun struck him again. Gorachaund, the brother of Sumboo, came at this time and remonstrated with Sumboo for his having offended the Bramin. The deceased went up to Sumboo and struck him again with a shoe. On this Gorachaund gave the deceased a push. The deceased fell. A man whose name witness did not know, came from Sumboo's shop and struck the deceased with his open hand and gave him a kick. The deceased got up and ran to Chandney Choke-bazar, and returned with ten or twelve men, his countrymen, armed with sticks and commenced beating Gorachaund and Tarachaund, also a brother of Sumboo's. There then was a great confusion, and witness could not tell what was going on. Mahdooden's friends had sticks but he had none. They were beating Gorachaund and Tarachaund. Witness supposed that Mahdooden must have said something to them. Witness did not see Tarachaund and Gorachaund beat them in return. They had no sticks in their hand. When the crowd dispersed, witness saw Mahdooden lying on the ground. Tarachaund and Gorachaund were lying in the street, bleeding about their head. The deceased was an up country man, and what Sumboo said could not in any way apply to him. Witness could not tell what induced him to take the matter up. When witness saw Mahdooden lying on the ground, there was a little blood on his head.

Omed, Tarachaund, Gorachaund, and others deposed, and their respective evidences were, with slight differences, much to the effect as that of Gobardhun. In deed, as they appeared to us not calculated to throw additional light on the subject, we have thought proper to omit them; but Omed positively said that he saw nobody beat the deceased. Dr. Bain being called, a second time expressed his opinion, that a fall would occasion the symptoms that led to the death of the deceased.

The jury returned their verdict of "ACCIDENTAL DEATH," and broke up about one o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday the 1st instant.—Hurkaru, September 3, 1838.

SEPTEMBER 18, 1834.

A jury was impannelled by the Coroner yesterday evening, for the purpose of holding an inquest on the body of one Caroline Isaac, who lived at Mullungah, within the Chunnam-gully division. The jury met at 5 o'clock; and proceeded to the police hospital, to inspect the body of the deceased. Dr. Bain was the only witness examined that evening, and deposed to the following effect. He was the police surgeon. The body of the deceased was brought to the police hospital the evening before. He examined it, and found several severe wounds upon the body. Two of them were more severe than the rest. One of the two on the back, which was on the right side of the spinal column, measured five inches and a half, and penetrated into the chest, by dividing the last false rib on the same side, but did no injury to any of the internal organs; and the other was under the left armpit, and measured two inches in length and four in depth, proceeding under the integument, for some distance downwards, and penetrating the chest between the seventh and eighth ribs. The lower lobe of the left lung had a wound in it, which measured two inches in length, two inches and a half in depth, and one inch in breadth. There was a considerable quantity of coagulated blood found in the left cavity of the chest. The doctor was of opinion that the deceased met her death from the above mentioned wounds, and especially the one which penetrated the chest and inflicted a deep and mortal wound upon the left lung. The doctor described also the rest of the wounds minutely. The inquest was then adjourned till 10 o'clock this morning, when, the jury having assembled, several witnesses were called, and the sum total of their evidence was as follows:

The deceased was an unmarried woman and had been in the keeping of a seafaring man of the name of Joseph Rigby, and had a child by him which is living. Rigby left Calcutta in January last, and went on board the Ruby, bound for China, which has since been wrecked, but no intelligence has been received about him. The deceased had ever since that time been residing with her mother and grandmother. The deceased was cousin to the prisoner, Charles D'Cruz, who annoyed her for not complying with some improper desires which he entertained for some time past; so much so that she and her relations, in order to avoid him, removed to the house where this affair took place. Prisoner often came here also, but was never received as a welcome visitor. On Sunday morning he came the last time, when the deceased addressed him thus:—"Why do you come to annoy me? You have once destroyed my things which obliged me to complain against you before the authorities, and I was compelled to quit my house on your account, and yet you will not cease to tease me." The mother of the deceased desired him to go away, and he did so. The mother and the grandmother then went out, leaving the deceased and her child at home. About one o'clock in the afternoon, the landlady, who lived in the same compound, and another of the tenants, heard the deceased cry out, "landlady, landlady, call my mother; Charles has wounded me, and is gone away."

The landlady saw the prisoner near the gate with a large knife (produced in court) in his hand. She went up to him and seized him by the arm, and said she would not let him go away after murdering the woman; when he threatened to strike her with the knife if she did not leave him, and giving her a push, he ran away. The landlady then proceeded to inform the thanadar of the occurrence. The thanadar of the division came, and found the deceased bleeding profusely, and that she was unable to speak; he then procured a palanquin and took her to Ghandy hospital, when the doctor poured some liquid medicine into her mouth, which all fell out, and she instantly after was convulsed a little and expired in the palanquin. The deceased was then removed to the police hospital. The thanadar next proceeded in search of the prisoner, and found him at Puddlopookur, walking along. On seeing him he said, "thanadar, why do you seize me. I have wounded the woman; is she dead or alive?" He said he had thrown the knife into a tank, and pointed the same out to the thanadar, and the knife was found in it the next morning. Prisoner admitted the charge.

The jury, after a short consideration, returned a verdict of "WRFUL MURDER" against the prisoner, who was then committed to take his trial at the next sessions.—Hurkaru, September 19, 1838.

BOMBAY SUPREME COURT.

This being the day appointed for shewing cause upon the rule Nisi for information, lately obtained against Mr. McCallum, the editor of the Gazette; for certain alleged libels on Sir Charles Malcolm, the late superintendent, the Court had more than the usual number of visitors, although there did not appear to be a demonstration of that keen interest which we had anticipated. Upon Mr. Howard applying to make the rule absolute, a discussion ensued on the propriety or necessity of a postponement, in consequence of the Government having intimated only late on Thursday evening, that the defendant might avail himself of the services of Mr. Campbell, the acting Advocate-General, for the permission to do which application had been some time since made. After a discussion of about half an hour, the Advocate-General elected to shew cause immediately, rather than that any postponement should take place. The proceedings commenced with reading an affidavit of Mr. McCallum, in which he stated that one of the papers on which the information was sought to be grounded, had been surreptitiously obtained from him, and by a breach of faith committed by a gentleman of the name of Bone, to whom he had entrusted the letter for perusal only. The affidavit of Mr. McCallum stated in effect, that Mr. Bone came to dine with him at his house, who mentioned to the former that he had heard that a letter was in the possession of Mr. McCallum which related to Sir Charles Malcolm, and Mr. Bone requested to be permitted to inspect the letter and pledged himself solemnly not to shew it to any person. Mr. McCallum stated that previously to acceding to such request he consulted a friend who was present, as to the safety of trusting Mr. Bone with the perusal, and that placing a reliance on Mr. Bone's pledge, he afterwards sent him the letter under seal. As to this part of the case, Mr. McCallum further swore, that he never intended to publish the letter in question. After some days, the defendant stated, he learnt that the letter had got into the possession of Walter Roberts, Esquire, the son-in-law of Sir Charles Malcolm, who had shewn it to the latter. The affidavit went on to say, that the defendant questioned Mr. Bone on the subject, who admitted that he had inadvertently forfeited his pledge. The letter of the defendant to Bone and the reply of the latter were proved as exhibits. In the reply of Bone this person said, that the defendant had permitted him, Bone, to shew it to Mr. Roberts. The affidavit then disclaimed all improper motives, urged that the defendant in publishing the writings in question considered he was exercising a fair right of criticism on the acts of a public functionary, and that the letter having been sent to him, he did not consider himself justified in refusing the publication. The affidavit reiterated that the letter was given to Bone under a solemn pledge not to divulge its contents, and most distinctly denied the intention to aspersion or vilify Sir Charles Malcolm, or to injure him in the opinion of his friends. The above we believe to be the substance of the defendant's affidavit, which was of considerable length.

Mr. Campbell, on the part of the defendant, said he appeared to shew cause against the rule why a criminal information for what he was at a stand to comprehend, should not be directed against the editor his client, but as far as he could collect, it was upon the ground of a letter which had been confidentially entrusted to Bone. This is not an application, said the learned counsel to the ordinary but to the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Court, and this consideration would doubtless weigh with the Court in deciding whether the rules should or not be made absolute; that the court had been led to believe that the letter in question had come to the possession of Sir Charles Malcolm in the ordinary manner, and by a breach of confidence; that the defendant, instead of being the malignant libeller as he was represented, had exhibited himself as the cautious and prudent editor; that the defendant had placed too much confidence in a person who was enjoying his hospitality. The learned counsel then argued, that there was a suppression of facts, in the affidavits on which the rule nisi was granted, which should induce the judges to refuse to make it absolute. He then cited a case in 3rd Burrows, as establishing that when there has been suppression veri the Court would not interfere, and he commented particularly on the affidavit of Sir Charles Malcolm for making no mention of the mode in which the letter had been obtained, although the circumstances must, it was argued, have been within his knowledge. The learned counsel asked, moreover, why the application for an information was not confined to the letter of of censor, which, though severe, he described as within the bounds of justifiable criticism. The learned counsel then cited various passages which had been altered from the manuscript, so as to render them less severe. Mr. Howard in reply, referred to the letter of Bone, set forth in the defendant's affidavit, as establishing that the letter was not surreptitiously obtained, and stated that there was an absence of denial that the paper in question was circulated and of the fact stated by Bone. Sir John Awdly pronounced the judgment of the Court as follows.

"I will not anticipate the trial by observing on the general merits. If there be ill faith, the prosecutor is no party to it; and when he found that aspersions on him were in circulation, he was not to be deprived of his remedy, merely because some one else, through whom they may have reached his knowledge, may have behaved ill. But I do not know that Bone has behaved ill. He asserts in his letter annexed to defendant's affidavit, that he had permission to shew it to Roberts, and when such extraordinary anxiety not to give the other side an opportunity of contradicting defendant is shown, I think I must take Bone's statement to be true. The case in Campbell does not come up to this. There a witness saw it, at his own request, in the possession of one who is not shewn to have had any thing to do with it besides possessing a copy and shewing it. Here, no request of Bone, whose affidavit, of belief that it had been printed and published and was to be procured of defendant, and that therefore he asked for it, is wholly uncontradicted, can prevent the giving it to him to be taken away (if we did not believe him as to Roberts) from being a publication against the prosecutor. And there is much weight in the observation, that it would not have been printed, if it was to be seen only by the editor himself, for the purpose of revision. We therefore think the rule must be absolute generally.—Rule absolute.—Bombay Courier, Sept. 8.

ZILLAH HOOGLY COURT,—FOUZDARY.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1832.

TRIAL OF THE SOI-DISANT PERTAB CHUND—RESPECTING HIS IDENTITY.

(Before E. A. Samuells, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of the Zillah.)

A mookternamah was put in, appointing Messrs. Leith and Morton to act as Counsel for Pertab Chund.

Mr. Samuells, addressing the prisoner, said, that he was arraigned because he, having another name, had falsely, deceitfully, and wickedly, caused himself to be called by the name of the former zemindar of Burdwan, the Maharajah Dheraj Pertab Chund, Bahadoor.

Mr. Leith begged to enquire whether there was any prosecutor? Mr. Samuells replied, Government—I mean as a matter of form, in the same way as in England whenever no private prosecutor chooses to come forward.

Mr. C. Trower, 1st witness, examined by Mr. Samuells.—I was for many years acquainted with Pertab. I went to Burdwan in 1808, as Collector, and remained there until about 1817. Some years I used to see him as often as three or four times a week. It is now 18 years since I saw him, and I have been acquainted with some Europeans whom I certainly did not recognize after 20 years' absence. There were certain peculiarities about Pertab, which might enable me to recognize him. I have seen the picture in the adjoining room. It reminds me very much of him. I think it is rather stoutish. (Pertab then went up, at Mr. Trower's request, near to where that gentleman stood) I do not know this man. There is nothing in his countenance that reminds me of Pertab. If I had met him any where, I certainly should not have mistaken him for Pertab. To the best of my recollection and belief I should say he is not Pertab. I can only swear that I do not think he is. It is a difficult thing to swear that any body is not the man he professes to be. I once met this man at Mr. Prinsep's office, when Messrs. Prinsep, Hutchinson and Pattle and Col. Belcher were present. This was at Mr. Shaw's request. This person wore a beard at that time. A conversation took place regarding what had happened several years before at Burdwan. Mr. Shaw asked if he could point out Mr. Pattle, and the prisoner immediately pointed out Mr. Pattle instead. He was also asked whether Mr. Hutchinson was in the room. Mr. Hutchinson was present but the prisoner said that he was not. He said that he recollected me, but this was after he was made acquainted with the persons of the other gentlemen present. I did then express my opinion that, to the best of my recollection, he was not Pertab Chund.

Cross examined by Mr. Leith.—I met a European, a Mr. Valpy, the other day, whom I had not seen for about 18 years, and I had no recollection of him; but I was not so intimate with him as with Pertab Chund. I think I could recollect European features more readily than native. I mean only that native countenances change sooner. I am not very near-sighted. Age prevents my seeing as well as I did a few years ago; but it is only in reading that I use spectacles. Pertab led a very dissipated life. I must say, however, that the features and shape of the face, especially the eyes of the prisoner, are totally different. I left Burdwan about 18 months before Pertab's alleged death, but I think I saw him afterwards in Calcutta. I do not recollect the year, it might have been 1819 or January 1821. I do not know of my own knowledge where he died. At the interview of which I spoke, the prisoner told me he recollected me, and that I used to play backgammon with him, but I said that this was not the case, but that I used to play chess with him. He mentioned that he recollected Moonshy Ramlochan, a celebrated chess player, who used to be employed by Pertab. The expression (gootes) used for backgammon, signifies "dice." I never played games with dice with Pertab. I have a distinct recollection that I denied at the time having played backgammon, from which I infer that he must have used the term "gootes," and not "sutrung" (chess) or any general word far "to play" or "game." This is the only reason why I think the word must have been "gootes." I think I myself mentioned the name of the Moonshy Ramlochan, when I asked the prisoner about chess. The eyes of the picture in the adjoining room are, I think, very like Pertab's and unlike the prisoner's. As well as I recollect, Pertab's were hazel, and the prisoner's are black. I do not know when the picture was painted and I have no recollection of having ever seen it before. I heard that Chinnery painted a picture of Pertab, but I do not know whether this is that picture. Dr. Halliday was the family Surgeon, and attended him in a dangerous illness. He operated on a large boil on his thigh. Doctor Halliday told me this, and said that this (man the prisoner) was Pertab. Dr. H. is now at Benares. He is a Superintending-Surgeon in the Company's Bengal Medical service. I did not hear of any reports of Pertab being still alive, for some years after the alleged death. I think the first time was during Lord W. Bentinck's administration, when it was said that a person then represented himself to be Pertab. I cannot swear positively to the fact that he is not the man; I can only speak to my own impression that he is not the man. I have had no intercourse with him except during the interview of which I spoke. On that occasion we were in the room about three-quarters of an hour. Mr. Prinsep came on the chief conversation with him. Applications have often been made to me to permit interviews, but I always declined, because I thought that in such a case my character might suffer.

Adjourned at two o'clock, waiting the arrival of the steamer Irrawaddy with the other gentlemen of the Civil Service, subpoenaed as witnesses.

Resumed the proceedings at half past three o'clock.

H. T. Prinsep, Esq., Secretary to Government.—Mr. Prinsep—I am Secretary to the Government of India. I did know Rajah Pertab Chund. I knew him originally about the years 1817 and 1818. I met him again as an old acquaintance in the hot weather of 1819, when I went on a special duty to Burdwan to enquire into the tenures of estates there. I remained three weeks or a month in Burdwan and I saw the Rajah several times. I went a second time and do not recollect whether I saw him again. I certainly have such a recollection of him in my mind as one usually has of a person whom one has not seen for about 19 years or more. I recollect sufficiently to be able to describe his figure. He was a short, small man, with remarkably neat figure, well rounded, with small limbs. I cannot speak to the color of his eyes. I have seen the picture in the adjoining room. I recollect seeing it at Mr. Chinnery's. I thought it then rather like. I cannot say upon seeing it now I should at once have said it was the picture of the Rajah. It gives him a swaggering air which I do not consider natural. He was a man of very good manners. I have no knowledge of the prisoner at the bar, except what I have recently obtained upon his calling on me. I should say that he was not Pertab Chunder. He appears much taller than Pertab Chund. No, I cannot positively speak, but from the recollection I have after so many years. I see he does not answer to that recollection. I cannot say in what month I had an interview with the prisoner at my office, June or July, but it was in 1837. Certainly several things occurred, which made me believe that the prisoner was not the true man. In the first place I asked him myself if he knew Mr. Prinsep; he answered "certainly," and mentioned the occasion on which I went down to Burdwan. I told him that Mr. Prinsep was present, and asked him to point him out. There were also present at the time, Mr. Pattle, Mr. Hutchinson, Colonel Becker and Mr. Trower; however, amongst these gentlemen, he pointed to Mr. Pattle as the Mr. Prinsep who had gone to Burdwan in 1819. I did not correct his error, but turned the conversation to some other thing, and took occasion to ask him if he knew Mr. Hutchinson. He said "of course; he was judge of the district." I said "he too is present," and asked him to point him out. He declined to do so after looking round for some time. I then talked to him of the interview I had with him in 1819, and found that he was wholly at fault, in every circumstance to which I alluded; for instance, I asked him of the interview that I had with him at first, and he mentioned the names of the unlah of the Rajah, at the time, as having taken part in the discussion, whereas in fact there was no body present but Rajah Tej Chund, Rajah Pertab Chund, Mr. Elliott, the Collector, and myself; and I particularly recollect the circumstance from having noticed the care with which the Rajah Tej Chund, then a very old man, went round the room to see if any one was prying or listening.

The interview lasted many hours, in which every part of the Rajah's system of putnee management was discussed with much keenness by the old Rajah, and Pertab Chund frequently interfered and took a part. It seemed strange to me, therefore, that all the circumstances of that meeting should have escaped the recollection of the person representing himself as Rajah Pertab Chund, were he the real Rajah. These are the principal circumstances that tended to convince me that he was an impostor. I do not recollect whether Pertab died in 1820 or 1821. In 1821 I was Secretary to Government in the Persian department. I do not recollect whether Tej Chund reported the death of his son to Government or not; if he did so a letter of condolence would have been sent.

[Witness was here shown, No. 2 English and No. 4 Persian Documents.] I cannot swear to No. 2, as that is only an office copy; but a letter similar to that was sent by me. The Persian letter No. 4 is an original under my signature.

[Witness is shown No. 3.] The signature on this (No. 3) is Lord Hastings's signature and the endorsement is mine. Government were then fully satisfied of the fact of the Rajah Pertab Chund's death. I never heard the death of Rajah Pertab Chund questioned, until the appearance of this man. During the Burmese war in 1824, I went to England, and remained two years.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. It is not merely from inference that I consider this is not the man. My recollection is distinct that the Rajah was a short man and this is a tall man.

I think that picture to be that of a small man. I do not see any resemblance between the picture and the prisoner; but at that time the picture was like Pertab Chund. I have not a sufficient recollection of his features to say whether he had an aquiline nose or not. I recollect he let his hair grow over his shoulders. I received two notes on the subject from Mr. Shaw, requesting an interview with the prisoner. I was seated at that interview as also the rest who were with me. The Rajah was on the left. He volunteered to say that was Mr. Trower coming in to the room when that gentleman entered. He came in with a swaggering air, and was in no ways confused, but like other natives. I heard that he led a gay life. He certainly paid attention to the business on which I came, but not like his father. I have no recollection of the particular word for the game used. The prisoner requested another interview to be given him when he was at the first. I have no direct knowledge of Dr. Halliday's having said any thing of him.

Re-examined by Mr. Samuells.—I have no recollection of having told the prisoner the names of the other gentlemen at all.

Third Witness, Mr. James Pattle, examined by Mr. Samuells.—Mr. Pattle I am senior Member of the Board of Revenue. I have had opportunities of being acquainted with Rajah Pertab Chunder. I came in the year 1813 to Calcutta, and he often paid me visits of ceremony. I can't recollect how many. I have seen the portrait in the room adjoining, and if that be like the Rajah I do not recollect him. To the best of my recollection I never saw it until to-day. The prisoner is the very man I saw at Mr. Prinsep's, but he is very much altered. I have no recollection of ever having seen him before. I have already said that the picture does not resemble the idea which I had formed of Pertab Chunder, and that the prisoner at the bar is much altered from the time when I saw him at Mr. Prinsep's. It is evident, therefore, that my recollection of Pertab Chund is incorrect. I did think at Mr. Prinsep's that the prisoner was not the man who visited me. There is no resemblance between the picture and prisoner. At the interview at Mr. Prinsep's he was asked to point out Mr. Prinsep, and he pointed out me. He could not point out Mr. Hutchinson. Mr. Prinsep also questioned him regarding what passed with him at Burdwan, and Mr. Hutchinson did the same. As far as my recollection goes, the answers did not indicate the knowledge which he ought to have had, had he been Pertab Chunder. I have already said that I have no recollection of his stature, whether he was a tall man or a small man. It is so very long ago, however, since I last saw Pertab himself, that I cannot speak positively. I see no resemblance between the features of the prisoner and the features of the portrait.

Cross-examined by Mr. Leith.—As well as I recollect, the prisoner failed to point out Mr. Hutchinson; but I am not certain. I think when Mr. Trower came in, the prisoner recognized him. I do not recollect what turn the conversation then took. The fact is, that after he mistook me for Mr. Prinsep, we laughed a good deal, not attending much to what passed afterwards. I cannot say whether the real Pertab had an aquiline nose. I thought he had a Grecian nose, but I find the picture gives him an aquiline one.

Fourth Witness, Mr. Hutchinson, examined by the Magistrate, Mr. Samuells.—Mr. Hutchinson—I am a Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and formerly was Judge and Magistrate of Burdwan. I was appointed Judge and Magistrate from August 1821 until January 1826. I had previously acted, for I was formerly 18 months as Additional Registrar and also a Judge and Magistrate.

I have seen the picture in the adjoining room. I have an indistinct recollection of having seen it, previously to the death of Pertab Chunder, in the Rajbari at Burdwan. I do not know if it was considered a good likeness. My recollection of Pertab Chunder is such, that if I were to see him again, I think I could recognize him. I have seen many old Burdwan friends and others whom I have been estranged from for as long a time, and I have had no difficulty in recognizing them. I do not know the prisoner at the bar. To the best of my recollection and belief he is not Pertab Chunder. He appears to be considerably taller and altogether a larger man. I cannot state exactly where the features differ. This appears to me to be altogether a different person. I recollect nearing the death of Pertab Chunder in December 1820 or January 1821. I was then in tents at Cutwa. I presume I did report the death of Pertab Chunder to Government. [No. 1. copy of his report is here shown to and proved by witness.] I presume the Persian letters of condolence were forwarded by me. I believe a khelaut was presented to Rajah Tej Chunder by Government. A suit of heirship between the widows of the Rajah Pertab Chunder and the Ranees Comil Coomaree was decided by me in favour of the widows. I had no doubt of the death of Pertab Chunder nor, so far as I am aware, had any body else. From that time up to the appearance of this man, I had never heard any such doubt expressed. Subsequent to the death of Pertab Chunder, I had frequent interviews with the Rajah Tej Chunder. He never expressed any doubt regarding the death of his son. I had an interview with the prisoner at Mr. Prinsep's office in June last year. Questions were then put to him which, had he been the real man, I think he could not have failed to answer. The result of that interview satisfied me that he was not the man he represented himself to be.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I do not know of my own knowledge that Pertab Chunder died. I did not see him die. My letter of condolence was not founded merely on hearsay, but also on my belief of his death. There was no investigation regarding his death. He died at Calna. I did not consider the announcement of his death sudden. I had heard before of his illness, and though I received the news with regret, yet certainly without astonishment. Cutwa is about 40 or 45 miles from Burdwan. He was taken ill at Burdwan. He was afterwards removed to Calna on the Ganges, as is the custom with Hindoos when very ill. I had probably not seen him for a month before his death. I did not see him during his illness. Doctor John Coulter was his physician. I have known no similar case to this from my own experience. I think that Pertab could not have forgotten the circumstances which we questioned the prisoner upon. I myself have forgot many things; but nothing so prominent. The prisoner appears darker and more haggard and not in such good health as when I saw him at Mr. Prinsep's. I think Pertab had an aquiline nose—it was prominent and, I think, slightly aquiline. I do not think the features of this picture like him. The figure from the chest upwards is like but altogether the expression is too effeminate. I see no resemblance between this picture and the prisoner. I think the height of the picture about that of Pertab Chunder. He was about 5 feet 5 or 5 feet 6. It is the custom of our courts in a case of heirship for the heirs of the parties who have suits in court to file petitions to be allowed to carry on the suits. The death is not disputed, the only question is which is the heir. There were applications from both parties, the widows and the Ranees. I do not know what parties in Burdwan are most likely to be able to speak to the identity of Pertab Chunder. I should think that Porana Baboo must have a knowledge of the real Pertab's identity. I have no knowledge of the present Burdwan family. I have had applications in behalf of Pertab, from Mr. Shaw and Mr. Graham, to allow an interview, but I did not answer Mr. Shaw's note. I had an interview with Mr. Graham, when the subject was discussed. I believe the interview at Mr. Prinsep's was voluntary on the part of the prisoner. I certainly did not invite him.

Re-examined by Mr. Samuells.—Doctor Coulter is dead. I do not know from whom I heard of Pertab's illness. I asked Doctor Coulter as a friend to visit him. I recollect Doctor C. stating during the illness, that he was very ill, but that if left to his sole charge, he might be able to recover him. He said his disease was fever. He seemed to consider him in danger, chiefly from the want of proper medical treatment. I saw doctor Coulter at Burdwan before going to Cutwa.

Adjourned at 7 o'clock in the evening. Mr. Samuells intimated that the proceedings should be resumed on Monday.—Hurk. Sept. 5.

MONDAY, SEPT. 3, 1838.

Mr. Daniel Antonio Overbeck, sworn by the Magistrate.—I am now a resident at Chinsurah. I was formerly a resident or Governor under the Dutch Government from the years 1817 to 1826. [The witness here begged to inquire whether this was a Civil or Criminal court of justice, and who was the party against whom his evidence was required. Mr. Samuells said, that he must be aware this was a criminal court, and that the accused would be presently pointed out to him.] I was acquainted with a person of the name of Pertab Chunder, who came occasionally to see me at Chinsurah. I don't know that I could recognize Pertab, it is so very long ago, about 20 years, since I have seen the man, and the people of this country generally alter very much in a few years. How can I tell who the prisoner is? I don't know him. About 18 months ago, I saw him in the Hooghly Jail, where I met other gentlemen, since that time he has very much altered. I cannot swear, but to the best of my recollection he is not the man who visited me, and I cannot recognize this man as Pertab Chunder. I cannot swear positively one way or the other. I thought that he was not the man at the interview in the Hooghly jail. He looked like a mendicant on whom a new piece of cloth had been put. But I thought too, that he was a little taller, about an inch or an inch and half, and his colour darker. You will please to remember that when I saw the young Rajah he was about 22 years of age, and that man shown me is, I understand, about 40 or more. That makes a great difference. Yes, I did ask him some questions at the interview regarding our former acquaintance. He seemed not to know me, and did not recollect my name. I really do not know if he recollected any former circumstances; I believe not [Mr. Overbeck was now, at his own request, taken to see the portrait in the adjoining room.] I have seen the picture in the adjoining room. I believe the likeness to be that of Pertab Chunder the young Rajah. I never saw the picture when it was finished. I cannot say whether it is like, as it is now 20 years ago. Considering the difference of age, or the picture, there is, I think, an evident likeness between the prisoner and the portrait. The shape of the nose, the eyes, and most of the outlines are alike. I do think the colour of the eyes of the picture and this man at the bar are the same brownish black.

Cross-examined by Mr. Leith.—Of course I am considerably altered myself during these 20 years since I saw Pertab.

I believe I am about 73 years of age. I have been some 53 years in this country. I have seen a great many of the natives, and am familiar with their countenances. The colour of the natives varies very much according to their age, if they are much exposed. The man who assumes the habit of a faqeer and exposes himself, must very much alter in colour. I think the prisoner is considerably altered since 18 months ago when I saw him in jail. There is not much alteration in his colour since I last saw him in jail. The chief residence of the Rajah was at Burdwan. I was not very familiar with the Rajah. I have admonished him however, for his gaities and lax habits of life. Natives do sometimes leave their families for ever; sometimes for a short period, and again return to their families. Sometimes out of disgust—sometimes out of principle they leave their families. I have no knowledge of Pertaub's intimate friends among the zemindars about Chinsurah. I am not acquainted with the family of the Rajah. I do not know whether Taj Chunder married in Prawn Baboo's family before Pertaub's disappearance, of my own knowledge, but from common reports; nor whether Pertaub was on bad terms with Prawn Baboo.

[The witness here inquired whether there would be any objection to his communicating with the prisoner, in order to form a judgment respecting his identity. Mr. Samuella said there would be no objection if the witness thought that any thing could be elicited which would enable him to speak more positively concerning the identity of the prisoner. The answers of the prisoner would not be themselves evidence. Mr. Leith said that there was no objection made by the prisoner. The witness, however, seemed to think that nothing important was likely to result, and Mr. Samuella and Mr. Leith agreed that in that case any thing further would be needless.]

Second witness, Mr. Gregory Herklots, sworn by the Magistrate.—I was lately Sudder Ameen of this district. From 1789 to 1795, I was a writer on the Dutch establishment. In 1807, I entered the British service, and shortly after became assistant to the Commissioner. In 1881 I applied for a Sudder Ameeriship, and the fiscalship of Chinsurah, which I have since held. When the settlement in 1825, was ceded to the British, I continued in office. During my residence at Chinsurah, I have had opportunities of being acquainted with Rajah Pertaub Chunder. I was introduced to him by Mr Forbes, Commissioner, in 1816. Pertaub in 1817 requested me to introduce him to the Dutch Commissioner. Mr. Von Bruan, and I went with him to the Rajbarree. I recollect also attending a nautch given by him at the Rajbarree. I recollect no other times when I met him. Nothing passed except the introduction in state to the Dutch Commissioner.

From these interviews I should suppose, that I would recollect the features and figure of Rajah Pertaub Chunder. I cannot recollect the prisoner. I saw him in the jail. No, he is not Pertaub Chunder. But it is not possible to recollect precisely after 18 or 19 years. The difference is first in complexion, and I think Pertaub was not so tall. In 1836, I saw him in the jail of Hooghly. I did put questions to him, and he did not answer satisfactorily. My impression was that he was not the man. I questioned him about the Rajbarree, and he could give me no information.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. In 1871, I last saw Pertaub Chund. In 1816 I saw him for the first time; afterwards in 1817, I accompanied him to the Dutch Commissioner at Chinsurah. On the second time I had two hours' interview with him, being the longest one, but perhaps two hours also the third time.

I cannot swear positively as to the identity of the Rajah. It is between twenty-two and twenty-five years since I first saw him. I have no precise recollection of his features. I recollect him to have been of fair complexion—very fair. Yes, I should suppose that in one who wanders like a faqeer for 18 years, the complexion might become darker. That may account for the difference of complexion. I do not judge of the colour of the eyes of the features, or any other peculiarities.

Rajah Buddenauth Roy, sworn.—I should prefer being examined in Hindoostanee. I have been 48 years resident in Calcutta. I know Pertaub Chund. I have been acquainted with him. I have seen him twice. My first acquaintance with him was at Mr. John Monckton's office at Calcutta. When the khelats were given, I went along with the Rajah to the Government House in a carriage, four in hand, and I think hired. I was with him about half an hour at Mr. Monckton's, and about 2 or 3 hours at Government house. About 2 o'clock they left the Government House. I returned in my carriage, and he in his own. At a wedding I met him the second time, where he had gone to see the tamasha privately. I never met Rajah Pertaub Chund in my own house. I saw the man who states him-self to be Pertaub Chund in the Hooghly jail, when he was in confinement in 1836. I come to see him. I recollect the face and features of Rajah Pertaub Chund. I might be able to tell if I see him again. By this man's features I cannot recollect him. There is a great difference between the features of this man and the Pertaub Chund whom I knew. I cannot positively swear as to the identity of this man. I have seen him before only in the Hooghly jail about two years ago, in 1836. I think I did question him about the khelat, when I saw him in jail. His answer was; it is so long ago, that I can't recollect about it. I also asked him regarding Colonel Doyle, Military Secretary to the Marquess of Hastings, Captain Alsop, Colonel Gilbert, Captain Fitzclarence and Captain Hurlwaite, who were present at the Government House on that occasion, and he could not tell me any thing about them. I also asked him about one Sujoo Dican Khan whom Pertaub's father used to employ at festivals, which he did not know. Through Cassanauth Mullick, Pertaub sent him two drums. I questioned him respecting a hoondie, he could not answer. From these circumstances I was led to conclude that he was not the Rajah. Respecting the four in hand carriage, I asked him if the horses were black, bay or white. He said red. I said what, scarlet? He said, no horses are of scarlet colour. He also said he received only one elephant from the Government House, as part of his khelat. I asked him how many horses? He said I do not recollect, but I received some horses. He said that he received a jellaur, as part of his khelat, which people of his rank did not receive at that time. I asked him whether it was a male or female elephant? He could not answer that.

Cross-examined by Mr. Leith.—I certainly have met you, Mr. Leith, in the Supreme Court. I was a witness in a case of Rane Seeboo Soondery against Joy Munnee Dossy. The question at issue was, which of the widows had received directions from the Rajah at his decease to adopt a son. The Rajah Sibchunder was my brother. I was a defendant in that case. I entered an answer upon oath. I do not know if I entered every thing in that answer. I swore that the Rajah had given permission to the widow Seeboo Soondery to adopt a son. I gave my evidence verbally upon the issue. I believe I stated the same there as in my answer. My evidence was in favour of Seeboo Soondery. I do not know if the Court did not believe me upon my oath. I know so much that the other party succeeded in her case. The decision of the Court was, that Joy Munnee should adopt Loknauth Mullick's son. I did not file a bill myself to have my own son adopted. No one filed such a bill. I filed a cross bill at the request of Seeboo Soondery. It might have been a strange thing to file such a bill at the request of the other party, but I acted by the advice of my lawyers. The bill was dismissed and I had to pay all the costs.

I was in the Hooghly jail about two Bengallee hours (about 40 minutes) with the prisoner, Rada Kissen Bysack was present (and also W. H. Tydd, and some others whose names I do not recollect. This was in July or August 1866.

Question. You expect the prisoner at the bar to tell you about the colour of the horses 18 years ago, when you can't tell the month only 18 months ago?

Answer. When a man has to speak of any occasion upon which he received honourable distinction, he of course recollects all the circumstances very well. Since that interview in the jail, I have been satisfied that the prisoner is not the man. After the interview at the jail, I met with Mr. Shaw on the Cossipore road. I did not tell Mr. Shaw that this man was the real Pertaub Chund. I did not mention any circumstance relating to the prisoner. The name of the Rajah might have been mentioned, but I did not speak about his rights. I may have said that from his appearance and answers I suspected that he was not the Rajah. I said to Mr. Shaw, there was a great difference between them. I do not recollect that I told Mr. Shaw that he was the real Rajah, but I said that he was a little taller. I did not say that he was the real Rajah. I recollect having had a conversation with Mr. Shaw about the Rajah. One morning, when I went to see Dr. Jackson, I met Mr. Shaw, and again, in my garden house near the gateway. From the difference of the features of the prisoner and the wrong answers to my questions, I said I suspected that he was not the real Rajah. I did not say that the picture resembled the prisoner. I did not say to Mr. Becher that the picture resembled the prisoner. I said there was a great difference in appearance, and that Rajah Pertaub Chund was a strong, large, built man—he had a strong wrist.

[At this time Mr. Becher and Mr. Graham went to measure the height of the picture in order to compare it with the prisoner's, and it fully accorded.]

Fourth Witness, John Becher, Esq., sworn by the Magistrate, deposed.—I am a Merchant residing in Calcutta. I came to India in 1805, retired to England in 1809, and returned again in 1833. I became acquainted during my former residence in India with Rajah Pertaub Chund. I cannot say in what year Mr. Pattle was on circuit in this district. I think he resided at Chinsurah. I should say that I had seen the Rajah very frequently at Mr. Pattle's. He once gave a very large party somewhere hereabouts. I also saw the Rajah several times when he came to Calcutta. Once or twice I went to his house some where about two miles from Hooghly. I should say I have forgotten him. I must explain this by saying, that when I was told that the picture was a correct resemblance, it did not recal his appearance to my memory. [Looking at the prisoner]. No; I do not know him. I saw him at the Supreme Court when, on Mr. Ogilvie's trial, I could not take upon myself to say whether he was the real Pertaub Chund or not. To the best of my recollection I should say that he was a taller man than Pertaub Chund, I do not recollect the colour of Pertaub Chund's eyes. I believe natives' eyes are generally black. The complexion may have been a little fairer or very much like the prisoner. The manners of Pertaub Chund were very gentlemanly, mild and quite.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—The picture in the other room bears a very strong resemblance to the prisoner. Mr. Graham coming into the room and asking me to hold a cord to measure the height of the picture, I did it.

I do find the height of the picture correspond with that of the prisoner.

I saw Rajah Buddinath in the adjoining room. When the Rajah Buddinath and I were discussing about the picture, I said there was a strong resemblance, but he said that there was only a likeness. I do not know of my own knowledge that Pertaub was a gay man. I have heard Pertaub was of a wild disposition. I do not recollect when I last saw Rajah Pertaub Chund.

Re-examined by the Magistrate.—I do not know whether it is usual to hang full length portraits at some distance from the floor. I never saw such a large portrait as this upon the ground. I do not know whether painters and sculptors do or do not increase the height of a figure according to the distance at which it is intended to be suspended from the ground. A figure at a distance from the eye would look smaller than it really is. I cannot say whether, if it is the intention of a painter to suspend his picture at some distance from the ground, it would be necessary for him to paint the figure larger than the natural size, in order to make it appear natural. It is really a very difficult question. I know nothing of painting. If I wished myself to make a figure at a distance from the eye appear of the natural size, I should say that I would make it larger than nature; but I really am at a loss to say, as I know nothing about it.

By the Magistrate at the request of Mr. Morton.—I should say that the effect of distance would be the same upon a natural figure as upon a painted object.

Mr. Samuells here remarked, that there was the same necessity for adjourning the Court as on Saturday, the steamer not having made its appearance with Dwarkanath Tagore and Dr. Strong. The learned Magistrate also remarked, that it now appeared to him, that it was not very material whether those two witnesses were examined at all, as the evidence would probably be of the same inconclusive character as that which had hitherto been given in the case. He wished, therefore, to proceed at once to positive and direct proof of the death of the Rajah Pertaub Chund. This will, we understand be commenced on Thursday, the Court having been adjourned to that day in consequence of a request to that effect from the prisoner's Counsel.

4TH SEPTEMBER, 1838.

We went to the Cutcherry this-morning, as usual, expecting to see Baboo Dwaikanath Tagore and Dr. Strong come up in the steamer; but we were told, that all of a sudden Dwarkanath Tagore had been taken seriously ill with spasms while on his way up the river, the trial will, therefore, not come on before Thursday next.

There was a rumour in the Cutcherry, that Rajah Buddinath Roy, would soon be indicted for gross perjury and prevarication of truth, in the deposition given at the Magistrate's Court yesterday, and of which he had been convicted by the counterstatement of Mr. John Becher, which went to nullify the evidence given by Rajah Buddinath as wholly corrupt and discreditable.—HURKARU, September 6.

6TH SEPTEMBER, 1838.

Radhamohun sircar, sworn on the Ganges water.—I knew Pertaub Chund. I know the circumstances of his illness and death.

Q. State the circumstances of his illness and death.

A. The Maharanees Joy Kumarree employed me as mookhtar at the time of Pertaub's death. On the 20th of Pous 1227, in the early part of the night, the Maharanees went for Shamchand Baboo and myself and said, "the Maharaja Pertaub Chund is very ill at Assaga, take this letter, go directly and deliver it to Tej Chunder. If the young Rajah is better, one of you will remain and send me daily information of what passes, and one will return to me here." We took the letter and started that night for Culna, where we arrived on the evening of the 1st Poos. We gave the letter to the Raja Tej Chunder, and asked how the young Rajah was. He lamented his fate and said, "Why do you ask me, go into that room and judge for yourselves." We went in and saw that the young Rajah was very ill indeed. We then went out and provided a lodging for ourselves in the house below. That night, when about 3, 4 or 5 ghurrees of the night had passed, there was a cry in the Rajabarree that the Rajah Pertaub Chund was going to perform the Gunga Jatra. I got up and saw that Pertaub Chund was in his palkee in front of the Rajabarree, and that there were nearly a thousand people assembled about him. Some were weeping, some were lamenting aloud. They took him to the banks of the Ganges and I followed. When we got there it was very cold, and he was removed into a tent which had previously been pitched. Bimanund Gosain then began to read a part of the parva of Sreemut Bhagabut, and at that time Pertaub Chund indicated by signs the gifts he wished to make in charity, of elephants, horses, grain, &c. About 1 or 10 of the Bengalee night, Bimanund Gosain and Juggut Kobraj said, "there must be no mere delay, let us perform the naturjallee.* The crowd then began to cry, "hurree bol, hurree bol," and the naturjallee having been performed, the Rajah Pertaub Chund almost at that instant expired. They then laid the corpse down on the sand and spread a cloth over it. Busunt Loll Bahoo, Ghaseeram Purbhi, and some one else, whom I do not recollect, went to the Rajabarree to inform the old Rajah Tej Chunder. After a little they returned, and the people of the Ketri caste, brought the things, which, according to their custom, were necessary for the cremation of the corpse. They also prepared a ruthee (a species of hurdle) and laid the corpse upon it, and Ghaseeram Purbhi placed a pindee, (an offering of flour, ghee, &c.) near the body. The corpse was then lifted up and carried about 10 or 15 cubits, where, according to custom, it was laid down, and another pindee was placed beside it. It was then carried 15 or 20 cubits further to the place where the pile had been prepared. The corpse was then laid upon the pile. Another pindee was placed opposite to the face, and Ghaseeram Purbhi applied fire to the mouth of the corpse. Ghee and other combustibles were then flung upon the pile, and it was lighted and burnt till morning, by which time the corpse had turned to ashes. At dawn of day Ghaseeram threw water on the embers to extinguish them, and Juggomohun Doobey, Mohun Baboo, and many others, also brought water and did the same. Juggomohun Doobey then picked out some of the bones of the deceased and placed them in an earthen pot, and took them to the Jumobarree of the Ranee Bisben Kumaree, for the purpose of depositing them there. After sunrise I and the others bathed, and I departed for Burdwan. This is what I know. It was about the 5th or 7th Poos 1227, that the young Rajah got a fever and became ill. On the 10th or 11th he started in the night time for Culna; and on the 21st Poos about 10 or 11 of the Bengalee night, he died. I saw him myself when he was ill at Burdwan. No European Doctor came while I was present. The Hakeem A-gur Alea and the Kohrajes Bimanund Gosain, Juggut Kobraj and Chunder Seekur Kobraj, attended him at Culna. Bimanund Gosain and Juggut Kobraj are dead. What became of the other two, I do not know. I was present from the moment of the death until the corpse was consumed. Every thing passed before my eyes. A white cloth was flung over the corpse after death, and above that was a white shawl. People of the Ketri caste raised him on the pile, but who they were I do not now recollect. The corpse was visible to every one. There was no chest or box made use of, there is no such custom. There were about 25 Ketris round the pile, about 100 or 150 servants of the Rajabarree and from 5 to 6,000 spectators from Culna. At the moment of his death there were present Busunt Loll Bahoo, Mundoo Bahoo, Byjoo Baboo, Gokool Baboo, Sanichund Baboo, Mohun Baboo, Numneelall Baboo, Juggomohun Doobey, Bimanund Gosain, Juggut Kobraj, Chunder Seekur Kobraj, Ramcoomar Nye Bloosum, Jubha Pandit, and many others. There were then also about 3,000 spectators. There were great lamentations among the people at the time of his death, and the news immediately spread among them. The night was very dark and there were in consequence 10 or 12 torches placed round the corpse as it lay. When it was raised upon the pile, the torches were removed to some little distance. I saw the corpse well and I suppose that others could also see it. I do not know by whose order the tent was erected. I found it there when I reached the bank. It was on the top of the bank about twenty cubits from the water. The young Rajah was quite unable to move during the time when I saw him. I heard no report at the time that the Rajah was not dead. I never heard such a report until this defendant made his appearance in 1835. When this false person was seized at Bancourah, I heard that an imposter had assumed the name of the deceased Rajah Pertaub Chund, and I was much astonished. I have frequently been in the Sunjarbarree since Pertaub's death, with the Ranee Kummul Kumaree. In front of the Ranee Kishen Kumaree's jumej (or tomb) is that of the Rajah Pertaub Chund. It is in the shape of a small house with a mound of earth in the centre, covered with a white cloth. Under this mound, the bones are supposed to rest. I was not present when they were deposited. The ceremony of bhug (an offering of fruits and flowers) is performed there daily. Among the Ketris it is the custom ten days after death to perform the kenour; (a shaving ceremony) on the 13th day the Shradddh is performed; on the 17th the dhuimo justee or final ceremony. Goopeeram Purohit and a peadha, whose name I don't know, performed the young Rajah's shradddh. It took place in Burdwan; not in the Rajabarree, but in the Koteebarree. It is the custom of the Ketris, after the first Shradddh, not to perform the second for four years, and then to go on regularly every year. I have in general been present at the yearly shradddhs of Pertaub Chund. (Witness is directed by the Court to look at the defendant.) I do not know who this defendant is; but he is an imposter if he says he is Pertaub Chund. He is not Pertaub Chunder. The Rajah died before my own eyes, and this man who assumes his name is an imposter.

Cross-examined by Mr. Leith.—I was in the service of Rajah Tej Chunder from 1228 to 1239. Since that time I have been in the service of the present Rajah Madab Chund. In 1223, and 1224 I was in the service of Rajah Pertaub Chund, but became ill and left it. In the year 1225-26 and 27, I was in the service of the Ranee Joy Kumaree. Previous to 1228 I was not in service. I was then about 20 or 21 years of age. I was employed by Pertaub Chunder as Tankannuzzee (or account-keeper of the pay) of the nuggies and pepoyes. I was then employed as Mookhtar by the Ranee Joy Kumaree. She had several causes pending in the zillah court of Burdwan. I had a mookhtarnama in all these suits. My mookhtarnamas are not filed in the court because it was not the practice at that time to do so. The Judge certified the mookhtarnama and returned it. Of course there is mention of my mookhtarnamas in the records of all cases in which I was concerned, and many papers, with my signature attached, are held in the civil court. The Judge at that time, in 1227, was, I think, Mr. Hutchinson; but Mr. Martin came first and Mr. Hutchinson afterwards. All numbered cases were conducted through a vukeel; miscellaneous petitions, &c. were presented by himself. The Ranees Joy Kumaree had no particular vukeel; when she had case in court she appointed one for the purpose of conducting it. Kistomohun As, Mounshe Kamurdeen, Oomachurn Mitter and others were the vukeels of the Rajah Tej Chunder during the years 1225-26 and 27. From 1228 to 1230 I was employed as Mohurrir in the Rajbarree. In Magh of the latter year I was appointed Mookhtar for the Devutter Mehals. I have continued in that situation every since. The widows of Pertaub had a suit with the Raja Tej Chunder before Mr. Oakley. I did not give evidence in that case. I have never at any time given evidence in the Hooghly civil court. I did not give evidence before Mr. Hutchinson at Burdwan in a similar case while here. I reside in the Chinsura Rajbarree, my house is at Jumulpore in Burdwan. God or your honour may know how the young Rajah became ill, I do not. I saw him two days after he had been taken ill. He was then lying in bed. His musahib companions, Nundo Baboo, Gokool Baboo, and a great many others, were with him. The Kobraj, whom I before mentioned, were with him. They attended him both in Burdwan and Culna. They were with him when he went to Culna. I do not recollect who accompanied the Rajah to Culna. I did not see his progress to Culna. If I had known that an impostor would start up and that this case would come on, I would have made a note of all these things. How can I recollect their now. I saw the Rajah leave Burdwan in a palkee. About three or four ghurries of the night had then passed. I was not at that time Pertaub's servant, but the Ranees's servant. I cannot recollect who accompanied him. I recollect well what occurred at Culna. I have described it all above. No one accompanied me to Culna except my bearers and servants, and Shamchand Baboo. Shamchand is not one of Puraun Baboo's sons, that is another Shamchand. The one I mean is the brother of the Ranees Joy Kumaree. He is still alive. I have heard that he is coming to Hooghly to give evidence, but where he is now I do not know. I was not always with Shamchand Baboo, at Culna. He is a Ketri, I am a Kayoth. Shamchand was with me at the interview with the old Rajah. There were a great many people present, but who they were I cannot now say. I think Juggur Kobraj and Brimanund Gosain, were present, but I cannot speak positively. I did not see Puraun Baboo at Culna. I did not see him during the time that I was there. I do not know whether he was there or not. Rajah Tej Chunder went to Culna on the same day as Pertaub Chund. I have heard that he accompanied him. On entering Pertaub Chund's room at Culna, I saw a great many servants, but who were there and who were not, I cannot now recollect. I do not recollect any one except the Kobrajes. Nundo Baboo was in Umbooa (Culna), but whether he was in the room or not I can't say, I can't say whether Gocool Baboo was there, nor do I recollect if Gopal Baboo was present. I did not see the latter at the death or at the pile. Of Pertaub's near relations Busunt Baboo and Munnellal Baboo were present at his death. Busunt Lal's brother married the Rajah Tej Chunder's sister. Tej Chunder had one son and a sister. I have mentioned what became of both. I do not know what remote relations he may have, I have not examined his genealogy; had I known this case would have come on, I should have consulted it. Rajah Pertaub Chund had two wives, Pearee Kumaree and Anund Kumaree. I do not know if he had a maternal aunt. His paternal aunt, Tota Kumaree, is alive. She did not accompany him to Culna. Munnellal is a Ketri and lives in Burdwan. He is a merchant and also has service in the Rajbarree. He was in Tej Chunder's service, but took the part of the Bahadurees (Pertaub's widows) and was dismissed. He was afterwards restored and now holds the Dewanny of the Bissumpore Estate.

* This consists in laying the body on the sand with the feet pressed down in the water, and repeating the name of God in the ear, in order that the soul may escape through the feet into the sacred river.

I do not recollect the names of any respectable people beyond those I have mentioned. I do not know the respectable people of Culna. I am not a resident of that town and was only there a single day. It is the custom in the Burdwan family that the heir when he has not attained to the possession of the estates and the dignity of the Raj, shall apply the fire to the face of the corpse himself; but when he has become possessor of the Raj, the Pandit (or family priest) performs that office. (The witness did not express himself here very clearly, and there was some confusion in translating the sentence which afterwards led to irrelevant questions being put.) At the time of his death, Pertaub Chund was in possession of the zemindary, every thing was done in his name, and the estate was entered in his name on the collector's books. After the death of Pertaub Chund, one or two Bengalee ghurries had elapsed before the fire was applied to his face. I was 7 or 8 cubits from the spot when Pertaub Chunder died. Juggomohun Doobey had hold of his legs, but who supported him I do not recollect. I cannot recollect whether one or more lifted him up. Busunt Baboo, Nundo Baboo, Gokool Baboo, Mohun Baboo and Juggomohun Doobey, were there, when he was carried out from the tent, but what part each took I do not recollect. When the unturjeltee was to be performed, he was lifted up, cot and all, and carried down to the river's bank. When the ceremony was performed he was lying on the cot, but at the moment of his death he was lifted off. His old clothes were taken off and new clothes were put on after his death. These were not again removed. I don't know who bought the clothes not the sandal wood, probably some of the servants. I do not now recollect whether the Ketri, the Purhoit,* or Juggomohun Doobey put the cloth on. When the cloth was put on, or a little after, the corpse was lifted on the pile, water was sprinkled, the pindees placed below the face, and fire applied. When on the pile the cloth was only up to the shoulders of the corpse, the head and neck were exposed. The face was covered while they were taking it towards the pile. I don't know myself but I have heard the pile was composed of Babool, Samal and other woods. I left Burdwan nine days after Pertaub Chund. There is the greatest difference between this defendant and the Maha Rajah Pertaub Chunder. The Rajah was like King Viceramadiya, this man like Beekar Harree.† This man's eyes are smaller, his stature taller, his colour darker, his feet much larger, his arms longer, and the eyes do not correspond. Altogether there is not the least resemblance. I have seen the picture, it is like the Rajah. I do not recollect any servant of the name of Aja Abbas. When I left Culna I heard that the Rajah would follow immediately. I know nothing about a wife of Pertaub Chunder's. Pertaub was in his senses when he went to Culna.

Re-examined by the Magistrate.

I was only a few minutes in Pertaub's room at Culna. I was employed in looking at him and not in learning the names of the people present at the death and at the pile. I was attending to what was going on, and I did not employ myself in observing who were present or who were absent. (At the close of the proceedings, the Magistrate intimated that the court would sit next day at nine o'clock.) — Hurrkuru, Sept 10.

* Purhoit — family priest.

† Beekar Harree a generic term designating a lawless caste. An expression of supreme contempt for the person to whom it is applied.

7TH SEPT. 1838.

BHAGNUT LALL BABOO, signs the usual hulqnama. I am 65 years old.

Q.—Did you know Rajah Pertaub Chund?

A.—Yes I did. I am acquainted with the circumstances relating to his death. In 1227 B. S. 11th Poo-e, when he went away to Ambhoa (Culna) I was in Calcutta. A hukaru came and informed me that the Rajah had been taken ill on the 11th, and had gone to Culna, and that his father had gone with him. On the 14th, I arrived at Chinsurah. On the 15th, I went to Ambhoa and saw that Pertaub Chund was very ill at that time. I had no conversation with him; he was laid up in the hall. I went to his father, who was in another house near at hand. I observed that Pertaub was very ill and asked what he was doing for his relief. He replied that Asgur Ah, hukim, Brimanund Gossain, and Juggut Kobraj, were attending him.

I then went to my lodgings and bathed. I went and saw Pertaub every morning. I asked him and he told me that he had a fever, and I saw that he was daily getting worse. I asked the doctors who told me that they did not observe any favourable symptoms. On the 21st Poo-e in the morning, the hukims said that there were no hopes of his recovery. On hearing this I informed his father of it, when he began to weep, and said that they had better remove him to the river side. I then made preparations for taking him down. In making these preparations four or five ghurries of the night had passed. The bed on which he was lying could not be brought down on account of the winding nature of the stairs, and he was therefore carried down upon the mattress and put into the palankeen. He had only sufficient strength to call on the name of his takoor. We brought him down to the banks of the river; the bed was then brought and he was placed upon it. He began to shiver from the cold and was consequently taken up and placed in a tent. The tent was pitched twenty or twenty five cubits from the water. Tej Chunder had ordered the tent to be pitched, and Brimannun Gossain then went to the tent and began to read the chapters. About a quarter of an hour after he was again taken to the river side, for the purpose of performing the unturjallee. They lifted him up, lying on the bed as he was, and took him down on the bed to the water, where the priest performed the last ceremony. When the unturjallee was being performed, he was lying on the mattress, which had been lifted off the bed. About three quarters of an hour after the performance of the unturjallee he died, repeating the name of his God, according to custom. Juggomohun Doobey and Mohun Baboo were placed near the corpse with their hands resting upon it.

After Pertaub's death I took Ghassayram Purhoit with me and went to Rajah Tej Chunder and asked him how the ceremony was to be performed. Tej Chunder ordered Ghassayram to perform all the necessary rites. I accordingly returned with Ghassayram Purhoit to the place where the corpse was lying, and ordered Sahib Ram Burjal and Bhankiseen Podar, to get sandal wood, &c. and sent a man to call all the Ketties in the neighbourhood. I ordered the servants also to procure two bamboos and ropes, one ghurrat and one piece of cloth, and other materials required, which were all brought along with the sandal wood and bablah wood, which latter only can be got at Culna for burning corpses. The Ketties then prepared a ruthee; the corpse was bathed, a piece of cloth was given to the Purhoit, a piece wrapt round the loins of the corpse, and another spread over the ruthee. The corpse was then laid out at full length upon the top of his ruthee, a sheet was then hung over the corpse, and Ghassayram Purhoit prepared pindies of flour and placed it beside his head. Four people lifted up the ruthee and carried it about fifteen paces, when it was put down according to custom. A kulsee of water was then poured upon the corpse by Ghassayram; the body was then washed in the river and placed on the pile called chetah; when another pindie was made and the face of the corpse being uncovered it was laid beside it. A roll of grass was made up, Ghassayram placed fire within it, applied it to the mouth of the corpse, and then set fire to the pile on all four sides, and it then began to blaze, and by day-break the whole was burned to ashes. Ghassayram then put out the fire, Juggomohun Doobey chose some bones from amongst those on the pile, and placing them in an earthen pot, took them the Sumajbaries for the purpose of depositing them there.

After placing the ashes in the pot, I and the other Ketties bathed in the river, and I went to the Rajbary; and on arriving there, I took my things and went down to Calcutta. I heard that Rajah Tej Chunder had returned to Burdwan that night at about twelve o'clock. I was present during the whole time of the death and funeral ceremony, except when I went to give his father the intimation of his death. At the time of his death the night was dark, but there were musals placed immediately around the corpse.

About the time of his death, there were a great many people present, perhaps 3,000.

Q.—There may have been present about ten or twenty Ketties and about forty or fifty servants of the Rajbary. When the corpse was upon the pile and the face uncovered, every one present could plainly see the features of the deceased from the light on the torches around. The pile was below upon the sand, about six or seven cubits from the water, and the spectators were some below and others on the bank above. In the Burdwan family, if the heir is in possession of the states of the Raj, he does not apply the fire, but the family priest, the Purhoit. In the end of 1225, two years before his death, Pertaub took possession of the Rajahship and the collectory tahoods were all was signed by him from that period. His father made over the estates to Pertaub, and I supposed may have informed Government of the same. I have never been in the Sumajbarree where Pertaub's bones are. I have been in the new Sumajbarree of Rajah Tej Chunder once. I do not know, therefore, of my own knowledge, what became of the bones after they entered the Sumajbarree. I have not been present at any shrudh of Pertaub's since his death. I know nothing of my own knowledge about the illness of the Rajah of Burdwan or of the journey to Culna. My elder brother married Rajah Tej Chunder's sister, and Pertaub was my brother's nephew. This is my connexion with him. About Pertaub's death I never heard a doubt expressed. I don't no who this defendant is. I once saw him at Bankoorah in the Magistrate's Court, but he then wore a beard. This defendant is not my brother's nephew, Rajah Pertaub Chund. How can it be when I saw Pertaub dead and burned?

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—My house is now in Burdwan. I live in my own house, but have business at the Rajbary and go there frequently. When Mehals become khas under Regulation VIII., the papers of these mehals remain with me. Porann Baboo makes the arrangements for letting the mehals, but papers in all these cases remain with me and are attested by me. This is my business in the Rajbary. Whenever I am ordered to do any other business connected with the estates, I do it. I am not Porann Baboo's servant. I receive no salary from the Rajah. I am paid by the Maharanes. My grand daughter has married Porann's son, Tarrachund Baboo, and his son has married Poraun Baboo's daughter, since deceased. She has left one son and two daughters. During my whole life time I have lived at Burdwan. I came to Chinsurah by water, hired bearers, and then proceeded to Culna in a palkee.

Pertaub was lying on a bed when I saw him. Whether that was a regular bed-room I can't say. I know Radamohun sirdar, he was at Ambhoa when the prisoner was arrested there. He is a mookier. I cannot recollect whether I saw Radamohun in Pertaub Chunder's sick room, but I recollect seeing him on the bank of the river. I do not know whether the Hakeem is dead or not, but the Coberajes are all dead.

Pertaub I heard left Burdwan on the night of the 11th, and I know that he died on the 21st Pouse. He died on the 4th day, after my arrival at Culna.

There was no will left by Pertaub Chund, at least I know of none. Rajah Tej Chunder left a will. There was a near relationship existing between Tej Chunder and Poraun Baboo. There was no quarrel between Pertaub Chund and Poraun Baboo. After the death of Pertaub Chunder there was a quarrel between Poraun Baboo and the Ranees; but now there is amity existing in the family. In the life time of Tej Chunder the quarrel was made up, by some mutual agreement between the Ranees and Tej Chunder. I was present at the time when the body was taken to the water, and assisted with others in administering the unturgollee. His feet were at the time, of his death, in the water.

Juggamohun Doobey and Mohun Baboo had their hands on the corpse from the moment of death to the dressing of the body, six or seven Bengalee ghurries.

The face was covered until the pindee was placed beside it. It was also uncovered on the pile. Between the death and burning about a phur and nine gurries might have elapsed. Ghassy Purhoit is dead. Ghassy was the principal person. The pile was formed by propping up small banks of earth, placing logs across, and heaping on the wood above. The height was about a cubit and a half from the ground. I have never seen a suttee performed, and I never heard of a widow escaping from a suttee pile.

Q.—Could not the Purhoit have assisted Pertaub in escaping from the pile?

A.—If the Purhoit could raise dead men from the pile why did he not begin with his own father. It was impossible for the Purhoit to have smuggled him off, had he been alive. I was present at the death of Rajah Tej Chunder. His adopted son Madob Chunder put the fire to his mouth. Madob Chunder was not in possession of any portion of the estates at the time of Tej Chunder's death.

Q.—Who was Pertaub Chunder's heir.

A.—His father inherited the property.

Q.—Have not the widows of Pertaub a better claim to the property left by him?

A.—Whether the widows have a prior right to the father, is laid down in the shastras; but I do not know the law.

Q.—Why did not the Ranees apply the fire?

A.—The Ranees of Pertaub were at Burdwan and he at Culna, how could they apply fire? Sometimes the wives of Hindoos go, and some time they do not, when the husband is taken to the Ganges. I cannot say if Poraun Baboo went.

Q.—It is the custom of the Ketries, that if the wife be present she must apply the fire, but what the custom of the Burdwan family is, I do not know.

The funeral pile was burning from two ghurries after midnight until day-break. I was present all the time. I assisted in putting out the fire and I came away. I had no sleep all night. I went to Calcutta next morning. It was dark and not moon-light. I know Gooroo Dass Mookerjee; he was a Dewan of Pertaub's. I heard that he is dead. He was not present at the death of Pertaub. I know the names of several of Pertaub's servants. Munni Lull Baboo, Mundho Lall Baboo, Rada Soroop Chalah, Annoop Sing Jemadar, and Mohun Baboo. I do not know Aga Abass as his servant. I have never heard of his name. Nitto Baboo was my elder brother and was a servant of Pertaub Chunder's. He is dead.

I do not know whether Surajeen, sirdar bearer, was Pertaub's servant or not. Dhun Kist Podar was a servant but he also is dead.

Bhugabut khansamah was a servant, and is dead. I do not know if Meelamee coachman, was a servant or not, nor do I recollect of Koonjoomohun Ghose. I came to Calcutta to receive some money from Cassy Mullick, interests due on Company's paper. I had been in Calcutta, 14 or 15 days when I heard of Pertaub's illness; he was not ill when I left Burdwan.

I have seen the portrait of the Rajah Pertaub Chund: it is like him. There was, and sandalwood in the pile as I stated before. At about 4 or 5 ghurries of the night, the body was removed from the Rajbarree to the river.

Besides the names given by me already, I do not know of any others as his aid-de-camps.

I do not know any friend of his of the name of Praun Kisto Holder, neither do I remember Ramdhone Bonnerjee. He has a house at Burdwan which he rents to gentlemen.

2d. Witness. Sworn by the Lokree-theenamah.—I am Chand Baboo. I knew the Rajah Pertaub Chund, son of Maharajah Tej Chund. I am acquainted with the circumstances of his sickness and death. In the year 1227, on the 5th of Pouse, he was taken ill with a fever and ague about the 10th or 11th of that month; he went from Burdwan to Ambhoa, for the purpose of performing the Gunga Juttra. After his departure my younger brother, Gocool Chunder Baboo, followed him to Ambhoa. Every day information of his illness was sent to Joy Kommarée. On the 20th Pouse the Ranees Joy Kommarée sent for me and Radamohun, sirdar, and said that she had received bad accounts of Pertaub's illness, and desired us to go to Ambhoa. We left Burdwan when two ghurries of the day remained, and arrived at Ambhoa in the evening of the next day. On our arrival I gave the letter to Radamohun, sirdar, to deliver to Maharajah Tej Chunder, and I went along with him. I asked the Maharajah how the young Rajah was, on which Tej Chunder beat his forehead and said, you may go and judge for yourselves. I and Radamohun then went and saw Pertaub lying on a couch sick. After a short while we went to our respective lodgings. About two guntas of the night, there was a cry heard that the Maharajah was very ill and was being carried to the river side. Hearing this, without eating went out and saw that the palankeen of the Rajah Pertaub had come out upon the road, and that there was a great concourse of people. We went and the palkee was put down near a tank at the ghaut, called the Supka ghaut. He was lifted out of the palkee and placed upon a cot; and as he appeared to feel cold he was taken up and put into a tent. There, being unable to speak, he indicated by signs, what elephants, horses and grain he wished to give away in charity. Bumanun Gossain began to read the Puran of Sreemut Bhagabut. When night had far advanced, the Rajah became more unwell; on which all of us took hold of the bed and took him to the river side for the purpose of performing the unterjallee. In his last moments he was lifted from the cot and placed upon a matras upon the ground, and then we administered the unterjallee, Juggomohun Doobey having hold of his feet. When about ten dundas of the night had passed, life left him.

After this Bussunt Lall Baboo and somebody, whom I don't recollect, went to inform the Rajah Tej Chunder, and shortly after returned to the corpse. Bussunt Lall Baboo then told Ghassy Purhoit to perform the ceremonies of the dead. As is usual with the Ketries the wood and other articles were brought. Cloth, shawl, wood, &c. Ghassyram Purhoit took a piece of cloth to cover the corpse. Another piece was spread in the ruthee as is customary with the Ketries; what remained of the cloth was torn up in order to dress the corpse. After this Ghassyram Purhoit brought a kulsee of water and washed the corpse of the Maharajah.

After this the corpse was dressed in the cloth which had been torn for that purpose, and then laid upon the ruthee. Then Ghassyram Purhoit made a pindee and spread a shawl and covered the corpse. The ruthee was then lifted up, and carried some little distance, about 10 or 12 cubits, where it was laid down, and another pindee was prepared. Then the ruthee was again taken up and, according to custom, it was, with the corpse upon it laid in the river and bathed.

All the ropes which fastened the corpse to the ruthee were untied, and the corpse was placed on the pile on which sandal-wood was then heaped.

The shawl was taken away, and the rest of the clothes remained on the corpse. Ghassyram Purhoit then placed another pindee on the pile and put ghee upon the face and then applied fire to the mouth and set fire to the pile. The corpse began to burn. We all sat near lamenting, and the corpse continued to burn till morning. Ghassyram Purhoit then brought a kulsee of water and poured it on the fire. Juggomohun Doobey and others also brought water and threw it on the embers. Juggomohun Doobey took some of the bones and ashes in a pot, and took them to the Sumajbarree near Bissen Kumaree's Sumaj. Then we bathed and I went to our lodgings. On the 22d Pous, about three or four dundas of the day, I and Radamohun returned to Burdwan—Radamohun preceded and I followed. I was about two or three minutes in the room of Pertaub. Bemanun Goossain and my brother Gocool Baboo, Annuadah Baboo and several of the Rajah's servants and a Mussulman were in the room when I was there. When Bussunt Baboo went to give information to the Rajah Tej Chunder of his son's death, Mohun Baboo and Juggomohun Doobey remained with their hands upon the corpse. This is the custom of all Hindoos and particularly of the Ketries. Mohun Baboo and Juggomohun Doobey placed their hands on the corpse, and I and others remained sitting about five or six cubits off.

The Ketries prepared the ruthee. Juggomohun Doobey, Gocool Baboo, Bhyrub Baboo and Mohun Baboo took up the corpse and laid it on the ruthee. I did not then touch the corpse. When the corpse was carried away, I assisted in carrying it. We all assisted in placing the corpse on the pile. When placed upon the ruthee, the face of the corpse was covered, but when it was placed on the pile, the face was uncovered.

When the pile was fired the face of the corpse uncovered. The night was dark, but mussals were placed all round the body. About three or 4,000 persons were present both above and below the banks of the river. The pile of fire was erected below, on the sand, about three or four cubits from the water's edge and about 25 or 30 cubits from the bank.

When the pile was fired all present could plainly see the corpse. I continued to see the corpse until it was entirely consumed. I could see the corpse the whole of the time. The crowd on the bank above could also see it.

When the pile was first fired, I was near, but afterwards I went to a distance of about fifteen cubits.

On the north side of the pile, the river was situated and there torch-bearers were standing in the water. On the south, east and west the crowd were standing.

I did not go with Juggomohun Doobey to the Sumajbarree.

When I go to Ambooa I see the Sumajbarree, but I have never been inside of it. I did not see with my own eyes the bones separated in the Sumajbarree. The custom of the Rajbarree of Burdwan is, that until the heir attains the Rajship he may put fire upon the mouth of the deceased; but as soon as he inherits the Rajship he cannot apply fire to the mouth of the dead, but the Purhoit or priest applies it. Rajah Pertaub Chund, when he died, was in possession of the Guddee of Burdwan. The adopted son of Tej Chunder applied fire to his mouth at his death.

Madab Chunder, the present Rajah, did not attain to the Rajship at the death of Tej Chunder.

Some discussion here arose about the exact meaning of the witness. It was finally explained to be this: that if the heir of the deceased is not at the time of the funeral ceremonies in possession of the Raj, then it his province to apply the fire; but if the heir does obtain possession of the Raj by the demise of the deceased, then it is applied by the Purhoit or family priest.

If Pertaub Chund had at the time of Tej Chund's funeral ceremonies been put in possession of the estate, then a Purhoit would have performed the ceremonies. I do not know this defendant. I have seen him once in the Jungle Mehals, but never elsewhere. He then wore a beard. This is not the Pertaub Chund whose corpse I burned. This is an imposter.

Cross examined by Mr. Morton.—My son married Poraun Baboo's daughter. His name is Ross Behary and he has no children. I live at Burdwan. My house is there. I am now living in the house of a Muhant at Chinsurah. I do go to the Rajbarree at Chinsurah. I am a darogah of the Takoorbarree of the small Deewry. I do not receive any salary from Poraun Baboo, but I get one from the Rajah. I have seen Radamohun sircar at Chinsurah. I did not consult with Radamohun sircar what deposition to give. What I have seen about the ceremonies of the dead that I have told. Three pindees in the whole were offered. I made no memorandum of any of these circumstances at the time. It was the funeral of a man of great distinction, therefore I recollect all the circumstances of it.

There was mention made about Pertaub's death in the case of the Ranees. There was an evidence taken regarding the particulars of Pertaub's death. I never heard any doubt of Pertaub's death. The Maharajah Tej Chunder would often make allusion to Pertaub's death, and therefore I recollect dates and other circumstances.

The Maharajah never wrote down anything of the ceremonies at Pertaub's death, but these I saw and remember well. I also was present at the death of Tej Chunder, and can relate all the circumstances of his death. I cannot recollect the year, month, or date of his death.

I have been present at the funeral of other Ketrises. I cannot recollect how many. I recollect some circumstances relating to the ceremonies of some of the Ketrises.

Every thing which took place at Pertaub's funeral was according to the custom of the Ketrises. There was nothing unusual at Pertaub's funeral. Why should there be? Ranev Bissen Kunnmarce was not present. I was a child when she died. I was very young. I am now about 53 years old. There was no sign made by Pertaub Chund when he was placed in the tent. Bumanun Gosain and Mahun Baboo placed his hands on the furniture of the horses and elephants before they were given away. Rajah Pertaub Chund died while every one was performing the unturjalee I was with him. He shivered and made signs that he was feeling cold.

The cloth was over the body for about 6 or 7 ghurries. There were 9 or 10 ghurries between the death and burning. In the neighbourhood of the pile the bank was sloped down. The pile was about two cubits high. Tej Chunder did not see the dead body of Rajah Pertaub. The pile was kept burning ten or eleven ghurries, until morning. Radanot un Sagar was with me all the while at Ambua (Culna). Juggomohun Doobee is a Brahmin. The Brahmins are not defiled by touching the corpse of a Ketrise. It is usual for the Brahmins to touch the body above the knee. Gynajn Padia was the Purhoit's deputy—he is dead. Ghasseram was the deputy of Numeeloll Purhoit. Munnoo Lal was old and weak, and did not come at the death of Pertaub Chund. There was no blood relation present. The old Maharahjah was the only near relation who accompanied him. When Maharahjah Tej Chunder went to Ombekah, Rankunt Ghose, Sahid Ram Buttal and a number of servants and others accompanied him. I do not know whether the Maharahjah was accompanied by any one returning to Burdwan. If the Raj was not possessed by Tej Chund, the fire would still have been put into his mouth by the Purhoit. I had two brothers and they have all died but myself. I had a brother named Kistno Chunder; he was employed on the Khasa Mehals; he is now dead. Kistno Chunder and I had a quarrel, and I do not know what became of him or where he went. A short time ago, I heard that he had been with the prisoner at Hooghly and that he was dead. I never heard Kistno Chunder say that the prisoner was the real Pertaub. I had no correspondence with Kistno Chunder. I met the prisoner at Bankomah, but had no conversation with him. My other brother's name is Gocool Chund. I do not recollect whether Aga Abas was a servant of Pertaub. I see the Aga. I do not know him.

[Witness is here shown a sumnad purporting to be a discharge from the service of Pertaub Chunder, bearing date May 1227, with an illegible seal and no signature.]

There is a great difference between Pertaub Chunder and the prisoner. There is a difference in every thing, in the eyes, in the colour, the stature, and the teeth. Pertaub's nose was large and long. It was not like the prisoner's, it was a handsome nose. The picture in the next room is very like the Rajah Pertaub Chund. In Burdwan every body was the Rajah's servant; what he had in other places I do not know. Those estates which Poraun Baboo had at the death of the Maha Raja, he still has. He obtained none since.

Mr. Morton mentioned that it might perhaps tend to shorten the case, if he was allowed to inform the Magistrate that it was no part of the case for the defence to attempt to disprove the particular circumstances and ceremonies which took place before and after the alleged death, and that the only questions in fact were, whether Pertaub Chund actually died and whether it was his body (if any body at all) that was burnt.

Mr. Samuells said, that he should proceed in examining the other witnesses, and should confine himself to three points, of the actual illness, death and burning.

The Magistrate ordered that the nazir should be fined 20 rupees on account of the absence of all the witnesses, who, it appears, had left the court at about 4 o'clock, P. M. this-day, thinking they would not be called.

The Magistrate cautioned the nazir, stating that if he did not upon the next occasion produce the witnesses when they were called, he would most surely dismiss him, as there appeared to be a wanton neglect on his part.

Mr. Morton was understood to ask the Magistrate whether he had any objection to inform him what name the prisoner was alleged to have, as the charge stated him to have another name.

The Magistrate said, that he must decline doing so, at present, until the witnesses to the prisoner's identity were actually present.—Hurk, Sept. 12

8TH SEPTEMBER 1838.

Mahun Lall Baboo, sworn.—I am darogah of the elephant establishment. I knew the Rajah Pertaub Chund. I was his servant. I was always with him. I know of his illness in 1227. He was taken ill with fever on the 5th Poon, at times extremely cold, at others so hot that it leaves of the castor oil tree, when applied to the body, became dry. The fever and ague continued, and Asgur Ali, Bumanun Gosain and Juggut Kobraj, who attended him, felt his pulse and said, on the 11th, that there was no more hope of life and that he must perform the Gunga Jatra. I was present during his illness. I do swear before God, the magistrate, and all present, that I am quite sure that the Maharahjah was exceedingly ill and that there was no deception in his illness. He was not able to walk without assistance, and when he got up for a necessary purpose, two men were obliged to support him. When he was lying in the hall called burahdwara, the English Doctor of the station visited him and said that leeches must be applied to his temples and the back of his head. The Maharahjah Tej Chunder made objections to apply the leeches, as he considered the young Rajah too weak. I went to Ambua with the Maharahjah Pertaub Chund, and was present with him during the whole time of his sickness. His illness daily increased at Ambua. He was taken to perform the Gunga Jatra on the 21st Poon 1227. His speech was quite incoherent, and he was exceedingly weak. I was present at the performance of the unturjalee, and held him myself on one side. When the unturjalee was being administered, he was alive, and shortly afterwards expired, repeating the name of his God, the people shouting horae bole. I held him by the great toes and kept him in the water touching the ground during the performance of the unturjalee. I am quite certain that he died, and there was no deception in the matter. After the death we threw a cloth over the corpse, and Juggomohun Doobee kept his hands on the corpse for 5 or 6 dundas (about 20 minutes). The body of the corpse became quite cold while our hands rested upon it. After this we burnt the corpse. When the corpse was on the burning pile, there was no cloth upon the face. According to custom the Purhoit applied fire to the mouth. I stood from the corpse about 8 or 10 cubits distance. The face of the corpse was plainly visible when the Purhoit applied the fire, and I saw it distinctly. When the Purhoit applied the fire, the skin of the corpse was burnt by the application. The Purhoit applied the fire three times in the face and went round the corpse three times, and at the third time the pile was fired. I continued to see the corpse until it was entirely consumed. I was one of those who, along with Juggomohun Doobee, and two or three Ketrises, (out of the 20 or 25 present) who raised the body on the funeral pile. He was lifted off the ruthee and put upon the pile. I have lifted a great many corpses upon piles. The body of a dead man when lifted up is like a log of wood, but that of a living man is quite different, for his joints and limbs move, and are supple. I must always be perfectly aware of the difference between a corpse and a living man and no deception could be practised upon me in that matter. The pile was raised from the ground about two cubits and a quarter. It had wood on all four sides of the pile; between that wood and the ground the space was not more than a span. It was quite impossible that any person should make his escape from below the pile. The pile was about five or seven cubits from the water. No person was standing between the pile and the water when the corpse was burning. On the other three sides there were Ketrises and relatives, and above, an innumerable assemblage of people. When the pile was lighted, every one could see the corpse, for about 20 or 25 cubits. The light of the pile was cast to a great distance on the water. The people above on the banks, could also have a full view of the water in the river. If any one had attempted to fly from the pile towards the river or elsewhere, we and the people on the banks must certainly have seen it. I don't know the prisoner now shown to me. I have never at any time before seen him. If Rajah Pertaub Chund were to come now before me, I could easily recognize him. His image is imprinted on my heart and in my eyes. The prisoner is not the Rajah.

The witness here made use of a very strong oath.

The difference between this man and Rajah Pertaub Chund, is like that between a slave and an emperor. I can see no resemblance between them in the eyes, nose or any other features.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I was the darogah of the Rajah Pertaub Chund's cook house. I received ten rupees wages. It was my duty to see weighed out all the ingredients for the pollow, kulleah, &c. &c. The Brahmins cooked, and I caused any dishes that were called for to be brought before the Rajah. I have been darogah of the elephant establishment about seven years. Before this I was a darogah of the temple called the Suo-mundee or hundred temples at Burdwan. I now receive ten rupees a month from the Rajah's treasury. I and my ancestors have been always called Baboo. I remained with the Rajah Pertaub Chund day and night during his sickness. When he wanted rice or water I supplied him. I never felt his pulse. I sometimes applied the leaves of the castor-oil tree to his body and often times some other servant did it. I have never learnt the business of a hakim. I knew Bahadur Sing; he was a companion of Pertaub Chund's. I do not know where he is now.

I know that on the 5th Poose, Pertaub Chund was taken sick, and died on the 21st of the same month. I will ever remember it. I recollect his marriages, even the first marriage; but I do not recollect the date, month, or year. I do not recollect even the year it was very long ago.

I recollect the death of Rajah Tej Chunder. I did not accompany him to Calna; but in the year 1239, in the month of Srabhun, on the 30th of that month, he left Burdwan, and I heard that he died on the 2nd Bhadur, when about two ghurries of the day remained. Sam Chand Baboo (the witness of yesterday) is a child compared to me; why should I learn that or any thing else from him?

The whole of the doctors have died. Bumanun Gossin gave evidence in this matter at Bankoora, and he is since dead.

I do not know the name of the English Doctor, who attended on Rajah Pertaub Chund at Burdwan. Pertaub never had any such sickness as the sweating sickness; that is an invention of the prisoner with which he imposes upon you, gentlemen.

I do not know Dr. Halliday. I know only of one Doctor at Burdwan I went along with the Rajah Pertaub Chund to Calcutta, but not always. When the Rajah first went to Calcutta and was living at Short's Bazar, then I was with him; and when I did not go, Nundho Baboo went as darogah of the cook-room.

Whoever was the darogah of the cook-room went to Calcutta. First Connoy Lall was darogah then I was darogah, and then Nundho Lall. Connoy Lall was in Calcutta, and I don't know where he now is. I have not heard of him for 12 or 13 years.

On the 9th the Kobrajes said the Rajah had what they called a teridohsee fever, that is a complicated fever attended with heat, cold and bile. On the 11th they said there was no hope, and he could then only speak with great difficulty. On the 21st you could only hear him by bending over him immediately. Before his death, his lips moved and when you bent over him you might distinguish the name of God.

Juggomohun Doobee had his hand on the Rajah's thigh at the moment of his death. I was on the west side of the pile. The weight of a dead man is greater than a living man, because there is no air in the body of the dead man. You could tell at once that it was a deception if a man simulated death.

It was one Bengallee ghurree after midnight when the pile was set on fire, and the burning continued till the morning.

After the fire had been burning for a while, I could see the body for some time on the pile.

About 5 or 6 Bengallee ghurries elapsed between the death and burning. The wood is put on the corpse when it is burning. There were many spectators from Burdwan but more from Ambora. There were many people there not connected with the Rajbariee. I know Aga Abass, who was Rajah Pertaub's servant. He was a Mogul jemadar, but was with him a very short time. I know him, but whether others in the Rajbariee know him or not I can't say. He was not much near Pertaub. He kept watch, as was his duty. He never slept in the room with Pertaub. He was no Rajah's servant. Whether he went along with him to Calcutta to Short's Bazar, I cannot say. This is the man; he was a servant for a very short time. I never went along with the Rajah to Moorshehabad. The Rajah went to Moorshehabad about 20 years ago, about one or two years before his death.

Re-examined by the Magistrate.—This Aga Abass was not one of the respectable servants of Pertaub Chunder. He was in the service of Pertaub Chunder until his death, and was after that event continued in the service by the Rajah Tej Chunder, who dismissed him, with a number of others, in consequences of their quarrels.

2d. Witness, Money Lait Baboo, sworn on huliff-namah.—I am a zemindar and merchant and of the Ketrie caste. I am 48 years old and live at Burdwan. I knew Maha Rajah Pertaub Chunder, son of Rajah Tej Chunder.

In the month of Poose, 1227, I was with the old rajah in whose service I was then employed.

I am acquainted with the circumstances attending the illness of the Rajah Pertaub. About the 5th or 7th he was attacked with an aguish fever, and on the 11th he went to Ambooa during the night. I was the old Rajah's servant. I used to go backwards and forwards to see the young Rajah during his illness.

It appeared to me that his illness was of that nature, that he would not live.

The English Doctor on the 11th, advised Gooroodass Baboo to put about 100 leeches on Pertaub Chund, but he did not do so. The native doctors were Brimanand, Gossain, Juggut Koberaj and Asgur Ally Hakim. These doctors are all dead. I had no conversation with them at Burdwan.

I followed the young Rajah on the 12th instant to Ambooa, and arrived that evening. The patient was daily getting worse, it being necessary to lift him up in a chair whenever he wanted to go any where.

I was always present with Pertaub Chunder day and night, as also was the old Rajah. I am quite certain that he was very ill. There was no possibility of deception. He was my brother-in-law. On the 21st instant he was extremely weak and Juggote Koberaj and Brimanand Gossain told us that we must take the young Rajah to the river side.

I saw the young Rajah at that time with my own eyes—he had then no power of moving. I am perfectly certain of this. He was taken to the river side. He gave gifts by touching the different articles and then the naturjalee was performed at about 10 ghurnies of the night.

When he died I was in the tent. When the ruthee was being prepared, I went to the body. It is customary with us to take off the old clothes from the corpse and put on new ones, and to give part of these clothes to the Purhoit.

When the new clothes were being put on, I saw the corpse. I did not particularly observe the color of the face of the corpse, but it was that of a dead man. There were torches and I think lanterns also burning. By that light I could plainly see the corpse. I am quite sure that it was a corpse and not a living man which I saw, and I am positive that no deception could have been practised upon me. There was a pile prepared after death.

The corpse of the young Rajah was placed on the pile.

I did not lift up the corpse myself. Juggomohun Doobee and other Ketrie lifted it. The face of the corpse was uncovered when on the pile. About 2,000 or 2,500 people were present.

Bussunt Baboo, Nundho Baboo, Mohur Baboo, Bhyjoo Baboo and Gocol Baboo, and a great many others were present. I saw the corpse placed on the pile. The Purhoit put a pindee near the mouth of the corpse, and put also fire 3 times on the face, passing round between the intervals.

I saw the corpse plainly in the flames. My recollection is, that as long as the corpse was burning I continued to see it. I pushed it with a stick when in the fire.

I am perfectly certain that it was Pertaub Chund's corpse which was burnt to ashes.

How could there have been any deception in the matter, when I saw it with my eyes? It was quite impossible for any one to have escaped from the pile when the fire was burning. There were about 25 maunds of wood over the corpse. (Here the witness was asked if he could see as he appeared to be nearly blind, and on his saying that he could see very badly, the prisoner was taken close to him. Witness passed his hands over the prisoner's person carefully, and peered into his face.) This is not the Rajah Pertaub Chund. It is quite impossible that the Rajah should now be alive. This is some impostor.

Cross examined by Mr. Norton.—At the time of Pertaub's death my eyes were particularly good, it is only of late years that I have been afflicted with defect of sight. I am told it is from cold. I live at Burdwan, and my house is outside of the Rajbarree. I was one of the old Maha Rajah's mosahibs (companions) and darogah of the chokedaree. I am now dewan of the Bishenpore, estate.

Since I have been in Chinsurah, I have been living in the Rajbarree. I was a mosahib of the old Rajah. The old Rajah went to see his son and I went along with him. The old Rajah was there and the young man being ill, was it not my duty to attend? I have already said, that he felt sick on the 5th or 7th and went to Culna on the 11th. I do not recollect the names of any English Doctors who attended Pertaub Chund. I had been about 15 or 16 years Tej Chunder's servant, before the death of Pertaub. I recollect a lame European Doctor, who used to come; but his name I don't know. No European Doctors went to see the Rajah during his illness, but only the native ones. I do not know why the English Doctor did not attend. I rather think Gooroodass went to Ambooa, but I am not sure. [The witness here corrected himself and said that ooktaram went but Gooroodass did not.] The Rajah Pertaub could only speak with difficulty. I heard that there was no hope of his life when he left Burdwan. At the time of his coming from Burdwan I did not hear that any of the Ranees were asked to accompany him. I do not know if the Ranees were informed of his danger, as that is a matter pertaining to the zennanah. Sometimes the widows or a man accompany him, and sometimes not. I did not go with Tej Chunder when he died, but I knew that his Ranees accompanied him. I had no privilege of entering the Rajbarree zennanah. Such a thing is forbidden after a male is 5 years of age. There was a cloth at first on the face of the corpse, which was removed when the pindee was placed there. It is the custom that when the body is burning to stir the corpse with a stick. There was wood over the body and on the face when it was on the pile. At the time of burning, first I saw the features; when the pindee was placed there I saw them, and then wood was heaped on, and I saw only the form. When the body was stirred I saw more clearly. I was about 5 or 10 cubits distant from the pile when it grew hot. The pile was about 2 or 4 cubits from the water. The bank there was sloping. The rajah Tej Chunder left Culna for Burdwan, while the corpse was burning. He did not go to see the dead body of Pertaub Chund. I never had any quarrel with Pertaub Chund. I never had any employment at Ambooa under the Rajah Pertaub Chund, nor under the old rajah. I never told him, but he knew very well that his son drank wine.

(Re-examined by the Magistrate.)—The reason why rajah Tej Chunder did not go to see his son's body was, that he was overcome with grief and wished to console the Ranees at Burdwan. I was at the ghaut, and I do not know who accompanied Tej Chunder to Burdwan. When the quarrel arose with the Bohoranees, I left Tej Chunder's service 6 or 7 months after Pertaub's death. Rajah Tej Chunder never had the slightest doubt of his son's death during the 6 or 7 months I was with him. I never heard any such doubt until this man (the prisoner) appeared. I was present at the shradah of Rajah Pertaub Chund. The old rajah Tej Chunder was not, but he gave orders to the purhoit for burning the corpse and also of the shradah.

Bhyrubnauth Baboo signs the usual hulefnameh.—I am Cas-math Baboo's son, my house is at Ambooa, I am a Zemindar and also in service. I knew Pertab, and am acquainted with the circumstances of his illness and death. He is dead. I don't recollect the date of his illness; but he was taken ill in the month of Pous 1227 B. S. I was at Culna. I do not know how long he was ill at Burdwan, as I was at Ambooa, which is the place of my residence. He arrived there on the 11th or 12th Pous. I went once to see him during his illness. I was about half a ghurree in the room of the sick Maharaj, who then appeared to be very ill and weak. He died on the 21st Pous. I was not present when he died, but after his death a person came and said, the Rajah is dead, you must do all things according to custom. I was summoned, because I was a Ketrie, and my ancestors and his were relations. When I went according to this summons, I saw the corpse of the deceased Maharajah Pertaub Chund. When I went, there was cloth on the corpse, and afterwards the cloth was taken off, according to custom, and then I saw the corpse of Pertaub Chund and stood close to it. I had no doubt that the Rajah was then dead. There were torches placed all round. I have seen a few corpses during my life time, and attended funerals. I can tell the difference between the countenance of a dead man and that of a living. Of course, if any man attempted to deceive me by assuming the appearance of a corpse I would find out. I, Saum Baboo, Bussunt Baboo, and Mohun Baboo and others, lined up the corpse. At the time of raising the body I knew it to be that of a moordah (dead man). When the corpse was on the pile the face was uncovered. The pindra was placed, and the Pundit applied fire to the face, and the purhoit applied the fire to the mouth three times. I saw with my own eyes that the fire was applied to the skin. I could see the features of the face perfectly. At the moment there was plenty light, and I was perfectly satisfied that it was Rajah Pertab Chund's face to which the fire was being applied. There were 3 or 4 logs of wood flung on the corpse after the pile was fired. When the wood was above the body, we still continued to see it until it was reduced to ashes.

The corpse was stirred up with bamboos, but who stirred it up I do not know. It was impossible for any one to escape from that pile without our being aware of it.

I had seen the Rajah Pertab Chund previously two or three times. I have a perfect recollection of his features, and if it were possible for the Rajah to return, I could recognize him. [At this time the prisoner was shown to the witness.] There is no resemblance between the prisoner and the Rajah Pertab. He would at this day be about the age of 49 to 50. The age of the prisoner, I think, is 36 or 37 years. Since I buried the Rajah Pertab, it is impossible that he should now be alive.

Cross examined by Mr. Morton.—When the Rajah Pertab died, I was 22 or 23 years old. I think the prisoner is younger than I am. I never saw the prisoner before. When I was asked the prisoner's age, I think I looked at him for about two minutes. When I burned the Rajah Pertab Chund's body he appeared to be 29 or 30 years. I had seen him also before, and had an opportunity of forming a judgment of his age. About one or two years before his death I saw him.

I had seen him at Burdwan, when I went upon my business there. I only saw him two or three times during my whole life. I have never been with him about half a ghurree at a time. I only went to present my taxzer.

I was not a child when I knew the Rajah. He was my lord. If I saw a person only once, I should recollect him again. I received a heritable pension from the present Rajah, as well as from the former. I do not live in the Chinsurah Rajbarree. I live in Baboo Gunge while here. Since I have been in Chinsurah, I have been at the Rajbarree; but I have not been there to day.

4th Witness. Juggomohun Doobee, sworn on the Ganges water.—I am residing at Burdwan. I am 64 years old. I am now serving at the Rajbarree.

I knew the Rajah Pertab Chund, son of Tej Chund. In the month of Poose 1227, I was the Rajah's servant and employed at Ambooa.

I recollect the Rajah Pertaub Chund coming to Ambooa in that month. He was weak and ill with fever. I saw him three or four times during his illness before coming to Ambooa. I had seen him five, seven or ten times. He was weaker then when I saw him before he last came to Ambooa. I had opportunities of seeing, that the Rajah was really ill and that there was no deception.

The Rajah Pertab Chund died at Ambooa. I was present when he died.

I am perfectly certain that I saw Pertaub Chund die, and there could have been no deception. I and Mohun Baboo remained with our hands on the corpse after his death. He died at 11 o'clock at night.

We had our hands three or four ghurries on the body, and during that time the corpse became cold.

Bhyrub Baboo, Mohun Baboo, Ghasayram Purohit and myself put the corpse on the chetah.

I can tell the difference on raising a corpse and a living man. I am sure it was a corpse which I placed on the pile.

When the pindra was placed there, the face was uncovered. I then saw it was the face of Rajah Pertaub Chund.

Ghasayram Purohit applied fire to the face. I saw it myself. Wood was heaped on the body after the pile was fired. The corpse was visible after the wood was on it. Ghasayram stirred up the corpse with a stick, and afterwards the Keties did the same. All along I saw the corpse until its final consumption.

Towards the morning the body was turned to ashes. I am perfectly satisfied that it was Rajah Pertaub Chund's corpse that was burnt on this occasion, and that there was no deception.

No one could escape from the pile after it was lit up. I could well recognize the Rajah if I were again to see him. (The prisoner was shown to the witness.) This is not Rajah Pertaub Chunder.

Cross examined by Mr. Morton.—I had not seen the Rajah for five years, when I saw him at Culna. I was the jemadar of the Rajbarree at Ambooa, and am now jemadar of the Duerree at Burdwan, in the Rungmehal.

I get seven rupees per month as wages. I have held this situation since 1233. The Rajah died on the edge of the river, near the Toppaghaut, near the edge of the river. He was half way in the water when he died. He was not seated on a chair, he was on a matras which had been lifted off the bed. He was about 29 when he died. The unturjaltee was performed. One of my hands was upon the shoulder of the corpse and another on the cap of the knee. Ghee was applied to his face at the time of his death. Rajah Tej Chunder did not go to see the corpse of his son Pertaub Chund. When the corpse was raised on the pile, I held one hand my other hand was not on the foot but on the leg above the foot. I have told what I saw, why should I speak from what is customary. The ceremonies were performed according to the usual custom, I recollect it well. The pile was about seventeen or eighteen cubits from the Toppaghaut. There were no dinghees or boats at that time near the ghaut. Dinghees or boats do not remain at that ghaut. There were 8 musalls burning. It was not too dark for one to see. I could see about forty or fifty cubits, as far as the light in the torches reached. The place where the pile was made, is about 2 arrow-flights from Culna. Boats usually lie below the Culna gunge, at a place where ferry boats start from. The untujaller was performed at the Toppaghaut, which is situated on the west of Culna. There is a tank between the Putramelghat and the Toppaghaut and there may be 100 cubits between them. There were then no trees on the bank of the river at that spot. Potaun Baboo was not present at the young Rajah's death. I do not recollect whether Pota Kunnaree Bebee was there or not. The old Rajah returned to Burdwan, on the night of his son's death. The prisoner's age appears to be below 40.

5th. Witness, Nundolatt Baboo signs the usual Hulfnamah.—I am 45 years old, of the Kerie caste, and servant of the Burdwan Rajbarree. I knew Rajah Pertaub Chunder as being one of his mosahibs (companions) and was constantly with him. I was present during his illness at Burdwan. He became ill at Burdwan in 1227. I was there. He had an ague and fever on the 5th Poose. I was with him in constant attendance day and night, during his illness. His illness increased day by day. An English Doctor came to see him during his illness for about a quarter of an hour. The Doctor ordered him to apply leeches to his temple or to be bled; but he refused to do either. Brimanund Gosain, Jogutt Kobraj and Asgur Ali were the native Doctors who attended him. About the 11th of the month, when the fever had increased, he went to Ambooa at his own desire. The Kobrajes at that time said that his illness was very severe. I have since learned the profession of a doctor. I cannot tell when a man is sick myself. When a man falls down in shivering fever, becoming senseless, then I can. An ague is not such a complaint as a man could insulate for fifteen or twenty days. I followed the Rajah Pertaub Chunder to Ambooa on an elephant. When he started for Ambooa he had not the power of getting up. I was always in the habit of seeing him at Ambooa. His fever there increased. I am not a physician, but observed that his strength daily became less, and that he became senseless when the fever attacked him. The Rajah died before my eyes at Ambooa. I was present at the time of his death. He was extremely weak at that time and had not the power of moving. I was close to him, when he died. I am sure he died, as I burnt the corpse. How could there be any deception? I saw the corpse when it was on the pile; his face and neck were exposed to view. A pindee was placed there and fire was applied to the face. Ghee was also put upon the face. I am perfectly sure that the face I saw touched with fire, was that of the Rajah Pertaub Chunder. When the pile was fired, logs of wood were thrown upon the body; the corpse was perfectly visible after this. The corpse was entirely consumed by fire and turned to ashes. I am certain that it was the Rajah's corpse that was consumed before my eyes. It was impossible that any one should escape from that fire. The fire was blazing all round, and how should a corpse fly. If the Rajah could come again before me I should recognize him. I do not know the defendant. I once saw him at Bankorah at a great distance. He is not the Rajah Pertaub Chunder; there is no resemblance between them. The Rajah Pertaub Chunder was about twenty-nine or thirty when he died. This defendant appears about thirty-four or thirty-five.

Cross examined by Mr. Morton.—I say with some certainty about the Rajah Pertaub Chunder's age. The Rajah was three years older than me. I am 45 years old now myself. I have only guessed the prisoner's age. I should guess the age of the sheristadar to be about forty or fifty. Mr. Morton's age I think to be about 35 years. I am related to Prawn Baboo. He was at Burdwan when I left it. I have service in the Rajbarree. I was formerly a Bucksey or Pay master of the troops and am now a Darogah of the Bussorah gardens attached to the Sudler kutcherry. Bussunt Lal Baboo is my uncle; my house is without the Rajbarree at some little distance. I am living at present at the Chiosurah Rajbarree. The European Doctor came on the 11th for a short time. I do not know his name. The Kobrajes gave the Rajah physic, but what was the name of it I am not aware. The Rajah never allowed them to bleed him at any time. The Kobrajes did not wish to apply leeches or to bleed him; that was the European Doctor. I do not recollect the name of the persons who attended Pertaub. I recollect the name of one European as present at the station, and that is Mr. Hutchison. I never visited the Rajah during his illness that I am aware of. The Rajah Pertaub Chunder never had any sweating sickness, whatever. He was addicted to drinking. I have no recollection of there being any trees in the vicinity of the pile. No dingy or boat was near the place at the time of the death. The place where the pile was erected, is about one hundred cubits from Culnagunge. I went with Pertaub Chunder to Moorshehabad about two or three months previous to his death. He did not attend much to his zemindari business, his father chiefly attended to that. I was his companion and used to live as he did. The Tchumpara zemindar used to come and see him occasionally; but there was no friendship between them. He used to go to European gentlemen, but I know none with whom he had any friendship. I never saw Prawn Ki son Holdar there. Siconauth Baboo used sometimes to come.

The Court adjourned at half past 5 p. m.

[Murkaru, September 13.]

10th SEPTEMBER, 1838.

Peary Mohun Roy, signs the kulfnamah. I knew Rajah Pertaub Chunder, son of Tej Chunder. When he was ill I was in my own house at Jamalpore. I am not acquainted with any thing relating to his illness; but when he was dead I then saw him. In 1227 B. S. 21st Poose he died. I saw the body of the Maha Rajah extended on a pile on the Toppaghaut at Culna. After one ghurree after midnight I arrived there. I stood about 2 or 3 cubits from the pile. His face was uncovered, but the rest of the body was covered with cloth. I had before seen the Rajah Pertaub Chunder very frequently. I was well acquainted with his features. I am quite certain that that was the corpse of Rajah Pertaub Chunder, and not of any other persons. Ghassy Ram Purhoit put the fire on the face of the corpse. He touched the face with fire three several times.

The pile was set fire to by several people of the Kerie caste then present. Logs of wood were placed above and below the corpse. I continued to see the corpse after the pile was burning. The fire burned the corpse and blazed very high. I was there until three puras of the night had passed. I went away before the fire was extinguished. The pile was about one cubit or one of a cubit or 1/2 of a cubit from the ground. It was impossible for any one to escape from beneath the pile. About two or three thousand people were present. On all the four sides there were torch bearers and on three sides there were spectators. On the side of the river there were three or four musallchees, and one or two servants. There were no spectators on that side. It was impossible for any one to have escaped from the pile without our knowledge. There were many people from Ambooa present, Binloo Baboo, Rajoo Baboo and Bhyrub Baboo, and several others. There were a great many people present, but I do not recollect the names of any who were not connected with the Rajbarree.

The most respectable people present were Gocool Baboo, Nundhoo Baboo, Rajoo Baboo, Bhusunt Baboo and some others. All these respectable people who were present are connected with the Rajbarree. (Here the prisoner was shown to witness.) I do not know the prisoner. He is not Maharajah Pertaub Chund. I know that he is not the Rajah, because there is no resemblance between his feature and those of Maharajah Pertaub Chund, and because the Rajah Pertaub Chund was burnt before my eyes.

(Cross examined by Mr. Morton). I am Dewan of the Ambooa Catchery. I live at Cumalpoore, which is 8 coss from Culna.

I am Dewan in the service of the Rajah Madab Chunder. I have been Dewan from 1234 B. S. I receive ninety rupees a month from the Treasury of the Maha Rajah. I was in no situation then. When Pertaub Chund died I was about thirty or thirty-one years old. I am now about forty-even or forty-eight years old.

On the 20th I went from Jamalpoore to Burdwan; on the 21st from Burdwan to Ambooa.

My father was in the employ of the Maharajah Pertaub Chund, and being ill himself ordered me to go and see how the young Rajah was, as we eat the salt of the family. I went there at twelve o'clock and waited there about one hour. There were about two or three thousand people present. The most respectable were the Rajbarree people. There were several people from Ambooa, but I do not know any thing of their respectability. I do not know whether there were any Armenians or Portuguese at Culna, who knew Pertaub. I don't know any Indigo Planters there. I was constantly in the habit of seeing him.

Pertaub Chund used to converse in English with Europeans and write letters to them in the same language. He was an excellent rider, or horseman. I used to ride with him often. I never was present when he bathed and do not know whether he ever swam or not. He never had a bite from a horse in my presence. I never saw the mark of a horse's bite on his body. I never heard him say that he was bitten by a horse. He kept Bheelay Khanum for a short time: I do not know the names of his other mistresses. He was a great man and these things were not spoken about. Ramlochan Moonshy used to collect his letters when he began to write English, but afterwards they were wholly composed by himself. Ramlochan Moonshy first taught him the English language. There were no European masters employed to teach him the English language. He was acquainted with Mr. Hutchinson, Mr. Trower, and with others who were at different times Judges, Magistrates and Collectors of Burdwan. I cannot recollect whether the Rajah was acquainted with any English Clerk of Mr. Trower's. I do not recollect any meeting taking place at Burdwan between the Rajah and any Europeans. I don't know the name of Peter Palmer or of John Ridley.

2d Witness—Gopeenath Dutt, son of Ram Connyer, sworn on the Ganges water. I lived at Sunnee Muntasa, and am now forty eight years of age, and Dewan of the Buxshydufter at Burdwan. I am of the Kayit caste.

I knew the Rajah Pertaub Chund. He was taken sick in the month of Poose in 1227 B. S. I saw him frequently during his illness. He had angueish fever. I never placed my hands on the Rajah's body. The Maharajah said that he was very ill with fever. I do not know what the Cobrajes ordered him to eat from one day to another. I did not see any European doctor there. The Cobrajes were Brimanund Gosain, Juggote Cobraj and Asgur Ali Hakim. The Cobrajes frequently told me that he was very ill and that there were no hopes of his recovery.

I am sure he was ill, and there was no pretence. I recollect his having gone to Ombeka. He was extremely weak when he left Burdwan, he could not move of himself. I followed the Rajah on the 16th Poose, but did not go along with him to Ambooa. I saw the Rajah on the 21st Poose, he was then extremely weak. He spoke very slow, his voice could not be distinctly heard, and he died at Ambooa on the 21st Poose 1227 B. S. I was present when he died. I stood about five or six cubits distance when he died. I am sure that there was no deception I saw it with my own eyes.

About twenty or thirty Ketrices were about the corpse. There were no doubts entertained about his death. His corpse was burnt after death. I was present. A cloth covered the body up to the neck. The face remained uncovered. About two or three thousand people were present on that occasion. The Ketrices were standing near, and the rest of the people above on the Tappaghat. The people were standing on the south, east and west, and on the north was the river.

No one was on the side of the river. The pile was about one cubit or one cubit and a quarter from the ground. It was quite impossible that any one should escape from the pile either above or below and that we should not see it. I could see the corpse plainly in the middle of the flames, and numbers could see it. I am sure that it was the corpse of the Rajah which was burning in the midst of the fire. There could have been no deception. I was there from first to last, until the corpse was consumed to ashes. It was the corpse of the Rajah Pertaub Chund. I was constantly in the habit of seeing the Rajah every day. I recollect his features very well. I do not know this prisoner. He is not Rajah Pertaub Chund. I know this is not the Rajah. He does not resemble him at all; eyes, nose, stature, age, every thing is different.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I am employed in the Rajbarree I have been employed there ever since I can recollect. My salary is now twenty-five rupees per month. At the time of the death of the Rajah Pertaub Chund, I was Theesildar of Cossipore Kutchery. I was also Karkoor of the Kharijee dufter kutchery. I had every day, as Theesildar, to go to him, and make my salaam. I was an Amlah of the Rajah. I was not a pimp to the Rajah, nor did I ever pimp for him.

I went to Culna to see my master the Rajah, as he was sick. There was no hope of recovery when the Rajah left Burdwan. He was taken ill on the 5th and removed to Ambooa on the 11th. I am a Kayuth. I did not touch the corpse.

The name of the priest was Ghassee Ram. There was wood placed on the body, about five or seven, or ten mounds, over the whole body, face and all. About three or four ghurries elapsed in preparing the pile. The feet were to the east, the head to the west, the river on the north, about five or seven cubits distance. At this distance of time I cannot recollect on which side the Pur-hut stood. There were no Brahmin women assisting in any part of the ceremonies. Juggomolun Doobie, Mohun Baboo, and Bussunt Baboo, bathed the corpse. There was no Brahmin employed to register the name of the corpse. If the Maha Rajah Pertaub Chund were now living, he would be about forty-eight years old. I do not recollect exactly in what year he obtained the Rajahship, but it was about the year 1225 or 1226 B. S. I got no new appointment from Pertaub Chund. On his entering in possession, I held the same appointment as before. It is not the custom to give sundry for such appointments as mine. We receive the panna on being appointed. I went on the 12th Choite last, (21 May 1838) to Ambooa. I was at the Rajbarree at Culna when the prisoner was taken. I was not on the river side on that occasion. I gave no assistance in binding the prisoner that day. The Maharanee sent me to Culna to take charge of her property, she having a great deal of property there. I am servant of the Rajah and the Maharanee is his guardian.

3rd. witness, Gnoop Sing, Naib hukaru, son of Mohan Sing, resident of Burtwan, aged 42 years, of the Rajpoot cast.

I knew the Maharajah Pertaub Chund, son of Tej Chunder, Baboo, our. I was present with Pertaub Chund, on the month of Poose, both at Burtwan and Ambooa. He was attacked with an agueish fever at Burtwan. When he was taken ill I saw him frequently during his illness. He appeared to be exceedingly ill. He had no strength to move about. The Kobrajes said "he is exceedingly ill, let us see what will come of it." I am sure that he was ill for he grew weak. There was no feigning on his part. I saw him at Ambooa, he was then also very ill.

He died on the night of the 21st Poose 1227 B. S. On that day he was neither able to speak a word nor to move. I was present at his death standing about 4 or 5 paces off. I am certain that he died, and it was impossible there could have been any deception. The body was burnt, and I was present at the burning. The face of the corpse was uncovered on the pile. The night was dark, but there were five or seven torches all round. About three or four thousand people might have been present. Every one could clearly see the face of the corpse when it was laid on the pile. There was no empty space below the pile. There was wood all below. The pile was about 1 1/2 cubit high. There was wood thrown on the body when the pile began to burn. After putting fire to the mouth, the pile was lighted on all sides.

There was no possibility of escape from the pile. The corpse was seen by all when burning on the pile.

I remained there until morning, when the corpse was consumed to ashes. I am quite certain it was the corpse of Pertaub Chund and there was no deception.

If the Rajah had come to life again I would recognize him. I don't know this man (the prisoner.) I saw him at Bankoorah when he had a beard. He is not Pertaub Chund. I know he is not the Rajah because his features are quite different. The prisoner is clearly an imposter.

(Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.)—I am now in the service of Rajah Madah Chund. I have been now about 30 or 31 years in service. I receive 7 rupees salary. I remain generally in the Rajbarree, but my house is not there. When the Rajah Pertaub Chund was taken ill, I was Naib Jemadar of the hukaru. I was then a servant of the Rajah Tej Chunder.

The Doctors saw Pertaub, and I also saw him and new that he was very ill. I accompanied the Rajah Pertaub to Ambooa. Rajah Tej Chunder followed a little while after. I went with Pertaub Chund and do not know who might have gone with Tej Chunder. A new piece of cloth was torn up and placed on the corpse. There was also a shawl before the pindee was placed.

The face was covered and afterwards uncovered. When the corpse was laid on the pile, the head was to the south, and the feet towards the river. Wood was thrown over the face, as well as the other parts of the body, when the pile began to burn.

4th Witness.—Rameoomar Naybosen Battacharge, takes the hulifnamah.—I am aged 66 years, a pundit of the Rajbarree. I knew Rajah Pertaub Chund. I was at Ambooa in the month of Poose in 1227 B. S. I saw the Maharajah at Culna in the verandah of an upper-roomed house. He was then extremely weak. I did not see him rise from his bed myself, and his speech was very incoherent. The Maharajah died at Culna. When they were performing the untajulee, I was standing near repeating to him the name of the Almighty. I was about 10 or 12 cubits distance from the body when he died. I am quite certain that he died before me, and that there was no deception. After death his body was burnt. The face was bare when the corpse was on the pile.

There were a great many people present when the pile was lighted. When the fire was applied I could see the corpse. When the pile burned up I left the place and went away home. The head was placed to the south, the feet to the north. No one could have escaped from the pile without our knowledge.

Some were standing 2 or 3 cubits from the pile when I went home, others further off. I could then see well, but now I see with great difficulty. I was Subha Pandit and was always with the Rajah, and have been with him to Chinsurah, Calcutta, and Mootshedabd. It is impossible for him to come to life again. If any one were shown me I could tell if he were the Rajah. This man, (the prisoner) is not Pertaub Chund. If he were he would be 48 years of age, but this man appears to be under 40.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I was Subha Pandit at the time of the death of the Rajah Pertaub Chund. I have remained in the same situation ever since. When the Rajah went to Ambooa I went there frequently. No Brahmin women were present at the funeral of the Rajah assisting to perform the ceremonies. I know not of such a custom as Brahmin women assisting at these rites. I do not know whether there were any shops above the ghat or no.

I was present at the death of Rajah Tej Chunder, which took place at the Ombekah ghat. The came on the 1st and died on the 21st of the month of Bhadron 1239 B. S. The Rajah Tej Chunder was on the Rajbarree when his son Pertaub Chund died. The Ranees were at Ambooa in the Rajbarree when Rajah Tej Chunder died. The young Rajah knew English well. I do not know the name of coachman belonging to him. I do not know the names of any of that description of servants. I do not know of any mark of the bite of a horse on Rajah Pertaub Chund's body. He left two widows and they are yet living. He was first married, when he was quite a child, to Peary Kumaree, and he married Annund Kumaree long after, about 7 or 8 years before his death. He was always on good terms with his Ranees. How can I say whether the Ranees could or could not recognize Pertaub Chund if they saw him again? I go to the Rajbarree on my duty.

Re-examined by the Magistrate.—I can't say exactly, but when Pertaub married Annund Kumaree, she was about 11 or 12 years of age. I do not recollect Gobind Chunder Mullick.

5th. Witness, Radachund Baboo, takes the hulifnamah. I am the son of Gobinechunder, live at Ambooa, and am aged about 42 or 44 years. I am in service, but have talooks, I am of the Ketrice caste.

I know Rajah Pertaub Chund, son of Tej Chunder. In 1227, in the month of Pouse, I was at Ambooa. During that month he became ill at Ambooa. He had an ague and fever. I saw him since only during his illness. When I saw him he was shivering with fever, and could not speak. He died at Ambooa. I was not present at the moment he died, but came afterwards. When I arrived there was a cloth on the body, and Juggomohun Doobee and Mohun Baboo had their hands upon the corpse.

When the corpse was bathed the cloth was taken off. I saw the face of the corpse at that time and knew it was that of Pertaub Chund. I am quite certain that it was a corpse which I saw, and not a living man. On seeing a corpse I can tell it from a living man. The hands and limbs become stiff and the mouth was open. The Ketties prepared a pile on which the corpse was placed. I and others placed the corpse on the pile. When I lifted the body on the pile, I knew it to be a corpse and not a living man. The face was uncovered upon the pile. There were present 20 or 25 Ketties of Ambooa, and about one or two thousand persons of that place. There were lights of torches burning all round.

When on the pile, by the light of the torches I and others there could easily see the corpse. I lifted up the corpse on the pile and knew it to be the very corpse of Pertaub Chund. The pile was lighted. The wood was placed both below and above the corpse. There might have been about 6 mannds of wood flung on the corpse. We continued to see the corpse after wood was flung on the pile and the pile was lighted. The corpse was burnt. I remained until the burning was finished. The corpse was turned to ashes. The head was to the south, the feet to the river side, and the pile about one and half cubit from the ground. It was impossible any one could have escaped from that pile. The Ketties were about five or seven cubits from the pile while it was burning. There was a great deal of light caused by the torches. We could see about 50 cubits distance. Before seeing the Rajah at Culna, I had seen him twice or four times in Burdwar, when I went to present nuzzurs. He was a great man; in my district there was no greater.

If I could see him I should know him well.

He was a man whom if you had seen once you would recollect well. I saw him three or four times, and recollect him and his face well. I don't know this person (the prisoner). He is not the man—he is not Rajah Pertaub Chund. There is a great difference between the countenance of this man and Pertaub Chund. Pertaub's eyes were larger, his nose was handsomer, and his countenance altogether that of a handsome man.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I had not seen Pertaub for two or three months before I saw him at Culna. I have sat with him in 1821, for a whole pahur. It is impossible to say exactly what there was in his appearance which makes me recollect him. I have before said that he was a great man, such as one recollects long after.

I had a single interview with him.

I have not seen the portrait in the next room.

When Rajah Pertaub died he was about 29 or 30 years old.

I was then 25 or 26 years of age. My ancestors were related to Rajah Pertaub, but I myself was not related to him.

I married a female cousin of Praun Baboo's. I have some business in their Rajbarree. I am darogah in Juggurnauth Takoobarree, at Ambooa.

When Pertaub died I was not a servant.

I have been in the service of this Raj since 1234 Bysack.

I always live at Ambooa. Rajah Tej Chunder died at Ambooa on the 2d Bhadrur 1239 B. S. He came there on the suncrant and died there on the following day.

There were many shops near the Culna ghaut when this Rajah died, but I do not know the names of the shopkeepers who were there at that time. I do not know if there were any Brahmias there at that time.

They keep shops and sell wood.

All the shopkeepers sell wood and other articles.

I do not know from whom the wood was purchased; but I recollect hearing that the sandal wood was purchased of one Issur Chunder Paul, Chowdry. I do not know whether Rajah Pertaub Chund was intimate with any Indigo Planter near Culna. I do not know the names of any Indigo Planters who were there then. I do not know any Armenian or Portuguese who was intimate with Pertaub at the time of his death.

There were a great many people present, but except where the torches were, it was dark, and who went or who did not go, I can't say.

Sixth witness, Huriischunder Roy, takes the huff-namah. I am the son of Issur Raj Chund. I live at Immalpore, and am aged about 50 years. I am in service at the Rajbarree at Ambooa. I knew Pertaub Chund in 1227. In the month of Pous, I was at Ambooa. I was a servant in the Takoobarree at Ambooa, which was the reason of my being there. I saw Pertaub Chund at Ambooa in that month. He was ill from the effects of fever called (compo-jare) an aguish fever. I am sure he was ill and not feigning. I saw that his countenance had become very thin. The Kobirajes were administering medicine to him. The Rajah died at Ambooa.

I was at that time on the banks of the Ganges close to him. I am certain that he really died and that there was no deception. I know there was no deception, because he died, and was burnt before my eyes.

There was a pile made on which the corpse was placed. When the body was placed on the pile, the face was not covered. His appearance was that of a dead man. There was a great deal of wood below and little above the corpse on the top of the pile. I could see the corpse after the wood was laid on. Ghassiyran Purohit fired the pile.

I saw with my own eyes that the corpse was burnt, and that it was that of Maharajah Pertaub Chund, Bahoodoor. It was impossible that any one should escape from that pile, and we not be aware of it. [Here the prisoner was shown to the witness.]

That is not the Rajah Pertaub Chund. I am sure he is not the Rajah. That is not his countenance.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I was deputy of the darogah of the Rajbarree at that time. I got ten rupees salary and two rupees for chatah, and the same is continued to me.

I get my salary from the Maharajah's treasury. I assisted at the funeral. I did not touch the dead, but assisted in purchasing different articles which would be required. I purchased the sandal wood from Ram-mohun Kerr, a druggist at Ambooa, not from any one else. When the corpse was burnt I was about ten cubits off to the west. Its head was to the south, the feet to the north.

I do not know if any Armenians or Portuguese or Indigo Planters were resident at Culna at that time.

I do not know whether Praun Baboo was at that time in treaty for an indigo factory there or not.

The Court, which opened at 10 A. M. closed at half past four o'clock. M. and is to re-open to-morrow, at 10 A. M.

At the rising of the Court Mr. Morton moved, that permission might be given to a mooktadar whom he named, and who is now in the Hooghly jail, to sit with the prisoner to assist his memory, which was granted by the Magistrate. — Hurkaru, Sept. 15.

11TH SEPTEMBER, 1838,

The Court sat at about ten o'clock, when the Nazir mentioned that a witness, Rajkissore Odikariy, was taken sick. Gungapersaud Tewarie was examined in his stead.

Gungapersaud Tewarree, of Jessore, of the Bhraminical caste, takes the kullufumah. — I knew Rajah Pentaub Chunder. He is dead; at least I have heard so. I know Kisto Lal Pauru, a resident of the village of Gwarree, in the district of Kishnaghur. He is my female cousin's son. The name of the defendant is Kisto Lal Pauru, son of Sham Lal Pauru, whose title is Brahmancharjee. I have not seen him for the last 5 or 6 years. He was then an omedwar in the Courts of Kishnaghur and Burdwan. I heard that he had obtained a perwannah to act as darogah at Santipore. When at Burdwan he lived in the house of one Ranchund Mitter of the Burdwan Collectorate. I heard from Kisto Lal's father that he left his home, but where he went I have no idea. Sham Lal Pauru died about a year and a half ago. He had no lands at Nudda, but only a small house which now belongs to a Pongjee Brahmin. Kisto Lal had two brothers, Gour Lal and Roop Lal, and both are dead. I heard that Gour Lal was called the Chota Huzoor. His mother died a year ago. He had his maternal uncle, Seetpersaud Jemaitree, is still alive in Jessore, and his younger brother Modan Tewarree is also alive, as are also Fakeerchund Tewarree and Sooroo Tewarree. He has no other uncles alive. His mother's name was Munnah. I do not know with whom the prisoner was acquainted at Nudda.

Cross examined by Mr. Morton. — I have not seen him for about 5 or 6 years. I have seen him here, in his present character, coming out of jail to the Court House. The prisoner was ten or twelve years resident in my own village. Mooktadar and his father then came to Gwarree, Kishnaghur, and set up a temple, and he afterwards went to Burdwan and lived in the house of Ranchund Mitter in Sham Sago, where I also resided; and our Ramdheen Bicheet, Jumadar, also went backwards and forwards to the house and knows the defendant. From all these circumstances I know him. When I last saw Kisto Lal he was about 25 or 26. His age will now be about 30 or 32 years. He was a Kuage Brahmin. His father Sham Lal had an image of Kalee in his house, to which people used to resort, and he also used to be employed by people to repeat mantras in their ears. Kisto Lal's two brothers had no profession. What need had they, when they accompanied a man who called himself the Burdwan Rajah. I do not know when they first accompanied the prisoner on his expedition. I saw them at Bankoorah with the prisoner. I saw the prisoner also there, about two years ago. I have had no communication with him for the last 5 or 6 years. I knew him when I saw him at Bankoorah to be Kisto Lal Pauru. I was not acquainted with any body at Bankoorah, and did not there mention that he was Kisto Lal Pauru. He was then in jail at Bankoorah. I saw him in the end of 1243. When he came backwards and forwards to and from the kutcherry I was an omedwar in the Magistrate's Court at Bankoorah. Mr. Elliot was then Magistrate. It may have been in Byasack or Joistee that I saw him. It was in the mangoe season that I went to the Magistrate. I had nothing to do with the Umlah of his Court. I did not mention this matter to the Magistrate. No one asked me. I do not recollect seeing Mr. Shaw at Bankoorah. I did not know that the Magistrate was endeavouring to ascertain who the prisoner was. He used to speak Bengallee to me, but also knew the Hindue and Persian. I do not know who taught him the Hindue and Persian languages. I was not educated along with him. He could write Persian and Bengallee. I have heard that he knew English but I never heard him read it. He used to read and write from his childhood. He studied with a view to service. Perhaps he looked out for a darogaship, a nazirship, or even a sheristadarship, for all that I know. How should I know what masters he had? We did not learn in one school. We are the only respectable family in the Mooktadar village at Kishnaghur, and there was a school in our house. Sham Lal Pauru had no house in our village. Kisto Lal resided in his maternal grandfather's house. His grandfather's name was Ramruten Tewarree. He was alive when Kisto Lal was there. He is my uncle. I know Bengallee and Hindue. I do not know Persian or English. I can only write Bengallee. I do not know whether Kisto Lal Pauru ever went to Lahore. I heard that when he was released from jail he went to Calcutta. I do not recollect in what year he left Mookhadhur village. There are no such things as mundula in the village. There are no other respectable people in the village except our own two or three families. From Mooktadar the prisoner went to Gwarree, Kishnaghur. I do not recollect how long he remained. I do not recollect in what year he went to Gwarree Kishnaghur. If I had dreamt of his getting up this deceit, I would have made a note of it. He was 10 or 12 years of age when he came to Gwarree. I sometimes went there and remained 4 or 5 days, about 16 or 17 miles from Mooktadar. I heard that he left Gwarree when he disappeared. His house was in the village of Gwarree on the banks of the Kburie Nudhee. Gwarree is $\frac{1}{2}$ a coss or $\frac{3}{4}$ from the kutcherry at Kishnaghur. Whether his father made any search for him after he went away or not I do not know. I do not know who is in possession now. I do not know whether any search was made for him after the death of his brothers. I do not know whether the property was sold for want of heirs. I have not seen his father or any of his relations for the last 5 or 6 years, and how could I have told them. I saw his brother Gour Lal Baboo at Bankoorah imprisoned with him there. Why should I speak of the matter to him? I go about as an omedwar and have not seen his uncle for four or five years. I am now resident at Ambooa, and have been there for a year and a half or one year. I was an omedwar with Kishen Chund Baboo, the Dewan of the Salt Mehals, at a place called Kasserjora in the Midnapore district. I was two years with him. I was with him before I went to Bankoorah. Since I left that place I have been principally at Culna. I was once at Moorshedabad. I am in no one's service at present. I am not a beggar's son. I had some property of my father's after his death and by which means I am supported. I was but for 2 or 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ years as Gomasta of Mr. Ewart's factory. The name of the factory is Muzza, situated on the banks of the Baowur river at Jessore. I was a writer at one time also under the Dewan Kishen Chund. After the death of Mr. Ewart the factory was sold. The agents were Chunder Coomar Tagore and Callee Coomar Tagore. When the gentlemen died, these people, through their Deputy, Bhoguban Holdar, attached the property, and from this we supposed that they had a share in it. I have heard that Kishen Chunder Baboo is dead. I used to go to Burdwan for employment. I was never employed at the Rajbarree. On my return from Bankoorah, I passed through Burdwan, but I have never been there since. I have had no conversation with Porsan Baboo and the young Rajah. I never mentioned this matter to them. I never mentioned it to any body. I have been subpoenaed to attend this Court, and therefore I am come to give my evidence. Until I came to Hooghly. I never mentioned this matter to any body. I am now living in the Government Mosaffikhana on the top of the Balee Ghaut. Kisto Lal spoke the current Bengallee. I know a respectable individual called Judge Pundit at Culna. I do not know any respectable merchants at Culna. I have no occasion to know them; but I know Bissonath the tax mohurrer at Culna, and I live in a house of his. The thannah is the Ambooa thannah. Bissonath sircar is alive at his own house. I have quarters in the Chotah Decree at Ambooa. On the right of my house there is one Bissonath sircar the tax mohurrer of Culna. Some women live near me also, and a painter. I have no employment at present and am still an omedwar.

The Reverend W. J. Deer, sworn.—[The witness and the prisoner were sent to the adjoining room in order to afford Mr. Deer an opportunity of inspecting his features, and remained a short time there together, accompanied by Mr. Graham.] I am a Missionary of the Church Missionary Society, resident at Kishenaghur. I removed to Kishenaghur in 1832.

Q. Were you at any time acquainted with a man named Kisto Lal Pauru?

A. Yes. His father, Shamlal, came to see me and asked me to allow his two sons to be introduced to me. Kisto Lal, the eldest of the two sons, made his visits very frequently and asked me for a recommendation for a darogaship. I gave him one to Mr. Battye, then Acting Magistrate in Kishenaghur, but the Magistrate in his reply said, the man whom you recommend for the darogaship is an unfit person for the situation. My Umlahs have told me that he has been suspected of having been the ringleader of a gang of robbers. Kisto Lal repeated his visits afterwards until I told him to come to me no more.

Q. How long is it since you last saw Kisto Lal?

A. I have not seen him since 1832 for I left this for England in 1833.

Q. Have you any means of knowing what became of Kisto Lal?

A. No, I have none. I returned from England in 1835. In 1836, when the prisoner was brought to Hooghly, two men came to me who said Poraun Baboo had sent them to me and that he was very anxious I should go to Hooghly and identify the prisoner. He begged this favour of me because I was a friend of his before. He offered me travelling expenses; but I told him I was unwilling to meddle in so unpleasant an affair. I neither wished to have money in such a case nor to go to the Court of my own account; but as a friend of theirs, I promised to give them information, and consequently I sent one of my people to Shamlal, Kisto Lal's father, and said I would like to see his son again. His father said he was very glad and he would send his son, but that he was then absent, he had gone up the river to get some money from his disciples. Shamlal said that his son would return in about ten or twelve days. After 15 days were past, I sent again to the father, he then replied, "The Padree wishes to see my son let him seek him himself."

Q. From your former acquaintance with Kisto Lal, do you think you should be able to recognize him if you see him again?

A. I recollect Kisto Lal very well.

Q. You have examined the prisoner and do you know who he is?

A. No.

Q. Is that Kisto Lal or is it not?

A. According to my recollection he is not. Kisto Lal was much fairer than he is. It is now six years since I have seen him and he may have altered, but I cannot recognize him.

Q. How used Kisto Lal to dress when you knew him?

A. His dress was the same as that of the Umlahs. The prisoner is exactly the size of Kisto Lal but his features I cannot recollect.

Q. Did Kisto Lal wear his hair long or short?

A. He wore it plaited like a woman's and back from the forehead. He had a high forehead.

Q. Were you acquainted with Mr. Krukenberg, I Missionary in Kishenaghur?

A. I was.

Q. Where is he now?

A. He is in one of the Eastern Islands.

Q. Do you recollect any journey of his to Hooghly in 1836?

A. Yes, I was then in Kishenaghur.

Q. Do you recollect the purpose of his visit?

A. His wife was ill and on her account he came to Hooghly.

Q. Did you see him after his return?

A. I did.

Q. Had you any conversation with him regarding his visit to Hooghly?

Mr. Morton objected to this being evidence. Mr. Samuells said:—I have shown that Mr. Krukenberg is out of the country and that his evidence is not procurable. I therefore give you the next best evidence which can be produced. Mr. Morton asked if Mr. Krukenberg had been judicially examined upon oath when he saw the prisoner. The Magistrate said:—"No!" but that every thing that passed at the interview had occurred in the presence of the Commissioner and himself (the Magistrate). Mr. Morton then asked whether a commission could not be issued to the Eastern Islands for the purpose of examining Mr. Krukenberg. The Magistrate replied, that such a proceeding would take up a great deal of time and was perfectly out of the question, and reminded Mr. Morton at the same time, that this was merely a preliminary investigation, and that such a proposition might with more propriety be made to the Judge. Mr. Morton then asked the Magistrate to make a note of his objection, and the Magistrate replied that this not being a Judge's Court, it was not usual to take notes of objections, and that the usual course was for the defendant's counsel to embody any objections which they might have, in a petition, which would be duly filed amongst the records of the case.

(Mr. Deer's evidence resumed).—Mr. Krukenberg said, that he had been called to see the prisoner, who called himself the Rajah Pertaub Chund. He said he had spoken to him and was convinced he was the very man he had seen in the house of Shamlal at Gwarree Kishenaghur, and that he was willing to go and give evidence of it.

Q. Did he mention what man he meant he had seen at Shamlal's?

A. He said the person who used to be there as a fakcer.

Q. Did he mention his name?

A. Not that I recollect.

Q. Do you know what character Kistolal assumed when he was with his father?

A. No, I do not.

Q. To whom did you understand Mr. Krukenberg to refer?

A. To Kisto Lal.

Q. Are you quite certain that this is not the Kisto Lal you knew?

A. It is a mere impression. It is six years since I have seen him.

Q. Could you swear positively that this is not Kisto Lal?

A. I could not. The size is alike, and the features are very near; but they are altered according to the image which I had formed of Kisto Lal.

Q. You went to England, I think you said, after your acquaintance with Kisto Lal?

A. Yes, the next year, in 1833, and remained two years.

Q. During these two years did Kisto Lal frequently recur to your memory?

A. Yes, I remembered him often.

Q. Were you much occupied at home?

A. Yes, I was occupied in settling my family affairs.

Q. Do you consider that absence and hurry of business are apt to weaken impressions or to strengthen them?

A. It is natural that they should weaken them.

Q. How often did you see Kisto Lal?

A. I can't say. He used to come daily for several weeks until I ordered him away.

Q. Do many other natives visit you?

A. A great number.

(Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.)—Q. Have you been many years in India?

A. Yes; I came out in 1819.

Q. I suppose you have had a good deal of experience in native physiognomy?

A. No; I have not studied it much, but I have had some experience.

Q. Before seeing the prisoner at the house had you any doubts of your being able to recognize him?

A. Yes, I had, because I knew that Kisto Lal was fair, and I had read in the papers that the prisoner was darker than the Rajah of Burdwan, whom I also knew to be fair; on that ground I formed doubts.

Q. Putting aside the fairness, had you any doubt?

A. Yes, I had a doubt, as it is now six years since I have seen him.

Q. Is your recollection of persons in general pretty good?

A. Not very; I frequently make mistakes.

Q. Do you judge from the features and complexion only?

A. Kisto Lal was very thin when I knew him, thinner than this man.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether Mr. Krukenberg had any opportunities of knowing Kisto Lal?

A. Yes; from what I heard from him he had opportunities of knowing Kisto Lal.

(Re-examined by the Magistrate.)—Q. You say that he was thinner. Do you think that living upon the fat of the land tends to make a man fatter or thinner?

A. I can't say. Medical men might tell better than I, but I should say stouter.

Q. Did Kisto Lal live like a Rajah, or in what style?

A. In a middling style. They were neither rich nor poor people.

Q. Would a native or a European recognize a native countenance best?

A. The natives know each other much better than we do.

At this stage of the business of the day Mr. Morton inquired if the native witnesses who had given evidence were detained and whether they were compelled to give security. The Magistrate replied, that several belonged to the Kishenaghur Kutcherry and must therefore be returned there; but that all gave security to appear before the Sessions Judge if called upon. The Court adjourned at about 2 o'clock for half an hour.

Ramchunder Biswas was called and said, that he felt himself very unwell, and that he could not give his depositions to day. Paul Christian, the next witness, was therefore called.

Paul Christian, son of Goun Mohun Chuckerbuty, lives at present at Gwar, Kishenaghur, zillah Nuddea, aged 28, profession a Catechist of the Church Missionary Society, sworn.—I have been living at Kishenaghur since the year 1833. Before 1833, I once went to Kishenaghur. I do not know Kisto Pauru, but I know one Kisto Lal Bismacharee, his father's name is Shamlal, alias Summanund Bramacharee. I do not know what profession he used to follow; but he had Kalee Thakoor in his house, and the people who came to worship used to give him something: the boats also which came to the Gunge used to give him a per centage or their goods and that was the way in which he lived. I knew Kisto Lal when he used to associate with Mr. Krukenberg and Mohas Chunder Pandit. His father took Mr. Krukenberg, Mohas Chunder and me into a room to the west of the place, where the image of Kalee was, and told us to sit there and argue with his son and that he should be well pleased. We did argue with the son, Kisto Lal, for about two Bengallee ghurries. When we went home the Padree said, that he had not discovered the religious principles of this man sufficiently, and that, therefore, we would go again next day. Next day we three went again, and on the following day we went again, and on the four succeeding days I myself went alone; and shortly after that Kisto Lal was not seen at Kishenaghur. After the death of Shamlal there was a pro clamoration, calling upon his heir to appear, and stating, that if he did not appear within 10 or 15 days, the property would be sold. From these seven interviews I have a recollection of Kisto Lal. The prisoner appears like Kisto Lal, and I saw him once in the Jail, but since then his face has grown much stouter; and when I saw him at Kishenaghur and in the Hooghly Jail, he had a beard, and his hair was turned up like that of a woman. Mohas, Pandit, and several gentlemen were with me when I went to Hooghly. I said at that interview, that the face was like that of Kisto Lal. On that occasion I told the Commissioner that this man was like Kisto Lal, but I could ascertain and that to a certainty, in the course of ten days. Mohas, Pandit, had asked him in Kishenaghur if he had not seen him once before at Telmarowe, in Burdwan. He laughed and replied, that must have been when I was in some former state of existence. I reminded him of this when I saw him in the jail. He did not reply, but his face got grave as though from fear. When the Commissioner first introduced me to Kisto at the jail, he then also showed signs of fear, and when told by the Commissioner to tie up his hair he would not do so. He is now much stouter and his colour darker, and the wrinkle in his face is deeper, otherwise he is precisely the same Kisto Lal, whom Shamlal Bramacharee pointed out to me as his own son. I do not know what his family name may be. I have heard in Kishenaghur

What Shamlal was called Shamlal Pauru, Padheca, Bramacharee. Bramacharee is his religious title. I saw him in Kishenaghur in the end of 1833 or beginning of 1834, but I cannot say in what month of 1836 I saw him in Hooghly Jail. I had not seen him for two years when I saw him in the Jail. I could recollect a man after two years. There is a little difference in my recollection, but I do not forget in that time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. Kisto Lal's face was darker in 1836 than when I saw him at Kishenaghur, and now he is stouter, and has wrinkles, which then he had not. Yes, I can swear that this is Kisto Lal, whom I saw in 1833. I have seen him in 1836 while the change which I have spoken of was taking place. He is not much changed, only a little.

I understand English, but I prefer giving evidence in Bengallee. I do not know whether the prisoner knew English; but when Padree Krukenberg spoke English, the man laughed, as if he understood what was being said. Padree Krukenberg and I generally spoke in Bengallee, but when he could not understand anything I explained it to him in English. Mohes Chunder Pundit, was present 3 times with me, but not the 4 times that I went alone. I do not know if he is alive, 3 months ago I received a letter stating that he was at Burdwan. I am quite sure that Mohes, Pundit, did not die 5 or 6 years ago. A Mohes pundit at Kishenaghur did die, but the one I speak of is an inhabitant of Burdwan. I did tell the Commissioner that the prisoner was exactly like Kisto Lal.

Q. Did you tell the Commissioner he was actually Kisto Lal?

A.—There were no questions asked me and I merely remarked that he was like Kisto Lal. After the interview, I considered the matter in my mind, and was satisfied, and I now swear positively that this is Kisto Lal. If I did not at the interview at the jail think this man was Kisto Lal, why should I say to the Commissioner that he was like Kisto Lal? Amongst the natives I have never yet seen two Bengalees perfectly like each other. There is always a difference. I did not ask him his age in 1833, but from his appearance at Kishenaghur he was about 32 or 33 years. His face changed from fear at the jail on my questioning him. I never saw him after the seven interviews. He disappeared in 1834. I do not know if any inquiry was made after his disappearance about 5 months ago. The proclamation was made desiring the heirs of Shamlal to appear. I never mentioned to any Bengallee that the Rajah was a false man. I had no occasion to do so. I was at Burdwan a catechist before I went to Kishenaghur. I resided at Konejenathsal. I had a house of my own. I was with Mr. Deerr and Mr. Whitebreck, the patrees. I left Burdwan in January 1833, and went to Kishenaghur. I went to Calcutta in 1837 to learn Greek. I went in 1833, two or three times to Calcutta. I do not know what respectable people are at Kishenaghur that know Kisto Lal Pauru. I told the Commissioner that I would inform him after 10 days, but as he did not write to me, I did not go. In what month I saw him in the jail I do not know. I did not know whether his trial had taken place or not. After I had left the Jail I heard from the people that sentence of six months' imprisonment had been passed on the Rajah.

I was present at the Jail, with Mohes, Pundit, the Commissioner, the Magistrate and Dr. Wise. The Commissioner sent for me to look at the prisoner. He did not tell me why I was to look at him. Kisto Lal lived to the west of his father's Thakoorbarree at Gwarree. The cutcherry is about half a mile distance from the place. How can I tell whether he is well known to the Police people or not. I don't know how long he had been there, but he was there when I first went to Kishenaghur.

We went to argue with him on religious points. We do so constantly to all. We argue in houses, in streets and in bazars. Of course I recollect a man with whom I had talked seven times very particularly on religious subjects, and in whose house I had been so often. I spoke to Mr. Krukenberg, who said that he had seen the prisoner and that he was of opinion that he was Kisto Lal. I said that was my opinion also.—Harkara, Sept. 17.

12TH SEPTEMBER 1838.

On the opening of the Court this-day, Mr. Morton applied for a list of the names of the remaining witnesses, which the Magistrate ordered to be supplied. Mr. Morton also inquired whether evidence would be received for the defence in this Court; to which the Magistrate replied, that that would rest with the prisoner's counsel, who might either bring forward their defence now or reserve it for the Sessions' Court.

Ramchunder Bissows sworn.—I have lived in the village of Goornee near Gwarree all my life. I know Kisto Lal Brammacharee, he lived in Gwarree. There were three brothers, Kisto Lal Gour Lal and Roop Lal; their father's name was Shamlal. I have known Kisto Lal since I was 12 years old, and we read Bengallee together in the same school. The school was in the village of Gwarree, in Ramchunder and Ramtunoo Badooree's house. We were about 4 or 5 years together in that school. We left the school in 1225 or 26. We were there when we were about 16 or 17 years of age. After that Kisto Lal studied the shasters under Hurroo Battachajree and Bhyrup Battachargee. These men are both dead. Kisto Lal remained there about four years; after that he read Persian with an old moonshie who lived at Gwarree near a house of Kasheerath Baboo's. The Collectory Nazir and Hurachunder Horro, a wakeel of the Civil Court at Kishenaghur. Tomechurn Ghose a wakeel of the Civil Court, Shamachurn Bonnerjee, mooktar, Joychunder sircar, mooktar, and I, were all fellow students of Kisto Lal's. Kisto Lal remained with this old moonshie 3 or 4 years; after that he went to the cutcherry and employed himself as an omedwar. I can't recollect how many years he continued to be an omedwar; but I know that he was an omedwar when Mr. Macfarlan was Magistrate and Shamlal Bose Sheristadar. After that, not procuring employment in the zillah, he went away to Burdwan and other places and used to return after two or three years. He had a concubine of the name of Sheebie Kusbee, a daughter of Dasseo Kusbee's. At that time he took to drinking very much, and we all abandoned his society. I have not seen him since for about five years. Shamlal was a Brammacharee and had an image of Kalee in his house. He used to get a percentage on the goods which the boats brought. When Kisto Lal was at home he lived in a room to the north and west of the Thakoorbaree. He was also an omedwar when Mr. Battey was Magistrate. Mr. Halkett has been a great many years in Kishenaghur. I don't know whether he was there then. I am perfectly well acquainted with Kisto Lal's features and appearance. His brother Gour Lal is alive and along with Kisto Lal. I can't say whether he is alive now of my own knowledge, but I hear that he goes about with Kisto Lal. If I saw Kisto Lal again I could recognize him. [The prisoner is then pointed out to the witness.] When the prisoner yesterday saw me his face grew dry through fear. He knows me well. He is Kisto Lal. He has now grown stouter. Kisto Lal's hair was shorter than this man's. He wore it short, not tied. It was as it is now, only that now it is long. I recollect that Kisto Lal had a mark upon his back. He got a fall from a horse and cut his back against a piece of kunkur in falling. Kisto Lal was then about 16 or 17 years old. To the north of Gwarree there is a jheel, and it was in that neighbourhood that he fell.

A Brahmin servant of Kisto Lal's came and told us, who were playing in the road, and we run and saw him. The horse was his father's. His father had a horse and a mare. Kisto Lal afterwards learned English. He studied all the sacred books, Christian, Mussulman and Hindoo; but from whom he learnt, I do not know. He used to sit in his own room and read English. He was also acquainted with astronomy. I did not know any of his uncles. I do not recollect whether he was convicted or not, but an uncle of his was a notorious dacoit. From his bad reputation his nephew Kisto Lal could not get employment. Shamlal Bhowe had written a perwana of appointment, but it was again taken away.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I saw the wound on Kisto Lal's back and a great many people in Gwaree have also seen it. I do not now recollect on what part of the back it is, whether to the right or left, above or below. It was not considered a dangerous wound. I don't know how long he was ill. I went to Calcutta immediately after the accident. He was not insensible from the fall. The Brahmin who was with him, led him home. I have not seen that mark since. I can't say whether he has now any mark from that wound. It is now 18 or 19 years since the accident happened. I do not know whether the mark of the wound remained a month or whether there was any mark. I do not know English, but I can tell an English book when I see it. Shamlal was not a wealthy man, he was neither rich nor poor. The horses were small ones (tatoos) and fed on the common. When he went to visit his disciples, he was obliged to have a horse to carry him about the country. Kisto Lal used to ride now and then. There was a marriage procession; the horse started at the noise and threw him. He frequently went to Calcutta and lived in our house in the Chor Bagan. This house I have since sold to Sonatun Mullick. I don't know whether Kisto Lal ever went to Hurromohun Takkor, in Calcutta, or to Cossinanth Bosc's. I don't know how he went to Calcutta. When he came to us, he used to be in a teeka palkee. Shamlal was frequently in Calcutta. Shamlal was a Brahmacharee. I don't know where he lived in Calcutta. Formerly I used to go once a year to Calcutta; since 1238 I have sold my house and not gone. I have been in Calcutta twice since then; but have not been in the same house. In one of my visits I lived in Gurranhatta with one Radhamohun Bannerjee, and the other time I transacted my business and returned the same day. Radhamohun has a son. For one year I have been out of employ. I was a trader but in 1236 my golah and office were burnt down. I read Persian in 1227 or 28, under the old Moonshee. When Kisto Lal was in the Foujdarry Balakhana I heard that he sometimes tied his hair in a knot; when I knew him he did not tie his hair in a knot. The prisoner and my-elf are of the same age, 35 or 36. I know Kisto Lal very well and all the people in Gwaree know him well too. We used to read and write together, and we were so intimate that when he went to visit his concubine I went too. His colour was clearer when I knew him, and there were not so many wrinkles on his face. His hair was longer and he was shorter.

Ramtunoo Bhadooree, sworn.—I have lived all my life in Gwaree. I know Kisto Lal. I have known him from a year or two after Mr. Elliott left the district until 1240. My house was about four or five russees from his. The public road ran in front of his Thakoorbarree and I frequently saw him. I have not seen him for four or five years, but I recollect his face as it then was. I should be able to recognize him. The prisoner shown to witness. Kisto Lal was like this man, the prisoner, but the colour of this man is not so clear as Kisto Lal's. I cannot say precisely whether this is Kisto Lal or not, the colour of the face is so different Isser Chunder Chatterjee, sworn.—I have lived in Gwaree all my life. I know Bistololl Krahmacharee of Gwaree. I have known him since he came to Gwaree about 25 years since. I knew him at school. We did not learn writing at the same school. My house also is near his and I used to see him passing frequently. I could recognize him were I to see him again. [The prisoner is here pointed out to the witness.] The name of this prisoner is Kisto Lal. He is the son of Shamlal Brahmacharee. I know him well.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—We were very intimate. I used to call Shamlal brother, and Kisto Lal used to call me uncle. I have not seen Kisto Lal for five or six years until this day. He has grown stouter during the last five years. Kisto Lal is eight or nine years younger than I. He knew Bengalee well, and he read the shastres and also Persian. We used to go occasionally to the kranee at the English school, but whether he could read or not I don't know. I am not aware whether he could read English or not. When gentlemen visited the Thakoorbarree he used to go out and speak to them in English—at least I supposed that it was English. He was a respectable man. He had a mild temper. I do not know whether he used to drink wine or not. He had a mark on his back by falling from a horse. I have not seen it for 20 or 22 years. The mark was on the back, but I don't recollect whether it was on the right or left. I have not seen it for many years, but I believe it was above. The mark remained for 16 or 17 years. The wound was about one month in healing. A Kobraj attended him. He spoke to me when I went into the house. I don't recollect whether he had any other mark on his body. I rather think he had six toes on one of his feet.

Gunga Gobind Bannerjee, sworn.—I am aged 35 or 36. I have lived all my life in Gwaree. I know Kisto Lal of Gwaree; his house was about 10 or 12 russees from mine. I was acquainted with him. We used to write together in the village of Gwaree. About 100 of us used to write together at Thakoorbarree Sircar's. We used to read the shastres together at Hurro and Bhyrup Bittacharjee's. We used to read Persian together at an old Moonshee's in Gwaree. After this Kisto Lal began to frequent the cutcherry. I have not seen him for about six years. I could recognize him were I to see him again. [The prisoner is here pointed out to witness.] His (the prisoner's) name is Kisto Lal Brahmacharee. He is the same Kisto Lal with whom I was at school. I am quite sure that he is the son of Shamlal.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I am now a trader. I have always been a trader. The bazars of Gwaree are about a quarter of a kos apart. Kisto Lal was not born in Gwaree. When I first knew him, he was about 11 or 12 years old; and he may then have been in Gwaree six months or a year. I knew his father. There were one or two people like Sunyassees who used to live with him. I continued to know Kisto Lal after leaving school. I was above him in rank. He studied in the hopes of obtaining a darogahship. I was not able to study as he did, having the affairs of my family to manage. My education is not so good as his. My acquaintance with him was continued up to within the last 5 or 6 years. I always remained at home in Gwaree. Kisto Lal was at one time away for 8 or 10 years. I did not see him during those 8 or 10 years. Where he went I do not know, but he did not come to Gwaree during that period. It is about 16 years since he went away. After his return, his brother Roop Lal died, and then, after six months, he went away for the last time. It may be about seven years since Roop Lal died. He (prisoner) is a little stouter than he used to be. I know the last witness Isserchunder Chatterjee. His house is about 10 or 12 russees from the prisoner's. He (the prisoner) used to be fond of wine and bang. He was not a Brahmin such as we. When we used to write together, then he had no such vices. He was not rich. He had two or three horses, but no carriage. When his brother died, he used to keep his hair in a roll on the top of his head. Before this he used to wear it short and on his neck. Gour Lal and Kisto Lal left their home altogether after the death of their brother.

Muddun Chuckerbutty, sworn.—I have lived in Gwaree during my whole life. I know Kisto Lal Brahmacharee. I have known him since I was eleven or 12 years old. I have not seen him for five or six years. We used to learn to read and write together. I could recognize him where I to see him again. I see him in Court. That is he (pointing to the prisoner.) I am quite certain that is he.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I arrived at Hooghly yesterday. I saw the prisoner yesterday come to cutcherry. My house is at Gwaree. Before those five or six years he used to be absent frequently for a year or six months and so on. There was astonishment and people asked where he had gone to. They didn't know where he had gone to. They didn't know that he was dead. The property since Sham Lal's death has been attached by the Civil Court for want of heirs. I don't know whether there has been any proclamation. I have been attached for five or six months. When Sham Lal died, no one could say where he (the prisoner) had gone or what had become of him. I was not in Gwaree when the prisoner was at Bancorah. I don't know whether any report had reached the village then, of the prisoner being Kisto Lal. I do not know whether the people there then knew that Kisto Lal and the Isharee (pretended) Rajah were the same. I heard of it on my return last year. I had a disciple at Nattore, and went to attend him. I was about five or seven months at Nattore. I perform the business of a Purohit. I know the brothers. One died in Gwaree, and I have heard that the other is also dead. There are none of his relations alive in that part of the country. What there may be in other parts I don't know.

Premchand Banerjee, Nazir of the Magistrate's Court in Kishenaghur. I came to Kishenaghur in 1823 with Mr. Macfarlan and was employed in 1825 as a daroga. About 7 years ago. I was promoted to the office of Nazir by Mr. Peplow Smith. The Government kutcherry is, as it were, in the village of Gwaree. I know the respectable inhabitants of Gwaree. I have seen one Kisto Lal Brahmacharee, son of Sham Lal Brahmacharee. When I first went with Mr. Macfarlan to Kishenaghur, Kisto Lal used then to attend the cutcherry as an omedwar. After this I was at one time for about two years employed as kutwal of the station, and at another time for one year, and I then used to see him very frequently, sometimes in the cutcherry sometimes in a Kaleeharee. There were some gentlemen, East Indians I believe, who had pitched a tent near his house, and who created a disturbance there. A man of his informed me, and as I was then kutwal I went there and apprehended three gentlemen with their servants, and brought them before Mr. Macfarlan. Mr. Macfarlan ordered me to keep an eye upon the gentlemen in the tent, and during the few days that I was so employed, Kisto Lal and Gour Lal were constantly coming to me. Afterwards I was promoted to the Nazirship, and about one year or two years after my promotion, he left off attending as an omedwar for a darogaship and became a Brahmacharee, planting some trees behind his house in imitation of a forest. He then turned a Sunyasee and we heard that he sometimes sat upon dead bodies, and that he lived upon half a chattrak of honey per day. The collectory Sheristadar, Weelrutten Haider, used sometimes to receive his visits and I heard of him from him. In Mr. Macfarlan's time he was once appointed darogah of Santipore. I am not sure whether he was one day in the thana, or whether he was recalled on the road; but Sham Lal Bose, who was then Sheristadar, informed the Magistrate that he was a bad man that he drank wine, and frequented houses of bad character, and he was dismissed. I saw him when he returned on that occasion. I did not see him as an omedwar in Mr. Halkett's time; but I heard that in Mr. Battye's time his father had once taken him to Mr. Battye's. I have not seen him for 4½, 5 or 5½ years. I cannot speak with precision. I could tell him were I to see him. [The prisoner is here shown to the witness.] The appearance of this man is that of Kisto Lal and I believe this man to be Kisto Lal.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—It is about 13 years since Mr. Macfarlan saw this prisoner. I cannot say whether he could recognize him now. He appeared to be 30 or 31 when I last saw him. In every thing he resembles Kisto Lal, his walk his hair, every thing are the same. I believe him to be Kisto Lal; but how can I swear positively? I have no doubt in my own mind that he is Kisto Lal; but when he has put forth such a serious claim, how can I swear positively? The prisoner is stouter since I last saw him. Kisto Lal knew Persian. He knew Bengallee also, and when he returned from Santipore I heard that he began to learn English. Kishenaghur is six coss from Santipore. There has been a proclamation and the property of Sham Lal is now in my charge. It came into my charge about three or four months ago. I heard of no enquiry as to Kisto Lal being alive or dead. When this proclamation was issued, the Santipore darogah was either Pazeeruddien or Kisubdeb Mukerjee or Rankisen Mizen, I don't know which. I heard that the defendant, as Izaree Rajah, had come to Santipore and that there were many people with him, and that the Magistrate had apprehended him. I can't say whether any people went from Nuddia or not to see him. When I went to Calcutta last year, I went about 4 past 6 or seven in the morning to a place called Anetola, for the purpose of bathing. When I came upon the platform of the ghaut, I saw about 100 people accompanying a man in a tongjohn with a sirpech on his head, and the women were all securing out as they do at a marriage. Thinking that some great man was coming, I stood there. When he came near, his appearance from the chest upwards struck me as being like Kisto Lal's. He fixed his gaze on me and I did the same on him, until he had past. A chobdar came running from the tongjohn towards me, apparently for the purpose of calling me, but another chobdar came and called him back, and when I got back to Kishenaghur I told the present Magistrate, Mr. Steer, of the circumstance. This was in the month of Kartik last. The defendant is the man whom I saw in the tongjohn. I told the Magistrate when I saw him, that I had seen Kisto Lal as the Isharee Rajah at Calcutta. I believed that it was Kisto Lal from his countenance and his looking so long at me. I am a servant, I informed the Magistrate of the circumstance of Kisto Lal's being alive, what further steps could I take?

Ramchunder Roy, sworn.—I am Tus-eeldar of the Khas Mehals. I have been in Government service for 18 or 19 years in the Zilla of Nuddia. I have at times seen Kisto Lal Brahmacharee. I used to go to the house in the evening, to worship an image of Kalee, which was there, and I used to see him there. When he attended as an omedwar, I used frequently to see him upon the road, but I was not then employed under the Magistrate, but under the Law Officer of the assistant. I recollect his face and features, but I have not seen him for six or seven years. Without seeing him I can't say whether I could recognize him or not. [The prisoner is here shown to the witness.] His, the prisoner's, features are those of the Brahmacharee, but his colour is now darker and he is fatter. This is like the man; but I can't speak with precision; the reason is that I have not seen him for six or seven years; that his colour is darker, and that he is stouter. I suspect this to be Kisto Lal. I was not in the Magistrate's Court at Nuddia when the man came there as an omedwar.

Brejombhun Mahajee, sworn.—I am Peshkar of the Magistrate's Court at Nuddia. I have been in the service of Government in the Nuddia Zilla for 23 or 24 years. During that time I have known a person of the name of Kisto Lal Brahmacharree. I sometimes met him in cutcherry sometimes in his house. I can't say exactly how often I saw him; but very frequently. I recollect his appearance and his features. I could recognize him were I to see him again. (Looks at the prisoner.) His name is Kisto Lal son of Shamlal Brahmacharree. I could not swear positively that this is Kisto Lal, but these are his features, and that is his appearance. I can't say precisely now, because the colour of the face is changed, and he is a little stouter, and it is five or six years since I saw him. I have seen him at cutcherry in clothes such as we wear and in a dhotee or chudder. I never saw him at Nuddia in such clothes as those he now wears.

Neelcomul Bose, sworn.—I am a Sheristadar of the Magistrate's Court at Nuddia, and have been in the service of Government in the Nuddia Zilla for 29 or 30 years, but during this time I was two or three years Sheristadar at Burisal. I have seen one Kisto Lal Brahmacharree of Gwaree, a son of Shamlal. Kisto Lal was the son of a Sanyassee and not fit to sit in our society, but I have sometimes seen him in the Cutcherree, sometimes at the Magistrate's house, sometimes in the road and sometimes in his father's Thakurbarri. I was two or three years at Burisal and shortly after my return he went away, and I have not since seen him, that is now five or six years ago. When I see him I shall be able to say whether I can recognize him. (Prisoner is here shown to witness.) As I saw Shamlal's son Kisto Lal, in features and appearance, this man seems like him. The prisoner is the same with the image of Kisto Lal which is impressed upon my recollection. When he went about at Kishenagur he was like the generality of people, there was nothing about him resembling a Rajah. He never there called himself either a Rajah, or a Nabob, or a King.

Cross-Examined by Mr. Morton.—Kisto Lal sometimes spoke to me in cutcherry or on the road, and asked me to do something for him. Before I went to Burisal I was not Sheristadar. There were the same number of ones and twos as there generally are, viz. 10 or 12. I went to Burisal I think in 1826. After my return I saw Kisto Lal several times, but not so often as before. Sham Lal Bose may be in Calcutta in all probability. I can't say whether he could recognize the prisoner or not.

Buddinath Buxee, sworn.—I am Meer Munshee of the Magistrate's Court at Nuddia. I have been in the Government service in Nuddia since 1823. I have sometimes seen Kisto Lal the son of Shamlal, when he came as an omendwar to the Court or to the Magistrate's house; but my own house is about a mile or a mile and a half from Gwaree. I could not say how often I have seen the prisoner. I have not seen him frequently. I recollect so much that he was tall of stature and rather thin, and his colour was fair. I have not such a recollection of him as to be able to recognize him again. The stature was the same as the prisoner, but the man is stouter than the other and the colour different. —Hurkaru, Sept. 18.

SEPTEMBER 14, 1838.

[The Court did not sit yesterday (Thursday) owing to the prisoner's counsel and attorney having gone to Calcutta.]

Terry Churn Nye Ruttun, Pandit and Sudder Ameen, in Zillah Burdwan, sworn.—I reside in Ambooa (Culna). In the month of Poos 1217, I was in Culna in my own house. In that month the Bajah Pertaub Chund died there, and the unterjullas was performed. I saw it with my own eyes. At the time of death, I was standing near the body. There was no deception in his death. He had become powerless from fever and died from the effects of it. A pile was afterwards prepared. When the corpse was on the pile, I saw it. Being of a different caste we do not go near the pile, and I stood about 15 or 16 yards off. The face was uncovered when on the pile. After the body had been laid down, fire was applied and the whole burnt. When the corpse was laid upon the pile, wood was heaped upon the body and the features were no longer visible. When the corpse was being carried away, then I saw it; when it was taken to be placed on the pile, then I saw it; but when it was on the pile I was at some distance and could not see it. There were a great many people about the pile. Who fired it or who burnt the body I do not recollect. The fire was applied, the pile lighted and we came away; we did not remain to the end. The pile was no height from the ground. I did not measure it, and I will not guess what the height may have been, lest I should tell a falsehood. It was not of course in the power of a dead man to fly from the pile; neither was it possible for a living man to escape from that pile without our being aware of it. There was no deception in the incrimination of the Rajah's corpse. He who is dead cannot deceive. I have no connexion with the Burdwan Rajbarree. On the contrary, the Rajah and I are at enmity on several points, and we have several suits against each other. I have frequently seen the Rajah Pertaub Chund during his life time, both in the Rajbarree and on the road; he was constantly passing my lodging at Burdwan. I recollect his features distinctly. I do not know who this defendant is; there is no resemblance between him and the Rajah Pertaub Chund. He who has once died, can never come to life again.

Cross examined by Mr. Morton.—I went to the Rajbarree at various times in Pertaub's life time, to see religious festivals and tamashas of all sorts and to attend the parties which used to be given; now I do not go to the nautches. I am a Government servant. I have not been in the Rajbarree at all for two or three months, and I have never attended a nautch since I was in the Government service. I sometimes go now for a religious festival or an interview. I go to see the Rajah and also Poraun Baboo. I have never been employed as a Pandit in the Rajbarree. I have been there with other Pandits to assist in religious ceremonies. I have never been in the service of the Rajah at Ambooa for a single day. I have never been in any service except that of Government. I have been a Sudder Ameen since July 1822. I have no quarrel with the present Rajah. My quarrel was with Tej Chunder and Pertaub Chund. I have had one suit with the Ranees of Pertaub, for the revenue of some lands, in which I got 1,800 rupees by arbitration from the present Rajah. I have no suit now pending. I have a quarrel with Poraun Baboo and the present Rajah about a garden and there will be a suit about it. I have no friendship with the Rajah and Poraun Baboo, but, on the contrary, there is a quarrel. Our quarrel is about land and there is no chance of my being disgraced, and therefore I still go there. There is no friendship between Poraun Baboo and I; but the quarrel is between the Rajah and myself. Poraun Baboo is merely the Rajah's agent. I know the name of Duckinund Babo; but I have no intercourse with him. I have never met Duckinund Baboo. I have never met Ruseick Lal Mullick, and never conversed with him. I never myself said to Poraun Baboo or to any one, that I would come to give evidence; and I never heard of any one doing so. I live in Hooghly with Rajkissen Kobraj. I have never gone to the Rajbarree at Churnurrah. The Judge (of Burdwan) sent me to give evidence at the request of the Magistrate of Hooghly. I made a petition on being subpoenaed, to be excused; but the Judge insisted on my going. My house is at Culna. I had no employment when the Rajah died. I was living at home. There was a noise—people began to weep. I went out at the time when the Rajah's sallow was proceeding to the banks of the river. I cannot now recollect how many ghurrees, this was before the death. I am a Brahmin, he was a Ketric, it was not therefore proper for me to stand nearer than 14 or 15 haths after the death. I have already said that he did actually die and I swear that he died before my own eyes. I cannot now recollect whether there was a moon that night or not, nor exactly the hour at which he died. It must have been about one puhur. I cannot recollect at this distance of time whether it was light or dark. There were musalls and lanterns around, by their light I could see. When the pile was burning I could see by the light of that. I do not understand a word of English. I have never seen the Rajah's munim puthee, but at the time of his death, he appeared to be under 30. I saw his features at the time of his death and also when they were carrying him to the pile. He died on the edge of the river opposite the Culna maidan. He was carried to the pile some time after his death. He died near the ghaut, below the Rajah's great tank. The ghaut has no name that I know of. A tapor vat is on the side of the tank. I have never heard the name of the ghaut. I do not know whether it is called the Tuppa ghaut or not. I and my ancestors have always resided in Culna. The ghaut is to the west of the Gunga. There were no large trees near the ghaut. Whether there were any others or not I cannot recollect. Rajah Tej Chunder was in his own house, but he did not come to the bank on his son's death. I was at the time full of grief for the Rajah's death. Who went with him or who did not, I cannot tell. There were a great number of people who went with me, but I did not recollect their names. My house is in Neebparra in Culna. I have not measured the distance from Neebparra to the ghaut, but it may be about two or three chow flights, perhaps more. There is only one Neebparra in Culna. It was near enough to enable one to hear the noise when they took the Rajah out. Neebparra is about half a mile from the Rajbarree. The Rajbarree is not between Neebparra and the ghaut. The ghaut is nearer to Neebparra than to the Rajbarree. I know Kazeo Russool Bukah. I have not seen his intimacy with Pertaub myself, but his house is in Burdwan and he probably knew him.

Kaleo Doss Sheib Bhaom, sworn.—I am the son of Ram Siddha Bhattacharjee, and reside at Ambooa, (Culna). I was in Ambooa in the month of Pous 1227. The Rajah Pertaub Chund had been taken ill in Burdwan and came to Ambooa. He died in Ambooa. When the unterjullie was being performed, I was near to him. When he was lying ill in the Rajbarree I went to perform the sutum, and saw him. He was then very ill and had no strength. When the unterjullie was being performed his appearance was that of a man at the point of death (shish). I saw him die with my own eyes. I was 2 or 4 cubits off when he died. I could see the face of the corpse at the time of death. He really died; there was no deception. When the corpse was being washed according to custom, I then saw the face also. The face which I then saw was that of a dead man. When the corpse was burning, I was at some distance: when the corpse was placed upon the pile, I was 10 or 12 cubits off. There was then no cloth on the face of the corpse. I was sitting in a house on the top of the bank when the pile was burning. There might have been more than 5 or 700 spectators there. I can't exactly say how high the pile was. It might have been one cubit. I think it may have been a cubit. It was quite impossible that any body should escape from below the pile. I don't recollect what people said at the time of his death. Some low people said he was not dead. I did not hear this direct from any one but through report. I had no such suspicion, as he died before my own eyes. I had frequently met Rajah Pertaub Chund before his death. I recollect his features. I do not know the defendant. No, he is not the Rajah Pertaub Chund.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—The last witness was my nephew. We were out together at the time of the funeral. The house I said I was sitting in was 20 cubits from the pile. It was the house of one Lochun Dutt. He is still alive. We could not see the pile from the house. We could see the flame. The house was a little back from the edge of the bank. I went into that house, a little after the performance of the ceremony of the unterjullie. Besides at the period of death, I saw the corpse when it had been removed a little distance. The corpse was brought nearer the house than the pile. I did not see the corpse for about six ghurrees before the burning. It is not proper for me to stand near the corpse of a man of different caste. I am a Bengallee, he was a Khotta Ketric.

Bishnauth sircar, sworn.—I am the son of Nassy Ram, sircar, and live at Ambooa. I am tax-mohurrer. I was at Ambooa in Pous 1227. I saw the Rajah Pertaub Chund during that month in Ambooa, when he came from Burdwan. I saw him during his illness. He was then very weak. There was no deception. He was really ill. The Rajah died. Hearing that the Rajah had gone to the Ganges, I and Budden Bonnerjee went down to the river at about ten ghurries, and saw that they were performing the unterjullie; when he died I was about 15 cubits off. The night was dark and there were torches. I could see the face of the dead. The face was that of a dead man and his whole frame. I am quite certain that he died and that there was no deception. I was not present at the burning of the corpse. Seeing him dead, I went away. I saw the young Rajah, in Mr. Martin's time, about 10 or 15 times. I recollect his form and features. I do not know the defendant. Rajah Pertaub Chund died before me, how can this be he?

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I went away immediately after his death. I did not come nearer than 15 cubits.

Pramnath Mookerjee, Saistadar of the Civil Court at Kishenaghur, sworn.—I have served the Government in Nuddia altogether 28 years, during that time I was six years at other stations, viz 2 years at Moorshedabad, 3 years in Jessore, and one year in the Calcutta Court. During my service in Nuddia I was acquainted with a man named Kisto Lal Brahmacharree. I have seen him in the bazar, on the roads, in the kutcherry and at his father's Thakoorbarree. His father's name was Shamlal Brahmacharree. I have not seen him for 6 or 7 years. Before this I was frequently in the habit of seeing him. His father used to get a rupee from each of us in the year, and used to live by his Thakoorbarree, and his son Kisto Lal used to be a omedwar in the Criminal Court. I recollect the features of Kisto Lal. Were I to see him again I could say whether I am able to recognize him or not. (The prisoner is here shown to witness). Yes, I firmly believe this man to be Kisto Lal, and this person is also extremely like the father of Kisto Lal, Shamlal, who died this year. He is not so fair and his face is younger, but features are very like. His (the prisoner's) face is stouter and his whole form is stouter since I saw him last, and his colour is more dirty than it was then. The reason why I do not swear positively, is that he has changed as I have mentioned, and that I have not seen him for a long time, I could not say that he was not Kisto Lal. I do not know what became of him during the 5 or 6 years that I have not seen him.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I have seen him to-day about 9 o'clock in the jail, and until then I have not seen him again. No, I have no reason to be unwilling to mention this. I have seen him before in plain clothes and wished to see him again in the jail to the same. How should I know whether I was to be shown the same defendant in the Court as I saw at the jail. I said I should tell when I saw him. I went with the Sheristadar and the jail officers. I knew that in all probability, it would be the same as I had seen in jail, but when asked if I could recognize him, he was sitting down and I could not see him. There was some conversation between the Sheristadar and me, he asking if I should recognize the face. I asked what the Sheristadar, Nazir and Peshkars, who had been before, had said; and he answered that they said what they knew. I had no necessity for asking more; it was merely a remark in the midst of conversation.

Re-examined by the Magistrate.—The Magistrate ordered the Sheristadar and me to go to the jail. I was near the catcherry and the Sheristadar told the Magistrate that I wanted to see the prisoner before I gave my evidence, and the Magistrate then ordered the Sheristadar to take me.

Hurchander Hutra, Vakeel, sworn.—I have been 20 years in Nuddea. I have seen Kisto Lal Brahmacharee in Nuddea during these 20 years. I have not seen him for I think about 7 or 8 years. Before that I have seen him in Gwatee. I met him in his house at Gwatee. I cannot say exactly how many times. I saw him frequently. I used to converse with him when I went there. Before the last time of his going, he once before went away for about 2 or 3 years. Before that departure of his, we used to converse frequently, but after he returned he had become much more reserved and used to sit in a chair in his own room. We used to see him in our way back from the Catcherry. I can tell his face when I see him. [Witness looks at the prisoner.] The face of this person appears to me to be like his; but it is somewhat changed. The face has become blacker, it used to be more yellow. I believe this to be Kisto Lal. I have seen him to-day before, in the jail. I had then the same opinion. I do not know where he has been during the last seven or eight years.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—He was at home about one year and a half before he went away finally. Previous to that, he had gone about two years. That was 10 or 11 years ago. I had no conversation with the prisoner in jail. I have not conversed with him for about 8 or 9 years.

Tarknee Pershad Ghose, vakeel, sworn.—I have resided in Nuddea since the year 1227. I have seen Kisto Lal Brahmacharee, the son of Sham Lal, in Nuddea from the year 1228 to 1238, or perhaps 1239. I associated with him. I recollect his appearance well. I went this morning with the Foujdary Sheristadar into the jail for the purpose of seeing the prisoner. I cannot say with certainty who the prisoner was that was pointed out to me. The prisoner at the bar, is the person I saw in the jail. I have heard that this case is to prove whether the prisoner is Pertaub Chund or Kisto Lal. The face of the prisoner is stouter than that of Kisto Lal. I do not see any other difference. I have not seen Kisto Lal for about 6 or 7 years.

Joychund, sircar, Mooktar of the Nuddea Court, sworn.—My house is in Nuddea, and I have always resided in that zillah. My house is in Gwatee. When Kisto Lal was there I was acquainted with him. He frequently came to the catcherry as an omedwar and we also frequently met. His house and mine are about a quarter of a mile apart. I recollect his appearance and features. I have not seen him for seven or eight years. I went to the jail this-morning to see a prisoner. I cannot say with certainty that I know the prisoner. When I last saw him, Kisto Lal might be about 30 or 32 and his colour was clear and he was thinner than this man. The prisoner at the bar is the person I saw in the jail this-morning. I cannot say clearly who this is. The stature is the same as Kisto Lal's; but in colour and stoutness they differ. I cannot say that this is not Kisto Lal as I have not seen him for 8 years.

15TH SEPTEMBER, 1838.

This-morning the Court assembled; but there were no witnesses in attendance, and the Magistrate stated that he did not expect them to be in attendance until Monday next. Some conversation then ensued relative to the subpoenaing of witnesses for the defence. A list of witnesses had, it appeared, already been entered by Mr. Graham, and the Magistrate stated that the subpoenas were ready, and would be issued whenever the prisoner's Counsel wished. Mr. Morton, however, requested leave to withdraw the list of witnesses for the present, and desired time until Wednesday next, to determine upon the line of defence to be adopted. There were also several questions put by the Counsel relative to the practice of the Mofussil Courts in taking the defence of a prisoner. The Magistrate informed Mr. Morton, that it rested with himself to enter upon the defence before this Court or before that of the Session Judge, and assured him that he was at liberty to subpoena witnesses at any stage of the proceedings after the defence commenced, either in this Court or in that of the Judge. It was finally agreed that the Court should not meet again until Wednesday morning, when some witnesses for the prosecution are expected from Calcutta.—Hutchins, September 19.

19TH SEPTEMBER, 1838.

Biboo Ramgopal Mookerjee, sworn.—I have resided 20 years in Nuddea. I have seen Kisto Lal in Nuddea. When Kisto Lal was at school, I was there with him. We used to read together at an old Moonshee's in Gwatee. We used also frequently to see Sham Lal at the Thakoorbaree. I have also seen Kisto Lal when he was an omedwar in the time of Mr. Turnbull and Mr. Macfarlan. After this I did not see him for some time, but about five or six years ago, he was at home for several months and I then saw him. I recollect the appearance of Kisto Lal Brahmacharee. That is the countenance of Kisto Lal. From the exactness of the countenance I know him to be Kisto Lal. After his leaving Nuddea, I saw Kisto Lal twice in Calcutta. Once when I saw him in Calcutta, Mr. Graham was present, and Dr. Fuller and some other people, whose names I don't recollect. I told Mr. Graham that before hearing him speak I suspected him to be Kisto Lal, but after hearing him the little doubt which I had, fled. I have met Sham Lal during the last five or six years, his house is close to mine. After seeing Kisto Lal the first time in Calcutta, when he had been unable to speak to me, his father Sham Lal told me not to be angry at this, that he would speak to me at some other time, and that he would soon be a Rajah. After this Sham Lal died. Sham Lal previous to this used to say to other people, that his son would be a Rajah. A Brahmin lived in the house with me who was a great friend of Sham Lal's and he told me that strong measures were being taken to insure Kisto Lal's becoming a Rajah, and that if I would join in the scheme I should profit much by it. The Brahmin told me that if Kisto Lal got the Burdwan Rajah I should be his dewan. Kisto Lal had two brothers, Gour Lal and Roop Lal. Roop Lal died about the English year 1832 or 1833. Gour

Lal also went up with Kisto Lal when he left the house. Kisto Lal when he came back for five or six months, used to remain in the Thakoorbaree and eat nothing except a little ghee and honey. He at that time used only to go out in the evening, but when his brother Roop Lal died, I went into his house to see him, his mother being full of grief; and I asked him why he had left off being an omedwar in the Courts, and he said, that he had got nothing and would now see what he could get by worshipping Kallee; but I did not then hear from his mouth that he was after this business. I used for some time to allow his mother two rupees per month in Calcutta. Keylass Deb Roy and Sreenath Baboo were there. Kisto Lal was then in another house. They sent information to him to say that two Baboos from Mihrpoor had come to see him, and Keylass Deb Roy took me into a room and began to question me about Kisto Lal. I said that there was no use speaking of this to him. When Keylass Deb Roy and were together in the room, Kisto Lal came out of the other house and sat down in a large house which was there. I went and sat upon a chair in that large house to the left of him. The moment he saw me he whispered something to a person who was to the right of him and rose up and went out by another way. I went after him when he rose, and said, are we then to have our rookshut, and he merely said chuls apne (go yourself) and went on. A little while after Sreenath Baboo or Keylass Deb Roy, I don't exactly recollect which, came to me and said, "listen to something we have to say." I said no, we have no necessity for speaking with you—and went away to our own homes. Having great suspicion from this circumstance, I mentioned it to Dr. Fuller at Kishenaghur, and when Dr. Fuller went to Calcutta, he lived with Mr. Graham and told him this; in consequence of which Dr. Fuller sent for me to Mr. Graham's house, from whence I was taken to this place.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I am a Sudder farmer under the Court of Wards, and pay revenue to the amount of a lach and a half of rupees. My house is in Beernuggur, I was once darogah of the toll ghant at Gwaree. It was a Government employment. In 1833 when there was a mad gentleman. Mr. Lane Magnier, in the office, the river became dry and the revenue fell short, and he suspended me in order to inquire into it. The darogahship of these tolls was abolished and it was placed under the Superintendent. I was fully acquitted on trial, and an order was passed that I should get any future employment that might be vacant. Mr. Martin gave that order. That case was pending a long time and was only finished in May 1837; since that I have not had employment as there has been no vacancy. I presented a petition and the Collector directed that I should have the first vacant employment. After being suspended I took the form of Koonwur Hurinath, which is under the Court of Wards with a sudder jumma of 89,000 odd hundred rupees, and I also took the farm of Rajah Jupubhoosan Deb Roy, under the Court of Wards, with a sudder jumma of 69,595 rupees. Bamun Dutt Mookerjee and others are my securities for one, and Muhooranath Mookerjee for the other. The profits are my own according to the agreement which I have made. I do not hold these benames. In Plassy I have 4,206, and in Jessore 2,200 rupees. This is all my own clear profit. When we were at school together then we often met. We had not many interviews when he returned for 5 or 6 months. We met seldom. He is not equal to us in rank, but when we were at school together we were friends. I cannot say whether Shamlal ever saw Kisto Lal in the character of Pertaub. When I returned from Calcutta Shamlal spoke to me of his son being quickly Rajah. No, he never said that his son had assumed the character of Pertaub Chund. He said he would quickly be Rajah. It was not merely to me that Shamlal said this; I have heard that he mentioned it to others; but when he did he used to call them into the house and say it privately to them. There was no one there when he said this to me. I have already said that he mentioned it to an old Brahmin named Ramdhun Bidobaj's who is since dead. I have heard that he also told it to others. He was a weak old man and whom ever he thought his friends to them he used to mention it. The first time he remarked that I must not be angry, and it was out of this remark that the other arose. When I returned to Kishenaghur I mentioned that I had seen Kisto Lal and that he had not spoken to me, and hearing this Shamlal sent for me. The Kishenaghur people all say that he is Kisto Lal but those who go to see him say so with certainty. Formerly a few people used to talk of this in Kishenaghur, now, since the Umiah have returned from giving evidence at Hooghly, it has become notorious. All did not know it two years ago, but those to whom Shamlal mentioned it of course heard it. The Brahmin was a servant of my own. He was an old man. Shamlal was an old man and they were constantly together. He said that Shamlal had told him that if I would assist I should be Dewan, I thought the offer that of a fool. I knew that it could never be, therefore I did not agree. Shamlal died two or three months after I last saw him. Shamlal died about October or December of last year. I arrived in Kishenaghur a day or two before Shamlal's death and left it a few days after. There has been a proclamation and the property is now in charge of the Civil Court. I mentioned all about Kisto Lal when the proclamation was made. I mentioned the circumstance at Mr. Graham's. I can't exactly say whether I mentioned it to any person about the Courts or not. I told all my friends of it in private conversation. When I first saw Kisto Lal, I did not hear his voice; on the second occasion I heard this voice myself and then my doubts vanished. When he said to me "go," the sound of his voice was very slight. When Kisto Lal went inside, I thought he might wish to see me inside of his house. I had scarcely had a glimpse of him and with hopes that I might be called in, I said, "then are we to have rookshut?" At that time I was in a state of astonishment and he entered as a Rajah. Two persons might be alike, therefore I wished to converse with him before I made up my mind. Not only his voice but his appearance convinces me that he is Kisto Lal. I did not speak with certainty until I conversed with him, because two might be alike. I cannot say whether two voices might be alike or not, but from conversing with a man our doubts are generally removed. I told him that the Brahmacharee was dead and that there was a proclamation. When I mentioned to the gentlemen that this was Kisto Lal, the prisoner said, how is this possible; and I said if a dead man can come to life there is surely nothing impossible in this. I know him to be Kisto Lal not only by his voice, but from his appearance and what his father said at Kishenaghur. I was acquainted with Shamlal. There is no relation of Kisto Lal's there now. Another Brahmacharee has come and takes care of the image.

Rodhakissen Bysack, sworn.—I am a taantee by caste. I know the defendant Raja Pertaub Chund. He has told me that he is the Raja Pertaub Chund. After making inquiries I have given him money. I gave it to him because I believed him to be Raja Pertaub Chund. I got a bond from him for 16,000 rupees three years ago. I have given more but I have not made up my accounts. I have given about 3, 4 or 5,000 rupees over the 16,000. This is for his private expenses. I have not made up my accounts of what I have spent in his case. I have given acknowledgments to the amount of 2,500 in his case. I have never given more. I have not got bonds above 16,000. There is no bond in my son's name. I have never received bonds at any time either in my son's name or my own for larger sums.

Mr. Morton here said, that he believed the other bonds alluded to were unexecuted.

Mr. Samuells said he did not know how that might be, but he had had bonds in his possession to the amount of very nearly 22 lacs of rupees, of which the greater part was in favour of Radhakissen.

Evidence continued.—I do not know that any other bonds were ever written. I now enter the bond for 16,000 which I spoke of Maharaja Pertaub Chund to Radhakissen Bysack and Edward Hilder, for 16,000 rupees.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I believe this man to be the Rajah from what others told me, not from his own statement. I did not advance the money upon his representations. I gave him the money as a loan. If I can't get it it is no matter. I have formerly made loans to gentlemen. I have had great hopes of being paid, and have as much chance of getting this money back as I have had in other cases. All the money I have lent to this man is secured by the bonds and hand notes. I made many inquiries before I lent this money. When Dr. Halliday told me that this man was the Rajah then I lent him the money. I have seen General Allard. He is now in Lahore. I placed great confidence in what General Allard said. General Allard said that he saw this man in Lahore, and he told me that he was the Burdwan Zemindar's son, and told me to take care of him. General Allard said that he had seen him in Lahore two years before he went to Europe. I don't recollect what year he mentioned. I saw General Allard in 1836. He didn't tell me how long before was. He went home in 1834. Rajah Gopeemohun Deb knew; Pertaub he is dead. I formed my belief from what he said also. Gopeemohun Deb did not say any thing of having seen him himself. He mentioned what a servant of his had said. My brother went away and came back about 12 years after. He was in Bindrahund. When he went, he told me he was going to Bindrahund. Many people leave their houses, and no one knows where they have gone. When Rajah Pertaub went away, I heard nothing of it. When he came back I made great enquiries. I thought the prisoner's story extraordinary at first. People go away and return to their houses in conformity with the precepts of the Shastres. Men do this for pilgrims and penance.

Re-examined.—It is not the custom of my country for dead men to roam about the country. If the prisoner had told me, that he was Kisto Lal, the Brahmacharee's son, I never would have lent him 16,000 rupees. If this prisoner cannot obtain the Burdwan estate, then my money will go. I will have great profit if I can prove him to be the Raja. My name will be very great.

Moresh, Pandit, sworn. I have lived in Kishnaghur altogether nine years, at two different times. I do not recollect exactly what year I was there. I was under Mr. Deerr, and taught the Missionary schools at Kishnaghur, and instructed Mr. Krukenberg, and I also taught Mr. Beresford, when he was at Kishnaghur. I have seen Kisto Lal Brahmacharee in Kishnaghur. One day Mr. Krukenberg went to argue with him concerning the scriptures, and when he came back, he told me I must go with him next day. I asked why? I said I was a Hindoo, why should I go to argue. Mr. Krukenberg said, that he had met with a Brahmacharee, who wished to argue with him in Sanscrit, and that I must go with him and explain any thing which the Brahmacharee said in Sanscrit. Next day Mr. Krukenberg, Paul Christian, and I went to the Brahmacharee Shamlal's. Mr. Krukenberg told Shamlal, that he had brought his Pandit who understood Sanscrit, and that he might now speak in Sanscrit, if he liked. Shamlal, I suspect, did not understand much Sanscrit and seeing that a Pandit had come, he was afraid to argue, and told us, that his son was in the next room and would argue with us. When we three, went in and saw him, I recollected that I had seen the same person before at Seal Maree, in Burdwan. I said to him I have met you before at Burdwan. He replied, it could not have been in this world, it must have been in some other state of existence. When I saw him in Burdwan he wore plain clothes and Brahminical thread. When I saw him in the house, he was dressed like a Brahmacharee in coloured clothes, and his hair tied up. I saw him in this way three or four days along with Mr. Krukenberg. Afterwards, we went three or four days, and when he was in the jail in Hooghly, Paul Christian and I, and Mr. Walters and Dr. Wise, and a Captain and the Magistrate, saw him, and I saw him again yesterday in the jail. The name of the Brahmacharee's son is Kisto Lal. I see him in chutcherry—that is him.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. I saw him in Kishnaghur seven or eight times. It is about four or five years since I saw him in Kishnaghur. I can swear positively that this is he; but in Kishnaghur he was thinner, and his hair was different, but the eyes, the nose, the mouth, are features which do not change. It is four days since I left Burdwan. I never sent any petition to the prisoner. I have never seen him in Calcutta, in the Foudjarry, Bahkhanna, or elsewhere. He did not speak any Sanscrit to me. He said something out of the Beljuntur Shastras, but whether he knew Sanscrit or not I do not know. I am not a resident of Nuddea. My house is in Rayan in Burdwan. We have lived there for seven or eight generations. I have lived in the district of Burdwan since last Assar. I am not now in service. I formerly taught Mr. Barlow to read. I have no connexion with the Rajbarree and no service there. I don't go there now. Long ago, when religious ceremonies were performed, then I used to go.

Ramchuna Mitter, sworn. I am a Colletary Mohar-reer. My lodging is in Seal Maree, in Burdwan. I have lived there for a very long time. I have seen one Kisto Lal Brahmacharee in my house in Seal Maree. He first came to my house about 1237 or 1238, and remained about two or two and a half months. He had quarrelled with his father and therefore he had come. Seven, or eight days after he came, his brother Gour Lal also came. Before the Poojah in 1241, he came again as a Sunyassee and remained fifteen or sixteen days. A Brahmin was with him at that time. We knew him to be Shamlal's son and tread him with the same consideration as we would Shamlal. I saw him again 1242 before the Durgah Pooja. He was then as a Brahmacharee with a beard on the Kishnaghur road. There were about 6,000 people round him in Kishnaghur, when I went to see him. There was a rumour amongst those people that this was the Chota Rajah who had come. That is he standing there. His name is Kisto Lal Brahmacharee.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I never saw him before the two months in which he resided with me. His father* used constantly to come to my house, therefore the son came also. When I saw him in 1841, it was very shortly before the Doorga Pooja. It is about three years since I saw him in Kishnaghur. When I then saw him, he concealed that he was Kisto Lal. He did not then say himself that he was Rajah Pertaub Chund. How can I say what his motives were for concealing his name? I met with him, and he asked me, what was the report. I said the report is, that the young Rajah has come and I then advised him not to try such tricks with Mr. Forbes, as he was a very severe Magistrate. Kisto Lal made no reply, but went away next day. I knew that Kisto Lal and the jaul Rajah were the same. He did not tell me to keep the matter secret. There was no report that Kisto Lal and the jaul Rajah were the same. I advised him not to carry on this business because I did not wish him harm. I have mentioned to several that I knew the jaul Rajah to be Kisto Lal; amongst others to my own eldest brother, Juggut Narain Mitter. When his brother was going to Mr. Taylor's, he had an interview with the prisoner either at Culna or Santipore. I don't know whether he ever remained four or five weeks at a time with him. My brother was never a servant of the real Pertaub Chund's. My brother saw Kisto Lal when he was in my house in 1238 and in 1241. My brother writes Bengallee.

Dwarkanauth Tagore, Esq., swore upon the Ikrarnamah, and examined by Mr. Samuels.—I was very intimate with the late Pertaub Chunder. When he first came to Calcutta, he resided in a house situated in a lane which was next to the street in which I lived. The house was called Canto Baboo's House. I was then introduced to him. It was at the time of the peace which followed the battle of Waterloo. He went about to see the illuminations at Government House and other places, and I accompanied him. He came to Calcutta on several other occasions. I always saw him whenever he was there. I believe that the only native houses he ever went to, were Rajah Gopemohun's and my friend Rammohun Roy's. His rank would not permit him to visit weavers or bankers. From my frequent interviews with him, I have a very correct idea of his features. I do not know who the prisoner is, but this I know perfectly, that he is not Pertaub Chund. I say so from seeing his face now. Although twenty years had elapsed, I should not forget a man with whom I had been so intimate, and I should at least expect to see something like the person; but I might just as well take Mr. Morton or Mr. Shaw for Pertaub, as the prisoner. Pertaub had no fear whatever of Poraun Baboo, he looked on him as he would on any of his slaves. I knew Gooroodoss dewan; at my recommendation he was appointed dewan to the Rajah. During Pertaub's last illness I heard daily or almost every day from Gooroodoss, and I was about to proceed to Ambhoa myself, but the death of my aunt prevented me. Gooroodoss wrote to me that Pertaub was very ill, and that the old Rajah would not allow the English doctors to attend him, and treat him in the English way; at last I heard he had been poisoned by one Gossain Kobraj, who had ministered to him the bish gollee, or poisoned pill. Gooroodoss mentioned that Pertaub had a bilious fever. I had not seen him for a year before his death. I knew Pertaub's disposition well; he was not superstitiously inclined, nor religious, nor did he ever appear to feel any remorse for the course of life he pursued. He was not all likely to go on a pilgrimage from fear of Poraun Baboo or from any religious motive. The Rajah Tej Chunder was a pensioner of his. The first time I ever heard of his being alive, was when this impostor made his appearance. I do not know Poraun Baboo at all, nor am I a friend of the present Rajah's. There is a case pending between Poraun Baboo and the Ranees Bussunt Coomaree, and my house are acting as her attorneys. I know that Poraun Baboo is my enemy; he has presented a petition to the authorities of Burdwan and insinuated every sort of thing against me. I should wish to see Poraun Baboo turned out of the management, and another person put in his place—so much for my friendly feelings towards him. I assisted Pertaub Chunder's widows in their suit against the old Rajah Tej Chunder. I do not know any thing which would make me more happy than to see that man, my old friend Pertaub Chunder, again. When Mr. Turton first told me of this pretender and wanted me to go and see him in the Hooghly jail, I told him that it was quite impossible that Pertaub Chunder could be alive and I gave Mr. Turton a few questions to put to the prisoner in order to try him; and I said that if the prisoner could answer these questions it might probably induce me to go and see him. Mr. Turton told me afterwards, that he could get no answer, for the prisoner did not recollect any thing of these matters. From this circumstance, and what I saw of the prisoner in the Supreme Court, when he was examined in Mr. Ogilvy's case, and what I see of him here, I am quite convinced that he is not the man he pretends to be. I heard his voice in the Supreme Court and observed his manner; it was not Pertaub's, who never spoke in that way.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I was sitting next to you in the Supreme Court during Pertaub's examination. I heard the answer which he gave you. It is quite true that I would not consent to go and see him. I had made up my mind that he was not the man before I was him in the Supreme Court, and when I saw him there, it only strengthened the opinion which I had formed. It is quite true than he did on that occasion point me out as Dwarkanauth Tagore; but what of that? I could not point him out as Pertaub Chund, the question as to whether he could point me out was put by you to hunt at my suggestion. I knew that I had never seen the man before, and I thought it not unlikely that he had never seen me; if he had seen me, how could I help it? it was only one way to try him. There are at this moment many people in this room who know me by sight but whom I do not know. It was my confidence that I did not know him, that made me suggest the question to try if he knew me. My features may be a good deal altered since the battle of Waterloo, but those who knew me intimately then, would recollect me now.

My intimacy with Pertaub subsisted for 4 or 5 years, I only saw him when he came to Calcutta, and when he came I saw him. I was on most confidential and intimate terms with him, so much so, that he appointed the Dew in of all his affairs at my recommendation. He used to laugh at all superstitious affairs. He may have had a good many sins to report of. When he first came to Calcutta, which was after the battle of Waterloo, he remained, I think, about a twelve month. He then came a second time, and staid four months, came several times after that, and staid a week a fortnight, or more. He used to say at Short's Bazar. I have known instances of Natives leaving their families for a number of years and returning, but never after they were burned (great laughter.) The estate of Kissenchund Sing is in my hands, I have the management of it. I know the family well. I never heard of his mysterious disappearance. Lalah Baboo went to Bindaban and turned a religious, withdrawing from business. His son was a minor, and the whole state according to custom in such cases was taken by the Court of Wards. I farm it from the Court. A great many of the principal acquaintances of Pertaub were in my own service. Mr. Stewart, the member of Council, was a great friend of his. I have seen their correspondence. Pertaub once went to Rajah Gopemohun's house; it was beneath his rank to go to weavers, or bankers. He also knew Sreenauth Baboo, and Ramdhona Bonerjee. I knew very little of Prawnkissen Holdar at that time. The father of Sreenauth was one time in the service of Pertaub's family. He looked on Sreenauth as his servant, Sreenauth would thereof have been obliged to give Pertaub Nuzzurs, which the Calcutta people do not like doing. I have advanced money to support many suits. I advanced money to these very young Ranees, Pertaub's widows, in their suit against the old Rajah Tej Chunder. I always know the persons to whom I advance money, and their cases, and I always take very good care to secure myself. I never bargained to receive a large sum of money back, except in one case, and that was Baradacaunt Roy's, where I undertook at my own risk all the costs of the suit, both here and in England. For doing this I was authorized by the Board to receive one-third of all I should recover. Radakissen Bysack, Joynarain Chunder, and Govind Chunder Day all came to me about this case of the impostor. I told them it was a jaul case. If I knew that he was the real Rajah, I would gladly give five lacks of rupees out of my own pocket to support him. Was he not my friend?

[The cross-examination was here closed.]

Dwarkanauth Tagore.—Mr. Morton; something has passed in the newspapers about a letter received by me from Mr. Samuells, I have come here on purpose to answer any questions you may like to put to me on that subject.

Mr. Morton. I have no questions to put to you on that point.

The Magistrate. In that case I shall put some questions to you.

Dwarkanauth Tagore. I hope the gentlemen reporters whom I see here, will take a true statement of what passes, and not publish a false account, as they did about me the other day, stating that I did not attend because I had been taken ill with spasms. I was not taken ill.

A Reporter. We published that, because we were told you had been taken ill. We could not know it ourselves, as you were not here.

Dwarkanauth Tagore. Whoever told you so, told a lie.

The Magistrate. State what you know about that letter.

Mr. Morton. Surely this forms no part of the present investigation.

The Magistrate. I have before said that this is only a preliminary investigation to ascertain if the prisoner should be put on his trial, I shall therefore inquire into any matter whatever connected with the case or these proceedings.

Dwarkanauth Tagore.—On the same day or day after that I received your subpoena, Govind Day, Mr. Graham's writer, brought me a letter from his employer. I was certainly surprised, as it contained a request that I would call at Mr. Graham's office, although I know little of him and am not on visiting terms with him. Govind told me that it was connected with this inquiry. Luckily Mr. Judge, my attorney, was then in the office, so I sent for him, not wishing to speak to my old friend Govind, but in his presence (Govind's not very comfortable looking face did not beam more pleasantly, at the time and manner in which this bit of evidence was given.) When Mr. Judge came into the room, I said to Govind, I tell you before Mr. Judge that I will not see Mr. Graham on this matter, and I will have nothing to do with his jaal case. Govind smiled and said, I thought this would be your answer. As my old friend Govind is standing there, I should wish him to be examined on this point. I received a letter from you (the Magistrate) regarding the evidence in this case. I will state the circumstances which led to your writing to me. As I have already mentioned, I had been subpoenaed to attend on Monday, I therefore wrote to you to say, that as the overland was in, and my partner, Mr. Prinsep, absent, and we had to answer our correspondents on that very day, I hoped you would excuse me. I also told you, that I could point out better evidence than mine, and I trusted that you would dispense with me altogether. I had mentioned this subject to you in the Supreme Court during Mr. Ogilvy's trial, and told you the names of several persons who knew who the prisoner really was. You probably forgot these people's names, for in consequence of my letter, you wrote to me for the names of these persons, and stating also, that you thought you would not require my evidence. I have since found out, that a copy of this letter of yours to me, has been obtained out of my office. There is nothing wrong in the letter, and I do not care who sees it; but as a copy has been obtained in this manner. I am doing all I can, to find out who stole it. Joynarain Chunder, Mr. Shaw's head writer, was for a very long time at my office on the very day or next, that I received this letter of yours.

Mr. Shaw.—This ought not to go on. It has nothing to do with the question, and it is a charge against me.

Dwarkanauth Tagore.—I am making no charge against you, Mr. Shaw, and do not say that you stole the letter. I never saw you that day.

Mr. Shaw.—It is a charge against my writer.

The Magistrate.—Mr. Shaw I cannot listen to you. The prisoner's counsel is here, and I will only permit him to take objections.

Mr. Shaw. All this about the letter, and Joynarain Chunder and Dwarkanauth's office, has nothing to do with the charge against the prisoner. I protest.

The Magistrate.—I will not permit you, Sir, to interrupt the proceedings while your counsel is present. I order you to desist.

Mr. Morton not interfering Dwarkanauth continued his evidence.—When Joynarain Chunder came in, I had your letter [Mr. Samuells's] in my hand, or on my desk. Joynarain began talking about how Rajah Buddinanth had been interrupted, and used on his going to Hooghly. Poonooconoor was present. I said to him I have no time to listen to all this idle story. I take Joynarain Chunder into your room. When I left, he was still in the office, and I do not know how long he continued there. I never have advanced money in a case similar to this. I told Radakissen Bysack, that this man was an imposter, and that he would lose his money. When Mr. Clarke had an interview with Mr. Ross, I mentioned to him the names of the persons who know the prisoner. He reported this, I believe, to Mr. Ross.

Mr. Clarke, who had accompanied Dwarkanauth to Hooghly and was sitting next to him, seemed to dissent from this. Dwarkanauth spoke to Mr. Clarke, who said, as the Magistrate has taken down what you have stated, you had better sign your deposition first. This having been done, Dwarkanauth then spoke to Mr. Clarke and added, I now remember, I had called on Mr. Clarke and found that he was out. He immediately afterwards came in and he told me he had been at Mr. Ross's. In speaking of the Gulna affair. I mentioned to him the names of the persons who knew the prisoner. This was in May last. Mr. Clarke tells me he made no report of it to Mr. Ross. Mr. Clarke.—In fact I have not seen him since.—Hurkaru September 22.

20TH SEPTEMBER, 1838.

At about half past 10 a. m. the Magistrate entered the Court this morning, when there appeared no more witnesses for the prosecution. The deposition of one Bromanu Gossayn (since deceased) taken at Bankoorah was put in and read by the Sheristadar of the Court in the Persian language.

Mr. Morton asked the Magistrate, whether the charge in that case was the same as the charge in the present case; because if it was not, he submitted that this could not be received as evidence.

Mr. Samuells said, that their was then no charge, but that the investigation at Bankoorah was, like the present, merely preliminary and the evidence related to the question of identity or non-identity.

The deposition was then read, in the Persian and Bengallee languages, and the Magistrate interpreted it into English. This witness was a Kobraj, who tended Pertaub Chund during his illness and swore to his illness and death. The other document was then put in, upon the same ground, viz. that the present was a preliminary proceeding. Mr. Morton made his objection; but the Magistrate said, that it ought to be received for the Judge's Court, and he added, that this was an official document, and, according to the Mofussil practice, and, he thought, according to the practice in the Supreme Court, good evidence, as the official seal of the Sheriff or Nazir proved itself.

Mr. Morton said, that he did not question the genuineness of the document, but that his objection went to its admissibility as affecting the prisoner.

The document referred to was then put in. It was a statement by Munnee Lal Purihoit, officially addressed to the Collector of Burdwan and filed in a suit called "Kurreech Dakei," in which Munnee Lal states, that another priest had told him that he was present at Rajah Pertaub Chund's death.

Mr. Morton could not help remarking, that this was a mere statement of a statement of another individual.

Mr. Samuells said, that in fact it was not put in as evidence of the death of Pertaub, but merely to show for what reason Ghaseeram was the officiating priest on that occasion, and not Munnee Lal, the family priest.

The Magistrate said, that he should now commit the prisoner at the bar, and with him others now in the Hooghly jail, to take their trial before the Sessions Judge, and the day of trial (which however might be altered by the Judge himself (he should at present fix for the 1st day of November next ensuing. The holidays would not terminate until the 24th October. He intended to commit 18 others to take their trial with the soi disant Rajah; the rest would be more leniently dealt with, and would receive sentence from the Magistrate himself. A regular indictment would be prepared some days before the trial came on, and a copy of this might be furnished (upon application being made) to the prisoner, and those who conducted his defence.

Mr. Morton enquired, whether the substance of the intended charge could be given by the Magistrate now for their guidance and their consideration in making future arrangements.

Mr. Samuells said, that the prisoner might gather the substance from the evidence, which had been heard. The indictment would be for assuming a false name, and to this would be added the charge of resisting the local authorities, and probably that of obtaining money by his false representations. Mr. Morton further enquired whether in the present proceedings any evidence whatever had been gone into relative to any alleged disturbance of the peace or resistance to the civil authorities.

Mr. Samuells replied, that he considered all the proceedings, past and present, as one and the same, and much evidence had been given upon this matter before the case was commenced, which had reference to the prisoner's false assumption of the name of Pertaub Chund.

The charge of the breach of the peace would probably form the second count of the indictment.

Mr. Morton also enquired whether, after committal, the prisoner would be entirely transferred to the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge, and whether applications to receive bail, ought thereafter to be made to him in the first instance.

Mr. Samuells said, that applications to receive bail, must now be made to the Judge of the Sessions Court alone.

Mr. Morton then put in a petition on behalf of his client, containing the names of three European witnesses intended to be examined at the trial, residing at a great distance, and requested permission to reserve the remainder for some future occasions. These subpoenas were granted, and leave given to reserve the rest to be named before the trial came on before the Sessions Judge.

The prisoner was then informed in Hindoostanee and Bengalee, that he was committed over to the Session Court to take his trial before the Judge of that Court, upon matters on which evidence had been given before the Magistrate on the part of the prosecution. Eighteen other witnesses were then brought up from the Hooghly Jail, who answered to their names (but denied being at Bankoorah) were committed upon a charge of disturbance and breach of the peace. One of the prisoner, who had been bailed before, was ordered to renew his bail to the amount of 500 rupees, and we understood him to be the mooktear of the soi disant Rajah.

Mr. Morton thanked Mr. Samuells for the courtesy and kindness which had been extended to him throughout the investigation.

The court adjourned about one o'clock.—Hurharu, September 24.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CALCUTTA.

PERTAUB CHUND.—It has been bruited during the month that about thirty armed men broke into the Hooghly jail on the night of the 25th instant, with intent to murder the soi disant Rajah Pertaub Chunder, who, on the first noise, climbed up a tree in the jail compound and escaped the fury of these marauders; but six burkundaes who were on guard at the ward where Pertaub Chunder was confined, were all massacred by these desperadoes, who, on assistance arriving to the aid of the party attacked, fled, leaving behind some swords and shields, and the implements with which they had broken the jail wall and effected an entrance into it; and also that none of the ruffians had been apprehended, though an investigation was held regarding this transaction by the magistrate of Hooghly. The whole story is, however, a fabrication, no doubt invented by some of the pretender's followers, with a view to interest the public in his master's favour.

Mr. H. T. Prinsep, Mr. J. Ross Hutchinson, and other gentlemen of high standing in the civil service, proceeded to Hooghly, in order to give their evidence before the magistrate in the proceedings against Pertaub Chund, the soi disant Rajah of Burdwan. The charge of sedition and riot, which was at first preferred against him was dropped, and the charge on which he now arraigned was "false personation, and the obtaining of various sums of money by fraudulent pretences and imposture." The magistrate who acted in this case, is Mr. E. A. Samuells, and Pertaub is to take his trial before Mr. Curtis, the sessions judge, and, in all probability, the case will be brought before the Sudder Nizamut.

Dr. Halliday has been subpoenaed down from his station to identify the pretended Rajah Pertaub Chund, as to his being real the son of the late holder of the Burdwan gudee, Maharaja De Raj Tej Chunder Roy, Bahadoor.

The proceedings held at Hooghly, on the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, and 6th instants, in the trial to prove the identity, or otherwise of the prisoner have proved unfavorable to the pretender, though nothing very decisive, was elicited. The mob of natives which collected round the court, was very great and decidedly determined to favor the pretender; as the native witnesses who deposed against him, were subjected to their sibilations and howlings, and, but for the precautionary arrangements of the magistrate, would probably have experienced worse treatment.

The evidence for the prosecution, as far as it related to the actual death of the Rajah Pertaub Chund in the year 1821, has been concluded, and on Tuesday evidence was gone into for the purpose of shewing who and what the assuming Rajah Pertaub Chund actually is. It is now attempted to be shewn, that he is one Kisto Lal Pauru or Bramacharree, a native of the district of Kishenagur; that he actually resided there for several years, and suddenly disappeared in the year 1834. His father is said to have been one Shamlall Bramacharree, now deceased; the two alleged brothers of the person in question are also dead, and, indeed, all his relations except four maternal uncles, till resident in Kishenagur.

VIOLATIONS.—On the night of the 24th ult., the dwelling house of Chand khansamah, at Gondulparah, near Chandernagore, was stormed by a gang of about thirty or forty dacoits. The outer door was broken open, and the chowkeydar of the house, on attempting to prevent their getting in, was severely wounded, which rendered him quite incapable of offering further resistance. They broke open all the chests that they found, and carried off their contents. A daughter of Chand khansamah being frightened at the sight of the ruffians, became quite desperate, and with a view to put herself out of their reach, jumped down from the terrace of the house; and she was considerably hurt in consequence. Both she and the chowkeydar are deemed to be still in much danger.

During the last week the warehouse of a ~~salt~~ merchant, at the gunge of Baboo Gecool Kisto Ghose, near Muga, zillah Hooghly, was stormed by a gang of dacoits, who carried off therefrom property to no small amount. One of the inmates of the warehouse and a chowkeydar, having attempted to obstruct the ruffians, the former was wounded, and the latter killed by them.

MURDER.—A Portuguese woman was murdered on the afternoon of the 16th of September in Chuan-gully, by a man named D'Cruiz, her cousin, who, after committing the deed, fled to the suburbs. The police, however, succeeded in finding out his place of concealment and apprehended him; and he has confessed the perpetration of the crime, and been committed to the session to take his trial.

A dreadful murder took place near Dum-Dum on the 27th instant, and the following are the particulars: At a gentleman's garden residence at Seitalee, the durwan of the house quarrelled with the khansamah regarding some dastour a few days since; and took an opportunity, about three o'clock on the morning of the 27th instant, while the khansamah, bearer, and mother were asleep, in the back verandah of the house, to attempt the murder of the whole of them, he, however; only succeeded in killing one of the party, the khansamah, and very severely wounding another; the bearer, the mother fortunately made his escape, and immediately gave the alarm to the police, who quickly came and secured the murderer before he had time to leave the premises. He was subsequently sent to the Alipore jail.

CAPTURE OF A GANG OF THIEVES.—The thanadar of Toktallah, with the aid of Rohimomollah, Aukloo, and Khoosaul, spies, succeeded in arresting Beenuddin spy, the head of a gang of thieves residing in Entally and its neighbourhood, after whose arrest they succeeded in apprehending Lallichund, Moteerollan, Nabobdee, and Matubjee for being accomplices of Beenuddin spy. These men, it would appear, by the statement of Rohimomollah and his companions, have been concerned in many thefts and robberies committed in and about Calcutta. Amongst the rest of their gang was the person who had, about fifteen days ago, hired himself to a sircar of a house of agency to carry 1,700 rupees in cash and 500 rupees in notes to the agency house, who but gave the sircar the slip in the road and walked away with the cash.

AGGRESSION BY THE MALAYS.—The following has been sent to the press by C. M. Crisp, master of the bark Colonel Burney, complaining of aggressions committed on him by the Malays on the Pedier coast.

"On the 22d August, having occasion to go on shore about some beetle-nut, which was promised to have been ready at a some village called Bouwoon, myself and chief mate (Mr. Thompson) in a boat, on our way down the river, going off to the vessel, were stopped by six Malays, with drawn knives, who threatened our lives if we showed any resistance. When we inquired from them what they meant by stopping the boat, they told us that the Rajah of Le Silva, a small village, situated on the borders of the Boorong river, wished to see the captain, and that we must immediately return. In consequence we went back with the people to the village, when the Rajah, and several other persons, about forty or fifty in number, were present. I asked why his people stopped the boat in this manner. He said that before he would allow us to go to the vessel, I should have to pay a sum of money to him. After remonstrating for some length of time, about the unjustness of extorting money in this manner, I was obliged to promise that I would send it to him, provided he would allow us to go on board. This he would not do, but said that one of us must stop on shore until the money was brought to him, and permitted me only to go off to the vessel, and kept my officer in confinement, until the money he demanded was sent to release him.

Considering such treatment very unjustifiable, and that should the Rajahs of the villages be allowed to extort money in this clandestine sort of manner from commanders of vessels, something of a more serious nature will be the consequence, I would suggest, that a man of war should every now and then touch on this part of the Pedier Coast, which would be the means of protecting the ships that trade to the coast against the perfidy of these people.

THE HEREFORDSHIRE AND THE KELLIE CASTLE.—On the 25th August, at about half past eleven in the morning, the frigate running very strong, much more so than usual, the large ship Kellie Castle, just about to quit Calcutta for Singapore and China, broke away from her head moorings at Kidderpore, and swung round on her stern moorings. The Herefordshire, another large vessel of nearly as great a burden, immediately after followed the example of the Kellie Castle, broke away from her moorings and shot out into the strength of the stream, which of course rapidly carried her down the reach with the mooring buoys attached to her. She got aground on a bed of mud opposite the second house in Garden-reach, where she lay till flood tide made, when the Forbes steamer ran down to her assistance, succeeded in towing her off and brought her up to Calcutta. She dropt down again during yesterday morning and was last night safely removed near her old berth, without having received any damage. On the 28th ultimo, the Sufferen got aground on the same bank, but floated again and proceeded on her voyage, undamaged by the accident.

THE BOLTON'S ACCIDENT.—During the progress of the Bolton, on her voyage between this port and Singapore, one of the officers descended into the spirit-room with a lighted candle; by some means two casks of spirits became suddenly ignited; in this dilemma the officer, with great presence of mind, rushed on deck with one of the burning casks in his arms and called out lustily for help. Captain Young, who happened to be at hand, immediately descended with a hand or two, and happily succeeded in extinguishing the flames in the other cask. The powder magazine was in dangerous vicinity to this spirit room.

HULL OF THE SIR HERBERT TAYLOR.—The hull of the Sir Herbert Taylor, lying off the Silver Tree Pagoda, was disposed of by auction for the sum of one thousand and ten rupees.

THE STEAMER THAMES.—A letter dated the 21st August, from Lutripore Factory, district of Bhaugulpore, states the following fact, which will give some idea of the rise of the river in that district, "the steamer Thames with 22 lakhs of rupees on board, got ashore here yesterday morning at 7 A. M. in one of our highest indigo fields, and up to this moment, 5 P. M. has not got off. I got some boats, and 150 ryats to assist, but all to no purpose." The vessel has since been got off.

THE MEGNA.—The H. C. iron-steamer Megna, reported to be on a sand bank between Chupra Revelunge, was got afloat on the 10th instant, through the ingenuity of Mr. Superintending Engineer Tytler, and the unremitting exertions of her commander, Mr. Sparling, assisted by the commander of the Flat, Mr. Steel, and the officers and crew of both vessels.

THE MEDEA.—A new armed steamer for the Honourable Company, on the exact model of the Medea steam frigate, may be expected shortly. The Medea has proved herself the best steamer in the British navy.

INUNDATION.—All that part of Jessore to the north-east of the Bhyrub river is completely inundated by the waters from the Ganges; the rice crops, which were nearly ripe, are entirely destroyed, and the waters, according to the last accounts, were still increasing. It is greatly to be feared that the districts of Backergunge and Furreedpoore, have suffered to a much greater extent from their proximity to the mighty stream, which is carrying every thing before it. The Bhyrub river is said to be completely choked up by the influx of water from the eastward; to such an extent, indeed, that the reports state the current to be running from the south-east, contrary to the usual course of the stream. The inundation all over Bengal has been very great.

STATE OF THE RIVER.—A native, arrived from Bhaugulpore the other day, states, that the houses on every one of the churs, from that place downwards, which have stood for years, have been washed away, the river having risen unusually high. The banks of the river at Rajmahal are very high, and yet they have been overflowed. There was about knee-deep water in the bazar. Such a scene has not occurred for several years.

BANGY-BOX REWARD.—The reward of one thousand rupees, offered by the Hon'ble President in Council, some weeks ago, with the view of procuring the most effectual means of rendering bangy conveyances water-proof, against the worst of weather, has not been awarded to any of the competitors, all of them having fallen short in the fulfilment of some item or other in the stipulated terms.

COURT OF REQUESTS.—It is said, that Mr. Miller is taking evidence regarding all matters connected with this court. The changes which are expected to take place in it are the appointment of a barister at 2,000 rupees per mensem, as the head commissioner, the extension of the jurisdiction to 1,000 rupees, and for one mile further all round its present jurisdiction, and some improvement as to the practice of the court, so as to render it a court of Records. The fees of the court and the practice of not awarding any compensation to the mooktars, are likewise to be modified.

The Court Requests will close for the Durgah Poojah holidays, from Monday the 24th Sept. 1838, until Monday the 15th October next. By a new order in this Court, creditors seizing the property of their debtors in a seal warrant, after a decree being passed in their favour, must prove the property to be that of their debtors, in case of its being claimed, and have it publicly sold within two weeks of the date of its seizure, or show some sufficient grounds for the delay in the sale, otherwise it will be released by the order of the Court. By another regulation in this Court, when a person is arrested and taken to jail on a decree warrant, every detaining creditor pays six pice a day for the diet money of the prisoner; but if six or seven persons be the detaining creditors, the prisoner gets only six pice a day altogether, and not the six pice a day for each detaining creditor.

THE PUMBAN PASSAGE.—The second cut has been made at Pumban through the bank, but it is only sixteen feet wide though it is nearly eight feet deep. The soil is now of firm clay of which bricks have been made. The bank will prove far the least obstacle of the two operations; the next dredge will give twenty-four feet broad and eight feet deep; this may be cut to any extent, and as yet show no indication of filling up; on the contrary the current has taken a fixed direction and assist in the work.

ILLEGAL IMPRISONMENT.—The Police Magistrates, during the month, illegally committed two men, without trial, to imprisonment in the Town Guard, because they were, with several others, concerned in a riot in which a man was accidentally killed. The Coroner and Jury who sat on an inquest held on the body of the deceased, severely commented on the proceedings of the Magistrates, in thus violating the rights of the subject.

THE FOUNDERING OF THE RUBY.—The following is Captain Randle's statement about the Ruby.—

"Appeared before me, Arthur Wilson, Acting Government Agent at Seychelles, this twenty-ninth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, James Randle, Master of the barque "Ruby," burthen 441 tons, Mr. Thomas Chas. Beale, of Bombay, owner, who deposes, that he sailed, in command of the aforesaid barque, from Macao Roads, China, on the 27th of April last, bound to Bombay; that he touched at Anjier on the 3d instant, for war, from whence he sailed on the day following; and that nothing further occurred before the 19th, when the carpenter reported that the ship had six feet water in the well.

That the hands were instantly turned to the pumps which were kept constantly going; but finding that the water had increased at 6 P. M. to eight feet six inches, deponent ordered part of the cargo to be thrown overboard for the safety of the ship—latitude 7° 15' South and longitude 67° 30' East.

Deponent states, that on the 21st, although the hands were kept constantly working at the pumps, and drawing water out of the afterhold with buckets, the leak had gained upon them so such that the water was above the lower deck, the vessel being at the time nearly on her beam ends, but still standing on her course for Seychelles; one of which Islands deponent was in hopes of bringing her to, even in her sinking state, provided the lower deck did not give way.

At 4 P. M. deponent deemed it indispensably necessary to get out the boats, for the safety of the crew, which was effected with considerable difficulty, the pumps having become totally inserviceable, but all hands still continued to bail water out of the afterhold and lower deck.

On the 22d, seeing that the vessel was settling fast, and that the lower deck had broken up at 9 A. M., all hands got into the boats. Mr. Green, the chief officer, took charge of the gig, with nine of the crew, including the gunner and a seaman who was working for his passage. Mr. Conry took charge of the long boat, with thirty-six of the crew; and deponent, after ascertaining that every person had left the vessel, got into the cutter, with nine men and the carpenter.

The three boats sailed in company from the vessel at 10 A. M., and thirty minutes afterwards the vessel went down in latitude 5° 43' South, longitude 64° 40' East.

Deponent further states, that at 5 P. M. he sailed close up to the long boat, and while speaking to Mr. Conry, the officer in charge, that individual fell over board, but after being about three minutes in the water, was fortunately taken up by deponent into the cutter. As Mr. Conry felt very unwell from the accident, deponent was therefore under the necessity of putting the carpenter in charge of the long boat, with instructions to keep close to him during the night, being then within a few days sail of Seychelles, and that he, deponent, carried a light in the cutter to guide the other boats during the whole night.

Deponent adds, that on the 25th at 6 A. M. the long boat was seen ahead nearly hull down, bearing W. by N. ½ North, and at 9 A. M. they entirely lost sight of her. Latitude at noon 5° 16' South, longitude 59° 20' East.

During the 26th and 27th, deponent steered various courses, in search of the long boat, but being unable to discover her, directed his course for Seychelles, where he arrived this morning at 7 o'clock, with the cutter and gig.

Deponent states, that every thing belonging to the crew, officers and himself, were lost, with the exception of the watches and charts which were necessary to guide them to this port; but it is with pleasure that he (deponent) can say, that the crew and every person on board laboured hard night and day to save the ship, without a murmur.

Deponent further states, that the Ruby had on board treasure to the value of about six lakhs of dollars, in silver and about another lakhs in gold; the remainder of the cargo consisted of sugar-candy, coarse raw silk, piece goods, glass beads, bangles, caseta, kittysauls, camphor, cochineal, preserves, tea, and various other articles. That he succeeded in saving (58) fifty-six packages of the gold, which he brought with him in the cutter, and as the remainder was packed up in a box at China, he had it put into the long boat—total (121) one hundred and twenty one packages of gold, (signed) J. Randle.

Sworn before me at Mahé, one of the Seychelles Islands, a dependency of Mauritius, the day and year first above-mentioned.

(Signed) A. Wilson,

Acting Government Agent at Seychelles."

FLOODING OF THE RIVERS AT BENARES, &c.—Letters received from Benares state, that the rivers in that quarter are higher than perhaps have ever been known, and nearly the whole country is under water. The Soane, too, has overflowed and inundated the whole of the adjacent country. The station of Arrah has been nearly swept away; that of Dinapore likewise has suffered very much.

Thirty-five breaches have been made on the Dummoodur embankments, towards the east of Burdwan; by the encroachment of that river; several villages have been inundated, and the fine crops of paddy have been all destroyed. That part of the river, which runs immediately below Burdwan, is expected daily to overflow its embankments; if it should happen, Burdwan will be at least knee-deep in water; and the wretchedness, which such an event will occasion can be better imagined than described! It is, however, expected, that the embankments will be raised several feet higher, as soon as the rains will in some degree abate, to secure against future encroachments of the river! The inundations extend even as far as Sooksaugor, and then the whole country round about has been rendered a complete marsh, and it is anticipated many of the strongest-buildings will not be able to stand out the water's ravages. The banks of the river also are being cut away in a most unusually rapid way, and this with the inundations will cause an immense loss of property in that station this year.

The following are extracts of letters, dated Benares 25th August, and Allahabad 23d August:—

"We have had twelve hours of the heaviest rain I almost ever witnessed, and I have just returned from an unsuccessful attempt to reach my office, the Ganges having risen to such a height that for half a mile the road is flooded to the depth of five feet, a thing never heard of before; and the houses in the city are falling by hundreds! Should this rain continue for a few days more, our indigo operations in this quarter will be at an end for the season. All communications between the different parts of the country is stopped, and I have no letters for some days, excepting from Allahabad."

"We arrived here the day before yesterday, most providentially, for yesterday there was a tremendous gale from the westward, such that we were obliged to strike our topmast; and last night, the Jumna burst the Ghaut,—many of the Civilian's houses are surrounded by water, as well as the town of Allahabad, and two villages are quite destroyed.

DEPUTY REGISTRAR.—It is said that an arrangement was in the contemplation of Government, for abolishing the office of Deputy Registrar to the Court of Sudder Adawlut at the Presidency, and of dividing the amount of the salary of that office between two translators and an Uncovenanted Assistant; the translators to be attached to the Legislative Department for the purpose of rendering its Acts into the vernacular tongue, and the Uncovenanted Assistant, it was proposed, should be appointed to the Sudder Court for carrying on the miscellaneous duties of the Deputy Registrar, who, be it remarked, besides other duties, has also the charge of the Translation Department. It is not likely, however, that the arrangement will be carried into effect, the opinions of the Governor-General being against the expediency of it.

HERAT.—It is rumoured that the Government is in possession of intelligence which confirms the arrival of a Russian army at Khiva, in progress via Bokhara and Balk to Cabul, with the good will of the respective chiefs of these countries. Other reports report an amicable arrangement between the Shah of Persia and Kaumraun of Herat.

HIGH TIDES.—The tides have been unusually high this season, and several parts of Calcutta and Howrah have been inundated more than knee-deep.

MR. PRINSEP.—Mr. Prinsep, our Assay master, has extracted some gold from a large quantity of silver belonging to the firm of Messrs. Lyall, Matheson and Co.

BILLIOUS FEVER.—Billious fever is at present raging in several parts of Calcutta and several natives, from want of proper medical treatment, have fallen victims to this dreadful disorder. The native quacks are very busy and are killing an immense number daily.

NEW LINE OF ROAD.—The new line of road from Midnapore to Sumbulpore, lately reconnoitred by Mr. Kittoe, and suggested by him in his report, has been approved by Government, and that gentleman has been instructed to survey it in the ensuing season.

CONVEYANCE OF TREASURE.—THE GOORKHAS.—A quantity of treasure, which was being conveyed to Bareilly, has been detained at Budaon, from apprehensions for its safety during its further progress, and a party from the 61st regiment had been ordered to proceed forthwith to Budaon to escort the treasure to Coel. The civil authorities who made the requisition for the escort, apologised for demanding the services of troops on such duty at this season, but stated that their presence was indispensable. This looks as if apprehensions were entertained of some attack from the Hills. Twenty regiments of Goorkhas are at this moment close upon one of our posts at Kumaon, which is protected by no more than twenty men; and Government have been apprized of the circumstance.

MR. LAURELETTA'S HOUSE.—The splendid mansion of Mr. Laureletta, at Suksaugor, has been totally destroyed by the overflowing of the river.

PROSECUTION FOR LIBEL.—Captain R. A. McNaghten, of the 61st N. I., has commenced a frivolous prosecution against the Courier, as well as the Hurkaru, for libelling him, as he says.

THE DORJELING STEAMER.—The steamer for Dorjeling did not start as intended; but the Secretary and some of the members of the Committee will proceed to the station, and lay the foundations of the hotel and of their own private residences. Messrs. Hepper and Marten had arrived at Dorjeling and commenced operations, and Mr. David Wilson, was daily expected there.

SHIP LAUNCH.—On the 21st instant, a new clipper was launched from the Kidderpore docks and named the Sirene.

TIPPOO'S GRAND CHILDREN.—It said that Government have granted the sum of six hundred rupees per mensem for the education of the grand children of Tipoo Sultan, now residing at Russapaglia. Major On-eley, the Superintendent, intends, therefore, to employ a European teacher, a moulvie, a moonshee and a pundit. Operations commence on the 1st of October.

EXTRAORDINARY FALL OF FISH.—The following is an account of an extraordinary fall of fish in the Sunderbuns:—

“About 3 o'clock P. M. of Thursday the 20th instant, we had a very smart shower of rain, and with it there descended a quantity of live fish about three inches in length, and all of one kind only. It is very strange that they fell in a straight line on the road from my house to the tank, which is about forty or fifty yards distant. Those which fell on the hard ground were as a matter of course, killed from the greatness of the fall; but those which fell, fortunately for them, on the spots where there was grass growing, sustained no injury, and I picked up a large quantity of them alive and kicking and let them go into my tank. Some people suppose that phenomena of this nature take place through the agency of water-spouts, which draw up the fish, &c. from rivers and tanks, and afterwards return them to the earth again in showers of rain; and there appears to me no other way of accounting for the occurrence of the phenomena, or that the fish should be found so far out of their element. If it were possible for them to get out of tanks themselves, they could, it would naturally be supposed, as easily retrace their steps and jump in again; but such was not the cause in the present instance. The most strange thing, however, that struck me in connexion with this event, was that the fish did not fall helter skelter every where or ‘here and there’, as the ‘reasons’ in the old woman’s pudding; but they fell in a straight line not more than a cubit in breadth. I have heard of such things happening before; but never on the spot where this happened. The natives living in and about the place, gave to the fish the name of ulka, but whether this be the right word or not, I cannot tell from my own knowledge.

THE MOORSHEADAD NEWS.—A copy of a new weekly journal, under the title of the Moorsheadabad News, has reached Calcutta during the week. It purports to apply its columns mainly to the development of all matters connected with the judicial, financial, educational, agricultural, and commercial condition and prospects of the district in which it is published, and to adapt itself as much as possible to the instruction and enlightenment of its native supporters.

RAJAH GURUSH CHUNDER ROY, BAHADOOR.—Rajah Gueesh Chunder Roy, Bahadoor, the present holder of the Krishnaghur Raj, requested the Bengal Government to take into its serious deliberation the subject of resuming lands in his Zemindarees, in consideration of the very valuable service which is great-grandfather, Maha Rajah Kisto Chunder Koy Bahadoor, had done to the British Government. The liberal minded Deputy Governor has paid that attention to the subject which it merits.

ABOLITION OF THE SALT ESTABLISHMENT.—Mr. G. Prinsep has made an application, for the abolition of the existing establishment for the manufacture of salt, and expressed his desire of supplying the necessary quantity to Government. The application is now under the consideration of the Salt Board.

COLONEL LOW.—Colonel Low, the Resident at Lucknow, is about to proceed to the Cape of Good Hope on furlough.

THE INFLUENZA.—A species of influenza is very prevalent among the European Inhabitants of Calcutta and its suburbs at the present time; it consists of slight cold and fever. No instance of a serious nature or fatal termination have as yet happened, and no apprehensions of any such happening from this cause, should for a moment be entertained by residents.

RIVER POLICE BOATS.—Nine eight-oared boats, for the river police, were launched on the 27th ultimo, from the building-yard of Messrs. Beauchamp and Co. They are thirty-three feet in length, and have cost seven hundred and fifty rupees each. It is to be hoped that no further complaints will now be made of the river Police, and that the river constables, who have the command of these boats, will be enabled to keep a greater check on river thieves and smugglers.

DR. R. ST. LEGER.—It is stated, that the Vicar Apostolic of Bengal, Dr. R. St. Leger, R. C., has been recalled at his own request; and he is to be succeeded by a Bishop. The reason assigned for his so doing, is disgust at the continual dissensions which are taking place among the different sects of Portuguese in Calcutta. This resolution of the Vicar Apostolic is much to be regretted, for he is universally esteemed in Calcutta, and his departure will be looked upon with regret by every one among the European inhabitants of Calcutta.

MR. AMOS.—It is said that it has been decided, so far as the Supreme Government are concerned, that Mr. Amos shall not be appointed President of the Law Commission. The junction of the two offices of President of that body and of Fourth Ordinary Member of Council, has been deemed objectionable in principle, and expedient, at a time when the business of legislation is onerous enough to occupy the whole attention of the Legislative Member. The subject has been referred home for the orders of the Court of Directors, pending whose instructions the union has been dissolved.

LOTTERY PRIZES.—The number 3746, which brought up a prize of a lakh of rupees, was purchased by a person of the name of P. Mack, who disposed of it to Mr. William Ainslie, of the firm of Messrs. Colvin, Ainslie, Cowie and Co. The number 871, which came out a trump of fifty thousand rupees, was one belonging to Bulraam Mullick and sons, and sold in shares by them.

PROSPECTUS OF A NEW BANK.—It is said that the prospectus of a new Bank is in private circulation. Mr. John Bagshaw, Member for Sudbury, is to be the Managing Director in London, and it is said that 5,000 shares have already been subscribed for there. Mr. Bagshaw, of the firm of Bagshaw and Co, in the city, is the managing man here, and we are told that two thousand five hundred shares have already been subscribed for. The shares are a thousand rupees each, to be paid by instalments. According to this statement, it appears, that names are subscribed to the amount of 65,000,000. This Bank is to be a Bank of discount and deposit, and is quite distinct from the Bank of India.

TESTIMONIAL TO SIR CHARLES METCALFE.—The amount of the subscriptions to the testimonial to Sir Charles Metcalfe at Allahabad, was, on the 18th ultimo, eight thousand five hundred rupees only.

MR. WILLIAM PRINGLE.—The Court of Directors have visited Mr. William Pringle with some more tangible marks of their displeasure than a few angry words. He is to be suspended from the service for two years.

OPIMUM QUESTION.—A dispatch from the Court of Directors has been received by Government by the June Mail, conveying the intimation of the entire approbation of the Court of the measures adopted by this Government last year on the opium question.

CEYLON CINNAMON GARDENS.—The Ceylon Government have published a notice respecting the sale of the cinnamon gardens to commence in January 1839. The Government intend to sell one of the four gardens in each year. They are to be divided into lots of 10 acres each. The conditions of sale will be published hereafter. This will constitute a notice of much interest to capitalists.

KALLEE NUGGUR CANAL.—On dit, that a canal is to be excavated from Kallee Nuggur, a place close to Hidgelee, and extended to the Ooloo-barah canal. While it affords a safer communication from Hidgelee to Ooloo-barah, it will be a source of no small revenue to Government, as the boats having less danger, to meet with, will, of course, prefer this route to that hitherto adopted.

SCHOOL AT CHUPRAH.—The General Committee of Public Instruction, intend to establish a school at Chuprah in December next, from the magnificent donation of 50,000 rupees granted by Rajah Bhojy Gavind Singh, Behavoor.

GOLAHs AT HIDGELEE.—It is stated, that the vast number of golahs, which are at present in Hidgelee, are to be reduced to ten large golahs, to be built at Kallee Nuggur, and left under the superintendence of ten daroghas at 250 rupees per mensem, and ten karkoons at 50 rupees each. The daroghas will be obliged to deposit about 10,000 rupees at the Salt Agent's office. The karkoon and kyals will be required to produce double securities.

MR. MACNAGHTEN.—It is stated that it is now definitively settled, that Mr. Macnaghten is to accompany the army into Caubul, as Civil Commissioner, with a salary of 5,000 rupees a month, in addition to his 55,000 per annum as a Secretary to Government.

STATUE OF BISHOP HEBER.—The statue of Bishop Heber has arrived in this country in the ship Asia, Captain Gillies.

MR. SAMUELS.—An act of tardy justice has at length been done to Mr. Samuels, by his appointment to the office of Magistrate of Hooghly, in which he has now been officiating for two years and nine months on the paltry allowance of seven hundred rupees per mensem.

INSOLVENT COURT, 15TH SEPTEMBER.—There was much business in the Insolvent Court this day, in consequence of an application made on behalf of Mr. Thomas Holtroyd, and Mr. E. Macnaghten, to be allowed to retire from the assignee-ship of three estates of Colvin and Co., Cruttenden and Co., Ferguson and Co., Mackintosh and Co., and Alexander and Co. Orders nisi were made, with leave to creditors to shew cause on the 4th of December next. An adjudication of insolvency was issued in the matter of W. W. Robinson, on the application of Messrs. Henderson and Marshall, Attorneys for Mr. J. D. Smith.

SEPT. 22, 1838.—There was a special Court held this day at 3 o'clock, on the application Mr. W. W. Robinson, to set aside an order of adjudication of insolvency obtained against him on the 15th instant, at the instance of John Davison Smith, the grounds of which were, that the adjudication had been illegally and fraudulently obtained, when the Commissioner was pleased to order a rule to shew cause after the 29th October next.

IMPOSSIBLE.

DELHI.—The news of the total defeat of the Persian army at Herat, has been confirmed by accounts received from Mr. McNeil, who states that a Russian officer, attached to the Russian Embassy, was killed at one of the gates of the fort! Mr. McNeil is off for England, as fast as he can travel. He had reached Mashed, from whence his present letters are dated; and it is now believed, that nothing can possibly prevent a war with Russia.

It appears that some of the Candaharee Chiefs have not only declared in favour of the franees, but that one of them with nearly a thousand camel loads of provisions, actually joined the Persians before the late attack upon Herat. The Shah summoned Shah Kamran to surrender, but to so little purpose, that the latter said, the aid afforded by the Candaharee traitors to the invaders, did not affect him, and that he would settle the dispute with the sword! This bold answer of the Herattee Chief led to the attack on the 26th of June, repelling which, the Herattes are reported to have exhibited a courage and perseverance quite unlooked for. Since the repulse of the Persians, the Shah is said to have made some overtures to Shah Kamran, with the view of saving his own character and effecting peace: which were indignantly and in very uncomminatory language rejected by him of Herat.

Government are causing pier heads to be constructed at Ferozepore, and it is concluded, therefore, that they intend sending down most of the military stores and supplies to Shicarpore, by water.

The crops throughout this district, and the upper provinces generally, are said to be in a very flourishing state.

Captain Wade, Political Agent, returned to Loadiana in the 23rd inst. and from Lahore, where he had settled very thing to his satisfaction with Ranjit Sing, respecting the operations of the approaching campaign.

A gang of Thugs, forty-three in number, who had been seized within the Uttur state, by the guard of Lieutenant Mills, Assistant to the General Superintendent, passed through Delhi during the past week, in progress to Meerut. Among them were several noted characters, for whose apprehension Government had offered large rewards. They are part of a gang, who, during the last cold season, committed several murders within the Delhi territory, and Zillah of Meerut, some of whom have recently been convicted and sentenced by the Nizamut Adawlut for the murder of eight persons at Kotana, within the latter jurisdiction, about seven months ago. The greatest praise is due to Mr. Mills for the manner in which the present gang have been arrested; so admirable were the arrangements, that but few escaped. The party had just returned from an expedition, and upon their persons were found proof sufficient to substantiate their professions, independent of which several have confessed to their being Thugs.

HUSSINGABAD—The following is a letter from Hussingabad, dated 13th August:—

"I heard from a native lately arrived from Nepal, that the Raja had sent an elchee to China, to say that the English were going to attack him, and asking assistance, reminding the Emperor that in the last war he had not assisted them although he received the tribute readily enough, and that if the Emperor did not assist him, if required, the Raja would transfer his allegiance and tribute money to the English,—so you see he concluded with a clincher. Now this may be humbug, arising from the native's own desire to have it in his power to give news, and yet, as he had only just arrived with elephants from Nepal, he might "be right."

LOODKANAH.—Orders for 10,500 maunds of flour 9,000 of chuna, 3,200 of rice, 1,500 of dhall, 810 of ghee 970 of oil, 1,800 of ghoor, 450 of fine sugar, and 650 of coarse, 690 of salt, 120 of spices, and of firewood 3,000 have been issued to be ready at this station by the 15th of October. These supplies are, it is said, for the consumption of the Governor-General's camp, looks as if an interview with Runjeet was still in contemplation.

AGRA.—Captain Bean, of the 23d Regiment Native Infantry, lately appointed to the New Contingent, has been ordered to remain at Agra, for the purpose of raising a regiment for Shah Soojah.

The utmost bustle prevails in the Commissariat and Medical departments here, in preparing supplies for the approaching campaign.

Government have discontinued giving employment to Paupers, and the working gangs were broken up on the 31st ult.

The price of grain is rising. Wheat is selling at the enormous rate of four and a half rupees per maund, a degree of dearth attributable solely to an absolute deficiency of the grain, and not to the old, comprehensive cause, the avariciousness of the corn dealers.

Major Ross, it is said, is appointed Resident at Jeypoor.

CORI.—The mortality from cholera in this town is most extensive. Among others who have died from it, was a native gentleman of rank and large fortune, Hoesun Khin, of Detonlie, in this district, a son of the late Ah-dool Rehman Khin.

CAWNPUR.—An affair of honour lately came off at this station between a gallant son of Mars, and an equally gallant son of Esculapius, Lieut E——— and Dr. M———y. The Esculapian received a wound in his thigh, which terminated the matter to the satisfaction of the parties.

CHUPRAH.—The following is an extract of a letter from Chuprah, dated the 18th of September:—

"We have lately been thrown into great consternation by the unprecedented rising of the river. The whole of the east and north of my boundary wall, to the extent of 2,000 feet, has been thrown down, and the fine row of trees to the east of the house, all destroyed, which is a sad disfigurement to the place. One of the lac houses, and a large saltpetre building, have also fallen down. The night that the flood came in the whole of the factory was under water, and we had some fear for the dwelling house. The constant falling of houses and crash of large buildings around us, was awful, and had the water risen one foot higher, most of my large buildings would have been destroyed. Whole villages have been washed away, and the distress occasioned must have been considerable."

The Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief have it is said, come to an open rupture, in regard to the appointment of a gallant officer in the Royal Army, known to possess great influence with his Excellency and to be but very lightly valued by the Governor-General, either in or out of Council.

A rupture with the Sikh, it is also whispered at Simlah, is not improbable, as the old Rajah has been detected in playing a double game.

The Ganges has risen to the unrecorded height of 43 feet after fluctuating for many days from 30 to 36, and at midnight of the 21st, it effected a complete breach through that part of the bund called the Buxee bund. The air was at the time perfectly calm, and there was neither current nor wave acting against the bund nor could any reasonable fear exist as to its strength, for it could have borne a rise of nearly five feet more in height. It burst at the same spot where it breached 37 years ago. The chowkedars who have been there since its erection, observed it rushing through the bund on the inner side, and on going to the outer, saw a funnel about 5 feet under the water. This accident was most probably occasioned by the powerful pressure of a large body of water against some trifling fissure, either accidental or made by rats, which infest all bunds in India. A little after gun-fire the rent was 50 feet wide and it continued to increase until the water was on the same level on both sides. It is now returning to the Ganges. The Magistrate, Collector, Superintendent Engineer and other gentlemen, were quickly on the spot, and measures were taken to remedy the expected mischief. Kid-gunge was four feet under water, and the dawk travellers' bungalow is submerged up to the eaves. Unless the flood retreats rapidly the crops will be spoilt but the land has been so much enriched by the deposit, that the rubbee will amply recompense the ryot. With the exception of one old woman, no lives have been lost. The rushing of the Jumna against the fort bastions is quite fearful, and at one part there is a fissure of many years' standing, down to the water and probably many feet under it. It appears dangerous to trust any longer. The Steamer will never be able to stem such a powerful current. The whole country seems intersected with nullahs.

Subsequent account state, that all the space between the bund of the Ganges and the late bank of the Jumna, has been submerged, from the irruption the former river, and a large portion of the fort, washed by the Jumna, has fallen in from the violent action of the current.

NATIVE STATES.

HERAT.—A letter received from Kandhar, says, that accounts have been received thence of the Persians having made a desperate attack on Herat, which was gloriously repulsed by the gallant band which forms the garrison, killing a number of the enemy, and among the rest a Russian General Officer, who was pierced with three balls, and taking their cannon. It further appears that Shah Kamran, the ruler of Herat, had in stores, grain and other articles of provision, enough to enable his Highness to keep up warfare for a year more; but messengers arrived from Herat state, that for the last two months his Highness has been trying to make peace with the Persians, and for that purpose, confidential officers of the Shah having come out of the fort, are communicating with the heads of the Iran Army. And the hostilities on both sides, in consequence, are at present under suspension.

FORT OF FURRAH.—The Affghans of the Bauerakzaee tribe, forgetful of the benefits they experienced at the hands of the family of Amud Shah, Dorranna, had made an attempt to overthrow the rule of that house. Lately the Nazems of Kandahar, sent an army of two thousand men against the fort of Furrah, finding that the Persians had besieged Herat, upon which the said fort was a dependant. The troops that garrisoned the fort, considering themselves unequal to the task of coping with the enemy, quitted the fort peaceably, and it was taken possession of by the Affghans.

CABOOL.—Intelligence has been received from Cabool, that the ruler of that place has forwarded an urzee by the hands of one of the ministers of his Court, to the camp of the Iran Army, stating that an ambassador on the part of the English had come to him for the protection of Cabool, and had stationed himself at Cabool for nearly a year, but on the arrival of the servants of the Shah of Iran, he sent away the said ambassador of the English. Under these circumstances his sole reliance for assistance was centered on his Majesty, and he prayed that a powerful army might be sent to protect him from the expected attack upon his country by the ruler of Lahore.

Dost Mahomed Khan has planted fifty guns on the fort of Bala Hissar; is casting others, and is actively engaged in warlike preparations, while he daily takes muster of his troops, and purchases all horses that arrive from Toorkistan and the neighbouring parts. He now is oppressing, beyond measure, the ryots, merchants, shopkeepers, and every class of people, by his demands for money, while he is collecting granaries and preparing store houses in Jullahabadi, Khuebar, and Alce Musjid. He also, night and day, holds consultations with his brothers and the nobility, who apparently give him confidence and support.

Dost Mahomed Khan has also sent letters and khilats to the Arabs of Peshawur, by name Jooma Khan, Sumut Khan, Izzut Khan, Nussur Oollah Khun, Saddou Khun. He has also caused to be erected, in Khuebar, two new bastions or Forts, one in Sandee Khano, the other in Jubugee.

The news of Peshawur, is that those illustrious gentlemen Messieurs Allard Court and Avie Tabili, having in view only the prosperity of Peshawur, make no distinction between Mahomedans and Hindoos, consequently both tribes are pleased and satisfied, and pray for their welfare, as they rule with strict justice and impartiality.

Kandahin the Nauzeems of Kandahar, conscious of their want of power to fight the English army, called a meeting of all the Mosulmans of Guzren, Hazarah, Ind and Toorkistan, and held a consultation on the subject. The business of the meeting was opened by stating, that the officers of the English are for the sake of fame, endeavouring to put Shah Shujah-ool-Moolk in possession of this country, and should the attempt be successful, the consequence would be that the English law and method of administering justice, &c. will gradually be introduced; a state of things, which will prove highly prejudicial to the people of the country, and especially to those who follow the profession of soldiers. The Mosulmen, all unanimously answered, that in the event of any attempt being made upon the country, they would display such bravery, as to perpetuate the fame of the Bahadoors of Affganistan.

ASGARDUON.—People arrived from Asgardoon, state, that the health of the chief of that place being in a rather precarious state, he appointed his youngest son as the successor to his guddle, in consequence of his eldest son not being mentally fit to undertake the management of state affairs. This latter being thus deprived of his birth-right, is said to be trying to get some neighbouring states to take possession of the state.

LAHORE.—It is said that a vicious elephant, belonging to Captain Wade at Lahore, whilst returning from the river happened to meet with the Sowarree of to Maharajah whose magnificent and liting palkee was instantly charged by the furious animal. The one-eyed Monarch, however, fortunately escaped without injury.

LUCKNOW.—The following incredible report is in circulation here, and what is more incredible, it is generally credited, viz: that the Company have solicited a loan of two kurores of rupees at five per cent. from the King and that it had been granted, much against his Majesty's will, as he has taken up with that "good old gentlemanly vice" avarice.

The late King's manageric and hunting establishment have been divided among the principal Amerees and persons of the city, to avoid the expence of maintaining them.

NEPAUL.—Six regiments of Goorkas have suddenly made their appearance on the East Bank of the Kalli, from whence they now threaten Kunam. Government are strengthening our station towards the Nepaul Frontier and immediately after the rains, an army will be formed at Benaras, for the express purpose of watching the proceedings of our friend the Goorkas.

MADRAS.

THE MUNRO STATUE.—Between 100 and 200 soldiers of H. M. 4th, walked to the north beach in white dresses to assist in landing the Munro statue. They formed a great contrast with the number of coolies who were employed for the same purpose. The horse was landed in perfect safety opposite Messrs. Arhuthnot's office about 5 o'clock, but the other pieces were delayed in being landed on account of the raft requiring to be released. Much credit is due to Captain Gallis and his officers for the care and seaman-like manner in which the horse was hoisted out, and Captain G. hesitated not to cut away more of his deck and carlings to save time in landing it.

SPHERICAL CASE SHOT.—A large supply of spherical case shot and 10-inch shells, has been ordered to Bengal, as soon as possible.

THE CHOLEERA.—Cholera has broken out in H. M.'s 41st Regiment at Beleary.

DISTURBANCES AT ASTRAGRAM.—In consequence of large numbers of the Mohomedan portion of the Astragram Division being in a state of popular excitement, (arising out of religious differences between themselves and their Hindoo brethren) the Superintendent had been obliged to request the assistance of the whole disposable force at the French Rocks, with the least practicable delay in support of the civil authority. Upon which requisition Major Bowker immediately marched with a detachment, and arrived between 11 and 12 o'clock on the night of the 15th ultimo.

THE DOGAB.—It is said, that definitive orders for the occupation of the Doogab, arrived on the night of the 13th instant, from Calcutta. Three Regiments of Native Infantry and one of Cavalry are to be moved. The former to Kulladgher, Belgauin and Dharwar; the latter to Sholapore. The corps selected, it is expected, will be the 2d Light Cavalry, and 18th, 32d and 52d Native Infantry.

BOMBAY.

ADEN EXPEDITION.—Captain Haines, it is said, is about to start for Aden along with a detachment of fifty men, under the command of a European officer, for the purpose of taking possession of that place, ceded, it will be remembered, several months ago, to the British power. This step will, it is anticipated, be productive of considerable advantage to our commerce with the Red Sea, as it is decidedly the most commodious port in that quarter, and situated much more conveniently for the coffee trade than Mocha, which has so long, owing to the crooked policy of the Egyptian ruler, superseded it as a depôt for that valuable traffic.

NEW PAPER.—A new paper has been started at Bombay, under the title of The Bombay Times and Journal of commerce.

A VESSEL BURNED AT SEA.—The buggalow Sallumty, from Muscat has brought information, that a vessel named the Abgah (Agahis perhaps) was burned at sea on or about the 21 instant, between Muscat and Bombay. Six lascars, being a part of the crew of the ill-fated vessel, were picked up by the buggalow, who state that they only have escaped the conflagration to tell the tale.

PACKETS PLUNDERED.—PREPARATIONS FOR WAR.—Information has been received by the Atalanta, on the authority of a person from on board the Tigris to the steamer Euphrates, when she sailed for Bagdad on the 15th of July, that three packets from Basorah to Bagdad had been plundered by the Arabs, and all the letters lost. One packet also from Damascus to Bagdad, on its way to India, had been plundered, as is supposed, by a party of men in the interest of Mahomed Ali Pasha, who had been sent expressly for the purpose.

A despatch had also been received at Bagdad on the 15th July, from Constantinople, in which it is stated that Sultan Mahomed is prepared to levy war against Mahomed Ali Pasha. Large bodies of troops had been assembled at Dairbekir, and Ali Pasha of Bagdad had received orders to proceed in person to join the forces at that place for the purpose of making an attack on Abraham Pasha at Aleppo.

REINFORCEMENT OF BRITISH TROOPS.—It is stated, that it has been resolved upon at head-quarters, to solicit a reinforcement of British troops for the Indian Army, to the extent of 12,000 men.

CEYLON

OLD CIVIL SERVANTS.—Private letters mention that in reply to the memorial lately sent home, the old civil servants will, in future, be allowed eighteen months', and, in case of ill-health requiring it, two years' furlough to England, with the privilege of returning to the former situations in this colony.

GINGELLY OIL.—Account sales have been received from England of a small quantity of Gingelly oil at the enormous price of £65 per ton, of two leagues.

HUAMAH.

Letters from Rangoon state, that the Governor of that place had not only declined to retain Colonel Benson's visit, but had not sent any officer of the Government to attend at his embarkation for the capital. Dr. Bayfield had been informed also, that he would not be permitted to remain at the Residency after the departure of Colonel Benson.—Tharawaddy, it is said, has left the capital in order to avoid our ambassador.

The following extract of a letter from Rangoon, shows the feeling entertained by our Birman neighbour towards us:

"The usurper has now acted the part of the paramount power so long, and now sees the good effect of his conduct, by the Nepaulese following his example, that his insolence will increase as he imagines our necessity to him increases; and all this because some demotraitors, the dupes of Tharawaddy, succeeded in blinding our Government to the sterling value of Colonel Burney. When we are least able, we shall be then compelled to resort to the only remedy—a war. When we commence with the Nepaulese, he will commence with us.

Our policy must be to restore the old Government. It would induce thousands to quit Tharawaddy's standard and join us; and no time should be lost in sending another European Regiment to Maulmain from Ceylon.

"Every effort, short of personal violence, will be resorted to, to drive Dr. Bayfield out of Roy's Banished House, in order to make a necessity for Colonel Benson to return to Rangoon, to treat with this A-Ya. Pain. It is the policy of the Court of Ava to expel our Resident from the Capital, where he has a spy to learn what mischievous or communication are going on between the Nepaulese and Chinese court; so that if Col B. remains there, contrary to the policy of the usurper, he will be a kind of prisoner without visitors. The probability is, that he will not submit to their contumely.

Our Resident yet remains at Rangoon, waiting for conveyance—for the arrival of the presents for King Tharawaddy—and report says, for the King's permission to the Woodcock to allow him to proceed to the capital. Nor has the Woodcock returned the Resident's visit, and with regard to the murders committed by the Martaban people at Maulmain, the murderers are not to be punished until after the Burmah lent.

Report says, that Col. Benson is not to expect to receive the same respect as did Col. Burney, by being visited by the Woongees, and, moreover, that he must not refer to matters in which Col Burney was concerned. In other words, King Tharawaddy remains convinced that Lord Auckland will not quarrel with him about the patriy consideration as to which country is to construe the law of nations or dictate the terms to the other; and also remains resolved not to yield an inch but to military demonstrations. Indeed this is placed beyond a doubt, for when our military demonstration ceases, his contumely recommences.

From the Diana, steamer, being too sharp to take the ground on a tide-way and from her speed not exceeding 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 6 knots, it is doubtful whether or not the Resident will proceed up in her, so that supposing the Resident reaches the capital in all September, and succeeds in working out an answer from the Court by the middle of October, it cannot be known in Calcutta before the end of November, when, if the Nepaulese or Persians draw off our attention, Tharawaddy will be proportionally arrogant towards our Resident and the time will have past for our troops to reach Maulmain from Ceylon or Madras.

PEWANG.

Penang papers of the 1st of September mention, that the Malays were still in possession of Quedah, but that H. M. ship Hycinth, Capt. Warren, had sailed for that place, accompanied by a gun-boat, with instruction to occupy it and deliver it over to the Siamese!

SINGAPORE.

Singapore journals to the 16th of August, which have been received during the week, complain of an intention on the part of the Dutch Government, to take possession of the Island of Lingin, and anticipate much detriment to the Singapore trade in consequence, but journals of the 23d of August, intimate, that the expedition was merely meant to obtain from the Sultan a recognition of their right to form a settlement at Indragiri, on the East Coast of Sumatra, to the westward of Jambie.

CHINA.

Intelligence from China, to the 1st of July, has been received during the week.

There was a tendency towards improvement in the opium market, owing to this season's Malwa being in the hands of a few extensive holders, and the knowledge that a considerable quantity of the drug could not reach Bombay before the termination of the rains. The prices were, for Patna, dms. 530; Benares dms. 485 to 490; and Malwa dms. 530, with a prospect of a further advance. The Lord Castlereagh had experienced a severe typhoon of eighteen hours duration, in which she believed greatly, and lost only a few small spars.

ASIATIC NEWS.

A CURIOUS AND A HARD CASE.

On the 15th of September last, the following appeal, on behalf of Rajah Govindnath Rai, Behadoor, of Dinagepoor, was submitted, by Mr. Dias, through Mr. Secretary F. J. Halliday, to His Honor the Deputy-Governor of Bengal.

On the 3d January 1831, Baboo Pertaub Singh, of Moorshedabad, obtained a decree of sicca rupees 5,911 4-6, from the Moorshedabad Court of Appeal, against the estate of Baboo Jumbarnath Singh, deceased, of the same place, which was then in the possession of the defendants nephew, Kis-ennath Singh. The amount of the decree was ordered to be realized by the sale of the estate. Talook Chutteeanghur Aungurparap, was sold on the 5th July 1832, the Rajah becoming the purchaser of a four-anna share, for the some of sa. rs. 16,250. The Rajah was put into possession on the 3d of November of the same year, and held it undisturbed until the 12th December 1835, when a Juzawa! attached it under the orders of the Collector of Dinagepoor, proceedings having been forwarded to him by the Sudder Dawanny Adawlat in the suit of Mohandy Dasee, the third daughter of Sumboonath.

The sale at which the Rajah became the purchaser, was approved by the local revenue authorities, and upheld by the Sudder board of Revenue, and under the confirmation above related, the sale proceeds were distributed in the following manner:

For Government Revenue,	3,380	12	9
To Pertaub Singh, the Decreedar, ..	10,396	15	3-2
To Taruoputty Dasee,	2,272	4	7-2

Some time in 1831, a suit was instituted for possession of Sumboonath's property, by his daughters Tarrahsoondry and Horroondry against the nephew Kis-ennath and others, but the Moorshedabad court rejected the claim, and they appealed against that decision to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, ultimately obtained a decision in their favor, and the Adawlut ordered them to be put into possession. The Rajah, on hearing of the above order, immediately petitioned, that as he had purchased and paid for a four-anna share of the estate, the decree of the Sudders should not interfere with that portion. The case was conducted by Mr. J. C. C. Sutherland and a native pleader, and it was heard by four Judges who recorded their opinions as stated below:

The Rajah's petition was rejected, but, to obtain a refund of the money he had paid into the hands of the Collector, a second petition was filed by Mr. Sutherland. Mr. Daniel Carmichael Smyth, by whom the petition was first heard, gave it as his opinion, that as the Rajah had actually purchased the four-anna share of the estate, and had paid the purchase money into the Collector's Treasury, and as subsequently, at the suit of Tarrahsoondry and others, that sale was pronounced illegal, and as no orders were passed as to the refund of the purchase money, Mr. Smyth thought the Rajah entitled to the refund from the parties to whom it was paid. Mr. J. R. Hutchinson held, that though the sale at which the Rajah purchased, was set aside by the Sudder, the Rajah was not legally dispossessed, but gave up possession voluntarily, and that his present claim should therefore be thrown out. Mr. W. Braddon admitted the justice of the claim, but, as the Rajah had put in force the decrees on the proceeds of a subsequent sale of the same estate, for arrears of Government, Mr. Braddon did not consider it possible that the claim could be sustained. Mr. W. Money, before whom the petition was ultimately read, concurred entirely with Mr. Hutchinson, and those two Judges suspected, that the Rajah had contrived means for the ruin of the heirs of Sumboonath, on the ground of the Rajah having obtained the decrees against the estate, of his having become the purchaser of the whole estate for 13,200 rupees, in the name of his Ranees, for his having realized the amount of the decrees from the sale proceeds, and as the sale was held for arrears of revenue, which occurred during the time in which the Rajah was in possession.

Mr. Dias submitted, that after a careful inspection of the accounts in the Collector's office, as no arrears appeared to have accrued during the possession of his client, but that the dues of Government were paid up regularly; and as to Mr. Hutchinson's opinion, that the Rajah was not ousted but gave up possession, Mr. Dias added, that possession was not given to a subsequent purchaser, but to an authorized officer of the Court, which act appeared to Mr. Dias as perfectly legal; as if his client had continued to hold against the Court's orders, he would have endangered his purchase money, and the course adopted by him entitled him to an immediate refund. Mr. Dias did not deny, that his client is at present possessor of the entire estate, but this circumstance is no way connected with the sale held in July 1832, and, indeed, would not be brought to bear upon it, as the decrees alluded to were finally and legally obtained, and if any other person had purchased, he would not have been held liable for the claims of Tarrahsoondry and others. The case, divested of all the difficulties with which law and a protracted litigation had surrounded it, amounted simply to the fact of an individual openly buying an estate at a Government sale, held by a Government officer, paying the purchase money in full into the Government treasury, and being put into possession by a Government officer, under the full concurrence of the highest revenue authority, the Sudder Board; and when that sale was pronounced illegal by the highest judicial authority, the purchaser gave up possession to an authorized officer, and sought the refund of the money he had laid out. Under such circumstances, the hardship was apparent, and Mr. Dias thought his client entitled to his purchase money, and as under the Act of Parliament the amount claimed is considerably below the limitation of appeals cognizable by the Privy Council, Mr. Dias had no other course than to bring the case before the highest authority in India.—Hurkaru, Oct. 5.

POLICE OFFICE.

OCTOBER 6, 1838.

(Before the Chief Magistrate.)

CASE OF AN ASSAULT UNWARRANTABLY COMMITTED ON A PREVENTIVE OFFICER ON BOARD OF THE SHIP JATA, BY SEVERAL OF HER OFFICERS, CREW AND LIEUTENANT SEPPINGS, OF THE BENGAL ARTILLERY.

Thomas John Bell, versus Thomas Nelson Howard, Robert Jaques, Lieut. Seppings of the Artillery, and another.

Mr. G. E. Hudson, Attorney at Law, conducted the complainant's case.

Thomas John Bell deposed. I am a preventive officer. Last Friday week I was on duty on board the ship Jata, lying off town. At about the hour of 9 o'clock p.m. of that evening, I was sitting on the poop of that vessel leaning against the foot ropes. While thus seated I saw Mr. Howard, the chief mate of that vessel, come on the quarter-deck, and heard him call out, "Mr. Michelson, keep off the ridge ropes." Mr. Jaques, the second mate, who was then on the poop, said, "It is not Michelson, but Mr. Bell, the custom house officer." Mr. Howard then called out, I do not care who it is, he must not lounge on those ropes, and called out to me, "Mr. Bell, keep off the ridge ropes." I then quitted the ropes and lent forward, still seated on the rails. Mr. Howard again repeated his order to me to cease lounging on the ropes. I replied I am off. Mr. Howard then added, "keep off the rails," and I did so, and remarked to Mr. Howard at the time, "you had now better order me to go down from the poop." Mr. Howard replied, "I will very soon do it," I then observed, "I should like to say you hear so." Upon this Mr. Howard called Adams the quarter-master, and desired him to remove me from the poop. His words were, "go and take that person off the poop." As Adams was coming towards me to execute the order, I warned Mr. Howard, and said, Mr. Howard you had better take care what you are doing. Mr. Howard then came up to me and desired me to go down from the poop. I replied I shall not. Hearing this answer Mr. Howard seized me by the collar, and attempted to force me down the poop-ladder, and a struggle ensued. Seeing some of the crew come up, Mr. Jaques, Lieut. Seppings, and another person, whose name I do not know, seized me and attempted to take me off the poop. Whilst they were so doing, I entreated them to let me alone and I would go down from the poop, as I did not wish to be thrown down from it. They then desisted from maltreating me, and I went down on the quarter-deck. During the scuffle, Lieut. Seppings struck me several times with his clenched fist, and my shirt and coat were torn in the affray. Whilst I was coming down from the poop, Mr. Jaques said to me, "Recollect I have only loosened your fingers from the ropes." I afterwards asked Lieut. Seppings why he had struck me. He replied, because you struck Mr. Howard. I likewise asked Mr. Howard the reason why he ordered me off the poop. He replied, "Because you would not get off the ridge ropes when I desired you." I then requested to know why he had struck me. He said, "Because you would not move off the poop when requested." I replied that I had quitted the ridge-ropes when desired to do so. Mr. Howard then said, "You did not—you are a liar." I then thanked him and walked off.

Mr. Howard gave an order for me to quit the quarter-deck and go to my cabin, but recalled it almost immediately afterwards, at the suggestion of Mr. Jaques.

Cross-examined by the defendants. Mr. Howard did say, that I was at liberty to go about any part of the ship I pleased on the execution of my duty; but I must not be lounging about the ropes of the ship. This was said after I had been ordered off the poop, not before. Lieut. Seppings was the only person whom I saw strike me. I do not know whether the rest struck me or not. There were eight persons on the poop at the time, and I could not in the confusion of the moment distinguish what each particular hand was doing and where it was. I cannot say whether Mr. Jaques did or did not loosen from my grasp the main brace nor who tore my clothes. Mr. Morgan might have been the name of the fourth person who assaulted me, in conjunction with the other defendants, but I am not aware of this. I never used any abusive or offensive expressions towards Mr. Howard, nor did I refuse to quit the ropes or get off the rails when ordered to do so.

Thomas Nelson Howard, stated. I am the chief-mate of the Jata. On the day on which this assault is stated to have been committed, I had the command of the ship. Mr. Bell was the preventive officer on board of her at the time Lieut. Seppings, of the Artillery, had been passing the evening with me and was about to quit the ship at the time this affray is stated to have occurred. I came out on the quarter-deck and was standing by the Captain, when I perceived a person lounging on the rails with his back towards the ridge-ropes, I supposed it was Mr. Michelson, the midshipman, and hailed him, and said, Mr. Michelson, you must not lean on those ropes thus; but perceiving the person to be Mr. Bell, I called out to him, Mr. Bell, those ropes are unsafe, you must not thus lounge on them; keep off from them. Mr. Bell replied, "I shan't—I won't. I am as good a man as you. I will go to any part of the ship where you go, and do whatever you do on board of her." I then called a quarter-master and ordered him to go to Mr. Bell and request him to get off of the poop-rails and not to lounge on the ridge-ropes, as they were unsafe. As the quarter-master was going up the poop ladder, Mr. Bell advanced towards him, still holding the ropes with one hand, in a threatening attitude, to intimidate him. When I perceived this, I went up the poop, to Mr. Bell, who, on perceiving me coming towards him, got up and fired me, and whilst he held the rope with one hand, he made a blow at me with the other. I gently laid my hand on his shoulder, and said, mildly, Mr. Bell, you must not thus lean on the ridge-ropes, they are unsafe. You are at liberty, in the execution of your duty, to go to any part the ship you may please, but you must not hang on the ropes. He defied me and resisted. When he struck me, we instantly collared each other, and a scuffle ensued on the spot. When the other officers and the crew perceived this affray, some of them came up the poop and expostulated with Mr. Bell on the impropriety of his conduct, and told him he must not strike me, and to let go the ropes. He refused, and some of the officers interfered and separated us. I then stood aloof. Mr. Bell then went down on the quarter-deck and abused me in going down the companion-ladder. When he descended it half way, he returned, and, after abusing me grossly, retired. I saw him no more that day. I had, previous to this, received a letter from Captain Jobbling, the commander of the Jata, not to permit Mr. Bell to lounge about the ship's ropes in the disrespectful manner he had to do. Mr. Bell, at the time he behaved in this strange manner, appeared to have been the worse for liquor. He generally labours under the influence of drink. He brought into the ship a much larger quantity of liquor than he should have done, and made a very free use of it. He once endangered the safety of the ship by his negligent conduct. He got drunk and fell asleep, leaving a candle burning in his cabin all night, which is contrary to the regulations of the ship. This happened about a week previous to the transaction, which is now under investigation. I never struck Mr. Bell, nor did I speak to him in a harsher tone than I do to any other person on similar occasions. I did not order him to keep to his cabin. His object was evidently to contemn my authority and insult me before the whole ship's crew. If this kind of conduct is tolerated, and the authority of the officer in command of a vessel thus permitted to be set at defiance, there will be an end to all discipline on board of ships. The name of the quarter-master, who went to Mr. Bell by my order, is Cooke and not Adams. He is in attendance at this office. It is evident by Mr. Bell mistaking Adams for Cooke, and not recognizing Mr. Morgan as one in the affray, that he was drunk at the time.

Robert Jaques stated, that he was the 3d mate of the Java. He corroborated the statement of Mr. Howard, and added, "when I saw Mr. Bell scuffle with Mr. Howard, I did not like to see him ill use the chief mate, my superior officer; therefore I interfered and parted them, and released the rope from Mr. Bell's hands, by opening his fingers, but I did not strike him.

To cross questions from these defendants, Mr. Bell aided, the quarter master did not come so close to me as to enable me to distinguish clearly in a dark night who he was; but I think it was Adams. I neither abused nor struck any one at the time, nor did I refuse to quit the ropes, or to move off the poop-rails. I certainly did refuse to quit the poop. I was not drunk at the time.

John Morgan, deposed. I am the third mate of the Java. I was one of those that went up the poop-ladder to end the affray between Mr. Howard and Mr. Bell. Mr. Bell did not get off the poop-rails till he was forced down. The quarter-master was then sent to detain him to get up, but he replied "I will sit here as long as I like." He was sitting on the binnacle on the poop, with his back to the ridge-ropes. Mr. Bell said he had seen officers of the ship sitting there, and he had as much right to do so as any of them. Whilst the quarter-master was going up the poop with Mr. Howard's message to Mr. Bell, Mr. Bell said to Mr. Howard, you need not send the man to me for I will not go; and by the time the quarter-master had got up half way on the poop-ladder, Mr. Bell sat up, and putting himself in a fighting attitude, squared at him, still sitting on the rails. Mr. Howard then went up to him and put his hand on Mr. Bell's shoulder, and desired him gently to remove. Some words passed between them, and a scuffle ensued. I seized Mr. Bell by the waist and swung him round, and wished to get him out of the place. After a short struggle he went down on the quarter-deck. He then told Mr. Howard he was as good a man as him, and would go wherever he pleased and do what he liked on board the ship, and would not be dictated to by Mr. Howard or any of his crew. I think Mr. Bell must have been drunk at the time, or else he must have recognized me as one of those concerned in the affray. I am positive when Mr. Howard desired Mr. Bell to leave off leaning on the ropes, and get up from the poop-rails, he said I shant—I won't. His intention seemed to me to be to aggravate Mr. Howard. I seized Mr. Bell by the waist, because I thought he was going to strike Mr. Howard. Mr. Bell repeated his irritating language often. When the crew heard Mr. Bell refuse to obey Mr. Howard's order and saw him scuffle with him, they all came aft to see what was going on.

James Napp, deposed. I am Surgeon on board of the Java. I was on the quarter-deck when the affray occurred. Mr. Bell told Mr. Howard ordered him to get off the poop-rails, replied, "I shant—I won't. I am as good a man as you, and I will not be dictated to by any one of your crew. I am going to stay part of the ship where you go, and do what you do in it." This I consider to be abusive language to be held to the officer in command of a ship, by any person on board of her, and tends to lower his authority in the eyes of the crew. After the scuffle was over, Mr. Howard ordered, Mr. Bell to go to his cabin, but immediately afterwards, at the suggestion of Mr. Jaques, he countermanded this order and said, Mr. Bell, you are at liberty to go to any part of the ship you please in execution of your duty; but you must not lean on the ropes, as they are unsafe. I cannot say whether Mr. Bell was drunk or sober at the time. His shirt was torn during the struggle and his breast exposed. I should not suppose Mr. Howard would ever call any man a liar.

Robert Thompson deposed. I am a midshipman on board of the Java. I heard Mr. Howard desire Mr. Bell not to lean on the ropes. Mr. Bell replied I have seen you and your officers lean on them, and I have as much right to do so as any of them. Mr. Howard then sent up Cooke, the quarter-master, and afterwards went up the poop to Mr. Bell himself. Some words passed between them, and a scuffle ensued between Mr. Howard and Mr. Bell, and Mr. Jaques, Mr. Morgan and Lieut. Seppings interfered and parted them. I did not hear Mr. Bell abuse Mr. Howard at the time, nor did he appear to me to be drunk. I am positive Mr. Bell refused to get off the ropes when ordered to do so.

Thomas Cooke, the quarter master of the Java, deposed. I received on the evening in question an order from Mr. Howard to remove Mr. Bell from the poop rails. I went up the poop and communicated my order to him, and he got up. After this, conceiving my order to have been accomplished, I came down and went about my usual business. I did not hear what Mr. Howard and Mr. Bell said to one another. I saw no more of this business and heard of no affray or fight that night.

Adams, the quarter-master alluded to by Mr. Bell, was likewise called. He deposed, that he was not on duty at that hour, but Cooke was. He knew nothing of the affray.

This closed the case for the prosecution, and Mr. Hudson informed the Magistrate, that he would not press it any further here, as it was his client's intention to have it tried before the ensuing sessions. The defendant said, they had no evidence or any thing further to state at present.

The Magistrate then summed up and said, that when he took up this case, he understood it was the complainant's intention to have had it finally disposed of here. However, he had no objection to his taking it before a Jury if he was disposed to do so. He then added, that it certainly did appear to him, that the complaint had been ill treated. If Government officers, employed on public duty on board the ships lying off this port, are subject to such treatment, there will be an end of all order. Mr. Bell's conduct in the instance before him, might have been foolish and intemperate, but his leaning against the ridge-ropes was not an offence which caused the danger of the ship; and even if, after he had been warned that the ropes were unsafe, he persisted in leaning against them and had fallen over board, it was his own look out, and the officers of the ship were not answerable for his safety in that degree as to force him to quit them in the violent manner they had done in this instance. If Mr. Bell's conduct on board of the ship was irregular, the officer in charge of the ship should complain of that to the Custom House, to his superior, and have him exchanged for another. They certainly were by no means justified in treating him in the violent manner which they appear to have done.

Lieutenant Seppings, against whom a summons was sent to Dumb-Dum, the head quarters of his regiment sent a medical certificate to the Magistrate, stating, that he was unable to attend at the Police Office this day, in consequence of indisposition, and desired to have the case against him postponed. The Magistrate in reply to this communication, wrote to him, that his case had been postponed till this day week, on which day he must either attend the Police office or else send a fresh medical certificate, stating his incapability to do so; in case of failure in this, a warrant would be issued for his apprehension. The case against Mr. Howard and Mr. Jaques then closed in this office, and the proceedings against Lieutenant Seppings was postponed till the 13th instant, on which day the complainant and his witnesses were desired to attend the Police Office at 1 o'clock p. m.—Hurk. Oct. 9.

OCTOBER 13.

Second day's proceedings of Lieut. Seppings's Case

Thomas John Bell, the complainant, deposed. Lieut. Seppings here present, is the person whom I have charged as having assaulted me. He struck me twice on the face with his clenched fist on several parts of my body. I do not remember on what part of my face he struck me. I did not even remember it the next morning. He could not get at me properly to strike me. He could not strike me severely; for he had to reach over those who were round me. He followed me down the poop on the quarter deck, but did not attempt to strike me afterwards.

Robert Thompson, Midshipman on board of the Java, further deposed. I saw Lieut. Seppings lift his hand to strike Mr. Bell. I saw him even strike Mr. Bell and hit him with his fist. I was on the quarter-deck at the time I saw this. I only saw one blow take effect. On which part of Mr. Bell's body the blow was given I cannot recollect.

John Morgan, the third mate of the Java, deposed. I did not observe Lieut. Seppings strike Mr. Bell. He might have done so, but I did not see him do it.

James Knapp, Surgeon of the Java, deposed.—I saw Lieutenant Seppings, amongst the crowd that had surrounded Mr. Bell, and were scuffling with him; and likewise saw Lieutenant Seppings strike a slap on Mr. Bell's face. I am sure it must have been a slap from the sound of the hand on Mr. Bell's face when struck.

Adams and Cooke, the quarter masters, were not examined on this occasion.

Lieutenant Alworth Merryweather Seppings, of the Bengal Artillery, in his defence, stated—I saw Mr. Bell sitting on the poop-rails of the Java on the evening on which this assault is stated to have been committed on him by the defendant in this case, and I heard Mr. Howard, the Chief mate of the Java, order him off. This order Mr. Bell refused to obey. When Mr. Howard saw that Mr. Bell had not obeyed his order, he repeated it, and on Mr. Bell's still persisting to disobey it, Mr. Howard ordered one of the quarter-masters of the ship to convey it to him, and see him removed from the poop; and as Mr. Bell did not leave the poop even then, I saw Mr. Howard himself proceed to remove Mr. Bell from the poop. After Mr. Howard had gone aft to Mr. Bell, and whilst he was speaking to Mr. Bell, I saw the latter put himself in a menacing posture, and being apprehensive that he would strike Mr. Bell, I, in order to prevent his intention, followed Mr. Jaques, the Second Mate, upon the poop and went to Mr. Howard's assistance. On my arriving on the poop, I observed Mr. Bell scuffling with Mr. Howard on it, who was endeavouring to remove him from thence. As I considered Mr. Bell to have been in the wrong in refusing to obey Mr. Howard's orders, regarding his removal from the poop, and his general conduct on the occasion to have been very violent and outrageous, I assisted Mr. Howard and the rest in removing him from the poop to the quarter deck.

After this the parties having consented to have this case settled here, the Magistrate summed up the proceedings, and on considering the case as one of an aggravated and unjustifiable assault on a Government Preventive officer, on board of the ship, whilst engaged in the execution of his duty, and that as such proceedings must not be tolerated, and Government officers should be protected from insult in the execution of their duty, he felt it his duty to fine Mr. Thomas Howard, Chief Mate of the Java, 100 rupees, or else two months' confinement in the common jail in failure of payment of the fine; and the same fine of 100 rupees, or two months' confinement in the common jail of Calcutta, in failure of payment against Lieut. Alworth Merryweather Seppings, of the Artillery, B. S.; and Mr. Robert Jaques, the Second Mate of the Java, a fine of 16 rupees, or one month's imprisonment in failure of its payment.

During the investigation of this case, the complainant, Mr. Bell, put in a certificate signed by several persons in his profession of life, and the Superintendants of the Officers of the Preventive service, tending to show, that from their knowledge of him they believed him to be a person not addicted to drunkenness, but as this statement was only in the form of a certificate and not deposed on oath before a Magistrate, nor had it ought to do with the facts of the case itself, viz. as to whether the defendant had or had not assaulted the complainant wrongfully, the Magistrate refused to receive it as a piece of documentary evidence connected with this case. The complainant then brought to the notice of the Magistrate that some of the witnesses had already deposed that he was not drunk at the time, and with regard to the liquor which Mr. Howard had stated the complainant had brought on board of the ship, that it had been brought for the use of another person, and not for this complainant; and as it was not required, it was subsequently returned.—Hurk. Oct. 17.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF INDIA.

Proceedings, October 10, 1838.—A General Meeting of this Society was held in the Town Hall.

N. WALLICH Esq., M. D., V. P., IN THE CHAIR.

*Present:—*C. K. Robinson, V. P.; D. Hare; W. K. Smart; W. Storm; G. A. Prinsep; Dr. Strong; Dr. B. Gangle; Dewan Ramcomul Sen; Capt. Spiers; W. Macroft; W. F. Fergusson; J. W. Payter; Colin Campbell; H. Piddington; J. St. Pourcaio; A. Porters; John Allan; M. G. Staunton, F. L. Beaufort; R.

Campbell; D. W. H. Speed; E. Preston; T. P. Morell, and John Bell.

The proceedings of the last Meeting were read and confirmed.

MEMBERS ELECTED.

The following gentlemen, proposed at the September Meeting, were elected members of this Society, viz:

Babu Sree Kissen Mullick; E. Bathurst, Esq.; Jas. Mackenzie, Esq.; James Stewart, Esq.; W. Dunbar, M.

D.; Baboo Koomar Suttichurn Ghossal; Henry Cope Esq.; G. Rogers, Esq.; P. Rayson, Esq.; Wale Byrne, Esq.; and F. H. Souter, Esq.

MEMBERS PROPOSED.

The following gentlemen were proposed as members, viz.

W. F. Campbell, Esq., Commercially, proposed by W. Storm, Esq., seconded by D. Andrew, Esq.

Major R. Becher, Assistant Quarter Master General, proposed by Dr. Spry, seconded by Dr. Wallich,

A. A. Dunlop, Esq., Fureedpore, proposed by W. Storm, Esq., seconded by Mr. Bell.

Alexander Stewart, M. D., Tumlook proposed by W. Storm, Esq., seconded by Mr. Bell.

George Teil, Esq., proposed by G. Preston, Esq., seconded by D. W. H. Speed, Esq.

Motions of which notice was given at the last meeting. Motion No. 1, was brought forward, and carried unanimously.

Motion No. 2. After some discussion, Mr. C. K. Robinson proposed an amendment, seconded by W. F. Fergusson, Esq., that the latter part of the original motion alter the word "insect" be left out. Carried.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Proposed by Mr. J. Bell, seconded by W. Storm, Esq., that a gold medal be presented to the Commander of the French ship Alcide, he having been the first successful importer of the true "grana fina" from Bourbon.

The Secretary presented in the name of Mr. Jaisar, one dozen white Constantia grape-vine plants, for the Society's fruit tree Nursery.

Pamphlet No 3, on Cochineal, was laid on the table, which ends the discussion on that subject.

COMMUNICATION.

From J. Little, Esquire, Secretary to the Agricultural Society of Western India, dated Bombay, August 30th, conveying a mass of valuable information, in reply to the queries contained in the Secretary's letters to his address, under dates the 6th March and 2d April, on the subject of the different breeds of cattle on that side of India, also respecting the improvement made in the breed of sheep and in the staple of wool. The results of experiments made with the American plough recently introduced, are given in Mr. Little's despatch.

From Dr. Hufnagle, dated 17th September, enclosing invoice and bills of lading for a case of American garden seeds (vegetable), which the Secretary had asked him to procure.

This supply consists of 70 different kinds, and although not very large, will enable members to estimate the quality of American vegetables, in contrast with those raised from Cape stock.

Although the Brighton arrived off town about the 18th ultimo, the case could not be got at until the conclusion of the holidays, having been through mistake covered at Madras by bales of goat skins. The contents are now under assortment and subdivision, and will be at the service of members in a day or two, of which notice will be given.

Memorandum—Mr. Dixwell, junior, supergo of the American ship Brighton, had called on the Secretary and mentioned, that his brother, Mr. J. J. Dixwell, had received Mr Bell's letters under dates the 22d April and 16th October 1837, and intended executing the several commissions therein referred to, as soon as he returned from England to the United States. These commissions were—

To forward supplies, every three or four months, of the different varieties of maize grown in America.

To forward supplies of all the approved grasses cultivated in America.

To transmit some hop-plants and works on agriculture and agriculture implements, &c.

From B. H. Hodgson, Esq., dated Nipal, 12th September, presenting some red and white clover and lucern seed, with some grass seed, given to Mr. Hodgson as prangos, but supposed by him to be guinea grass.

Note.—The grass seeds is neither prangos nor guinea grass.

From Dr. Wallich, dated 4th October, presenting in the name of H. H. Hodgson, Esq., of Nepal, a bag of "oash" or "bhoie barley," lately received from that gentleman; and in the name of Mr. McCulloch, gardner to the Pasha of Egypt, a quantity of Egyptian cotton and Dutch clover seeds.

From Major C. Smyth, dated Neemuch, 11th September, promising to forward as soon as procurable, a quantity of lucerne seed, for the use of the society.

From his Highness Nawab Tehower Jung, dated Benares, 30th September, advising despatch by the steamer of a box, containing 12 pears, and with reference to the unfavourable condition in which the last arrived, and promising to forward by the first opportunity 24 grafts from pear trees growing at that station.

From Colonel L. R. Stacy, dated Dacca, 24th September, giving the history of the cotton, of which a sample has been lately submitted, known now as the "Stacy Cone Cotton."

Memorandum—The Dacca safflower seed referred to in a former communication from Colonel Stacy, has been safely received.

From Captain Kuke, dated Deyrah, September 9th, acknowledging receipt of the supply of vegetable seeds intended for the experimental garden, established by Captain Kuke for producing seeds, and promises to forward, in due season, produce therefrom. Intimates having succeeded in raising several hop plants from seed received from Lord Auckland.

Mentions also his success with an experiment on the Otaheite cane.

From Captain C. Brown, dated Jubbulpore, 20th September, enclosing a memorandum of account between the Agricultural Society and the Jubbulpore plantation, for canes supplied and transmitted to the Society's nursery, amounting to Rs. 670-15-9.

From Monsieur Richard, dated Bourbon, 27th August, advising despatch by the ship Atlas, of two boxes containing lobes of the Castilian Nepal, which the Secretary had solicited Monsieur Becher, to procure, to from a Nepal for the sustenance of the cochineal insect. The boxes contained 40 plants, simply packed in dry moss, and perforated at each end to admit air. They are in the most excellent condition.

Monsieur Richard states, that this cactus is known by the name of the "Mexican Nepal."

From Dr. Helfer, dated 6th October, requesting to be furnished with a supply of coffee plants, Otaheite sugar canes, cotton tobacco, &c. seeds for introduction in the Penasserim Provinces.

From Monsieur Borelly, dated 20th September, acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter and its enclosure, to the address of Captain Caillol, which he promises to forward. States that he will be happy to receive for Captain Caillol the Society's gold medal. Memorandum. The medal was submitted at the meeting.

From Messrs Fergusson, Brothers, and Co, dated October 5th, requesting that the names of Messrs Fergusson, Holroyd, Leighton and Campbell, may be registered as applicants for sugar-cane cuttings deliverable in December and January next.

The degree of attention attracted to this important introduction may be estimated by a reference to the following list of applications already registered.

The Secretary's reply to Messrs Ferguson, Brothers, and Co's application, was also read, stating that he required the sanction of the Meeting to record an application that had come in after the 1st October.

Proposed by Mr. Hare, seconded by Mr. Bell, that, under the circumstances stated, the following gentlemen be added to the list viz.

W. F. Ferguson, }
Collin Campbell, } Jaunpore, .. X
Thos. Holroyd, }
J. H. Leighton, }

Memo. — The mark X denotes no fixed quantity.

The Secretary submitted a letter which he had addressed to the President, supposing Sir E. Ryan would have been present, explaining that the cultivation of sugar-cane for distribution, had cost more than was at first contemplated, owing to the heavy land carriage between Jubulpore and the river, and hoped that a small charge might be made upon all canes distributed to Members, although they were virtually entitled to them gratis by the Resolutions previously passed by the Society and advertized, suggesting that one anna per cane be the rate at which supplies be distributed to members, and that this arrangement would relieve the majority of members, from bearing an expense on behalf of the few who required canes for cultivation, as an article of profit, making an exception only in favor of Branch Societies, whose object is disinterested.

Proposed by W. F. Ferguson, Esq., seconded by Dr. Strong, that with reference to the great expense incurred by the Society in keeping up a cane plantation, it is proposed that for all canes distributed from the Society's Nursery, a charge be made of one anna per full length cane, and that after all applications from Members are satisfied, the remainder be distributed to the public at such rate as has been already fixed by advertisement, viz 8 rupees per hundred canes. Carried nem. con.

The Secretary requested the sanction of the meeting to pay the amount of Capt. Brown's memorandum of costs for sugar-canes, as per his letter of 20th of September, and that of Mr. Landeth for American vegetable seeds, as per Dr. Hufnagle's letter of the 17th September.

Proposed by C. K. Robison, Esq., seconded by Dr. Wallich, that these amounts be passed.

The thanks of the meeting were ordered to be offered for all the foregoing communications and presentations.

JENN BELL, Secretary.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a Meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Calcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's Apartments, the 6th October, 1838.

A. Morison, Esq., proposed at the last meeting, was elected a member of the Society.

Letters from the following gentlemen were read.

From E. V. Davis, Esq., of Brincoorah, requesting to be admitted a member of the Society, he was accordingly proposed by Dr. Sawers, seconded by Mr. Egerton.

From J. Ronald, Esq., Surgeon to the 24th Regiment, stating his desire to re-enter the Society under the new regulations.

From J. O'Dwyer, Esq., Civil Surgeon, Midnapore, to the same purport.

The above letters were addressed to the President, in reply to the circular lately transmitted to the members of the service, inviting them to join the Society under the new regulations.

Letters were also read.

From E. Balfour, Esq., Secretary Royal College of Surgeons, London, returning thanks, in behalf of that body, for the 1st part of vols. of the Transactions and the 1, 2, 3 and 4 numbers of the Journal of the Society.

From James Inglis, Esq., of Ripon, in Yorkshire, forwarding a copy of his work on English Bronchocete.

From J. McClelland, Esq., of the Bengal Service, and W. Griffiths, Esq., of Madras, requesting to withdraw from the Society.

The following communications were presented.

1. Memoranda, upon some objects of India materia medica, by W. B. Shaughnessy, Esq., M. D.

2. A case of paralysis in an infant, with remarks, by H. H. Goveale, Esq., M. D.

The former paper was then read and discussed.

Dr. O'Shaughnessy's memoranda, related to several experiments he had recently carried on in the effects of native remedies. He prefaced his observations by stating, that the great object of these experiments was to provide a pharmacopoeia for the poor. As for the Government, their annual expenditure was so trifling (less than one lac of rupees for all India) that economy to the State was of but secondary importance.

With reference to the principles to be held in view, in the search for substitute remedies, Dr. O'Shaughnessy stated, that tables compiled from the records of all the Dispensaries in India, shewed that four-fifths of the sum annually paid for medicines were expended on the following articles, Cinchona Bark and Quinine—Sarsaparilla Jalap, antharides Olive Oil, Oil of Peppermint, Rhubarb, Colocynth, Scammony, and Mauna; all the rest of the materia medica (nearly 300 articles) cost but one-fifth of the total sum.

Substitutes for Cinchona and Quinine.

In continuation of previous statements relative to nargotina, Dr. O'Shaughnessy presented the following tables which he constructed, in order to exhibit every stage of failure as well as success of the remedy.

SYNOPSIS OF REPORTS ON THE FEVERFUGE QUALITIES OF NARCOTINE AND THE MURIALE OF NARCOTINE.

This table shews, that narcotine has been used by over 20 medical practitioners in 141 cases, of which 125 were cured, 5 remained under treatment, and 11 failed, of which six were cured by Quinine. On the other hand, Narcotine succeeded in 17 cases in which Quinine failed. Thus regarded as a substitute for Quinine, the table, as far as it goes, tends even to establish the superiority of narcotine. Of 21 practitioners who employed the latter, 17 pronounce a highly favourable opinion of its value, 2 are undecided, and 2 have not yet made more than a numeral report.

Dr. O'Shaughnessy, added numerous details relative to the manufacture of the article, and described the cost thereof from the results of an experiment on 320 lbs. of opium, from which 160 ounces of narcotine were obtained. These details we are compelled to omit, but they shew clearly how the remedy may be obtained for less than 5 annas the ounce.

Details were also submitted, relative to the powerful febrifuge properties of "Rusot," the native extract of Barbary Bark.

Among purgative remedies, Dr. O'S. exhibited specimens of the Colocynth from Dehl, and of a red fruit called "Makai," Turchio-anthes Platanus, often mistaken for the true colocynth. The most important novelty in this class, however, was an extract made from the Kaladuna seeds of the bazar (pharbitis nil) a single pill of 5 grains of this extract, which is of pleasant smell, and but little perceptible taste, purges freely, and but rarely with griping, in from 2 to 3 hours after administration. Seventy cases were communicated in all, of which from 5 to 10 grains operated freely, producing griping only in one case out of five, and vomiting in only one.

The preparation is so cheap, that four full doses can be made for one piece.

An extract of the Bengal Albes was also presented, and described as of equal aperient properties to any of the imported kinds.

Also an extract from the roots of the Randia Dumetorum (Mynphul, Bengal) a powerful cathartic in three grain doses.

Diuretics and Alteratives.

Under this head several experiments were described on the Hemidesmus Indicus the Madras substitute for Sarsaparilla. Dr. O'Shaughnessy stated, that in diuretic effect, and as an alternative, it could not be surpassed by Sarsaparilla or any other remedy. It is common all over the country, being called by the natives Ununtamul its smell is delightfully fragrant and taste sweet.

The Volatile Oil, obtained by distillation from the Gurgun Balsam of Rangoon and Sylhet, was stated to be identical in composition with that obtained from Copavia, and exactly similar in its effects on the system.

Blisters, External Stimulants.

Some very satisfactory experiments with native blistering flies, were detailed also with the Lalchitra or Plumbago Rosea, which vesicates as effectually as Cantharides, though more slowly, being quite as useful in the treatment of chronic cases. This common plant Dr. O'S. regards as an efficient substitute for flies and leucopisms in nine-tenths of the cases in which these applications are now used.

The effect of the Ammonia Vesicatoria, Jalvados Petico, Ranunculus Sceleratus, Sinocarpus Analarium, and several other indigenous plants were also described, but the Lalchitra was represented as the best.

Narcotics.

Under this head Dr. O'S. described a singular parasite, a "viscum" found on the Nux Vomica trees of Cuttack. It is called the Kuchila Mulang. Mr. Kittoe, who brought it to Dr. O'S. notice, states, it may be collected for a rupee a pound. It is exceedingly powerful, and in every respect identical in action with strychnine and brucine, which costly preparations it will altogether supersede.

Emetics.

An account was submitted, of experiments on the following articles:—

Scilla Bengalenis, Pancratium Maritimum, Argemone Mexicana, Randia Dumetorum, Ditro Uliginosa, Clitoria Ternalea, Ionidium Suffruticosum, Asclepias Asthmatica, Calotropis Hamiltoria, Croton Asiaticum, do. Toxicarium, Ditro Zeylanicum.

Of these articles the Scilla Bengalenis, Argemone Mexicana and Ionidium Suffruticosum, were found to be, like the introduced Jalap, entirely destitute of medicinal virtue, though the same or closely allied plants are powerful emetics in other countries.

The Pancratium Hymenocallis Tenusalia, and the Clitoria Ternalea, though described by Ainslie as Emetics, proved purgatives alone.

The fruit of the Randia Dumetorum proved, to be a certain but very slow emetic; the roots of Asclepias Asthmatica much more speedy and equally certain; the bark of the root of the Madar, most powerful of all; but what is singular, much more so in Europeans than Natives.

But the best of all indigenous or available emetics, proves to be the Crinum Asiticum and its relative Zeylanicum, both either indigenous or widely cultivated in India, where the former is called the Burra Kanoor the latter simply Kanoor. The bulbs coloneness part of the leaves of these Crinums are most valuable emetics. Dr. O'S. communicated 34 cases in 28, of which 2 drachms of the expressed juice proved freely emetic, on an average in 10 minutes, 3 drachms cause vomiting almost immediately. No purgative action or any other unpleasant effect following in these cases. Dr. O'S., added processes for preparing the dried bulbs and leaves, and an extract of wine thereof, all powerful emetics. He stated he was led to the experiment by Dr. Ainslie's statement, that the plant was used for this purpose in Java. It will be a very valuable addition to the Indian Pharmacopoeia among the remedies (emetics) in providing which most difficulty was anticipated. In cheapness it is unrivalled, as 100 doses may be prepared for a rupee.

Specimens of all the articles alluded to, were exhibited on the table, including a magnificent Crinum sent by Dr. Wallich.

The preceding notice is a very condensed summary of the paper presented, but which probably will be published subsequently in full.

Vos, M.D., Deputy Apothecary, E. I. Company, Calcutta, and Alexander Stewart, M.D., Assistant Surgeon, Tumlook, Esqrs.

N. WALLICH, Esq., M.D., and F.R.S., in the Chair.

The Secretary read the proceedings of the last Quarterly General Meeting held on Monday, the 9th July last, and the following Report of the Proceedings of the Committee of Management for the past quarter.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT.

Medical Fund Office, 22d October, 1838.

1.—The Fourth Quarterly General Meeting of Subscribers, fixed by the Rules, to be held on the second Monday of October, has been postponed to this day, owing to the Hindoo Holidays.

2.—The nine Annuities declared at the last Quarterly General Meeting, have been offered to subscribers duly qualified by their period of service by the following advertisement, dated 1st August 1838, published in the newspapers:

"Nine Annuities having been declared at the Quarterly General Meeting, held on the 9th July, ultimo, as available for the coming year, (of which 2 are for the year 1834, which completes 6 of that year, 6 for 1835, and 1 for 1836) to subscribers to the Fund who have served seventeen years in India, such subscribers as are qualified by their period of service, and may be desirous of accepting Annuities, are hereby invited to send in their applications to this office, on or before the 31st day of October next, the envelopes whereof should be superscribed 'Application for Annuity,' to obviate their being opened before the date specified.

"Subscribers, whose applications shall not have been received on, or before the above date, will be held to have declined the Annuity, and the nine Annuities, will be declared on the 31st October, next, according to seniority of standing in the Service, from among those whose applications shall have been received.

"Subscribers in India, who have already intimated their intention to accept Annuities this year, will be so good as to send in their formal application in the manner above laid down."

3.—The Committee have, up to this date, received only two applications for Annuities from Subscribers in India; one from a Subscriber in Europe (Surgeon D. Harding, retired 2d April 1838.) and have received intimation to become candidates for Annuities from Mr. Surgeon Ewan Macdonald (retired in Europe 1st May 1838) and from Mr. Surgeon K. Macquesea, on leave at the Cape of Good Hope; so that, should no further applications be received by the 31st instant, four annuities will be available, exclusive of the annuity reserved for Mr. Superintending Surgeon Thomas Tweedie; who, it is understood, is on his return to India. Such of the declared Annuities as shall not have been taken up by the 31st instant, will be available to subscribers duly qualified by their period of service on application, at any time between that date and Quarterly General Meeting of July 1839, when the next year's Annuities are to be declared.

4.—Mr. Superintending Surgeon Tweedie, will be subjected, should he not take the Annuity reserved for him, to the penalty of the amount of one year's Annuity under Rule XXVII.

5.—In their last Quarterly Report, the Committee of Management omitted to notice that Mr. Surgeon I. B. Clapperton had contributed by subscription to this Fund to the extent of Sa. Rs. 420 or Co's Rs. 448. Mr. Clapperton, in a communication, dated the 30th July last, requested to know whether, in case of his rejoining, the sum would be taken in part payment of his arrears of subscription and penalty. He was informed in reply, that by his formal resignation of his right as a Subscriber, by letter of the 28th May last, he had forfeited all sums formerly paid in by him to the Fund; that his re-admission would be regulated under the terms laid down under the proviso of Rule III., and that he would be subjected to the penalty enjoined by the bye Law of the 28th February last.

6.—The Committee of Management have to announce, that Mr. Assistant Civil Surgeon T. W. Burt, of Chittagong, has relinquished his intention to appeal to the Subscribers for exemption from the penalty demanded from him under provision of the Bye Law of the 28th February 1838, and has paid up arrears of subscription and penalty; and has sent a power of attorney in favour of the Secretary, to enable him to sign the Fund deed on behalf of Mr. Burt.

7.—In pursuance of their intention to address Government against compliance with the memorial of certain Veterinary Surgeons seeking admission as Subscribers to this Fund, as noticed in their last Quarterly Report, the Committee of Management addressed a respectful remonstrance to the local Government, on the 9th July last, and were informed in reply, in Officiating Secretary Lieutenant-Colonel Stuart's letter, of the 23d of the same month, that the Committee's objection to the admission of Veterinary Surgeon as subscribers to the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, will be brought to the notice of the Honorable the Court of Directors.

8.—Rule V. provides, that the Committee of Management, at the Fourth Quarterly Meeting of every year, shall submit a statement of the probable expenditure of the ensuing year, and fix the rates of subscription with reference to the expected wants of the year. In accordance with this Rule, the Committee beg to lay the undermentioned estimate of the funds required for providing for six Annuities:

Value of six Annuities at the average age of 42 years is sicca rupees 31,419 each, or sicca rupees 1,88,514 for the six, which is equal to Company's rupees,..... 2,01,081 9 7

Deduct, amount of fine, equal to one moiety value of above six Annuities payable by the Annuitants previous to admission,..... 1,00,540 12 9

Less, anticipated amount at credit of the six applicants being Surgeons on 31st December 1839, Co.'s Rs. 3,000 each,..... 18,000 0 0

82,540 12 9

1,18,540 12 10

Add, amount to be reserved for contingencies, Vide Rule V..... 32,000 0 0

Amount to be provided by the Fund,

Co.'s Rs. 1,50,540 12 10

9.—From the preceding sketch it will be seen, that for the coming year the sum of Co.'s Rs. 1,50,540-12 10 will be required by the Fund to give six Annuities, and to retain Co.'s Rs. 32,000 for contingencies, agreeable to condition of Rule V. From the number of Subscribers at present in India, nothing less than the maximum rates of subscription will yield a sufficient income to provide funds for the above purpose as will appear from the undermentioned Statement.

There are in India Subscribers to the Fund.

	Number of each grade of Subscribers.	Maximum rate of Subscription.	Monthly income from each grade.
Members of the Medical Board, Superintending Surgeons,.....	3 ×	240 =	720
Surgeons,.....	6 ×	160 =	960

Monthly income,.....			11,428 × 12
Annual income,.....			1,37,136
Or Co.'s Rs.			1,46,278 6 5

10.—The adoption of the maximum rates of subscription for the year 1839, will yield an income as above, of Co.'s Rs. 1,46,278-6-5, leaving still a deficiency of Co.'s Rs. 4,262-6-5; which, however, will be made up by the interest accruing on the subscriptions realizable during each month of that year, estimated at Sa. Rs. 4,456-14-8 or Co.'s Rs. 4,754-0-8; the maximum rates of subscriptions will according be charged from January 1839 as under.

13. An application to become a Subscriber, from Mr. Assistant Civil Surgeon John Baker, of Balloosh, is now in circulation for the votes of Subscribers. Mr. Baker has deposited the amount of arrears of subscription and penalty payable by him, and defrays the expense of printing the reference made to the subscribers on his application.

14.—Two Resolutions have been submitted by the Committee for the approval of the Subscribers at large. One having reference to the amendment of Rule XII, which renders it imperative that there must be a quorum of five before the Committee can transact business; and the other proposing the cancellation of Rule XXXII, which prescribes conditions under which Members of the Medical Board are entitled to Annuities. The first being found inconvenient in practice, from rendering the Meetings of the Committee inoperative, it is proposed to constitute three instead of five a quorum, and to circulate the proceedings of such quorum of three for the approbation, or otherwise, of a majority of the Committee, and the second, independent of being illiberal in spirit, is deemed detrimental to the society's real interest, by keeping away parties from subscribing, who would otherwise join the Fund.

15. In conclusion, the Committee of Management, beg to express their regret that they have not been able, owing to circumstances beyond their controul, to furnish every individual subscriber with his Account Current with the Fund, up to the 30th April 1838. With the commencement of the year of account 1837-38, a change in the system giving the Fund credit on account of subscriptions, was introduced. Previous to that period, all receipts on account of the Fund were brought to credit in the public accounts of the Officer, who realized them; and statements containing particulars of receipts, were furnished periodically for the information of the Committees from which credit was afforded on the Fund Accounts to the proper parties; but since May 1837, the Subscriptions as deducted are made remittable by drafts on the General Treasury to the Fund Secretary, which drafts are transferred monthly to the Sub-Treasury, and that officer grants in lieu of them a Treasury Note bearing interest at 6 per cent. This change of practice is attended with no inconveniences as respect, the regularity of either the deductions of subscriptions or the remittance of the same to the Secretary in the Military Pay Department; but the same regularity does not exist in the receipt and transmission of subscriptions realized in the Civil Department, up to this period for all sums received during the year 1837-38 have not reached the Fund Office; unless, therefore, all the receipts on account of the Fund in the several Government Treasuries up to 30th April 1838, are remitted to the Fund Office, it is impracticable to close the Accounts of that year without omission of credits to parties who have regularly paid, and rather than transmit Accounts Current to Subscribers affording imperfect information, the Committee have preferred delaying the closing of the Accounts until all receipts on account of the Fund, up to April 1838, are remitted to the Secretary, and to this end, every exertion is, being made on the part of the Committee.

By order of the Committee of Management.

GEO. HILL, Secy. Medl. Retg. Fund.

Proposed by W. Finlay, Esq., seconded by Finlay Malcolm, Esq., and resolved—That the Report for the last Quarter ending 9th October, instant, of the Committee of Management just read, be received and adopted.

Proposed by George Angus, Esq., seconded by H. H. Goodeve, Esq., M. D. and Resolved, that agreeable to the recommendation of the Committee of Management the Meeting do sanction the adoption of the maximum rates of Subscription from the 1st January 1839 for one year.

Resolved That the thanks of this meeting be offered to the Chairman for his conduct in the Chair.

THE UNION BANK.

At a General Meeting of Proprietors, specially called, by advertisement of 13th September last, for the purpose of considering the expediency of establishing an agent at Mirzapore.

Mr. Cracroft was called to the chair.

The Secretary read the proceedings of the Directors at a Meeting of the 8th instant.

It was then proposed by Mr. Dickens and seconded by Mr. Ferguson—

Resolution 1.—That it be left to the Directors to establish an agency at Mirzapore, at such time as the estate of unemployed funds may appear to them to render that measure expedient, and under such restrictions and safeguards as the interests of the Bank may require.

But the above Resolution not to be construed into sanctioning the establishing of Branch Banks.—L. Clarke.

Mr. Dickens assenting to the addition to his Resolution, as proposed by Mr. Clarke, the motion was carried without a dissentient voice.

Proposed by Baboo Dvarkanauth Tagore and seconded by Mr. Adam Smith—

Resolution 2.—That should the Directors find it expedient to act under the Resolution, conveying to them the power of establishing agencies in the interior, they be required to submit to the proprietors for approval, the Rules which they may propose and the appointment of any agent whom they may elect.

Proposed by Mr. Dickens, seconded by Mr. J. Cullen, and carried unanimously—

Amendment.—That it is expedient to allow the Directors to act as they may think fit, in pursuance of the Resolution first carried at the meeting, leaving them to report at the next half-yearly or general meeting, subsequent to the establishment of any agency, the Rules they have adopted and the agent they have appointed for confirmation.

Proposed by Mr. Cracroft and seconded by Mr. Dickens—

Resolution 3.—That previously to an agency at Mirzapore being established, the Rules drawn up by the Directors for the management, should be deposited with the Secretary, for the inspection of the Proprietors at large.

A vote of thanks being then given to the Chairman the Meeting separated.—Huak. Oct. 9.

FIRE COMMITTEE.

Third and last Report of the operations of the Fire Committee, for the information of the Subscribers to the Fund for the relief of Sufferers by the Fires in April and May 1837, with Extracts from Proceedings at a Meeting of the Subscribers held in the Town Hall on the 23d October 1838.

REPORT.

The funds placed at the disposal of the General Fire Committee being almost exhausted, and the applications for relief from those who suffered during the general conflagrations of 1837 having ceased, it is resolved that the several Division Fire Committees should wind up their accounts and suspend their operations.

After the lapse of a period of about 18 months, the General Committee are of opinion that the several Sub-Committees have terminated their labours with general advantage to the Town of Calcutta, and to Howrah, not only as regards the security from fires and the frequency of their occurrence, but also as to the improvement in the appearance, cleanliness and health of those places which were formerly studded with disorderly clusters of dilapidated straw huts.

It is not surprising that among the thousands of straw huts still surrounding us in all directions, it should strike cursory observers or those who merely cast a passing glance on such spaces, where only straw huts are found, that comparatively few tiled huts have been raised from the funds, but if they would extend their new observations to those Bazzars and places which were devastated by the conflagrations, they will perceive the arduous and extensive labours of the several Division Fire Committees, especially in the 3d, 4th, 5th and 6th Divisions where the durability, regularity and neatness of the tiled huts at once proclaim the careful supervision of those who have continuously devoted a portion of their time to the comfort of the Native population. It must be allowed that fires have been of very rare occurrence during the past 18 season and those which did take place were partial—a fact of itself sufficiently decisive of the great though unobserved benefit derived from the erection of tiled huts, the general extension of which throughout the town, with a more general supply of water, the feasibility of which is now under consideration before a separate Committee,) it is hoped will prevent future conflagrations.

The following abstract Statement No. 1, shows the final operations of the several Division Committees up to be dates on which they respectively closed. Statement No. 2, exhibits the total amount of subscriptions, &c. obtained, and disbursements made, to which is subjoined a memo, showing the surplus balance and all outstandings due to the General Fire Committee.

The Advocate-General. My Lords, I appear as counsel for Captain Macnaghten, who complains of libellous reflections cast by the defendant upon his character, as a soldier and a gentleman. My client is about to rejoin his corps, and before doing so, it is necessary for him to clear himself from these injurious aspersions. The defendant is the editor of the Agra Ukhbar, a provincial paper, I believe of wide circulation; it has been boasted, indeed, to number 500 sub-cribers, quite a sufficient number to propagate widely enough the slanders which it contains. I shall show, that the defendant is not only the editor and publisher of the paper in question, but the very author and writer of the obnoxious articles complained of by the plaintiff. I need scarcely mention to your Lordships, that Mr. Stoequeler is the editor of the Englishman. This gentleman is on intimate terms with the plaintiff, who has the reputation of being a contributor to his paper. The defendant fancied, that he detected the writer of certain articles, which appeared in the Englishman under the signature of FIAT JUSTITIA, to be Captain Macnaghten, and as some passages in them happened to be disapproved by the defendant, although there was no allusion to the Agra Ukhbar, the defendant chose to make a vehement attack upon Captain Macnaghten. This attack Capt. Macnaghten very properly designated "unprincipled," and the defendant then put forth a series of gross libels accusing my client of almost every crime. [The learned Advocate then read the most material parts of the alleged libels, in which the writer, commenting upon the use of the term

"unprincipled." proceeds to give his definition of the word, and imputes to Capt. Macnaghten the charges complained of. In allusion to the court-martial, upon Capt. Husband, the defendant charges the plaintiff with cowardice and dishonourable conduct, and accuses him in another affair of having seduced a lady and afterwards boasted of the achievement.] Now, my Lords, as these charges are not justified, I am authorized in assuming that they are unjustifiable. The conduct of Capt. Macnaghten is of itself the best disproof of the truth of the libel; if he had been conscious, that such charges could have been justified and substantiated, is it possible that he would have ventured to bring the present action? If Captain Macnaghten has been guilty of indiscretions in his youth, is the charges for ever to be thrown in his face? and can your Lordships believe that he would recklessly and unfeelingly boast of his wrong? It is not for me to deny or admit the truth of any of these allegations. I may assume that not one of them is true. But even if there should be a few grains of truth in the numberless libels against my client, of which the defendant is the author, these few grains of truth could weigh nothing against the falsehoods with which they are encumbered. The question of appropriate damages, I leave entirely with your Lordships. I will not allude to the pecuniary loss which has been entailed upon my client; he comes into this Court for reparation to his injured character. The defendant is one well able to pay. His paper has 500 subscribers according to his own statement; but whether he be possessed of property or not, I may remind your Lordships that there are cases, and this is one, in which the offender who cannot pay in purse, must be made to pay in person.

James Cullen, examined by Mr. Clarke.—I believe I knew Mr. Tandy, the defendant, some years ago, in Calcutta. I knew Mr. John Tandy, of the house of Mercer and Co. I believe Mr. Henry Tandy was his nephew. I believe H. Tandy is an Irishman. I knew both the brothers (Mr. H. Tandy and his brother), but I do not know whether I knew Henry or his brother Edward. At first I had forgotten that there were two brothers, until Mr. Clarke reminded me.

J. H. Lang.—I was collector of Agra for many years. I left in October 1836. I knew Mr. H. Tandy there. He was the editor of the Agra Ukhbar.

David Lyall, of the firm of Lyall and Matheson, was called to prove the signature and hand writing of a letter written by Mr. H. Tandy, in which he admitted having written, printed and published one of the libels.

Brigadier Lindsay.—I was at Agra in January, February and March 1837. I knew Mr. H. Tandy. During that time he was Editor of the Agra Ukhbar, and he resided at Agra.

Sir E. Ryan said, that the jurisdiction was sufficiently proved.

The original record of the declaration made by Mr. H. Tandy, according to the act, held in this Court, was produced from the Record Office, and being under the seal of the Court, proved itself. Sir E. Ryan said, that according to the Act, a copy under seal would be evidence in other Courts.

Mr. Douglas, the publisher of the Englishman, proved that the Agra Ukhbar was regularly received and filed in their office, and that the paper containing the libels was a number of that journal [Note. Sir E. Ryan remarked, as a point of evidence, that this was unnecessary, because the title of the newspaper was sufficient proof, under the Act.]

The libels were then read aloud by the Clerk of the papers, and caused considerable mirth in Court.

Captain John Welchman. I am first Assistant in the Judge Advocate General's Department. I know the plaintiff. He is a Captain in the 61st Regiment. I should say that the libels just read have reference to the plaintiff in this action.

Mr. Strettel prayed, that Captain Macnaghten held the situation of Deputy Judge Advocate General at the period of Captain Husband's Court-martial.

This closed the case for the plaintiff, and as the case was set down ex parte for want of an appearance, and the defendant therefore was in contempt, no Counsel could appear for the defence. [Note. Sir E. Ryan remarked, that in ex parte proceedings, the new rules were not applicable, and the practice remained the same as it was before, under the Charter. It thus became necessary for the plaintiff to prove each particular part of his case strictly. The rule is different where the plaintiff proceeds to obtain judgement by default for want of a plea:—the appearance admits the jurisdiction, and therefore dispenses with proof thereof on the part of the plaintiff, and it lets in the defendant to give evidence in mitigation upon the assessing of damages.]

Sir E. Ryan. This is the first occasion on which I have sat in this Court in a libel case brought on ex parte. The defendant has certainly had every opportunity of coming in and proving his charges, and he has not applied to do so until too late. The consequence, therefore, has been that the case comes on for hearing ex parte and the defendant has no opportunity of defending it in any way, either in bar or in mitigation. We are of opinion, that this is certainly a most atrocious libel. No words could be used more abusive and calumnious than those which are here used,—none (to use the words of the Advocate-General) which could advance a graver libel against the plaintiff in his character as an officer, a gentleman and a man.

But there are other considerations which must weigh with us. Of the truth of any one of the allegations, indeed we have not a scintilla of evidence judicially, except the little that may be gleaned from what has been thrown out by the plaintiff's Counsel, we must judicially assume therefore they are not true. There are circumstances, however, which weigh with us, and induce us to give a far lower amount of damages than we should otherwise give. It appears upon the face of the passages selected by the plaintiff, that many of the libellous terms complained of by the plaintiff, were first used by himself in reference to the defendant, and this fact stands uncontradicted and unexplained by any of the witnesses for the plaintiff. The question, therefore, is, what has been the amount of provocation? If Captain Macnaghten has used nearly the same terms himself towards Mr. Tandy, who has in fact reversed them, does not this affect, and most materially affect, the question of damages? Under these circumstances, which I have thought it necessary to state, lest we should appear to be giving very inadequate damages, we pronounce the amount at One Thousand rupees.

Damages, 1,000 Rs. [Hurk., Oct. 25.]

MACNAGHTEN VERSUS DWARKANATH TAGORE

This was an action brought by Captain Robert Adair Macnaghten, against the defendant, as a Proprietor of the Bengal Hurkaru paper, for an alleged libel which appeared in that journal, in the shape of a letter entitled "Love of Claret." The defendant had allowed judgment to go by default.

Mr. Leith and Mr. Barwell were for the plaintiff.

The Advocate-General appeared alone for the defence.

Sir Edward Ryan observed, as soon as the case was called on, that the Court felt themselves in a serious position. The defendant had allowed judgment to go against him by default, thus admitting the libel charged, and the Court was now called upon to assess the amount of damages; but in looking narrowly into the plaint, their Lordships had come to the conclusion, that upon the facts of the pleadings, there was no libel apparent at all. After the indorsement had been set forth in the plaint to the effect, that the plaintiff was an officer of the Bengal Army, &c., and that he had been in the habit of writing in a certain paper, called The Englishman, under the signature of Griffith, it proceeds to state, that the defendant, well knowing the premises, printed and published the libel in question. The plaint then sets forth the alleged libel thus:—"Which said false, scandalous, malicious and defamatory libel, is in the form of a letter entitled Love of Claret, and contains amongst other things, the false, malicious, defamatory and libellous matter following (that is to say). To the Editor of the Bengal Hurkaru Sir,—A Correspondent (meaning the said plaintiff) of the Englishman (meaning the said newspaper, &c.) who signs himself Number Nip, who I suppose may be another yeleft Griffith, (meaning the plaintiff) imputes to me a living fondness for a bottle of Claret. I own,—and if I blush whilst making the acknowledgment. I hope I blush a Leoville. I own the soft impeachment. I emulate Cato of old, though I candidly tell you, that I don't think Cato of old ever drank a good glass of wine in his life. Rosin is not a good ingredient in wine, and the Roman admitted so in. But shall I let you into the secret, Mr. Editor, why Cato and I,—you see I keep good company in my cups,—liked and like a glass of wine? It is simply this:—we are not afraid that it will betray us into the confession, that we have ever received a dishonorable blow which we dare not resent, or have done many acts unworthy of a soldier and a gentleman, (meaning that the plaintiff had received a dishonorable blow which he dared not resent, and that the plaintiff had done many acts unworthy of a soldier and a gentleman &c.) His Lordship proceeded to observe, that there was nothing apparent on the face of the plaint to couple this last paragraph with the plaintiff. As it stood (for the innuendo must be put out of consideration) it referred only to Cato and to the defendant himself.

Mr. Leith urged, that there was a sufficient averment that the insinuation was levelled against the plaintiff. The innuendo, their Lordships would find, went on to state, that the paragraph had reference to the plaintiff and that it was intended to convey the insinuation, that the plaintiff had received such a blow and done dishonourable acts, and there was a prefatory averment that the plaintiff and Griffith were the same.

J. P. Grant.—It is immaterial what the innuendo goes on to state. The proper province of the innuendo is to explain and illustrate in reference to what has been already averred, and not to extend the meaning. Take away your innuendo, and there is nothing to stand upon. There is no averment, and nothing whatever except the innuendo, to connect the last paragraph, the gist of the alleged libel in fact with either Griffith, Number Nip, or the plaintiff.

It was then agreed, that the plaintiff should take nominal damages.

Damages: one rupee.—Ibid.

MACNAGHTEN V. SAMUEL SMITH.

This action was brought by the same plaintiff against the Editor of the Bengal Hurkaru, for the same alleged libel, as in the preceding case, and the plaint was precisely similar to the former, mutatis mutandis. The defendant had pleaded the general issue.

The Advocate-General [and Mr. Leith were for the plaintiff.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. Morton were for the defence.

Mr. Clarke (laughing) observed, that after the fate of the preceding action, he scarcely supposed the plaintiff would venture to bring on the present.

The counsel for the plaintiff agreed to strike the case out of the board.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25.

J. W. ALEXANDER, ASSIGNEE OF FOSTER, VERSUS FOSTER.

The Advocate-General moved for a revival of the injunction which had been granted in this case, to restrain a certain vessel belonging to the estate of the Insolvent, which had been entered in the name of his son (the defendant) in order to defeat the creditors,—from leaving the Port of Calcutta. This motion was made on notice.

Mr. Prinsep made no objection to his learned friend's motion, but he considered it an unnecessary step.

Motion granted.—Ibid.

RUSSEICHUNDER NEOGHY VERSUS HURRIPERSAUD GHOSE.

The Advocate-General said, that he had a motion to make to the Court in this case, under rather peculiar circumstances, which he hoped would induce their Lordships to grant relief if it lay in their power. Company's paper to the value of Rs. 9,800 had been extended under a fisi at the suit of the plaintiff, in the hands of the Accountant-General, and upon a former motion made to the Court of an order, that the sum should be paid over by the Accountant-General into the hands of the Sheriff, their Lordships refused to interfere, on the ground that it was not their province to take the responsibility of the Sheriff's office, and that the Sheriff must act according to his own discretion. The Company's paper itself had since been received by the Sheriff, and the question was, in what manner he must proceed to dispose of it. The only return made had been, that the property was extended, and as the writ had been returned, there was literally no authority for the Sheriff to act in any way. It was a great hardship upon the creditor, that the property should remain locked up in the Sheriff's hands, and yet he could not bring an action against the Sheriff, for he had neither disobeyed a writ nor made a false return.

Sir J. P. Grant. Is not Company's paper money?

The Advocate-General. I apprehended there is a difference. It comes within the term "debts" used in the 15th clause of the Charter, and it is there provided, that debts seized in execution, shall from the time the same are returned into the Supreme Court, be paid and payable in such manner and form as the said Court shall appoint. (And see Clarke's rules p. 153 Note.) If the property had been returned into this Court as goods in the hands of the Sheriff, of course the creditor would have sued out a writ of venditioni exponas. Under these circumstances it is difficult to see how the parties are to proceed without a special order of the Court, and this motion, therefore, is for an order that the Sheriff may sell the Company's paper and pay over the proceeds to the execution creditor.

Sir E. Ryan said, that the Court would direct a search to be made for precedents.—Hurk., Oct. 26.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1838.

POORUN RAM VERSUS GUNNOO SING.

The Advocate-General moved in this case. Money had been paid into Court in lieu of special bail under the Rule, and bail not having been duly put in and perfected within the regular time, the plaintiff had obtained the usual rule nisi to take the money out of Court. The learned Advocate now moved on behalf of the defendant, that (under the new Practice Rules, Deposit of Money, Rule 3) that the sum already deposited in Court, together with the additional sum of Co.'s Rs. 200 to be now paid in as a further security for costs, should be allowed to remain to abide the event of the action.

Sir E. Ryan. It is a mere question of time. You are too late.

The Advocate-General. Does not your Lordship think that the Court may exercise a discretion.

Sir E. Ryan. There is no discretion in the matter. You may pay into Court under the Rule the additional 200 rupees at any time before or on the day allowed for perfecting special bail. The time has elapsed and you are now too late.

ANUNDNARAIN GHOSE AND ANOTHER versus BRISUMBER HOLLAR.

The bill was filed for a closure of mortgage of certain premises in Calcutta mortgaged to the complainants as a security for the loan of Sa. Rs. 5,000. The suit came on ex parte for want of an answer.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. Morton for the complainants.

Decree of the foreclosure.—Hurk., Oct. 27.

MONDAY, OCT. 29, 1838.

THE EAST INDIA COMPANY versus GOVINDCHUND BOKERJEE.

This case came on for argument on demurrer to a special plea of the defendant.

The action was brought upon a promissory note alleged to be made in favour of the plaintiffs by the defendant for Co.'s Rs. 18,600, payable at ten days after the date thereof. The plaint contained a count upon the instrument, and also a count upon an account stated. In the former, the defendant pleaded the general issue and set off, and to the latter a special plea to the following effect.—That after the making of the said supposed promises in the said second count mentioned, to wit on the 27th July 1838, the defendant made his promissory note payable for the same amount, at ten days date, to one Samuel G. Palmer, and that the same was substituted for the said debt and received in satisfaction thereof, and that the said note is still outstanding. To this there was a demurrer.

The Advocate-General for the demurrer. There are two grounds of objection, first, that this plea, if it is any thing at all, amounts to the general issue; and secondly, that it is bad, because it does not confess and avoid. The word "supposed" vitiates the plea, because it precludes any admission of the promises, which the plea afterwards goes on to excuse the non-performance! It is inconsistent and absurd. The cases of Margett's v. Bays, 4 Adolphus and Ellis's Reports, and Gould v. Lusbury, 1 Crompton Meson and Roscoe, 254, are precisely in point. There was a decision of Gale v. Capon cited arguendo in the latter of the two cases, in which the Court were reported to have held a contrary opinion; but in the judgement of Lord Denman in Margett v. Bays your Lordships will find that this apparent conflict of opinion is explained, and it appears, that the objection was taken AFTER VERDICT, and not upon special demurrer. In Margett v. Bays the plea was a plea of the statute of limitations, and ran thus: that the said supposed debt did not accrue within six years, &c. The Court held the plea demurrable, and that the words "supposed" or "if any" were bad.

Mr. Cochrane, on the same side, was stopped by the Court.

Mr. Prinsep, for the Defendant. The first objection evidently falls to the ground, because under the new rules, a plea of payment or accord and satisfaction (which this substantially is) must be special, and the defence cannot be given under the general issue. As to the second point, I admit the cases appear against me, but there is a distinction. When the plea was a plea of the statute of limitations, the words were "that the said supposed debt did not accrue within six years;" so that there was no implication that any debt accrued at all. But in our case, we say, "that the said supposed promises were made." We give colour, therefore, in express terms. In one case there is no admission of the promise or debt in any shape;—in the other there is. The plea is a affirmative in one, and negative in the other. Surely this is a distinction.

Sir J. P. Grant.—Your affirmative is only conditional.

Mr. Prinsep.—Qualified, my Lord, rather than conditional. The word "supposed" here must be taken to mean precisely the same as "alleged." In all the old precedents the word "supposed" used to be inserted; and it was only since these very recent decisions that it has been omitted.

Mr. Leith, on the same side, gave up the point which had been argued by his leader, but as the objection relied on by his learned friends on the other side was a mere technical one, it was competent for him to take a counter objection of a similar nature. He submitted, therefore, that the demurrer itself was bad upon the face of it, because it misdescribed the plea as being pleaded to both counts, whereas it was only pleaded to one.

Sir E. Ryan said, that the Court would allow the demurrer upon the authority of these cases, but as it was a new point, each party were to pay their own costs and leave given to amend.

Demurrer allowed.—Hurk., Oct. 30.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1838.

This day the Chief Justice sat alone, there being nothing but a few common motions to occupy the Court. The following case heard on Monday, ought to have appeared in our report of yesterday.

EQUITY SIDE.

PREMUTTY MOHA RANKE RUSSUNT COOWARREE V. MUD-DENMOHUN COOPOORRAH.

This case came on upon exceptions to the Master's Report.

The bill was filed by the complainant, the younger widow of the late Moharajah Tejchunder Bahadoor, Rajah of Burdwan, against the defendant, who was alleged to be the darogah or general agent and manager of certain property belonging to the lady, situated in the New China Bazar in Calcutta. The bill alleged that the defendant had been constituted darogah under a certain purwannah, and had continued to act as such for several years, and it charged him with fraud and misappropriation of monies, and prayed that an account might be taken of the rents and profits received. The defendant in his answer, denied that he had acted under any purwannah executed to his knowledge by the complainant, though he admitted having acted under some purwannah, and having received the rents and profits of the Bazar, but he did not set forth specifically what purwannah it was under which he had assumed to act, nor did he unequivocally deny that he had in his possession a purwannah purporting to be executed by the complainant. To this part of the answer exceptions were filed for insufficiency. Again, in another part of his answer, the defendant, admitting that he had received the rents, assigned as a reason for not furnishing an account of the sums which he had annually collected, and of the rents at which the different houses were annually let, the circumstance that he had always paid the rents received by him, into the Sudder Cutcherry of the Rajbari at Burdwan, and that he had deposited there all the accounts, memorandums, books, vouchers and other papers relating to the matters in question, and that he had applied to the dewans of the Cutcherry to give him possession of the documents, which application was refused; but there was no positive and unequivocal allegation in the answer that the defendant had no other means of furnishing the accounts required. To this also exceptions were filed.

Upon a reference to the Master, these exceptions to the answer were allowed, and the defendant thereupon filed exceptions to the Master's report for allowing the said exceptions to the answer—which now came on to be argued.

Mr Clarke, for the defendant, contended that the answer was sufficient, and that the exceptions thereto were erroneously allowed. The learned Counsel called the attention of the Court to the extreme vagueness of the bill, especially considering that it was essentially a bill of discovery, and he took occasion to comment upon the practice which had been introduced into this country (he believed by Mr. Fulton, who had not had the advantage of much Equity experience at home) of framing the interrogating parts of Bills in Equity according to a very loose system of pleading. At home, it was the custom to apply distinct interrogatories to each statement and charge in the bill, and the principle was borne out by the dicta of the best text-writers, Willis and Mitford, and by the form given in the precedents of Van Heythusen; but in this country it had become the practice to insert only a few special interrogatories upon matters which might appear the most essential to the complainant's case, according to the arbitrary fancy and opinion of the pleader, and to omit all interrogation to the other statements except in so far as the general interrogatory might be applicable to them.* In the bill before the Court, there was scarcely a single interrogatory, but the complainant had relied upon the general interrogatory. Now the objections to the alleged insufficiency of the answer was, that the defendant had not set forth under what purwannah he had acted, nor whether there were any documents in his possession other than those which he had mentioned, by which he would be enabled to furnish the accounts demanded. The reply to these objections was that the defendant was not interrogated upon those matters, and there was no charge or statement in the bill relative to them.

Mr. Sandes followed on the same side.

The Advocate-General and Mr Prinsep contra. It might be admitted that the bill might have been made of a much more searching character for the purposes of discovery; but the defendant's case could not then be known, and it was not even guessed at that he intended to deny having acted under a purwannah from the complainant. As to the first point, the defendant had not even given a complete and perfect answer to the statement admittedly contained in the bill; viz., that he had a purwannah from the complainant. He had first denied that he knew of any purwannah executed by the complainant, and then he denied the possession of any purwannah executed to his knowledge and belief by the complainant; but this guarded denial, after all, consisted perfectly well with the possession by the defendant of some purwannah purporting to be executed by the complainant and actually executed by her, although the defendant chose to believe, for some reason or other, that the execution was not genuine! It was a palpable evasion—a mere subterfuge to escape the consequences of perjury. Then as to the second point—the defendant had been called upon for an account, and he had only assigned one reason for not furnishing it as demanded, and had carefully shirked a direct and unequivocal statement, that it was not in his power, by any means whatever, to furnish the account required.

Mr. Clarke replied. The first exception to the Master's report was, after much deliberation, allowed, but upon the second there was a difference of opinion on the Bench. After the first exception had been allowed, the Chief Justice observed, that it was unnecessary to hear the other, as the allowance of one was sufficient to send the report back to the Master.

Mr. Prinsep urged, that there ought to be a distinction where the Master's report was upon exceptions filed to the defendant's answer. When the report had allowed the exceptions, and the Court then allowed the exceptions to the report, it was not necessary for the report to go back to the Master, because the decision of the Court had the effect at once of overruling the exceptions to the answer.

Mr Dickens (the Registrar) observed, that the practice always had been to stop as soon as the first exception to the report had been allowed, because the allowance of one was sufficient to send it back to the Master, and the general costs were then given at once to the excepting party, because the rule was that the party failing to substantiate the report, must be mulct in the costs.

* As far as the Reporter's experience goes, it is not the invariable practice, even at home, to interrogate specially to every item important or unimportant, in the stating and charging parts of the Bill. He has heard it observed by a practitioner of experience, that it is loose pleading to interrogate at random to all the statements, that it is not proper to interrogate to those matters on a bill of Equity, which would be mere inducement in a pleading at Law; and that the proper rule is to interrogate fully to matters which are important and to interrogate not at all to the residue. If the interrogatory be a bare repetition (only changing the form of speech) of a precedent statement, cui bono? for the defendant would be compelled to answer it at all events. The precedents are evidently framed in contemplation of this, for the defendant is called upon to answer "as fully and distinctly as if the same were there repeated, and he, the defendant, distinctly interrogated thereto, and more especially to answer and set forth, &c." And at all events the question in every case is a question of policy for the consideration of the complainant, and can furnish no ground of objection whatsoever, available to the defendant, for he is bound to answer, as far as the statements and charges extend, though there should not be a single special interrogatory throughout.

INSOLVENT COURT.

OCTOBER 20, 1838.

IN THE MATTER OF THOMAS LINTON.

In this insolvent's case, M. N. Hudson brought to the notice of the Court, that the Insolvent was not in custody and Doorgachurn Mitter, one of the creditors, stated, that the insolvent held a situation of 100 Co.'s rupees a month in the Hon'ble Company's Dispensary. The Judge ordered the Insolvent to be sworn.

T. Linton, deponent. I was a laboratory assistant in the Hon'ble Company's Dispensary when I was taken into custody on a process of the Court of Requests. I still hold that situation, and my salary is 100 rupees a month. I have held this situation for 4 years. Formerly I was an assistant to Messrs. Bathgate and Co. I had formerly some funds. My debt to Dr. A. Porteous is of long standing, and is my largest debt. My debt to Dr Porteous is about 500 rupees and, besides this I owe Messrs. Bathgate and Co. about 200 rupees and Mr. Kyte 240 rupees. I am 26 years of age, and am willing to pay $\frac{1}{2}$ of my pay to my creditors..

This order was then made and the insolvent signed his schedule, and obtained the benefit of the act.

IN THE MATTER OF GASPER DUPUIS.

In this case Mr. Paul stated to the Court, that after this insolvent was released by the Sheriff after he had filed his schedule, he was arrested on the 11th of June, and was discharged on the 7th of September.

No opposition appearing, the Insolvent deposed to the correctness of his schedule, and obtained the benefit of the act.

IN THE MATTER OF GORACHAND DAY.

In this case the insolvent was not in custody. Mr. N. Hudson applied for leave to amend his schedule. Mr. Hudson remarked, that he had been arrested on a Court of Requests warrant, and obtained his release on the stoppage of his diet money.

He was then sworn to the truth of his schedule, and discharged.

IN THE MATTER OF C. A. CAVORKE.

Mr. Prinsep, for Messrs. Bagshaw and Co., stated, that there was opposition on their part. They are the detaining creditors on an award of 45,000 rupees. Mr. Prinsep expressed a wish to re-examine him regarding a sum of 4,000 rupees which he had received from China.

The Judge replied, that this sum had been subsequently paid over by the insolvent to the Assignee.

Mr. Prinsep replied, that when Mr. Cayorka was in jail, Messrs. Bagshaw and Co. gave notice to him, that if he persisted in carrying on the matter unnoticed in the award, that they could oppose his application, for the benefit of the Insolvent act, by the 58th section of this Act; and as they were aware he would take the benefit of this Act, they would leave it to him to fix his own amount of the balance due by him to Messrs. Bagshaw and Co. The award was made by an order of this Court, and the award was exact the amount of the bill, which Messrs Bagshaw and Co. had fixed to it.

The Judge replied, that Messrs. Bagshaw and Co. would not have consented to an arbitration, unless there was a doubt on their mind likewise; and he was not bound to admit any thing because by his leaving it to the arbitrators, he shows to his other executors that he had no connexion with Messrs. Bagshaw and Co.; and his not showing cause to the arbitrators, itself shows that he made no frivolous and vexatious delays, as the law expresses it; he therefore did not think Mr. Prinsep had made out his case.

Mr. Clarke remarked, that as Mr. Cavorke had admitted a debt, he recommended him to abide by the arbitrations.

There being no other opposition, the Insolvent was sworn to the truth of his schedule and discharged.

IN THE MATTER OF KISTOCHUNDER SOOR.

Mr. Strettell, on behalf of the opposing creditor, replied, that his client had made an opposition to prove fraud and collusion in this case, and a reference had been made by the Court to the matter; but as his client had not means to proceed to the reference, he declined proceeding in it.

The Judge replied, that the onus of the proof rested with the insolvent, and the case must stand over until the insolvent can prove the truth of his schedule in the report of the master.

IN THE MATTER OF GOPAL CHUNDER RAIN.

In this case Mr. Strettell, on behalf of the opposing creditor, put in a petition, and a certificate of the consent of parties to postpone the case, and it was therefore postponed.

IN THE MATTER OF W. W. ROBINSON.

The Judge in this matter remarked, that as the affidavit in this case is full of erasures, he cannot receive it. Mr. Prinsep said, that until three days ago, matters were under compromise, therefore the affidavit had been delayed and hastily drawn. He required to have the case postponed.

The Chief Justice replied, that his client's attorney ought to have had the affidavits ready prepared, and they ought to have been filed about a week before the day of hearing, so as to enable the parties to take a copy of the affidavits. In that case he will postpone the case to this day week, Mr. Prinsep's client paying the costs of this day.

Here Mr. Prinsep replied, that he had been ill-used. The opposite party had kept him in suspense until a late hour, and then gave him notice to proceed. The opposite party denied that there had been any negotiation for a compromise within this last week, and the negotiations altogether lasted but a few hours.

The Judge replied, that he could not enter into this matter on hearsay; but if any party had any thing to represent by affidavit or petition, he would enter into it. The case was ultimately postponed until this day week, by consent of parties, leaving the matter of costs to be hereafter adjudged by the Judge on the day of this adjudication being heard.

IN THE MATTER OF WILLIAM FAIRLIE CLARKE, AND OTHERS.

In this matter, a rule nisi had been obtained, that the Assignees of Messrs. Fergusson and Co. should admit the claim of the holder of a bill of exchange drawn by Messrs. Fergusson and Co. in Calcutta, and accepted by Messrs. Fairlie, Clark and Co. in London, to dividends upon the whole amount of the said bill.

Mr. Leith and Mr. Morton showed cause on behalf of the Assignees. The bill was drawn by Fergusson and Co. for £8,475, payable at twelve months to H. Glazbrook (the petitioner) and duly accepted by the drawers, Fairlie, Clark and Co. in London. Upon presentment at maturity, the bill was dishonoured and protested; notice was transmitted to the drawers, who thereupon wrote back the amount to the credit of the petitioner with the firm. Fairlie's house suspended payment in July 1833, and in February 1834 paid a dividend of 12½ per cent. upon their debts, and upon this bill among the rest. Fergusson and Co. suspended payment and filed their petition of insolvency in November 1833; and in April 1834, they filed their schedule, in which this debt was inserted in full. In the July following the assignees sent an account, admitting the full debt as due; but when the first dividends were paid in July 1835, they only allowed the claim upon the amount of the bill minus the 12½ per cent previously paid by the drawers, and the same deduction was made in the appointment of all subsequent dividends. The petition in the present case was for an order to compel payment of the dividends upon the entire debt, instead of upon the balance, after deducting the 12½ per cent. The learned counsel admitted, that the general rule was, that in the event of the bankruptcy of drawer, acceptor and indorser of a bill of exchange, the holder was entitled to prove the whole amount of the debt against the estate of each, and to receive dividends thereon from each, until 20s in the pound was paid altogether:—but they contended, that there was a qualification of the rule, where part of the debt had been received from any party liable, before proof against the estate of the others. Ex parte Royal Bank of Scotland, 19 Vesey Junior. Ex parte Leers 6 Vesey Junior. This was precisely the case. The present case. The 12½ per cent. had been paid by the acceptors, before the debt had been proved against the estate of the drawers. When had this debt been proved? The earliest date to which the proof could be referred, was the date of the insertion in the schedule, and that was in fact upwards of two months after the part-payment had been made. It could not be contended that the protesting of the bill and giving notice of dishonour, and the writing back the amount to the credit of the firm, was equivalent of proof. It certainly proved the debt in one sense, but it did not contribute to the proof contemplated by the Act. Even in the case of a judgment-debt, proof must be made by producing an office copy of the judgment. Ex parte Concanon. 1 Cooke B. L. Again, by the terms of the order made by the Court for the payment of dividends, the debt was required to be proved by the affidavit of the creditor to the satisfaction of the assignees. The proof contemplated, therefore, must be a substantiation of the debt after the bankruptcy, to the satisfaction of the assignees and an admission of the amount by the insolvents before their insolvency amounted to nothing. Again, the admission of the assignees raised no presumption in favor of the claim, because, in the first place, the act of the assignees could not preclude the creditors, and the question here virtually was between the creditors; and secondly, the admission was made in ignorance of the payment made in London, and could not, therefore, bind the assignees themselves. The learned counsel also contended, that the dividend of 12½ per cent, although nominally paid by Fairlie and Co., was virtually paid by Fergusson and Co., and that the creditors thus obtained an unpaid advantage over the separate creditors of Fergusson and Co., by receiving dividends twice over out of the same estate upon the same part of his debt; for it appeared upon the affidavits, that at the time of their insolvency there were large proceeds in the hands of Fairlie and Co., from the sale of goods consigned by Fergusson and Co. and which had been retained by the former house to indemnify themselves against their liability under their acceptances.

The Advocate-General and Mr. Clarke were not called upon to support the rule.

Sir E. Ryan. The rule must be made absolute. This bill of exchange had been duly protested and notice of dishonour given to Fergusson and Co., the drawers, before their insolvency, and the drawers then admitted the debt, by writing back the amount as a credit on the firm, and the full debt was afterwards inserted in the schedule without dispute by the assignees. There was no need of further proof, and the case falls within the rule, that the holder may claim and prove the full amount against the estates of each and all the parties liable until the whole is paid in full. There does not appear to be any hardship or injustice in the case, and there is nothing in the argument that the 12½ per cent. dividend was in fact paid out of the estate of Fergusson and Co. Even if the parties to the bill were ultimately enabled to pay in full, the holder would never receive more than 20s. in the pound.

Rule absolute.—Hurk. Oct. 23.

OCTOBER 27. 1838.

AN ADJUDICATION OF INSOLVENCY REVERSED.

IN THE MATTER OF WILLIAM WOOD ROBINSON, A TRADER.

Counsel in support of the Adjudication, Messrs. C. R. Prinsep and J. Cochrane.

Counsel for the Opposition, Messrs. J. Pearson, L. Clarke and C. J. Leith.

The particulars of this case, which is of great importance to the trading community, are these.

Mr. John Davidson Smith, in December 1835, on leaving India for England, executed a general power of Attorney in favor of Messrs. McDonald and Fraser, merchants and agents in Calcutta, to manage his affairs in India. This power was a joint and a separate one. Subsequently on the 6th of January 1836, he, at the request of his friend Mr. Sim, the Accountant to the Union Bank, transmitted an especial joint power of Attorney to Mr. McDonald, in favor of Mr. Alexander Fraser, one of the partners of the firm of Messrs. McDonald and Fraser, and of Mr. Alexander H. Sim, nominating them his special agents to manage all his money transactions with Mr. William Wood Robinson, trader, who, it appears, was greatly indebted to Mr. J. D. Smith, and had given him a bond for the debt together with promissory notes for the quarterly payment of the interest of this debt. Mr. Smith, in his letter of instructions to Mr. Daniel McDonald, the other partner of the firm of Messrs. McDonald and Fraser, writes, "I have, at the request of my friend Mr. Sim, joined his name to the power, I have given to Mr. Fraser, and him, to manage my money transactions with Mr. W. W. Robinson, I see no necessity for this. I see by this act I have tied up Mr. Fraser's hands." This power was never acted upon, as Mr. Fraser, who was the Joint Agent with Mr. Sim in it, shortly after its arrival in Calcutta, left India for England, and Mr. Sim, it being a joint power, could not individually act upon it. And on this ground Mr. Prinsep, in support of the adjudication, argued that it became defunct, and ceased in its operation, consequently its extinction enabled Mr. McDonald to act on his power of attorney in this affair, his power being a general one, and both a joint and a separate power; therefore it could not be extinct as long as one of the agents mentioned in it were present in India to act on it. Taking this view of the case, Mr. McDonald, when the quarterly interest on these notes which Mr. Robinson had granted to Mr. Smith, became due, demanded payment of the same from Mr. Robinson, as his general agent, and the payment not following this demand, Mr. McDonald arrested Mr. Robinson, and had him confined in the Jail of Calcutta, for the amount of this note.

In consequence of this incarceration, Mr. Robinson applied on oath before Sir E. Ryan, Knt., Chief Justice, for the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and on this application an adjudication of Insolvency was granted by the Chief Justice on the 22d February, 1836. This adjudication was now disputed by the opposite party, who argued, that the subsequent special power executed by Mr. Smith, in the name of Messrs. Sim and Fraser, had cancelled the general power in favor of Messrs. McDonald and Fraser as far as it regarded Mr. Smith's money transactions with Mr. W. W. Robinson. For, if that were not the intention of Mr. Smith, then whence the necessity of giving another special joint power to Messrs. Sim and Fraser, regarding his management of this part of his affairs in India; and if this second power did not annul the general power previously given, as far as it concerned Mr. Smith's transactions with Mr. Robinson, then it would be an absurdity for Mr. Smith to write to Mr. McDonald, on forwarding him the special power in favor of Messrs. Sim and Fraser, that he had, by the execution of this second power, tied Mr. Fraser's hands. For, if the case were otherwise, and Mr. Fraser could have, after the execution of this special power, still acted in this affair on the former general and separate power, then his hands would in fact not have been tied up.

Mr. Prinsep contended, that any person may appoint two or more individuals under distinct power of Attornies, to manage his affairs for him; and, viewing the affair in this light, he considered that both the powers may be co-existing, the Agent mentioned in them may all be enabled to act on their different powers simultaneously. As such he considered the special power in favor of Messrs. Sim and Fraser to have been but a subordinate power to the general one, and did in no wise militate against it, and as it had ceased to exist by the departure from this country of Mr. Fraser, one of the Agents mentioned in it, the general power which was a joint and separate power (and not like the special one (which was merely a joint power) the remaining Agent mentioned in it being in this country, could, after the ceasing of the special power, on the strength of the general power, take upon himself to resume that portion of his constituent's affairs which had been temporarily set aside and delegated with the special power, and added, that if this was not the case, and if Mr. Smith himself did not consider it in the same view, he would not have confined his subsequent instructions and communications regarding the management of his affairs in India to Mr. McDonald, nor would he have forwarded the special power in favor of Messrs. Sim and Fraser, taken through the channel of Mr. McDonald, with an explanatory letter of instruction to Mr.

McDonald on the subject; but he would have sent the power direct to Messrs. Fraser and Sim, with his instructions to them regarding this management of that affair.

Mr. Cochrane followed up Mr. Prinsep, and supported his argument, and defied the opposite party to produce any single case analogous to this, which would not bear him out in his arguments, and added, that as this circumstance he unmooted as one of constant occurrence, surely there must be some analogous cases to refer to if the opposite party felt disposed to do so.

Mr. Pearson replied, that he had not been able to find any case that was similar to this, and the Chief Justice added, that he had not succeeded in finding any.

The learned Judge then summed up. He said that in the present case we could only decide by guessing at the intention of Mr. Smith, as to whether he considered the execution of the special power, in favour of Messrs. Fraser and Sim, empowering them to manage his money transactions with Mr. Robinson, did or did not annul the former general power, as far as it regarded this part of Mr. Smith's affairs in India; and to come at this decision we can only judge from the tenor of his letter of instruction to Mr. McDonald, accompanying the special power to Messrs. Fraser and Sim. In this he expressly states, that by the execution of this special power, he has tied up Mr. Fraser's hands in this part of his concerns in India. Now, if the special power went to tie up the hands of one of the Agents mentioned in the general power in this affair, it surely tended to tie up that of the other likewise; as they were both equally empowered by that power; taking this, together with the circumstance of Mr. Smith's executing a special power in the name of Messrs. Sim and Fraser, to manage this part of his transaction in India, and separating it from the general power in the learned judge's opinion, tended to show that the power of Mr. McDonald had ceased in this affair after the execution of the special power regarding it in favor of Messrs. Fraser and Sim. Viewing the affair in this light, he considered that the adjudication must be reversed and the assignee must re-assign; he added, that if the facts had before been brought to his notice, he would not have granted this adjudication.

He, however, gave the party in support of the adjudication, leave to appeal against this decision to the Supreme Court, if they felt disposed to do so, when he added they would soon have the benefit of having the question decided before a full bench.

After this the Court went into the matter of the costs of this adjudication, and then adjourned.—Hark. Oct. 29

MISCELLANEOUS.

CALCUTTA.

MR. BIGNELL.—Mr. Bignell, as Superintendent of Legal Affairs for Government, is to conduct the prosecution of the sofidant Rajah Pertab Chund, at Hooghly, before Mr. Curtis, the Sessions Judge of that district. Messrs. Leith and Morton will conduct the defence.

MESSES TUCKER AND REID.—Notwithstanding the appointment of Mr. C. Tucker, to be a Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlat, that gentleman will continue to officiate in the Board of Revenue, until the return of Mr. C. W. Smith from the Cape. There is not the slightest foundation for the report, that the part taken by Mr. Tucker, in the Emambarrah question, has anything to do with his removal from the Revenue Board to the Sudder Court, the fact being that he has all along been merely officiating during the absence of Mr. Smith. Mr. Reid, the present Post master General, is likely to act as a Judge of the Sudder, until Mr. Tucker takes his seat in that court.

PASSAGE BY THE NORTH POLE.—The Ennore, from the Maritius, has brought intelligence of "a vessel belonging to the North West Company having found a passage by the North Pole."

MR. WILBERFORCE BIRD.—Mr. Wilberforce Bird has been appointed a Member of council, and he was sworn in on the 15th, on which day Mr. Ross vacated the Presidency of the Council and the Deputy Governorship of Bengal, which offices devolved on Colonel Motison.

HINDOO IDOL PUNCHANUND.—The orthodox Hindus of Kidderpore and its neighbourhood, have been thrown into considerable horror and consternation, in consequence of the desecration committed in the temple of their idol, Punchanund, which is situated on the roadside, not far from the Kidderpore Budge. A Bengalli Mussulman, by profession a hakeem, on the night of Sunday last, forced open the door of the temple, and struck off the head of Punchanund. The man was found by the night patrol, walking up-and-down in front of the temple, holding the head of the idol in both his hands, it being an enormous one. The reason of his having decapitated the idol is, because his prayers to it, for the recovery of a patient, were unheeded.

The hakeem, who was tried for the crime at Allipore, has been discharged by the Magistrate, to the deep disappointment of all orthodox Hindus and particularly to that of the Pujari Brahmins, or the officiating priests of Punchanund.

DI-COVERY OF A COAL FIELD.—An extensive coal field has been discovered near to the easterly outliers of the Beerbhoom hills, at a place called Bellia Narainpore, about 24 coss westward from Moorshedabad. The merit of this discovery is due to Mr. J. Ponter, Deputy Collector of Burdulpore. A few days ago, a dispatch of about 500 manfuls of coal passed Moorshedabad on its way to the Mint, where its qualities will soon be ascertained. It does not appear of the best description; but as it was gathered almost on the surface, and under native superintendence, it is very probable that future investigation may lead to a superior kind being found.

DEFEAT OF THE SEIKS.—Rumours of the defeat of the Seik Army of observation on the west bank of the Indus, by the Affghans, gain ground daily; and it is added, that the Chief of Peshawar, who has for some time past paid tribute to Runjeet Singh, has intimated that his family honor, is concerned in opposing Shah-Sooj a Contenance, and that he must, at all hazards, unite with his brother, Dost Mahomed, if the Seiks persevere in their intention to restore him to the throne of Cabul.

COMMISSIONER OF KUMAON.—It is said, that peremptory orders have been received from the Court of Directors, enjoining the immediate nomination of a Civilian Commissioner in Kumaon.

NEW CLIPPER.—It is the intention of Rustomjee Cowasjee, Esq., to lay down, in a few days, the keel of a vessel of eight hundred tons burthen, at the docks, at Kidderpore, in the occupation of the New Docking Company.

PRESENT TO THE PASHA OF EGYPT.—A vessel is required to convey to Suez the present to the Pasha of Egypt, which is to consist of two elephants, and these are to be accompanied by an officer in charge, six native attendants, with two state howdahs and their usual appendages. The vessel on which they may be embarked is to start from Calcutta not later than the 7th of November, and to proceed direct to Suez without stopping at any intermediate port.

VOYAGE TO SUEZ.—Rustomjee Cowasjee, Esq., has definitively resolved on dispatching a fine new vessel of 600 tons burthen to Suez early in December next, and intends to accommodate twenty-five passengers. The dimensions of the poop cabins of this vessel are 15 feet by 14, and of the side cabins under the poop 7 by 7, while the lower stern cabins are 16 feet by 15 and the side cabins 7 by 8.

FIRES.—Two or three fires have broken out in Calcutta during the month, but the damage done by them is, comparatively trifling.

A NEW PAPER.—A new paper, under the title of Le Nouveauté, in the French language, is published twice a week. The editor addresses himself chiefly to the lovers of art, science and literature and especially to the ladies, who he says, “éprouveront toujours les légers feuillettons des modes et des théâtres aux élucubrations politiques, et à la polémique des grands journaux.”

A PSEUDO KIDTO LALL.—It is said that it is not impossible that a pseudo Kidtoll will be produced in the defence before the Session Judge of Hoogly.

RUSSIAN EXPEDITION.—It is stated that accounts have been received of as late a date as June, that certain Russian expeditions destined for Central Asia, of which accounts had been before received through Odessa, have been suspended, owing to domestic troubles on the Russo-Turcoman frontier.

THE LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK. The Lord William Bentinck steamer, which was bringing the Jellinghee flat, in tow from Alidabad, got aground a little below a place called Bari; this rendered it necessary that another steamer should be sent from Calcutta to bring down the flat. Accordingly the Experiment left town on the 5th instant, for this purpose. The Bentinck had not received any injury from having grounded, and she could easily have proceeded on her voyage had she been able to have got afloat.

SCARCITY OF GRAIN.—Owing to the severe inundations, and the consequent apprehension of a very small crop this season, all kinds of grain have risen considerably in price in the market.

Advices from Kurnaul state, that “the scarcity and dearthness of provisions in that district, was such as to have called for the extension to the native soldiery of the provisions of an order of 1821, which authorizes, that whenever the price of ottah exceeds 15 seers in the rupee, money rations are to be issued by the Commissariat.

CAPE HORSES.—The two celebrated Cape horses, Legislator and Red Rover, were put up to auction, at Messrs. Moor and Hickey's. The former was knocked down at three thousand and the latter at two thousand, but it is not certain that either actually changed owners.

TREASURY NOTES.—In consequence of some delay in the arrival of the treasure dispatched for Agra, by the steam boats, the Government has issued treasury notes at forty day's date, bearing six per cent. interest for cash required for immediate purposes. The expectation of a five per cent. loan, daily increases.

DEATH OF THE NAWAB OF MOORSHEDABAD.—On the 3d of October, died, at his place, his Highness the Nawab of Moorshedabad. He had been ailing for several days previous to his death, which occurred about six o'clock in the evening of the day above mentioned. At an early period of his life, he was not without promise of a better course than he has ran; but he was checked in a disposition to cultivate the society of Europeans, and was thrown back upon his Zenana, and soon became the victim of its abominations.

THE MIRZAPUR SCHOOL.—The school, which was set on foot some time ago at Mirzapoor, by the exertion of private individuals, has been taken under the control of the Government, and therefore affords ample reason to think that it will, like the sister institutions at the presidency, rapidly flourish as long as it remains under the auspices of the present liberal management of the General Committee of Public Instruction.

TOLL ON BOATS AT BALLYKAL.—A sort of toll is levied on the boats that frequent the interior of Ballykal, by the Zameendar of the place through which that stream runs. The canal is let to a contractor, who pays an annual jummah of 700 rs., and the contracting party, with a view to realise the stipulated amount, and at the same time to profit himself by the transaction, spares no pains to complete the hardship of the people.

RAPE.—A cook, employed in the fort, was brought up on a charge of rapes perpetrated on the person of a girl of about 12 or 13 years of age. The unfortunate victim of the villains lust was an acquaintance of his, and had waited on him, at his quarters, in order to be conveyed by him to the residence of her sister, which was adjacent to the cook's house at Allipore. The wretch managed to detain her under the pretext of not being able to leave his duty until night, and then, after all the other servants had retired, endeavoured to persuade her to yield her person to his embraces; but failing in his persuasions, he perpetrated by force what he had failed in otherwise obtaining. The night guard, attracted by the cries of the unfortunate girl, went to the spot, broke open the door of the cook-room, which was fastened on the inside, and rescued her; but too late to prevent the villain from effecting his purpose. The cook has been taken into custody, and will be made over to the ensuing Sessions for trial. The poor girl is now confined at the Native Hospital, in a precarious state, in consequence of the injury she received.

THEFT.—The second mate of the Eliza Jane, Wm. Fulton, has been charged, by his commander, with having committed a theft, and appearances are very much against him.

BANK OF BENGAL.—The Bank of Bengal, have, in consideration of the expediency of establishing agencies at the central marts in the interior, which, if carried into operation will, doubtless, prove of great advantage to the commerce of the country.

ENGLISH BURYING GROUND.—Orders have been giving, gradually to do away with all the foot paths in the English burying ground; by which means and the placing of all new tombs and monuments as close as possible to those already on the ground, Government expect to be able to manage with the present burying ground for the next four years.

COLONEL J. SKINNER.—By the orders from Simla, it appears, that Colonel J. Skinner, C.B., is to command a Brigade of Cavalry, composed of the 1st and 4th regiments of Local Horse. He is appointed a Brigadier of the 2d class, and is to preserve the command of the 1st Regiment of Local Horse, in addition to his command of the Brigade. Lieutenant F. F. Fair, Adjutant of the 4th Local Horse, is to be Brigade major.

BOAT RACE ON THE HOOGHLY.—The subscription list to the new racing wherries, which have been lately built at Messrs. Beauchamp and Co.'s dock yard, on the other side of the water, is now filled up, and there is very expectation of Calcutta being favoured during the present cold weather, once more, with a boat race on the Hooghly. There have been five wherries built altogether, the whole of which have now been taken off the hands of the builders, four by the party in Calcutta, who are about to race, and the other by Captain Ross, commander of one of the iron steamers.

THE LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK.—The Lord William Bentinck, is perfectly high and dry on the sand bank, nor is there any water to a considerable distance round here and it is believed that no other means could now be adopted for floating her off, than by erecting long ways on which she could be raised, and then launched from them into the river again—or, if this could not be done, the only alternative is to prop up the hull on supports on blocks, so as to raise her a little above the surface of the ground, for the purpose of preserving her bottom from being injured by its close contact with the sand, which is of a corroding nature, and their leave the vessel in that position till the next rains should float her off.

HON. MR. ERKINE.—The Honourable John Cadwallader Erskine, Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs, is appointed the Private Secretary of the Honourable the Deputy-Governor. Mr Erskine does not vacate his appointment of Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs, the duties of the office of Private Secretary to Colonel Morison being by no means incompatible, with the discharge of the functions of Collector.

THE DEPUTY COLLECTOR OF ALLAHABAD.—There was a report current at Allahabad on the 11th inst., that some of the zumeedars of Agra had killed Kutb Hoosein Khan, the Deputy Collector stationed at that place. This requires confirmation, as it is probable the rumour may have originated in mis-conceptions regarding a proposal to appoint two additional Deputy Collectors to that place; a measure which is at present under the consideration of the authorities.

INSURRECTION AT JHANSEE.—A letter from the Upper Provinces, states, that an insurrection had broken out at Jhansee; and which, it is expected, will be followed by similar demonstrations in Jelona. The military are under orders to move in that direction, and the Political Agent at Bundelkhand has proceeded to the seat of the commotion, escorted by a party of troops.

DISCOVERY OF NEW CHURCH.—A new church, of great extent has been of late formed in the middle of the river, right in the former track of vessels proceeding down from Calcutta. It is situated between the house, on the other side of the water, at the point commonly known as the late garden residence of Mr. Barwell, and the Docks now in the occupation of the New Docking Company on this side. The church has received a considerable addition during the late rains, and its top appears now at certain times, considerably above the surface of the waters; and at a distance resembles much the appearance of the back of a whale, from its shape and the dark, dingy aspect of the mud. There is a report among the native boatmen, of a church having recently been discovered as forming immediately under one of the Hon'ble Company's long chain mooring buoys, off, or near to, the Docks at Kidderpore.

SUPPLY OF WATER TO THE PUBLIC TANKS.—The steam engine at Chundpaul ghaut has been hard at work, to fill the various public tanks in Calcutta with river water. The Wellington Square tank has just been filled nearly up to the brim, the engine is now engaged in filling the tank in Jinnjerytullow, generally known by the name of Speke's tank, after which the Hindoo College tank will be supplied as quickly as possible, and then the tank in the Wellesley Square, which sadly wants it. The tanks in and about Short's Bazar were three parts filled by means of gutters having been, some weeks ago, cut leading from the large drains to the tanks. This was done on account of there not being aqueducts near, which could be directed so as to convey the water from the Chundpaul engine. When that heavy fall of rain therefore took place, about three or four weeks back, the water issuing from these gutters did nearly as much good in filling the tanks, as if the engine had been set to work for the same purpose.

MORGAN THE AFRICAN.—Morgan, the notorious African, who was transported to Martaban for robbery, effected his escape from on board of the H.C. vessel Amherst, whilst in the Rangoon river, and has hitherto eluded the pursuit of our police authorities.

SALE OF SHIPS.—The Carratio, of 575 tons burthen, was put up and sold at the Exchange Commercial sale-rooms on the 20th instant, to Shaik Adam, for the sum of Company's rupees twenty-eight thousand.

The barque Sophia, of 334 tons burthen, was also put up immediately after the above, and knocked down to Baboo Narainpersaud and Bullub Doss, for the sum of fourteen thousand Company's rupees.

The Honorable Company's pilot vessel, the Henry Meriton, was sold at the Exchange Commission Rooms, on the 22d instant, to Mr. W. Turner, of the firm of Manton and Co., for the sum of nine thousand and eight hundred rupees.

THE CIVIL SERVICE FURLOUGH.—There are some seventeen or eighteen applications for the Civil Service Furlough this year, and only thirteen available, but perhaps; under the rules, the gentlemen who have passed the ten years period of service, may go home on private affairs, leaving their furloughs to follow as they fall due.

THE OUDE AUXILIARY FORCE.—There are now scarcely any desertions from the Oude Auxiliary Force, measures having been adopted to claim and get back those men who had enlisted in the regiments of the line.

THE COOLIE COMMITTEE.—The Coolie Committee are actively engaged in collecting all information procurable on the subject. The Magistrate of the 24 Perganahs, Captain Birch, Mr. Smart, of the Pilot Service, Mr. Hughes, and others of the Coolie shippers and agents, have already been examined. Mr. Dyer, of the Pilot Service, was examined yesterday. This gentleman and Mr. Smart, have submitted some suggestions to the Committee. Mr. R. Dias was also examined by the Reverend Mr. Charles and Mr. J. P. Grant.

DARJEELING.—Letters have been received from Titalya dated 11th Oct. which mention the arrival by dawk of the Secretary to the Darjeeling Association, the previous day, "the country being drier than could have been expected, and the weather beautiful." The following are further extracts:—"Hepper and Martin are getting on remarkably well, all things considered. The bungalow at this station, is half built and will be finished by the middle of November: the foundations of the store house are laid and Mr. Martin expects to complete it by the end of November. Hepper has been at Punnaharee for the last three weeks, where he has already finished a store, he is proceeding with the bungalow there, and has cleared away the trees and jungle. It will be completed by his second partner Mr. Folloh, Mr. Hepper himself having proceeded with Colonel Lloyd to Darjeeling to fix the site of the hotel.

"Mr Low has procured about fifty men of all sorts for Messrs. Hepper and Martin, which have proved a seasonable relief, as many of their men had absconded.

"Colonel Lloyd has 1,200 men engaged on the roads; the local corps too is nearly completed.

"The usual dawk road for travellers must be still from Calcutta via Dinapore, until the new road from Darjeeling to Malda is made.

Sad accounts of the state of affairs at Darjeeling have since been received, arising from the neglect of Government to furnish the inhabitants with the security which it was confidently expected would, ere now, have been afforded. The people have got it into their heads, that the Goorkhas are arming and collecting in great force in the neighbourhood of the intended sanatorium; and a sort of panic is the result, and every body who has any property is sending it towards the presidency for safety. The worst part of the business, however, is, that the greater proportion of the workmen employed under Messrs. Hopper and Martin, have absconded, although considerable advances of pay have been made to them. The builders will, it is apprehended, be obliged to come to Calcutta for fresh hands, and the erection of the hotel thus be delayed far beyond the period originally anticipated.

A letter has been received from Mr. David Wilson from Titalya, detailing the delays, difficulties and dangers he was exposed to in his journey to Titalya, in consequence of the rotten condition of a bhoillah he hired in Calcutta, which nearly went down with himself and servants on board, and which he was compelled to leave high and dry on shore, not being sea or rather river worthy. Mr. Wilson was fortunately enabled to avail himself to Major Garstin's boats, which were on their way to Titalya, or he would have been detained at the place where the accident happened, until boats could be sent from Calcutta. All interested in the Darjeeling Hotel, will, however, rejoice to hear of the escape of an individual most essential to its comforts. Measures are in progress to dispatch the workmen required by Messrs. Hepper and Martin, and, by the end of this month, a tolerable gathering at Darjeeling, including several European gentlemen, is expected.

ATTEMPT TO COMMIT SUICIDE.—Between nine and ten o'clock, on the morning of the 6th instant, a European named Fleming, attempted to commit suicide, at the residence of a friend of his in King-Cooper's lane, by cutting his throat with a penknife. It is stated that just before the occurrence the man had been speaking to a gentleman in his carriage at the door of the house. No sooner was the knife applied to the throat, than he became senseless and the police coming in immediately after, called on Dr. Bain, who dressed the wound.

THE FRENCH BARQUE EOLE.—The French bark Eole, in her passage up the river, ran foul of the brig Souvenandepourrey, abreast of Rangafullah Pagoda, on Wednesday last. The accident happened thus - the two vessels lying near each other when the Eole endeavoured to luff to windward, failing however in this attempt, she let go her anchor; the vessel's stern boat-davit took the brig's jibboom and carried it away - the latter then slipped her cable to enable the Eole to get clear of her. The Souvenandepourrey's jibboom fell on the wheel of the barque and smashed it, but no further damage ensued. Since this the Eole, as reported yesterday, grounded on the bank in Hooghly Bight. She discharged all her cargo and ballast, that she may be as light as possible at the next coming spring-tides, when she was floated off the bank.

SHIPWRECK.—The Protector, Captain Dixon, from London to this port, has been totally lost at the Sand Heads, and of all the people on board, whose names are mentioned below, only a recruit and the cook of the vessel were saved. Messrs. Cooper and Holson, Miss Martin, Captains Martin and Monke of the 41st and 38th Native Infantry; Messrs. Cooper, Smith, and Rust, and 129 recruits for the E. I. Company's troops, besides the Captain, officers and crew.

THE ARIEL AND THE SIR EDWARD RYAN.—The following is an account of a trial of speed between the clipper Ariel and Sir Edward Ryan.

The Ariel left the pilot on the 9th and the Sir Edward Ryan on the 7th, but these two fine vessels fell in with each other in the Straits, which afforded them a fair opportunity of trying their respective sailing qualities on a wind, the most important point in vessels purposely built to beat up the China seas against strong monsoons. On the 22d instant at 5 A. M., these two clippers were so close to each other that voices could be distinctly heard from each, with a fresh breeze from E.S.E., and at 5 P. M., after a hard beat of 12 hours, the Ariel was about 3 miles to leeward, when her fore-top gallant and main royal-mast went over the side, and at day light the following morning the Ariel was hull down a stern, with all sail set again, and of course dead to leeward, and at sunset she was not visible from the deck. They saw nothing more of each other until the morning of the 26th, when the Sir E. Ryan was off the Carrimons, working against light baffling winds. The Ariel came up with a leading wind until within about 3 miles of her when (at 11 A. M.) a fresh breeze sprung up from the eastward, and after a hard beat of 6 hours, the Sir E. Ryan was again down ahead, dead to windward. Darkness soon hid them from the sight of each other, and the Sir E. Ryan anchored in these roads at 1.30 A. M. on the 27th, and the Ariel not till 3.30 P. M., or 14 hours afterwards."

ACCIDENTAL DEATHS.—The number of persons who applied on the 14th instant for alms, at the house of Bahadur Aushoots Day, on the occasion of the funeral obsequies of his mother, have been estimated at nearly 100,000. Most of them received 4 annas each, which would make the amount of the donation to about 25,000 rupees. In the pressure of the crowd and their eagerness to get at the place of distribution, two persons were pressed to death.

On the 13th instant, a melancholy accident took place on the river off Hantcholah Ghaut. A ferry boat was coming from Sulker with a number of men, women and children, in indigent circumstances, and when within about three hundred yards of the Calcutta side, it was accidentally upset. The men and women only were saved, being picked up by the dingies that hastened to their assistance. When landed at Hantcholah Ghaut, the scene was piteous, from the heartrending lamentations of the parents, who had lost their children by the accident.

Upwards of two hundred boats of every description, have been destroyed during the late gale and very many huts and brick-built houses in Calcutta have been blown down, besides trees of every kind. Accounts have not yet been received from the country up and down the river; but it is expected that a very great sacrifice of human life has been caused by the storm. Several casualties occurred among the natives in Calcutta and the suburbs.

PASSAGE OF THE CABUL ARMY THROUGH LAHORE.—Letters are in town, which speak with some show of confidence of Ranjit Singh's assent to the passage of the Army of Cabul via Lahore and Attock being given at the personal interview between him and the Governor-General.

THE CABUL FORCE DOST MAHOMED.—The following is an extract from a Mofussil correspondent's letter. "The Brigading of the 1st and 4th Irregular Horse, under James Skinner, has at last taken place. It is whispered that the Commander-in-Chief said he did not want such a rabble with his Army! But he will be wiser by and bye and find them useful enough, indeed essential in the work he has to do. The 5th N. I. on its way to join, is so disorganized by sickness that it is to be replaced by the 64th from Allygur, which will march as soon as it can be relieved by a wing of the 34th from Futtygur. Among our 'on dits,' is one that Dost Mahomed is willing to be bought out and to give place to Shah Soojah, if we are seriously going to take the latter by the hand, but that he will have nothing to say to the Seik Infidels."

MOFUSSIL.

DELHI.—The force about to assemble at Ferozepore, will consist of nearly 13,000 fighting men. The whole of the troops composing it, will reach Ferozepore by November, when the Governor-General's interview with "the Lion of the Punjab," will take place. After the interview Lord Auckland will proceed to Lahore, and the force of Sir Henry Fane, will march (about the 5th December) in progress to Shikarpore, where it will arrive by the 25th January next. Preparations will be then and there made for advancing on Candahar and Herat, and from the latter place the troops will move upon Cabul, and re-seat Shah Soojah on the Guddie.

Captain Burnes has proceeded to Mithunkote, for the purpose of throwing a bridge of boats across the river there; and a Commissariat Officer, from Kurnaul, has gone down to Shikarpore, to collect grain and supplies for the army.

Mr. Hodson, our resident at Katamandoo, has quitted Nepal!

Captain Waile, Political Agent at Loodianah, has submitted the subject of a scientific committee to accompany the Field Army in Afghanistan, to Lord Auckland!

At Loodihana cholera still rages.

The Goorka General still continues at Loodihana.

The infantry force of Shah Soojah, is already more than complete—indeed 800 men more than the complement have been entertained.

Captain McSherry, the Brigade Major of the force, has succeeded in enlisting several Goorkas, and he expects to enlist 600 more of these hardy mountaineers, just the lads for the cold climate of Cabul.

Shah Soojah's regiments will, it is understood, proceed in advance of our own troops to Shikarpore, and there await the arrival of Sir Henry's Army.

Letters have been recently received from Lieutenant Pottinger, dated Herat the 28th of August last, at which time the garrison still held out gallantly. The besieged had managed to get some supplies into the fort, and there was no immediate danger of the place falling into the hands of the Persians. The besiegers were it seems, expecting to receive considerable reinforcement.

Under the able directions of Mr. Ross Bell, the magistrate and collector, the bridges of boats across the Jumna, at Delhi, have been completed and opened to the public.

Rumour says, that the Jeypore people are victualling their forts. Major Robert Ross, our political Agent, has arrived at the capital of Jey Sing, to look after their doings.

Goorka spies are busy, in their vocations, all over the country just now, but more especially in the Rajpootana states, of which the only one at all friendly to our rule is, probably, that of Bickaneer. One of the spies recently visited Delhi; he was speedily discovered and all his proceedings, watched there by the authorities. He took his departure for Muttra.

Great sickness prevails in and around Delhi and throughout the Doab.

An order has been issued from the Magistrate's office, that all persons entertaining or lodging travellers or strangers, for one day or any length of time, are to report the same to the Police to be registered by them. This order has, it is said, reference to the many undetected crimes and robberies committed in the city, by strangers and temporary sojourners.

LOODIANAH.—A large influx of Punjabees is daily taking place into this station, for enlistment in Shah Soojah's Army. The heroes already enrolled in this force, have been instructed to supply their necessities on credit, if they can get it in the bazar, 2,800 infantry now muster.

SAUGOR.—Letters from Saugor state, that in consequence of a local disturbance at Jhansi, the capital of an inconsiderable Bundela chief, whose general territory also is so named, the 25th regiment of native infantry, had received marching orders, and were likely to leave the Headquarters of the division for Jhansi on the 15th instant. This place is only some eighty miles from Kishan, but that being no longer a military station, a demand was necessarily made upon the Suagor Force, as Banda, the only other neighbouring quarter for troops, is not so strongly garrisoned as to admit of the withdrawal of a detachment of the strength required.

MOORSHEDEBAD.—The Nawaub Rushen-Ood-Dowlah, has started for Calcutta, to urge his claim, which it is the prevalent belief here is a just one, to the Musnud of Moorshebad. He will have a better chance now of obtaining justice, than when the late Nawaub's Treasury was brought to bear against him.

NATIVE STATES.

UMBALAH—A report prevails at this town, that 30,000 Doovanees, from Cabool, had reached Shikarpore, with a view of opposing the progress of our Army to the Northward.

THE MADRAS MEDICAL JOURNAL.—A journal, under the foregoing denomination, is to issue from the Madras press at the commencement of next year.

BOMBAY.

SUTTIES AT OUDIPORE.—A letter from Guzrat, mentions the shocking circumstance, that at the funeral of the Rana of Oudipore, lately deceased, no less than eight unhappy females, his widows, were burnt with the corpse. This wholesale slaughter is horrible and loudly calls for some decided measure by our Government.

THE RAINS.—There seems to have been abundance of rain in Candeish, and more than usual in Malwah; but throughout Guzerat and the Dekhan, there is a very alarming deficiency. Five inches fell during four days in Bombay at the last quarter of the moon, but it has since cleared up, and should the present springs pass over without a steady fall of at least ten inches, the most distressing results must, we fear, follow.

THE ATALANTA—WANT OF ENGINEERS—Among other gratifying news at the present moment, it is said that there is little chance of the despatch of the Atalanta from Bombay for any service, by reason of there being no engineers procurable to man the engine room.

VILLANOUS AFFAIR.—A person who gained his bread in Bombay by employing his pencil, recently seduced and ran away with the wife of a highly respectable individual in the island. The villain had been under considerable obligations to the injured husband, and besides making him this villanous return has, it is said, swindled several people in Bombay out of large sums of money.

LADY GRANT.—Lady Grant has arrived and is staying at Malabar Point.

SIR JOHN KEANE.—No doubt now exists as to the accuracy of the report of Sir John Keane being about to proceed to Kutch, with as little delay as possible, for the purpose of assuming command of the force which is concentrating in that quarter. The Horse Artillery has already reached Khandella, on its way down from Poona, for embarkation, but will remain on the top of the Ghaut until tonnage has been provided for its conveyance.

BOMBAY NEW BANK.—It has determined to form a Joint stock Bank at Bombay, and to commence operations on the arrival of materials which had been shipped from England under the directions of Mr. Arbuthnot and were daily expected. Mr. Arbuthnot himself is a passenger by the August Steamer. Although this gentleman's advices were favourable in regard to the grant of a charter by the home authorities, yet, as it had not reached Bombay, it was deemed expedient, in conformity with previous resolutions, to proceed without.

FAILURE OF THE CORPS.—Letters from various parts of the country mention, that there is every probability of an almost total failure of the crops of every description, in consequence of the long continued drought. Every thing till within a short time ago wore a most promising appearance, and a very slight additional fall of rain would have matured the productions of the season into a most abundant supply. The cultivators are anxiously looking forward to a few days of heavy rain, as the only chance they have of a portion of the crop being saved, but even this cannot prevent a great deal of distress among the poorer classes of the community and a serious defalcation in our commerce.

REMISION OF DUTIES ON GRAIN IN KATTYAWAR.—In consequence of the failure of the monsoon in Kattyawar Government has ordered the remission of all duties on grain exported to that province, until farther orders. Such a measure cannot fail to relieve a great deal of the distress which must be attendant on a failure of the crops.

CEYLON.

JOHN SMITH.—John Smith, who a few months since underwent the shaving of his head and another important operation necessary to his becoming a true beleaver in the Prophet, has recently renounced his new faith and been again received into the bosom of the Roman Church. There are amusing versions on both sides—Christian and Mahomedan—of the cause of this change, each claiming the triumph. It is also said, that to prove the sincerity of his recantation he drank plenty of arrack—a beverage which is known to be strictly forbidden by the Koran; and that the Catholic Priest, to whom he abjured his former apostasy, sealed his re-conversion, by plying him with pork to repletion.

MUTINY.—The Captain of the bark Emma, together with ten of the crew, who are in custody for mutiny, arrived in Colombo to take their trial, which will not commence, till the early part of this month. The Emma was bound to London from Calcutta, with a large cargo on board, consisting of indigo and other valuable articles. About the end of July she was discovered to be very leaky, and the crew began to show disorderly and mutinous symptoms from an impression they had formed, that it was not safe to proceed with the ship on the voyage. The Captain, in consequence, had no other alternative than to put into Trincomalee harbour, where a survey was held upon her a few days afterwards, which terminated in the discovery of a hole in her bows, made to all appearance with an auger. Whether it was, or was not, done intentionally, and by any of the crew, is to be proved—at present the affair is involved in mystery and many contradictory reports are in circulation in respect to it.

BURMAH.

The following are extracts from letters from Monleim, of the 29th August:—

"The A-ye-baing received Colonel Benson with a great show of kindness, as long as the Rattlesnake was at hand; salutes and guards of honor were the order of the day but then the vagabond has not condescended to return, the Colonel's visit, though he has had more than one hint about it. To make up for this neglect, it is said that he has lent his own poung (accommodation boat) to go up to Ava in. We shall see what sort of a reception will be met with at court. No redress has yet been obtained for the numerous murders and robberies committed on our frontier under the orders of the Bileing Woon. A great show has been made of apprehending the petty fellows who acted under those orders, but the leaders, the Ba- of whom a list of sixteen was given in, instead of being punished, have been made witnesses against men who were not accused. Nine unfortunate devils were condemned a month ago on this evidence, but not one has yet been punished, nor will be.

"The last letter from the court, was that in reply to the announcement of Col. Benson's appointment, and was a miracle of explicitness. You know that Burman letters may usually be interpreted in more ways than one; but it is impossible to twist this one into anything but a remonstrance against his going to court. It says, that A-ye-baings have been appointed for the North, and for the South, for the East and for the West; that he of the South is charged with all matters connected with English affairs, wherefore then should the A-ye-baing come to the golden feet, when if he has any business to transact, the Rangoon A-ye-baing is authorized to represent the King, and to settle all affairs." They also complain that we have three residents instead of one, owing to Dr. Bayfield's having called himself an A-ye-baing who would be stationed at Rangoon. The resident will at best be merely tolerated at court, not received with good will.

September 2d.—"The Diana steamer came in yesterday, and announced that Col. Benson and suit made a fair start for Ava on the 28th ult., as doubtful though as ever of finally being allowed to reach the capital, the A-ye-baing at Rangoon having at one time appeared all courtesy, at another sulky and mysterious. His last act was to apprise Col. Benson, that during his stay in the country, he, the A-ye-baing, would not transact any business with Dr. Bayfield, who must likewise move out of the house provided by order of the King for the resident. He has also got a very likely affair to set off against the murders and robberies committed against our people; some of our subjects on the Sandowe frontier, it appears, have been committing a dakoitee in company with people from the Burman side. The A-ye-baing gives in a list of eight residents, in Kha-reng-gyee-yawa, in the Sandowe district, as concerned therein. Whether this is a got up story or not, I cannot tell. The place said to be attacked is Kyan-hpyoo in the Yamwa-tee district."

FATAL ACCIDENTS.—On the 7th of September, while Lieutenant C. Hopton, H. M., 63d regt., and three other officers, were returning from a shooting excursion on a canoe, the fowling-piece of Lieut. Hopton unfortunately went off and lodged its contents in his left arm. At the time the accident occurred, the party were at such a considerable distance from the station, that nearly two hours elapsed before they arrived at the contention, and although medical aid was instantly procured, the injury was found to be so extensive and the shock to the nervous system so great, that, notwithstanding the administration of the most powerful stimulants, he never rallied, and expired that night. Two others of the party narrowly escaped, several grains of shot having struck them in the side and chest.

On the 31st of August the long-boat of the H. C. barque Amherst, which had been sent up to town for provisions, &c., while returning down the river, was suddenly struck by a squall and upset. There were ten persons on board, including the second officer of the Amherst, of whom Corporal Hubey, belonging to the detachment of artillery at Arrakan, was unfortunately drowned. The others, after having been in the water for nearly an hour, clinging to bits of floating planks, coir, &c., were picked up by the schooner Gwynne and conveyed on board the Amherst.

THE HYDREOS.—On the 8th of September about 8 o'clock, the brig Hydreos parted from her only anchor on the ebb tide, went out among the rocks, and drove ashore close by the outside of the Little Island. The Master Attendant, with an Assistant Pilot, immediately preceded on board with an anchor, and found the vessel abandoned by her crew. As the flood tide came in, the vessel drifted up over the rocks and struck close inside of the pagoda, where she now lies tilted and filled with water.

ARRAKAN.—Latest accounts from Arrakan state, that the whole of the country at times was very quiet; that the Government had done and was doing everything in its power to render the situation of the residents as comfortable as possible; that trade in general was looking up, the item of rice in particular, which used before to sell at the rate of four annas a maund now changed hands at the rate of one rupee a maund; that the quantity of shipping frequenting the port this year from the Madras side, was considerably greater than in any former year, and this bright aspect of affairs was in a greater measure to be attributed to the indefatigable exertions and good arrangement of the Commissioner of the place, Captain A. Bogle.

PERSECUTION OF THE KAYEN CHRISTIANS.—The Kayen Christians have been made slaves to the great Shway-d'gon Pagoda. They are compelled to labour in chains and to dig and clean away the grass, and remove the accumulations of dirt from the area on which the pagoda stands.

CHINA.

Canton papers to the 11th of August, have been received during the month. Their contents are more than usually interesting, in consequence of the sensation created by the arrival of Admiral Mantland, in H. M. S. Wellesley, accompanied by H. M. S. Algerine. H. M. S. Larne was also at Tonk-Koo. The Vice Roy had issued a special edict, ordering "the high sea cruisers" to proceed to the anchorage of the men of war, and order them to return to their own country, "and to take care their officers and crew have no communication with the shore, and that no supplies be sent on board." The ships were not to be permitted on any account to pass the entrance of the Boes Tigris; and all boats bound to Canton were to be searched in order to prevent Meleu [Mantland] and any of his officers going to the city "on the sly." The announcement of two ladies and female servants being on board the Admiral's ship, had considerably increased the apprehensions of the worthy LUNCHE KAN MIN TOO.

In virtue of these orders, the Forts at the Bogue fired at the Bombay schooner, and made her heave to, and a war-boat was sent to search her; but not finding ALLEN or any of the men-of-war's officers, she was allowed to proceed on her passage.

This incident, however, had increased the previous excitement; and it does not seem to have been known, how the Admiral would take it.

Captain Elliot had been to Canton in the hope of opening a direct communication with the Vice Roy; and had sent a letter to the gate of the city under a blank cover; so that it might be mistaken for a petition. The Chinese authorities, however, did not bite, and the packet was returned unopened. The Superintendent, in consequence, left Canton for the purpose of communicating with the Admiral, and see what was to be done in this embarrassing state of affairs. Things are now brought to that pass, that we must up anchor and be off, and admit ourselves fairly out-generalled, or we must hazard the stoppage of the trade, by vindicating the right of the Royal Flag to appear in all ports professing to be on amicable terms with us.

There is also papers, copies of correspondence on the duty on Cotton-Goods—on the debt of King-qu's Hong—and further reports on the opium trade.

The Algerine had been dispatched by the Admiral to make enquiries on the Coast respecting the Antonio Pereira. She is supposed to have been lost between Alacranes and the Coasts of China.

The prices of Patna and Benares Opium had advanced under the supposition of the total loss of the Antonio Pereira's cargo.

THE CALCUTTA MONTHLY JOURNAL.

1838.

ASIATIC NEWS.

PETITION OF THE LANDHOLDERS' SOCIETY.

The largest public meeting ever held in Calcutta, took place on Wednesday the 31st October 1838, at the town Hall. From 1 P. M., people from all parts of the country began to assemble, and by half past two, when the proceedings commenced, the whole arena in front of the Town Hall, was crowded by conveyances of all descriptions. About this time, the number of people within the hall and in the lobbies, could not have been less than five thousand, among whom were most of the wealthy and respectable Natives residing in and near Calcutta. The number of Europeans could not have exceeded fifty.

At 2 o'clock, Prosonno Comar Tagore entered the hall and was received by the assembly with loud acclamations. Dwarknath Tagore, who came in shortly after, was likewise cheered in a similar manner, as also Mr. Dickens, who followed him. The bulk of the people assembled, appeared to be quite ignorant of the forms observed on such occasions, and being anxious to approach the table, became extremely noisy, frequently bursting forth into loud exclamations expressive of their sufferings. Several Brahmins held up their sacred thread and threatened to tear it as a malediction if nothing should be done to protect them against the resumption operations; others were seen repeating muntras or incantations for the same object. Great endeavours were now made to restore order, and quiet the people, but with little or no effect; a loud hum of voices continued throughout, and rendered it impossible for those who were at a distance to hear all that was said.

At half after 2, Dwarkanath Tagore proposed, seconded by Mr. G. Prinsep, that Rajah Radhacanth Bahadoor be called to the chair, which was carried by acclamation. On taking the chair the Rajah spoke in Bengali to the following effect;

Gentlemen :—This is a great meeting, and its greatness is suited to the occasion. Never was so numerous a meeting held here. The object of inviting you is to consider the measures adopted by Government for resuming the rent-free lands, which measures are so grievous as to be felt by every body, and require no illustration. It is necessary now to remedy the evil. The petition that has been presented by the people and the letter which has been prepared by the Landholders' Society to accompany it, shall now be read to you, and when approved, shall be forwarded to Government. Should you be apprehensive that it will be difficult to obtain justice from that quarter, in consequence of the very power which is the guardian of our rights having grasped them, yet it would be proper, before any other measure is adopted, to address that power. Under these circumstances, gentlemen, you will hear the petition read to you, and suggest any alteration you may think proper. After your approval, such as have not signed it yet, will add their names to the document.

Ram Chunder Surmoora, the pundit of the Landholders' Society, then read through the whole petition which was in Bengali, as well as a Bengali translation of the Society's letter. The following is a translation of the Petition.

TO THE RIGHT HON'BLE THE GOVERNOR OF BENGAL.

The memorial of the undersigned landholders in Bengal, sheweth.

That Lord Cornwallis, at the time of the decennial settlement, published certain fundamental rules, resolutions, and declarations of Government for the assurance and satisfaction of the people. Although his Lordship consulted the interest of Government more than that of the weak subjects, yet none of them even endeavoured to raise an objection, being content with the general good treatment of the English towards them. The wrongs subsequently suffered by the poor people, in consequence of the promulgation of various rules, contrary to the above regulations and declarations, it is hoped will be redressed when they are brought to the notice of Government; but the hardship suffered by the rent-free landholders, is on this occasion the principal object of our representation; and it is hoped that Government will be pleased to grant justice and relief.

2nd. We have lived from generation to generation in the several provinces of this Empire under the British rule, and have firmly established ourselves without ever trying to quit it, either on account of human oppression or divine punishment. We alone can therefore call it our paternal Government, and our attachment to this country has always been stronger than that of any other people to their country.

3rd. European Kings, either being pleased, or by way of kindness, bestow various dignities and titles of honour, as well as donations; so have the Indian Kings and other great men conferred rent-free lands upon subjects and dependants. Therefore rent-free lands in Hindoostan and the titles in Europe, considered as tokens of royal pleasure, are both alike. The rent-free lands are, moreover, calculated to encourage the acquisition of knowledge, to secure the maintenance of learned and ingenious men, and to preserve the observance of the religious orders and the sacerdotal functions which ought to be kept unencroached upon by Government.

4th. A great many kings of other countries have reigned over India; but none of them did ever deprive any rent-free Landholder of his possessions, nor fix a rent upon his property. On the contrary, they have allowed more lands for free enjoyment.

5th. Many people in this country possess no other permanent livelihood but the possession of a small portion of rent-free land; the profits of which can scarcely supply common food and dress. If they be deprived of this, they may have recourse to crimes and enormities, to check which it requires the Government to be as attentive and assiduous as it is to stop criminal proceedings arising from other causes.

6th. It is now nearly 73 years since Hindoostan has been in the possession of England, and during this time Government has never claimed the rent on free lands, nor did we ever think, until this day, that there would be rent payable on such lands. If there, however, be any hint of this in the Regulation of the year 1793, it was still unknown to us; for the regulations were not enacted till after the full possession of this Empire and were written originally in English, a language then very little understood among the inhabitants of Calcutta; and quite unknown in the mofussil. They were subsequently translated into the Persian and Bengally languages; but the books, not being for sale, were scarcely procurable, which is still the case. So that the matters declared therein were known only to Government, and the people were quite ignorant of them as they are even to this day. The measures now adopted by Government, agreeably to the above regulations, had never been anticipated before by the people of this country. If the government were to interrogate upon oath hundreds of Zemindars, Talookdars, and Free land holders, it will find that one-sixteenth of them have scarcely any knowledge that Government can lawfully perfer any other claim, but the fixed rent on the property of a Zemindar or Talookdar, or the Free land can become rentable; for if they knew the latter, there would have been no sale or purchase of the Bromotro and other free lands. When Government issues orders on matters that concern both itself and its subjects, such orders are repeatedly published in the newspapers with translations for the guidance of the people who, falling into error or miscomprehension, may not suffer afterwards. But, through our misfortune, nothing concerning the resumption operations was published but the Regulation book, the contents of which, however, we were not aware of, nor do we know them fully even at this period. So that if any steps are now taken by Government according to the above regulation, such steps or arrangements must be considered extremely unjust.

7th. On the issue of orders to produce the document of rent-free lands, some poor and indigent people, or in other words those who possess the above land from 5 kottahs to 10 bighahs, to avoid the heavy expenses of the amlahs, jointly produced a paper, which being found to contain more than 100 bighahs, has at once, without further consideration, been subjected to assessment, according to the resumption regulations. So that it is feared, all the dwelling houses on Mohotron and other rent-free lands will shortly be brought under resumption.

8th. It is clearly expressed in Clause I, Sec. II. Reg. XIX of 1763, that lands free from assessment previous to the year 1765, whether there be any document for them or not, by virtue of long possession alone, shall be allowed to remain in the hands of their possessors. This, however, is now disregarded by the Deputy-Collectors and special commissioners, who all being partial on behalf of their employers, are calling for documents of rent-free lands dated before the year 1765. If no document be found, or if they are only such as releases, &c. granted by the public functionaries, they are always disapproved, and considered forgeries, and decrees are given in favor of the Government.

9th. In the 2d clause of the above Regulation, it is also declared, that if any person prefer a complaint against Government in any Court for rent-free lands which have been 12 years before subjected to rent, such complaints will not be heard. This is a great misfortune to the people; for if any public functionary has unjustly fixed rent on one's land, which has from a long time been enjoyed by him rent free, and the man being unable to sue for it within 12 years, he will forfeit all his right to his permanent and ancestral property, merely on account of the 12 years, possession by Government. Is this the way of justice? There is a clearer declaration in the 2nd Regulation of the year 1805, that all claims relating to land will continue in force for 60 years; why then should a man, not being able to prefer his claims in the course of 12 years, be deprived of his rights?

10th. The 3rd, 4th, and 5th clauses of the above Regulation, Sec. 2nd, declare that all rent-free lands that have been granted before the Company's civil government in India, for the enjoyment of the grantee during life, will not descend to his sons and successors; but when any land is granted by the Rajahs and other great men of this country, for free enjoyment, it is commonly mentioned in the instrument of gift, that "you are to enjoy and possess it from son to grandson, &c." or simply the phrase "given you." By this title the successors of the grantees of such gifts, have uninterruptedly enjoyed them, without ever being objected to by any government. It is a decided fact, according to law, that a property gained by the father is certainly descendable to his sons and grandsons; but the above Regulation, framed by Government, viz. that unless there be expressly written in the deed-of-gift or sauud, that the lands may be enjoyed from son to grandson, &c., the property cannot be possessed by the successors of the grantee, is clearly an inconsistency both in regard to law and custom.

11th. In the 3rd clause of the said Regulation it is stated, that all lands, granted previous to the 12th August 1765, and before 1st December 1790, and which have not been confirmed by any of the public functionaries, should be subjected to resumption. But many landholders and Talookdars have after the year 1765, and before 1790, granted sauuds or deeds of gift of rent-free lands to several poor and indigent persons, the rent whereof is actually paid as formerly by the said landholders and Talookdars to Government. There has never been any remission in the revenue, but it has been much increased from the time of the decennial settlement; yet no Zemindar, or Talookdar, or auction purchaser of any Zemindary, has ever asked a reduction of rent on his property. And when those estates have gone to other hands, they have also paid the fixed rent to Government without any objection whatever, and the Government has not at any time received less than what was due; so that the granters of free lands have been the only sufferers by such gifts, the Government losing nothing. As there issued no istabar calling for those documents, therefore a merciful and impartial justice towards these poor and indigent free-landholders, leaves no fair ground to bring their only means of livelihood under the resumption.

12th. It is mentioned in the 6th clause of the above Regulation, that grants of free-land, made previous to the 1st September 1790, if not exceeding 100 biggahs, are claimable by the zemindars; and again in the 10th clause it is declared, that all free lands 100 biggahs or more, granted after 1790, and which by the order of Government provide for Zemindars, should be subjected to rent by themselves, without making any complaint for them in the courts of justice. The Zemindars and Talookdars notwithstanding, feeling compassion on those poor lackrajdars, have not deprived them of their only means of livelihood. Government being the ruler of so great an Empire, will not surely wish to sacrifice its poor, indigent subjects by stripping them of their only permanent means of subsistence, which is not of so much benefit to Government, as it is injurious to the people and their families, and which may cost lives. The income of Government is like the ocean; so that to give out a jar of water from it or to put one in, secures neither loss nor profit to the Government. It is the duty of a Government to support its subjects and not to oppress them; we therefore humbly hope that this Government will persevere in all the merciful prerogatives of sovereignty.

13th. According to the European rules, it is necessary for all subjects to pay rents to defray the expenses of Government. But in Hindoostan land-rents are not paid by all; there have for ever been rent-free lands. In towns particularly, the people pay tax according to the estimated income of houses, and all pay the Government duties for useful articles of merchandize, as well as the price of the stamps. So that the present revenue of Government exceeds its expenditure, however enormous it be. In Europe all the subjects in common are authorized and empowered to consider about the income and expense of Government, which is not the case in this country; so that the example of collecting revenue from that country, cannot with propriety be applicable to this.

14th. No subject can enjoy a piece of free land unless it be given to him and allowed by the Rajahs or others; when it has of course been granted rent free. The Hon'ble Company having undertaken the Civil Government of the Moosulmuns over this country have its rents; and they have consequently the same claims to this land as the Moosulmuns had; so that those lands which were allowed by the Moosulmuns to remain rent free, should always continue so.

15th. The notices or istahars issued by Government to produce the tydads or documents of rent free lands, were established under this rule, that free lands of which the tydads should not be presented within the time prescribed in the advertisement, shall be made rentable. In compliance with those istahars, most people have presented the tydads of their respective lands. If the above order had been authentic and not a mere threat, how can it be violated on the present occasion. If this order was passed intentionally to learn the particulars of lands, still it should be considered that the people, entirely trusting to the purport of it, and hoping that their respective livelihood would be made permanent, have forwarded the tydads of all their possessions openly, without reserve. But if this trust be destroyed by fixing a rent upon all those free lands, to whom else are the poor subjects to complain?

16th. It is provided in the 2d Clause of the Regulation of 1793, that whether there be any document or not for rent free lands granted previous to the year 1765, they should before 1890, be retained by the proprietors thereof merely by virtue of long possession. But all lands granted free after the year 1750, if exceeding 100 biggahs, and having no confirmation for them of any public functionary, should be resumed by Government. This, however, is consistent with justice, since it is declared expressly in the 2d Clause of the Regulation of 1805, that all claims of Government relating to land, will remain in force till 60 years; but from the year 1765 to this day, more or less 73 years have elapsed, yet no arrangement has been made for the above lands, how then can the Government now, violating the rules contained in the 2d Clause of the Regulation of 1805, and after the lapse of the stipulated 60 years, and 13 years more, lawfully institute claims upon the rent-free lands, before its own appointed functionaries, and procure decrees on them? Such a course is altogether unjust.

17th. It was declared by the Regulation, that when Government would be desirous of taking the rent of any land, the case would be tried by instituting a suit in the Court and by the examination of witnesses and documents &c., conformably to the general rules; and the Hon'ble Company shall have the rent, if their claims be proved well founded. But by the Regulations of 1819 and 1828, the above Regulations have been rescinded; and therefore due justice is not rendered to the people. In proportion to the increase of public revenue by the administration of the above Regulations, the fame, influence, salary, and every other emolument of the Special Deputy Collectors and Commissioners, is increased; and, consequently, no fear of doing injustice towards the poor Ryots is felt by them. So that the people cannot be considered happy, when they are tried by functionaries so circumstanced.

18th. After a lapse of 37 years, the Government requires documents of rent-free lands, and in the absence of them those lands are resumed. But it is expressed in the Company's Regulation that documents of rent-free lands, such as have been possessed by an individual before the Hon'ble Company taking the Civil Government of India into their hands, are not necessary. Besides, it is quite inconsistent with the second Clause, Regulation 2d, of 1805, in which it is clearly stated, that if any real property to which Government has any right, be possessed by any person for a period of 60 years, Government may still at any time prefer its claim against it; but after that time it could make no claim to it nor should encroach upon it. The above rule has not yet been rescinded; yet the Special Deputy Collectors &c., in the absence of documents, are resuming all those lands, and in some places half of the current is sent imposed, even if documents are produced. Lands engaged rent-free by the people from time immemorial, cannot now be rentable, since Government have always considered it right and legal in consequence of long possession, which examples are so follow.

1st. The Hon'ble Company, in undertaking the Civil Government of this Empire, have repeatedly assured the inhabitants that they would never infringe upon the former arrangements and customs of the country.

2nd. Whenever there have been new possessors of talooks and zumindaries, they have several times seized the rent free lands within their zemindaries, but upon examination of the titles, have for long possession released them. The new talookdars would never had done this, had those lands been included in the talooks, or had Government any claim upon them. Many thousand cases of dispossession on those lands, have been tried and decided by the Company's Courts, which finding a long unmolested enjoyment, have restored to the owners the possession of them.

3rd. Rent-free lands have been and are always bought and sold, as well as others, and there has never been any prohibition against them from Government, and of course that which has no hinderance is considered lawful. In consideration of those lands being rent-free, the purchasers have bought them at a higher price than ordinary, without ever contemplating that Government would fix rent upon them, and therefore exacting rent from them now would be a severe loss to the purchasers.

4th. Particularly when securities are taken rent-free, lands are usually considered eight times more valuable than the rentable land, and they are therefore evidently held to be superior and secure in the opinion of Government.

5th. In many places Government have been obliged to buy as well as to hire rent free lands, and to give to the owners the value and rent thereof, according to the usual rates.

6th. For debts to Government the properties of many persons have been sold, and which often consisted partly of free lands, the property by of plices which have been received by Government.

7th. For the recovery of private claims several rent-free lands have been sold by virtue of decrees; and fees and costs of which have been received by Government.

8th. Many rent free lands have been sold and bought among the people, the bills of sale having been registered or signed by the Registrars as witnesses.

9th. For the recovery of debts due to Government several tracts of free lands have been sold by Auction, and Government have provided the purchasers at the time of sale, with the original documents thereof, giving them the Boynamah and Amulnamah. Now the documents of those very lands, agreeably to the new rule, are brought under resumption, as also those Amulnamah, &c., in which they declare that the land mentioned therein will be enjoyed by the purchasers from son to grandson, &c.

10th. When lands, &c., being real property have for a certain specified time been in the enjoyment of one individual, the right to the possession of them becomes strong, so that no one else can have the power to dispossess him. Having framed this rule and allowed people an undisputed possession or lands for almost 73 years, how can Government at present dispossess them? If it were the intention of Government to fix rent at all upon free lands, or had they any right at all upon them, they would not have given their consent to the sales and purchases of the aforesaid property, nor could themselves have become a party thereto. It was proper at the time to notify the circumstance in the newspaper.

19th. The enquiries, seizure, trial, release, and other proceedings, now going on upon the rent free lands, have been a real source of distress, loss, and trouble to the people, particularly for their being deprived of their rights. Formerly, when Government instituted a suit in any Court as plaintiff, it was necessary for them to prove their claims by witnesses; now, on the contrary, the defendants in such cases are required to produce their titles of 73 years, with proofs thereof.

20th. If the state of this country be taken into consideration the old documents cannot be expected to last long. In the time of the Hindu Rajahs, grants were entered on plates of copper; but since the time of the Mosulman rule, perishable paper has been used, to preserve which long, it is quite impossible. They have been destroyed by insects, fire, and flood, or stolen away by thieves or relations in the family disputes, particularly by the depredations of the Mahrattas, through whose violence the people of this country frequently changed their abodes, and consequently their old articles almost all have been entirely lost.

21st. Formerly the Collectors had no other authority, power, or duty, except collecting the revenue; but at present they and their subordinates, the Deputy Collectors, have been invested with various authorities. 1st, the Collector has to enquire and seize rent-free lands, wherein he has also the magisterial power. At the time of the trial he acts for the Hon'ble Company, and gives evidence in their favour, fixes and collects the rent, and for the arrears thereof he sells the property by public sale.

22d. So that, in disputes with so influential a functionary, what can the poor, indigent, and weak people do; there is no probability of their obtaining justice in the Court.

23d. When people are dispossessed of rent-free lands, they, to recover them, enter into a law suit with the Collector, complaining against the Hon'ble Company; but their gain or loss in such cases is equally ruinous to them; for if they win, the value of the property gained falls short of the costs incurred; but if they lose, they are wholly ruined. So that such a contest as this, between a public functionary and the people, may be compared with a battle between an insect and a lion.

24th. When any rent free land is seized in any Zillah, the owner is obliged to run after the Special Collectors and Commissioners, and then to appeal to the Special Commissioners at Calcutta, where now the cases are tried in a manner, whereby the decree is generally passed in favour of the Hon'ble Company. There is no other place to appeal: the unfortunate people are frequently tried by the Zillah Courts, the Sudder and many other offices; and who can be ignorant of the loss and hardship suffered by them to get business done in such a number of offices at different places? many persons even lose their lives by travelling over several countries, seeking the trial of their cases.

25th. About one-fourth of the people of Bengal enjoy the rent free lands, some of whom are supported exclusively out of the produce and profits of these free grants, while others, saving a little money, have bought a parcel of free land to dwell upon, or to be maintained by its produce.

26th. The rent of the free land is always less than of other lands, and besides there are a great many exceptions in it of other charges and troubles; it is therefore considered by the ryots a great relief to them. If they are deprived of such conveniences and reliefs by the resumption measures of Government, the aforesaid one-fourth of the people will at once be involved in greater miseries and distress, losing their houses and livelihood. If they wander about gathering alms of a handful of grain, there is no probability that so great a number can be maintained by that means. There is no work nor money so much as to render them assistance if they work for livelihood. The people of the soil are naturally feeble and cannot go to other lands in quest of their maintenance. So that by the resumption operations of Government, cries of distress will be heard all over the country.

27th. When famine demolishes the country, Government mercifully provides the people with provisions and every other comfort, and also remits the rent due to Government. The same kindness is also shown by it in times of pestilence, by administering medicines and other remedies for preserving the lives of its subjects. If the Government now take off from the poor subjects their ancient privileges and long possessed means of maintenance, to whom will they apply for preservation.

28th. We humbly entreat the kind consideration of Government to the following circumstances. If the people feel the real want of the necessities of life, they, (if not all at least many) through necessity, will have recourse to crimes such as theft, robberies, and other enormities. It needs no other instance, but to consider that if the country should be filled with people of a malicious character, to what an extent of distress it will then be reduced.

Ist. It is our humble prayer, that Government, taking the several articles of grievances as aforesaid in into their generous consideration, will be pleased to look with the eyes of compassion upon us—its poor and much distressed subjects, to retain us, according to the former Regulations, in our little permanent properties.

2d. As we shall probably have to appeal our case to the Authorities in England for the injustice, loss and distress suffered by us, we pray that until a decisive answer to such appeal comes, the Deputy Collectors and other public functionaries may not oppress us, and that all oppressive operations be suspended.

3d. If the Government think it necessary to consider the above statement, they will be pleased, at first to rescind the several Regulations and Clauses objected to by us, and then declare in writing all that they think equitable and just. The free lands may be tried agreeably to the 27th Regulation of 1813-14 by arbitrators, composed of some honest and respectable Europeans and Natives, who have not any concern with Government and are residing in the same Zillah where the lands in dispute may be situated.

4th. Those people that are incapable of affording the expenses of law, may be allowed to avail themselves of the 28th Regulation of 1814 regarding paupers.

5th. An arrangement ought to be made for reducing the law charges when suits are instituted against Government, and likewise some means should be adopted to decide them in course of a short time, and with little trouble.

6th. Until this our representation is finally considered by Government and an answer given, all regulations and proceedings relating to free lands, should be postponed. Dated Kartick, 1244, corresponding with Oct. 1837.

Mr. T. Dickens now mounted a chair and stated, that the Landholder's Society had prepared a letter, which was to accompany the petition, and proposed that it be read; after which he said, he would address the meeting and endeavour to be heard. The following letter was then read by Mr. W. C. Hurry.

F. J. HALLIDAY, ESQ.,

Officiating Secy. to the Hon'ble the Governor of Bengal.

SIR,—The accompanying Petition, to which are attached about twenty thousand signatures, including those of a large proportion of the most opulent zemindars in Bengal, having been confided to the care of the Landholder's Society, we are desired to request the particular attention of His Honor the Deputy-Governor to the important matters which it embraces.

We are desired at the same time to add the unqualified testimony of the Society as to the strong feeling of alarm and discontent with which all the late proceedings of Government for the resumption of lakheraj lands are viewed by the native population. The rules by which the rights of occupancy are tested, being considered both severe and unjust, the transfer of these cases from the jurisdiction of the ordinary tribunals, the appointment of young men under the name of Special Deputy Collectors to seek out cases of doubtful tenure—men in whom the character and interests of informers are combined with judicial powers; the rapidity with which rights of long possession have been set aside by the zeal of the public functionaries acting under the authority of laws admitted to be defective; the hasty and irregular manner in which some hundred decrees have been passed in one day against parties alleged to be in default, though not duly served with notice to appear; are not calculated to lessen the sympathy of the native community with the very numerous sufferers whom they see every where around them.

The Society is aware, that the harshness of the resumption measures is sometimes excused on the plea, that exemptions are in their nature inequitable which relieve one portion of the people from a tax borne by the rest, and that, therefore, one man's land ought to pay the Government rent as well as another's. But this argument is not admitted to destroy privileges confirmed by former rulers of the country, or enjoyed by prescription uninterruptedly since 1765; and with regard to the principle assumed, whether a large estate paying tax, or a smaller estate paying no tax, be the shape in which a Government may have bestowed its favors or rewarded meritorious services, there can be no more justice in the reduction of the incumbent's income at a future time, by taxing his untaxed land because other lands are taxed, than if the same person had his income reduced in an equal degree by depriving him of part of his taxed land. The argument, carried out to its full extent, would deprive the sovereign of all power of granting honors and rewards; but it is a fallacy altogether, when applied to the present question. It would effect a change in the relative incomes of the different classes as they now exist; whereas the true principle of the financier seems to be to leave all incomes in their existing proportions, and if fresh burthens are required for the exigencies of the state, so to distribute them, as to make them bear upon the several classes accordingly. It might be just, for instance, to take ten per cent. from the rents of a lackerajdar, if ten per cent. additional were at the same time levied upon the talook of an ordinary zemindar; but while the latter continues to pay an invariable rate fixed by the perpetual settlement, no plea of equity can disturb the exemption of the former, whether obtained by sunnud or by long sufferance and prescription. If such doctrines are thus allowed retrospective effect, the landholder in Bengal will cease to have any confidence in the perpetual settlement itself, while he sees the interpretation of the contract biased by a wish to set it aside and a constant disposition to encroach upon the rights and immunities he is enjoying under it.

It would, moreover, be very difficult to make the people of this country understand, that the resumption of Lackeraj land, will benefit them, either by relieving them from a portion of their present burthens under the British Government, or by securing them against future burthens. Nor, indeed, does it appear how any community can be really benefited by reducing a large number of its members to a state of pauperism.

Another plea alleged by the defenders of these measures, is the importance of the aggregate sum said to be recoverable by enforcing what are held to be the reserved right of Government, no less than two crore of rupees of annual income! a plea that would justify the infliction of individual misery by the wide diffusion and magnitude of it. Report says, however, that although much progress has been made in the resumptions, and most of the large estate cases have already been decided by the Special Commission, the entire amount hitherto added to the Revenue from this source (exclusive of jagheers and churs fallen to Government, which were reclaimable on very different grounds) after so much expense incurred by Government, and an infinitely larger expense in various shapes by individuals, is only a few lakhs of rupees.

The Petitioners have enumerated many grievances in the mode of prosecuting these enquiries, the unavoidable expenses to the parties, which, even if successful, many of them can very ill afford; the requisition to attend Courts held at great distances from their homes, and sometimes to follow the investigating officer from one station to another, from Hooghly to Burdwan. They might have added, that under Regulation 3, of 1828, the right of appeal from the inferior Court is limited for individuals to two months but for Government to twelve months, (appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, being by the same Regulation cut off altogether on the face of an Act of Parliament still in force, viz. the 21st Geo. III Cap. 70 Sec. 21) and that, while poverty and despair will deter many from appealing at all in cases improperly decided against them, or deter them from appealing till too late to be heard, it is the practice of the Government vakeels never to abandon a suit in which they have been cast, until it shall have been decided by the superior tribunal, or until at least the case shall have been referred to the special consideration of Government, hence the readiness with which so many compromises at half jumma are submitted to rather than incur a ruinous litigation with an all powerful opponent.

It is within the knowledge of the Committee, that cases have occurred where lands have been forfeited though the occupants were possessed of indisputable sunnuds. Two brothers had a joint family estate, and one of them (perhaps the manager) was sick at the time of receiving the Deputy Collector's summons. The indolence of the native character, combining with the inability of the sick brother to attend to the family affairs, in the perfect confidence of a good title, suffered the month to expire before any steps were taken for the protection of their property, and when shortly afterwards the important document was produced in Court, the party was told it could not even be looked at, for the time allowed him had expired, and the case had been accordingly decided against him by default; and this decision has been upheld by the Special Commissioner, from whom there is no appeal except to Her Majesty in Council, and that only in cases of a certain amount. Granted that some necessity may exist for prescribing limitations of time; but those rules must indeed be oppressively severe, which forfeit a man's estate for a trifling laches which inflict that punishment for a few days delay, while the Government assumes to lose none of its rights, nay, rather to have strengthened them, by a laches of half a century. It could never have been intended thus to take advantage of infirmity, and enhance the number of forfeitures by ingenious traps to catch the indolent and unwary.

The penalty imposed in such case by Regulation XIX of 1793 was more consonant with reason. Section 14 of that Regulation provides that, "if the proprietor shall omit or refuse to deliver the writings within the limited time, the Board of Revenue are empowered to order the Collector to issue a second and similar requisition to him to deliver the writings by a specific day, and shall at the same time impose such daily fine on the proprietor, as they may judge proper upon a consideration of his situation and circumstances in life; and the amount of the fine shall be levied by the process prescribed for the recovery of arrears of revenue; and if the proprietor shall not deliver up the writings by the time prescribed in the second requisition, the Board of Revenue are empowered to attach the lands and collect the rents on account of Government, until the proprietor shall produce the writings, or the lands shall be adjudged liable to the payment of Revenue.

Again, the liberal and humane Government of Lord Cornwallis assured the people, "that the recovery of the dues of Government from those lands which have been illegally alienated previous to the 1st December 1790, should be attended with as little distress as possible to the possessors, and to obviate all injustice or extortion in the enquiry into the titles of persons holding exempted lands," says the preamble of Regulation XIX of 1793, "he has further resolved, that the claims of the public on their lands (provided they register the grants as required) shall be tried in the Courts of Judicature, that no such exempted lands shall be adjudged to the payment of revenue until the titles of the proprietor shall have been adjudged invalid by a final judicial decree." Here is an assurance of possession undisturbed until the titles of the proprietor shall be adjudged invalid by a regular trial in the Courts of Judicature; and an assurance also, that the investigation shall be conducted in a way to obviate all injustice or extortion in the enquiry. But how have the letter and the spirit of these assurances been observed. Instead of the Courts of Judicature intended by the words of Regulation XIX of 1793, a sort of tribunal of first instance has been created, to which the name of a Court of Justice would be altogether inapplicable, and though an appeal lies to a more experienced officer (not to the superior Court, as by act of Parliament it ought to be) it is an appeal to a single individual, restricted by rules which he is bound to observe and besides the case comes before him with the evidence got up by the Deputy Collector himself, who is the Judge appointed to try the cause—a Judge of no experience, as little qualified as inclined by his position to give those aids to a poor and ignorant defendant, which it is the duty and practice of British Judges to volunteer in protection of persons who have not the benefit of counsel. And with respect to the assurance against extortion, the course adopted seems to have been precisely that most calculated to create it; and such has been the result. Aumeens are directed to enquire and report; this power of reporting opens a wide field for abuse and tyranny; the holder of Kheraj lands is threatened, that unless he will pay a consideration his lands will be reported Lackheraj, and will undergo investigation. The extension of cultivation in many settled estates gives abundant opportunity for this. The Lackherajadar, on the other hand, is induced to give a bribe for a favorable report which avails him nothing in the end. The same evils of venality which this Government merited so much the gratitude of the country for removing when the inland customs chokees were suppressed, have been brought into play to a more serious extent by the powers given to Aumeens in this lamentable inquisition. The grievance here stated, is not a fancied one, it is not a suppositious case, but a true picture of complaints which have been laid before the Society.*

* Many large zemindaries in Bengal, were in a very unsettled state forty years ago, and especially the immense Zemindarie of Burdwan, which was then in the hands of numerous petty farmers. The Putwaries, the Court amil and their relatives and other influential persons, taking advantage of the Government proclamations, filed a multitude of false taidads in their own names and in the names of their dependants, for lands not in existence or which they never possessed, hoping to derive some future benefit from the registration. These taidads were received by the Collectors without enquiry, and are now laid hold of to resume the lands described in them. The mere existence of the taidads, without examination of their validity, would not be admitted as any proof of individual rights; but it is made nevertheless the foundation of a summary decree in favor of Government. A measuring Aumeen is then sent to take out the lands and sequestrate them. He proceeds into the Mohussil, and finding there generally some descendant or connection of the person who filed the taidad, lays a plan with him and with the police to make the most of his commissioner by plundering the people for their joint benefit. The best lands in a village are claimed as Government property, and hambaos are stuck up to notify the same; but on payment of an adequate sum, just so much as can safely be extorted by these conspirators, the hambaos are removed to other lands, and so on, perhaps, till the whole village has been laid under contribution. If opposition be made, a strong report goes in to the resumption officer, distant perhaps a hundred miles and more, in which of course the affair is so represented as to produce a bias against the poor villagers, who have little chance of justice against the villainy of such a combination supported, by the joint evidence of parties to the plot. The villagers are then compelled to quit their homes and occupations to attend a Magistrate's Catcherry or to file petitions upon stamp in the Deputy Collector's Court, which petitions must be supported by proofs that the lands claimed are not lackheraj. The unfortunate petitioner is detained some months by this persecution, harassed in mind, and spending his money in stamps, Mooktar's and Amil's fees, and in personal charges, and in the mean time his crops are seized by the Zemindar with the assistance of the police. Even without sequestration, the ryots refuse to pay rent to their Zemindar from the moment he gets into trouble. Conspiracies of

The humane and just Government of Lord Cornwallis, legislating in 1793, did not disturb possession if it extended back to twenty, eight years, namely, if acquired in Bengal before the 12th of August 1765 "by whatever authority and whether by a writing or without a writing." And to ascertain the fact of possession in the absence of any written title, the onus probandi does not seem to have been thrown upon the occupant. "If it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Court." (We quote from the 2d Sec., first clause, of Reg. XIX of 1793,) "that the grantee did not obtain possession of the land so granted, previous to the 12th August 1765, or that he did obtain possession of it prior to that time, but that it has been since subjected to the payment of Revenue by the officers or the orders of Government, the grant shall not be deemed valid." Now, however, after a further lapse of 45 years, when no living witnesses exist to give evidence of occupancy previous to so remote a period as 1765, instead of requiring proof that the grantee was not in possession, the incumbent is not even allowed the benefit of any presumption in his favor, though there be nothing to shew that his lands have been taxed at a subsequent date; but the onus probandi, which was not thrown upon the landholder of 28 years' possession, is made to rest altogether upon the representative of a much longer occupation, and judgment is recorded against him because he cannot produce witnesses who are dead.

Even in the cases of grants not considered hereditary, because not so specified, the humanity of Lord Cornwallis's administration, made due allowance for presumptive right acquired by succession. "Upon the demise of the present possessor of any such grant which may be adjudged not hereditary under this change, if it shall appear that one or more successions, in virtue of whatever right, shall have taken place before the date of the Dewanny, the lands shall not be subjected to the payment of revenue under the decree, without the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, to whom a copy of the proceedings and decree of the Court is to be transmitted, and to whom is reserved a power of declaring the lands subject to the payment of revenue, or not, as may appear to him." Now, the poor Lackherajdar of the third or fourth generation is the above nature are favored by the notices posted up in every village, which invite the taidaddars, or their connections, to point out the lands they conceive themselves entitled to, and to compound for a perpetual settlement at a moderate jump, deducting 30 per cent for malikana (or Landlord's rent).

remorselessly deprived of his little patrimony the sole dependance perhaps of a numerous family, and is told that he may consider himself treated with great generosity when allowed to hold possession at half jumma for his own life only.

But there are presumptive, nay, even legal rights of a stronger nature which have been disregarded. Estates have been resumed which have been taken as security by the Collectors as lakheraj, and which have been sold as lackheraj by the Collectors, those functionaries who by the Regulations had or ought to have had in their Cutcherries at the time a true record of what lands were lackheraj and what were not, and who had the power to satisfy themselves and the buyers to what extent their title to exemption from tax was doubtful or ascertained. Lands have been resumed which were sold in this manner so far back as 1788. It has been alleged, indeed, that Government gave no pledge of title in these sales. But to withhold information in the possession or at the command of the seller, and thereby to obtain the price of a good title for a bad one (bad only if the Government make it so by bringing forward a dormant claim) must surely be required as a pledge, if it be not a deception; and therefore a lackheraj price, taken from a purchaser, at a Collector's sale or at a sale under a decree of Court to satisfy a Government demand, must be held to be a virtual warranty that the lands so advertized and sold would ever after be allowed the immunities of lackheraj. Government having put the purchasers' money into its own treasury, can it with any show of equity afterwards set up a claim to the main rental of the estate, without at least offering to cancel the bargain and refund the price then obtained? In the far more numerous cases, however, of sales under decrees of Court arising out of private suits, redress by restitution is impossible. The proceeds of sales have been appropriated and expended, and vested rights have been acquired which cannot be interfered with. Such sales were unavoidable; and if the purchaser bought, believing the land to be lackheraj because he found it so advertized—any defects of title being concealed by the laches of Government—can it be just that Government shall now exercise the power to ruin the purchaser, by seizing his lands, on the plea that they are not lackheraj?

But not only implied pledges—even the written pledges of Government are apparently disregarded. The petitioners have cited Reg. II. of 1805 as at variance with the principles now acted upon. By Sec. 2 (second par.) of that Regulation, quoted below*, a limitation of sixty years was fixed as the extreme period within which the right of assessing lands for the public revenue should be exerted; which limit, as respects the time at which it was promulgated, was reduced to 40 years for Bengal, Behar and Orissa, to 30 years for the province of Benares, and to 4 years only for the territory ceded by the Nuwanb Vizier, viz. to 1765, 1775 and 1801 respectively. The intention of the enactment in these exceptions is clear. Sixty years was to be the extreme limit in all cases whatsoever; but the limit was to be less than sixty years when the intervening periods since the acquisition of the Dewanny, &c, should not amount to so much. It follows, therefore, that 1778 is now the extreme date to which the right of inquisition can go back in any case, and that to bring in question any title of Bengal ascertained to be of greater antiquity than 1778, must be manifestly illegal. Yet, to the astonishment of the Zemindars and the community at large, an exception, made purely for the benefit of the landholder, has been strangely construed by the resumption judges as reserving to Government a right of inquisition now extending 73 years back, namely to the year 1765, and a rent-free, grant of 69 years standing of unquestionable authenticity, has been recently put under sequestration.

This construction of the resumption judges is utterly inconsistent with the first sentence in the passage we have quoted from Reg. II. of 1805; for it renders the limit of 60 years in no case and under no circumstances whatever, applicable to "the assessment of land held exempt from the public revenue, without legal title to such exemption."

And it should not be overlooked, that the limit of 60 years was fixed when 60 years was the period up to which the right of possession to lands in England might be disputed between parties under the British laws. That period the British legislature has since thought proper to reduce by one half, in a country where the average duration of life is probably twice what it is here. Considering also the difficulty of keeping records in this country, it would seem but reasonable to expect, that having adopted the limit of 60 years from the English Statute book, the legislature of India should now reduce the period to thirty years, if not to a shorter term, instead of practically extending it to 73 years and upwards.

* Allotments on the part of Government, whether for the assessment of land held exempt from the public revenue, without legal and sufficient title to such exemption, or for the recovery of arrears of the public assessment, or for any other public right whatever (the judicial cognizance of which may not have been otherwise limited by some special rule or provision in force) shall be heard, tried and determined in the several courts of civil justice, to which the cognizance thereof may properly belong, under the general regulations which have been or may be hereafter enacted, if the same, be regularly and duly preferred at any time within the period of sixty years from and after the origin of the cause of action; provided that such cause of action shall not have originated within the provinces of Bengal, Behar and Orissa before the 12th August A.D. 1765; or within the province of Benares, before the 1st July A.D. 1775; or within the provinces ceded by the Nuwanb Vizier before the 10th November A.D. 1801; being the periods of the Company's accession to the Civil Government of the above provinces respectively.

The construction we contend for is, that 60 years is the extreme term in all cases and the opinion we have suggested above that this is still too long a term, we are happy to find in accordance with the views of the Honorable Court, when more than eight years ago, in a despatch from Bengal, dated 23d February 1830, as appears from the parliamentary printed papers of 1832, it was urged that lapse of time was no bar to the right of resumption. The Court of Directors, in their reply, disputed both the existence of the right and the propriety of exerting it if it did exist. We will quote from the parliamentary papers some passages in their letter to Bengal of the 28th September 1831.

54. "We think also that the question of title by prescription, or of the length of unchallenged possession, which should be considered as creating a right, deserves a very careful consideration. You say, all the Regulations at your Presidency, since the first Regulation of 1793, have scrupulously provided that no lapse of time shall bar the right of Government to enquire, and that transfer of property, however and by whomsoever made, shall not exempt a title to hold lands rent free from enquiry to ascertain its validity or otherwise." We doubt exceedingly the propriety of acting upon such a principle. It needs consideration and careful enquiry into circumstances to determine where in India the line should be drawn that will best distinguish between the interests of Government on the one hand, and the equitable expectation of parties on the other; that is, what number of years should be assigned, as that which creates a title of prescription; but we are strongly of opinion that the claim even of Government should not have an unlimited retrospect."

55. "We are happy to be able to refer you to the proceedings of our Government at Bombay, in confirmation of the correctness of this opinion of ours. That Government has established by Reg. I. of 1823, a lapse of 60 years as the period which ought to bar the claim even of Government. Our own opinion is, that such a period is too long, but we do not mention this as intended to restrict in any degree the exercise of your judgment; it being our desire to receive from you in the first instance, and as speedily as possible, the result of a full consideration of the subject."

Still another ground of complaint is the assumption, that because by the Regulations of 1793 it was ordered, that all titles should be registered, therefore no titles are now to be respected of which the registers are not forthcoming. It is well known that by the laxity of the Government officers, the general registry was never completed*. Equally notorious is it that the records were not carefully preserved, and that many are now wanting which are known to have existed. Further, it has been reported to the Society, so carelessly was this duty performed, that at one station a bundle of original taidads of sunnuds has been found in the cutchery, waiting forty years and more for the leisure of the functionary whose office it was to register. What objection can be raised upon the absence of documents or of proofs of registration, when such evidence exists that the former have been lost to the proprietors and the latter neglected, not through carelessness or misconduct of the landholders, but through the carelessness and misconduct of the very officers of Government to whom were assigned both the power of calling for the deeds and the duty of entering them upon their records.

The neglect of the Collectors in procuring and registering taidads has been admitted by Government; and after repeated injunctions expressed in successive Regulations embracing a period of 15 years, a circular order was issued by the Revenue Board in 1808 peremptorily requiring Collectors, to take measures to complete their records without delay. Yet was this order also but partially attended to, while in some districts a difficulty arose from the immense number of the applications. In Burdwan, it is said, the applications exceeded 70,000, of which only 4 or 5,000 were registered, the deeds in the other cases being allowed to be taken back by the parties on their leaving copies of them; which copies have been admitted in ordinary suits and ought equally to serve the parties in the Special Commission enquiry when the originals are not forthcoming. But if from apathy or timidity the landholders elsewhere did not come forward upon due requisition to produce their documents, it were hard, indeed, that such default should be visited by the penalty of forfeiture which we hear nevertheless has been done in cases innumerable.

* Extract from a supplementary note dated 15th September 1815, in Harrington's Laws and Regulations, vol. 2, page 613. "On enquiry, however, I find that a few only of the copies of the Registers which should have been sent to the presidency, have been received; and that from some impediments attending the formation of the original registers, or the want of a sufficient establishment of native officers to prepare them, the rules for them are not generally observed. I cannot but regret this, from whatever cause it may have proceeded, as frustrating the expectation of a most useful public record, the defect of which may be of serious consequence to individuals as well as Government."

But the Society has been led to doubt if any default can be shewn to have been committed by the landholders. Are there any proofs that notices were served upon them in the terms and according to the forms required by the law? Where are receipts of the proprietors for the notices served and published in the Bengal and Persian languages in Bengal and Orissa, and in the Persian language and the Hindostanee language and Nagree character in Behar?*

It has farther been represented to the Society, that though a good title is now rejected as invalid, if it do not appear to have been registered, yet registration is not allowed to be pleaded as evidence that the title is good as respects the lackherajdar; while on the side of Government every possible use is made of it to the prejudice of the landholder. If the taidad declares a lackheraj to consist of 500 beegahs, which really consists of 250 beegahs only, (whether by error or for purposes of fraud, no matter) the officers of Government require of the zemindar of the Talook every beegah of the 500 in case of resumption, and select what lands they think proper where the boundaries are not defined; and this is done on a summary suit not appealable to the Sudder Dewanny or to the ordinary Courts of Civil justice.

Impressed then, with a firm conviction, that the present course of inquisition into the titles to exemption from Government revenue, long enjoyed by the holders of lackheraj lands by right of prescription or otherwise, is not only conducted through channels and upon principles which the public must regard as little tending either to the ends of justice or to the credit of this Government; but also that no modification of the process of enquiry and adjudication would remove the objection on the score of equity, to the admission of claims to be investigated at all after the lapse of so long a period, the Landholders' Society beg to urge their humble request, in furtherance of the petition we have now the medium of submitting, that all proceedings in the measures of resumption may forthwith be suspended, and that the whole question may be referred again to the Honorable Court with a list of the cases already adjudicated, and a statement shewing the amount gained thereby to the public revenue, after a clear deduction of all expences incurred by the salaries of the Special Commissioners, Deputy Collectors, Aumcens and other settlement officers, including their establishments, and also all per centages allowed to pleaders and contingent charges of all kinds.

We have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant.

Mr. Dickens now addressed the chair as follows.

Mr. Chairman.—I rise to address this meeting on the subject of the resolution which I hold in my hand, and which has already been read to all who could hear it, because I deem it absolutely incumbent on me to show that we have answers to give to the arguments that have been urged by the advocates of resumption and good and cogent reasons for our opposition. I will not be deterred from addressing you by the consideration, that with the exception of a few gentlemen immediately around you, there seems but little reason to hope that a single word that I shall say can be heard by the thousands of our friends and fellow subjects in this hall assembled. If they cannot hear me now, they can both hear me and read the words that I shall utter in another place and through the means of that first and most magnificent of the inventions of man—that almost godlike instrument, the Press. I shall speak not only to the thousands here gathered around me, but to the millions of India and of our own country. I do not regret that few can hear me that shall, when I consider the cause and behold the thousands of eager human countenances and heads around me, engaged in the same cause and animated by one sentiment. It is on the contrary to me a subject of infinite satisfaction, of cordial congratulation to you, Sir, and my associates in the Landholders' Society, who have convened this meeting. We have well appreciated the interest which the people of this country take in the measures we are about to protest against, and no one can say that we have reckoned in vain on popular support, or have been guilty of the smallest exaggeration, where we state in the letter addressed by the Society to Government on our own responsibility, the fact that the great bulk of the people

* Reg. XIX. of 1793 Sec. 25. "To prevent any pleas being hereafter urged of ignorance of the rule contained in the preceding section, the Collector of each Zillah, upon the receipt of this Regulation, to cause the following publication, which shall be written in the Bengali and Persian character in Behar, and attached with their official seals and signatures, to be fixed up in the principal Cutcharee of every proprietor and farmer of land in the Zillah paying revenue immediately to Government; and where the estate of any proprietor with whom a settlement may have been concluded, or the farm of any farmer or lands held Khass shall consist of two or more whole pergunnahs or portion of pergunnahs, he shall cause the publication to be fixed up in the principal Cutcharee in each pergunnah or portion of a pergunnah comprised in such estate, farm or khas lands, and take a receipt specifying the date on which the publication may be fixed up, from such proprietor, farmer or native officer, who shall respectively be held responsible for the paper remaining so affixed for one year from the date of it."

regard the measures in progress for the resumption of rent-free tenures, with alarm, with distrust, and will, if persevered in, regard them with hatred. It will be my study, as it is my inclination, my interest and my duty, to avoid all appeals to passion and to eschew all unnecessary allusions to topics that may create alarm or rouse anger; but there are some truths, which it is just as well as expedient to tell, and these I shall never hesitate plainly to vindicate or boldly to utter, at all suitable times to all persons, and in all places. I repeat that terror and distrust extensively prevail among the people of this country, and if these feelings subside in the certainty that there is no hope, that will but generate those other feelings which a rooted sense of wrong can never fail to produce.

I turn, however, from these considerations, and shall address myself, Sir, to the arguments which our opponents and that portion of the press which advocates the measures of resumption, are in the habit of urging in defence of what appears to be the present determination of the local Government.

We are informed, Sir, by these reasoners, that in the first place, however much in the right we may fancy the petitioners to be, and however cogent and convincing may be their arguments or ours, that the petitioners are too late in preferring their prayer, and that the mind of Government being made up to go on, it is useless to attempt to change a determination which has been so far proceeded in. I apprehend, Sir, that arguers of this stamp are incapable of perceiving with how little ceremony they treat the Government, of whom they constitute themselves the defenders, and the miserable compliments they pay to the object of their praise when they quietly assume that Government would be inflexible in keeping what it had once obtained, even if obtained unjustly. We forward this petition to Government in the midst of its career of resumption, because we believe in its capability of listening to reason, and in the possibility of its being impressed by motives of justice. Besides, Sir, as the persons who wield the powers of Government are not seldom changed, so may the policy of Government occasionally be mutable, and as what we contend to be the true policy of Government in this case is consistent with justice, and would be a return to its ordinary maxims, which have been violated, we may well hope for a change for the better. In this hope we are fortified by the recollection, that in the last general despatch of the Court of Directors of the East India Company, which has met the public eye, or of which I am aware, that honorable body, in plain, perspicuous and most philosophical language, condemn, by anticipation, the present policy and the actual conduct of the local Government of Bengal. The Court of Directors admit, that the title of the holders of rent-free tenures is secured by prescription and long usage; they more than doubt, they deny the justice and the wisdom of disturbing these titles, and they point to the example of the Government of Bombay and the practice enjoined by the Court to that Government as a warning and an example. Nothing can be plainer. Why then, it may be asked, are we here, and what are we discussing and what has the local Government of this presidency done since the receipt of the despatch of 1831, if that be the purpose for which it was intended? I say, Sir, the words which are quoted in the letter of this Society, which will accompany the Bengalee petition, are as plain and direct as the imperfections of language will permit, and if there be any hidden and mystical meaning lurking within them, perceivable only by authorities conversant with the language of revenue letters, it is only long practice and refined art which can have taught the use of a double tongue which in one and the same paragraph says to the English public, the natives of India are to be exempted from disturbance on account of their rent free tenures and to the local authorities, resume them all. Believing, as I am bound to do, Sir, that no such machiavellian trickery lurks in this which sounds to me like a very honest letter, I count upon our petition receiving the support it deserves at the India House, unless there, indeed, new men shall have induced new maxims, and the principles of 1831 be forgotten.

I proceed to grapple with the arguments on which this measure has been based and defended, and to state our own. We oppose the anti-resumption law on the broad ground that the lapse of time since the acquisition of what is called the Dewanny (that is the grant of the management of the public revenues made by the then Mogul Emperor to Lord Clive,) and which acquisition dates so far back as 1765, making a period of 73 years, does confer a valid title by prescription and undisturbed possession on the present owners of rent free-tenures, and ought to confer such a title: that it does constitute, and that it ought to constitute, a complete bar under all rational legislation, and in fair legal construction to the inquisition set on foot by the officers of Government. Prescription, Sir, which is always accompanied by long possession, and which presumes an original and legal occupancy in the absence of knowledge to the contrary is the best of all titles; it is what if we reflect, but a very little, we shall perceive all titles traced back most ultimately end in, and it is far better than most of those whose origin can be distinctly traced. If we are to moot points on moral equity and bandy objections to the general atlas of land in this country with the ill-judging friends of power and those who seem generally most ready, like the Friend of India, for example, to bepraise the Government when its acts are the most questionable; if, I say, Sir, the natives of India are to be questioned by their English governors as to how they got property in their own soil free of rent, may they not well answer, your subjects acquired their estates 73 years ago, when you our masters acquired yours. and our titles are, we submit, in reality the better of the two. I speak these words with very little danger of being heard by many, but I speak them deliberately and with forethought, because I think the danger lies the other way and would exist on keeping silence, and lurks in every argument of these unlucky flourishers of the weapons of general principles, who do not know what dangerous tools they handle.

Our opponents urge against us, Sir, that no such prescription or possession of 73 years can be said to have existed or can avail the owners of rent-free tenures, because of what? The possession was broken and the land resumed by Government? No, indeed, but Government in 1793, by regulation 19, said they had a right to do it and would resume such tenures unless the owners registered them as rent-free tenures, and the grants and titles on which they rested and brought in and submitted these later to examination and verification. I boldly deny that this law, calling for registry was ever duly and honestly promulgated according to the terms of it. I boldly deny that it was ever duly and honestly carried into execution in any one important particular, and whose fault was it that it was not? Why the fault of Government and of its servants, and on their heads should fall the loss and the penalty. Instead of this, the people are to be made responsible for the defaults of Government and the Revenue Officers of Government as well as their own, while even their diligence and that of their ancestors is not allowed, as I shall shew hereafter, to avail them. I affirm, and I court and challenge denial, that no such thing as a complete, full, legal and authentic register, pursuant to the regulation in question is now in existence, nor (as I fully believe,) ever was in existence in any one collectorate of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa; and if this most notorious fact should be disputed, I could verify it by the minutes and writings of every well informed revenue officer of Government, for the last 12 years, including many who are among the keenest of the hunters after rent-free lands. This fact, the non-existence of registers, by the fault of Government, ought to be decisive of the whole controversy; for if the fact be conceded, and I should be curious to see the bold man who denied it, there is an end at once of all pretence for saying that the lapse of time which constitutes a title by prescription has been broken by an intermediate assertion of adverse claims by Government and by the default of the people. The only defaulters were the Government who did not supply either honest or any means of registry, and who do not now blush to take advantage of their own wrong, and abuse the power which never has long co-existed with the practice of such maxims as we here behold in action.

Even in cases, Sir, in which Registration has been complied with, and the grant of the rent-free tenure is of undoubted authenticity, not only are the owners subject to have their titles unquestioned, but in one instance mentioned in the letter of the Society, where the Sunnud was not produced at the day assigned, from the accidental sickness of the manager, a decree to resume was passed for this default; and when application was made to oppose this decree on an explanation of the cause of default and production of the Sunnud for grant, the application was refused and the door of justice closed for ever.

But leaving the question of right aside, we maintain that the laws which are intended to authorize resumption of rent-free tenures, are inexpedient, because they will not produce the benefit to the revenues of the State, which it is alleged in vague and exaggerated language that they will do. We maintain that they will produce but a trifling accession of revenue, after making a fair deduction of the expenses of the machinery employed to carry these odious laws into execution, while the mischief that is done to the subject by the extortions and abuses of power of the minor agents employed, will weigh much more heavily, and create more discontent than the imposition of the tax itself will benefit the mass; and these abuses will create and do create a source of emolument to the collectors and minor agents, and of vexation to the subject, out of all proportion to the advantage derived by the State. We invite—(apart from all these latter and most important considerations, which I have only merely alluded to,) we invite, I say, nay we challenge, the production of a really fair and impartial financial statement, which shall shew the actual working and the practical results of these laws from their commencement to the present time. We wish to see resumption put into the form of an account current, and to have full and fair means of checking and examining that account. We do not believe that the balance would be found materially in favour of the State, but if it were so found, we should not admit the fact to be decisive of the question at all, as it would include neither the per contras of justice and general expediency, nor those ultimate political consequences which remain behind, and which I have done no more than barely to indicate. That the necessity of the state requires more money, and a larger revenue has been generally assumed. We deny this alleged necessity—we do not believe it to exist. Unnecessary wars apart, and with the exercise of a strict economy, we maintain that there is abundantly enough revenue drawn from the people of India for all essential purposes of good Government. We do believe that a profligate and spendthrift bargain was made by the Whig Ministry now in power, or their predecessors, with the proprietors of East India Stock. We believe that much money is now consumed in unnecessary home charges; that gross jobs prevail there as well as here, and that the whole system of a close and patronage service, somewhat overpaid perhaps in the higher branches, is calculated to produce bad subordinates, who being ill paid, repay themselves by extortion and corruption, and idle principals, who being secure in their privileges, are never really very efficient or content. We believe that an abundant fund of economy exists in the capacity of the people of this country for official employment, which will never be used until better maxims prevail, because the interests of the Corporation of the East India Company are supreme, and seem to have acquired fresh force and strength since the last act of Parliament renewing their Charter, which has been any thing but a Charter to us.

Permit me, Sir, to digress for a few minutes to examine, though but for a short time, the pretensions of that Charter, and to compare its promises with their performance. There were four prominent points put forward, for which its framers, professors of the creed of liberalism, even to its cant, took to themselves abundant credit. They said firstly, that they had made an advantageous financial bargain for this country, because the commercial assets of the East India Company were so valuable that they would form a permanent sinking fund of indemnification for extra charge and that the home charges should be kept in order. Now what is the result on this head? The assets in question have disappeared to the extent of full fifty per cent, and I conscientiously believe that the projected sinking fund on one pretext or other, will evaporate also. I know enough of former acts of Parliament, and of Indian History, to know, what became of the yearly payment of £400,000 so long undertaken by the East India Company in Pitt's days, and so long enjoined by Parliament, so often excused, and so invariably unpaid, and so easily at last extinguished as an obligation; and I should have thought my Lord Glenelg and his coadjutors, ought to have been very well conversant also with these things.

The next prominent promise of this Charter was, that an extensive and searching enquiry should be instituted into the actual working of all the practice and the systems of law and judicature which prevailed in this country, and this has sunk into a patronage and corporation job, in which it seems to be the one thing needful, and sought for to keep out of the pale, every one who has not the passport of a covenanted servant. The third point, and that one on which perhaps the greatest stress of all was laid, was the pretence, that we, the uncovenanted and free Englishmen in this country, were the enemies of the natives and of its prosperity, and the persons to be guarded against with jealous care, and those who possessed undue power and domination against which it was necessary to protect the feeble natives. Now, Sir, I speak to you, as Chairman of a native meeting, and to an audience nearly all of whom around me are natives, and much better acquainted, I can very safely say, with the past and actual condition of India, its legislation and its effects, than the framers of this Charter; and I do not hesitate to say, that a more false, ignorant and fraudulent pretext was never urged in the face of an ignorant audience to sanction an assertion of corporation and ministerial power, stretched to assumptions until these days never hazarded nor known in the annals of the Colonial misgovernment or blundering local legislation of England. The pretence put forward by this Charter was, I was just about to say, that it would put you, Sir, and my native fellow subjects and friends who hear me, on a footing of equality with us of English birth and blood; on a footing of equality with respect to all rights and all things—comprised within the definitions of civil and criminal law and their administration, but I correct myself—all this meant that we were to be put on a footing of practical equality with you (a very different thing as you in the Mofussil know) with you to be—subject to a system by which our lives, our honour, our fortunes, our civil rights might be disposed of without trial by Jury, by Judges of a patronage service, appointed without reference to qualification and removed at the pleasure of the executive Government for any colourable and assignable cause. Now let me not be misunderstood;

if there is to be equality such as I am willing to submit to, and such as it is fitting for free-men to submit to. I for one will receive you all as brethren with open arms, and willingly acknowledge every man of whatever race he may be, Hindoo, Mahomedan, East Indian, as my equal in rights and rejoice in this summation. But if the whole powers of the executive Government, of the legislative Government, and of the judicial administration of this country over all men, are to be censured in four or five men, as they now practically are, I shall make a mock of this equality and make up my mind too, as we all do, not to submit to it. It is very easy for any man, in another place, when he cannot be met or answered, to say that the Government of this country has been and must ever be a despotism, and the worst of all despotisms is a partial despotism, meaning by such words to express that it is an evil that any right of men should here exist exempt from his power; but I can very calmly repeat here what I have said elsewhere, that if any countrymen of mine shall claim to be my master as a despot (because my lot is cast in this land,) I shall answer him, that by the rights bequeathed to me by my fore-fathers, and by the grace of God (as sovereigns are wont to say) he shall find, that he has not obtained a servant. Governed by my equals, I may submit to be; but such a man who claims to trample on my rights and those of millions in the fulness of his conceit and the pursuit of his own miserable self-interests, I do not admit to be my equal because I trust I am an honest man. The last promise with which this vaunted Charter was big, was said to be in consequence of this equality, and you, gentlemen, who are the natives of this land, were to be eligible for all employments, and even to enter within the pale of the Covenant, without distinction of caste or religion. How has this promise been fulfilled in practice? Well do I recollect that in January 1835, when the inhabitants of this place assembled to petition against the Charter, I, with those who acted with me, denounced all the provision supposed to be calculated to lead to the indiscriminate employment of natives, as illusory, false, hollow and fraudulent, as the cheap coin, which political canters and mountebanks and pretenders to liberalism, passed upon the ignorant and unwary; there was no difference of opinion amongst us at that meeting, all thought alike; but some advocates of the Government without those walls, and among them notably the organ of the press I have already mentioned, and others too, must needs cry out upon the injustice and prematurity of such attacks. Now, I ask you, Sir, and you around me, trying the promises of this Charter by this last and perhaps most decisive test, what has been the result. One single native, Raja Ram Roy, the adopted child of Ram Mohun Roy, has been appointed to the civil service of the East India Company, and his appointment has been cancelled by the President of the Board of Control, who appointed him. Six years of the twenty granted to the Company have thus nearly passed away, and this has been the practical result! The policy of the Whig Ministry and of the President of the Board of Control, (if indeed this were ever their policy, or if any man can understand and define what their policy is or will be, beyond that of truckling to all power) has receded and bowed down before the better knowledge and the steady adherence to their own interests of the corporation of the East India Company; and what might have been once sincere in intention, has become perfect treachery in execution, from the habitual cowardice of those who wield a power to which they are unequal, and which they only use to injure those who might have been their friends. I am tempted to illustrate this case by a reference to that book with which that small portion of my present hearers who are Christians, are all familiar, and with which some of you, my native friends, are perhaps not unacquainted. I think I perceive the blessing of the President of the Board of Control descending on one for whom it was not intended. I can fancy him submitting himself to the Court of Directors, and saying, whomsoever ye bring unto me, him will I choose; and when the candidate approaches, I think too I can hear him say, the voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau; but yet he does as he is bidden, and thus the blessing is misdirected, and the son of an English mother sits in the seats and possesses the portion of Ram Roy. Now this, Sir, I denounce as moral and political cowardice in the person of the President of the Board of Control, if it be not, as I believe it is, the effect of the imbecility of a ministry, whom I heartily hope will soon be succeeded by better men, and who cannot have worse successors of any party if their successors shall possess energy and courage.

I return to the subject of the resumption of rent-free tenures. If the lapse of time were not a bar, if the neglect of Government to keep true and honest registries were not a bar, if expediency and state policy well understood were not a bar to the measures in progress for the Resumption of rent-free tenures in Bengal, still we should have a right to complain and good grounds to petition.

The whole construction of the courts of enquiry and adjudication, (courts of Justice I will not call them) is irregular, exceptional, and illegal. The capacity of informer is combined with that of Judge in the Courts, if they may be so called, or rather in the persons of the Deputy Collectors, who are themselves called and constituted courts of primary jurisdiction. One example is worth a thousand reasons, and I may well illustrate the working of this system by an authentic fact and by one example. I do not the least fear to name names, when I am sure of general accuracy in the facts which I state. Well, I am informed, Sir, and I believe that a Deputy Collector of Government, Mr. Taylor, proceeded thus. Soon after an examination of the registry of the district in which he had been recently placed, and which happened to possess (not indeed a complete and authentic registry under the Regulations of Lord Cornwallis, for that does not exist) but a fragment of a registry of which use might be made, he discovered that between 700 and 800 estates were registered as rent-free tenures; this registry (such as it was) bore date above 45 years back, and without taking the trouble to enquire who were the present possessors of the lands in question, or even to ascertain the actual site of those lands, he issues a sort of proclamation or summons to all the ancient possessors of those lands, by the names inscribed in the registry, to shew cause why they should not be assessed within one month, and to meet him at a given place for that purpose! I am informed (but that fact as I do not hold on the same authority I do not wish to vouch for), that on the day assigned he was at another place, and this I do believe most fully, that neither adequate nor any pains at all were taken to serve the summonses on the parties in actual possession. The fated day arrived; and the whole of the unfortunate present possessors of these estates situated in villages known, but sites otherwise unknown, were decreed liable to assessment, and I am informed that more than 400 of such decrees were passed in a single day! Mark the sequel, gentlemen. This most ridiculous difficulty occurs that the Government possesses by the decree of Mr. Deputy Collector Taylor, nearly 800 estates liable to assessment, which neither the Deputy Collector nor Government, nor any of its officers know exactly where to find. In consequence after some trouble this matter is referred to the Board of Revenue, who in some sort modify rather than reverse the decisions of the Deputy Collector, and refer them to the decision of a special commission, which (to their honor be it spoken,) does reverse these decisions, and even goes so far as to censure the principles on which the Deputy Collector decided and acted. The decision of the special commission is transmitted to the local Government, and the Government in turn, visits with its censure the decision of the special commission, and upholds the rectitude and propriety of the principle on which the Deputy Collector acted. Gentlemen, this was a lesson, and intended as a lesson to all in the like case offending, and it is one, which I will venture to say, will not fall to the ground nor be forgotten by those whom it may concern. We can now understand very well why the Government chose to distrust its own judicial tribunals, although far from being independent, and although most defective in securities against the influence of the executive power. We can understand why, by the Regulation III. of 1828, the Government choose to legislate in the teeth of an existing Act of Parliament, (21st Geo. 3d. c. 23) and create a tribunal of appeal, which was composed of a single man, and that man more conversant with revenue than judicial duty, and not only subject to perpetual removal, but practically perpetually removed, and to higher places, provided he gave satisfaction, with dependant judges removable at pleasure, but still bound by some judicial rules of procedure. The Government are dissatisfied in its own causes and what it thinks good enough for all that concerns the life, limbs and property of the subject, it does not think good enough for itself; need I say more. Yes, I will say that the revenue tribunals, which are so good for Government, are therefore not good enough for us, and that the whole system is a mockery of the sacred name of justice.

If, Sir, this appeal of ours should fail, then must we appeal further, and approach the Court of Directors; if that should fail, we must next resort to Parliament, and there, if our means are wisely and well employed, and we find able advocates to second our just arguments, I do not despair of ultimate success. If no more powerful voice should be heard within these walls, I hope one day to make my own be heard and attended to, by a body that ought to have the patience to listen, and the knowledge to understand the interests and the feelings of the millions for whom it does not hesitate to legislate, and whom it delegates the power to govern. Let me earnestly impress on you all here assembled, the paramount importance, the absolute necessity that you should create for yourselves an interest, and enjoy some representation in that assembly. You can easily obtain it there, on terms equally honorable to those who aid you and yourselves. Salaries I do not advocate, (as I for one would never receive one, were I in such a situation any more than I would give pledges of a general nature to my constituents, though the pledge that I would aid you in this cause, I might and would safely give) but without salaries and for small sacrifices compared to those which impend over you you could, I repeat, in that assembly obtain efficient aid and advocacy, where at present apathy and ignorance prevail respecting all that concerns you and your rights and feelings. I trust I shall see the day when men of all classes in this metropolis and country, leaving aside the jealousies which exist, and which so much impede co-operation, will unite to secure an active and able parliamentary advocacy for the rights of all men, of whatever class or colour, and for all interests, political and commercial. Should our prayers and petitions here agreed to, fail of effect, it will be our part, and I trust a part well fulfilled, to set an example. I conclude, Sir, by moving the first resolution and recommending its adoption by this meeting.

Resolved,—1st, That the petition of the Landholders of Bengal, ought to be supported by the Landholders' Society, and to be accompanied by representations from the persons assembled at this meeting, and the letter which has been prepared by the committee be read.

During this speech the eloquent orator was frequently cheered, and at the conclusion, he was complimented by the most deafening plaudits.

Rajah Kali Kishen Bahadoor, in seconding the above resolution, made a speech in Bengali, of which the following is the substance:

Gentlemen,—I second with much pleasure Mr. Dickens's resolution, and I beg to make a few observations upon it. The Landholders' Society, which has been established for the benefit of our countrymen, will, I firmly believe, be productive of beneficial results. The principal object of the establishment of this association, is to draw the public attention towards the Resumption question; and I am glad to say, that this day has at last presented the happy and long-wished for opportunity to this vast crowd of our countrymen, of meeting here with great zeal and interest. This unusual union leads me to conclude, that our kind Deputy Governor, in perusing the petition bearing thousands of signatures of our much oppressed and distressed countrymen, will cast his indulgent eyes towards them, and will, I hope, generously feel disposed to lift them up from the depth of misery in which they are plunged. Otherwise, I fear, the subjects being in want of their livelihood, will be led to commit great injuries against each other and their country. Moreover, this circumstance will throw insurmountable obstacles in the thorny path of learning. The Government of a country may be compared to a tree, the people to its root; and as no tree can thrive unless the root be well nourished, so the Government of a country cannot go on effectually unless the people be well protected.

Behold, gentlemen, in former times, Hindu and Musulman Kings used to recompense meritorious deeds with durable means of sustenance, by bestowing certain rent-free lands; and although they are no longer among the living, yet their actions and good names are tenderly remembered even to this-day. When those rulers lost their power, and the British nation became the sovereigns, all the inhabitants began to live in peace and happiness, and to pray for the increase of their Empire and wealth.

The English Government also, occasionally grant jaigirs, an example of which I now recollect. In the year 1835, the late Governor-General Lord William Bentinck, with the view to reward the successful endeavours of Krishna Rao, the Superintendent of the Sagor school, in cultivating his native language, bestowed on him the title of Rao, and a Jaijir for life, which yields 600 rupees annually. This evidently manifests that Rulers of all nations are perfectly aware, that there is no other permanent source of livelihood than that derived from the land; to seize it, therefore, will be totally ruinous to the holders. It may be questioned, whether or not persons should be brought to trial for evading the payment of Government. The answer is, that they must be held responsible for such conduct. The resumption officers, however, in administering justice, simply enquire after the sanads, and Mr. Young's charchitas, &c. and their decisions, entirely depend on the production of these documents. The probability of accidents destroying such papers in the course of time, is never taken into consideration. A proprietor's grounding his claim on the length of his possession, is considered as totally idle; and on their failing to produce the required Daleels, they are at once deprived of their rights. It may be further observed, that zemindars have not the power to create lakhtiraj lands. If any one grants certain lands free of rent within his own zemindary, he can thereby do no harm to Government, as he himself will have to pay the revenue of the whole. If such lands should be resumed at all, it can be so done only by the donor himself, and Government can have no manner of claim upon it.

Further more, the expence incurred by Government, in appointing the Deputy Collectors under Reg. IX. of 1838, if compared with their gain from this source for the space of a year, it may be computed to exceed the latter by four times, which evil it is not with in the power of the Covenanted officer to remedy, since the Deputy Collectors in resuming certain lands will take no less than a year to bring the circumstance to the notice of their Covenanted superiors. By this we see, that both the Government and the people become losers; the former by the entertainment of large establishments in direct opposition to the rules of economy; and the latter by the expences they incur in carrying on the suit, as also from their eventual loss of property. The idea of going to law against Government, where their officers are to administer justice, is truly singular. If it be the intention of Government to do justice, why not summon a punchait, or a jury of five respectable natives, by the consent of both parties, and both abide by its decisions.

If the present application to the Supreme Council of India be of no effect, and if it meet a similar fate in the Privy Council of Her Majesty, what remains for us but to repeat the Sanscrit Proverb

“If endeavour fails, what harm may there be.”

The Chairman then explained the purport of the resolution in Bengali, and put it to the vote. Carried unanimously by a show of hands and acclamations.

Abboychnurn Bonerjeah.—Gentlemen, being quite unaccustomed to speak in public, I beg the favour of your indulgence for any inaccuracy that may be observed in my address to you on this occasion. Gentlemen, the able and eloquent speech of Mr. Dickens, stating, amongst other things, the hardship and oppressions which the resumption laws entail upon the poor and helpless lakhraj dars, and which are well known to all and every one of you here present, renders it impossible for me to say aught in addition to what that gentleman has represented to you; I have, therefore, only to express my unqualified assent to his observations. Gentlemen, the letter read by Mr. Hurry appears to me highly commendable, and I presume I am not singular in my approbation. Of the necessity of its accompanying the Landholders' petition, there can be no doubt. It enters fully into the subject, and leaves me no room for further comment. I beg, therefore, to propose—

That the letter now read be sent to Government along with the petition, and be adopted by this meeting.

This was seconded by Rajah Raj Narain Roy Bahadoor, and carried nem. con.

Dwarkanath Tagore.—Mr. Chairman, as I am about to give explanation regarding a secret charge that has been brought against me in a secret letter from Government to the Court of Directors, on which I had no opportunity of vindicating myself before now, I beg your attention. The facts of the case are intimately connected with the subject now under your consideration. Myself, with several others, some of whom are now around me, presented in the year 1829 a petition on this very subject, which was approved by all, and signed by several respectable members of our community, some of whom are yet the living witnesses to vouch for the fact.

Of this petition the Local Government, in their despatch to the Court of Directors—dated 23d February, 1830, speak as follows:—

“Among the petitions against Regulation III. 1828, which have been noticed in a preceding part of this despatch, there is one which we have stated to be anonymous; we have now to notice that an exact duplicate of that petition has since been presented to us, with the signatures of above 200 individuals annexed to it, accompanied by a letter addressed to our secretary in this department by four natives, named Dwarkanath Tagore, Kalinath Roy, Prunsunoo Komar Tagore, and Rammohun Roy.

“The intelligence of the above-named individuals is acknowledged to be much superior to that of the native aristocracy in general: however much, therefore, we may doubt whether any considerable number of the petitioners are capable of understanding the arguments which it contains, we are not the less disposed to give due consideration to the expression of the sentiments of such individuals on a question which so generally affects the interests of the Native community as well as those of the State.”

This letter would not have been seen by us if the British Parliament did not make it a rule to publish all these correspondences. It is here stated, that the people understand not these matters, that they know nothing about these things, nor trouble themselves about the business. Are we to be told, that the people do not know when they are to be deprived of their possessions, that they do not understand what resumption means, and that they feel not when their very hearts' blood is about to be taken from them? The fact is, that it is a common practice with the local authorities here, to give such a coloring to every representation as may suit their purpose, to make the most weighty matters appear as light, and vice versa. That such is their common practice, may be known from what was said about the Black Act Petition, a knot of lawyers was said to have been the sole originators and movers of that measure, and thus it was made to appear before the authorities in England; that it emanated from a small body, and was not worthy of attention. But although this Government made such an objection to our former petition, surely it cannot be said, that the one now before you has not your unanimous support.

But to come to the subject. You will perceive by the letter of the Court of Directors, in reply to the local Government, that in all resumption suits, they place the fiscal officer in the place of the complainant only, leaving the determination of the case into the hands of the experienced judicial officers. The case, however, is now changed. We are told that the regular judicial officers do not understand the Revenue Regulations, that there is a great pressure of business on their hands, and that, therefore, these cases must be disposed of by officers specially appointed for the purpose. I shall, however, read to you what the Court of Directors say on this matter.

Mr. Hurry here read the following extract from the Court's letter, dated 28th September 1831:—

"We see reason, however, for making a distinction between those cases, and the cases in which the Government is a party, and in which the collector, as the instrument of Government in the cause, is also apt to appear in the light of a party. We doubt not that, generally speaking, your collectors would act with a sincere desire of deciding justly; but if we were assured of their deciding with perfect impartiality in all cases, something would still be wanting. The administration of justice has two ends; the one is, that justice should be done, the other is, that the people should believe that it is done; and this last is a point of the greatest importance.

"It cannot be doubted, that when a collector demands from an individual any sum as Revenue to Government, which that individual considers to be an illegal demand, a demand from which a just interpretation of the law would exempt him, and when, applying for this interpretation, he is remitted for the decision to the very man who has made the demand, and against whose act he is reclaiming, there is an appearance of hardship, the appearance of his being remitted not only to the man who is the party against him but a man who has already prejudged the question."

Now, gentlemen, in the face of all this, we still have our justice committed to the very party, who is employed to inform against us, and to act as the complainant. In the letter above quoted, the Local Government also express their conviction, "that the just interests of Government have been very seriously prejudiced by allowing cases of the nature under consideration to be tried and decided by the Court of Justice, indiscriminately, like all other cases which come before them." You have already heard the Court's opinion on this point; notwithstanding that clear expression of the Court's views, these cases are not decided in appeal by the regular Judges of the Sudder Court, but certain special Commissioners. What can be the reason of this? Is it because the Judges of the Sudder cannot be removed from their situation for passing sentences prejudicial to the interests of Government? Is it because that Court has its reports sent to the Court of Directors? or is it because the fiscal officers employed in the institution and disposal of resumption suits are more willing to promote their interests? The facts of the case speak for themselves, and they are well known to all of you. I shall, therefore, with the view to obviate the necessity of calling another meeting, and giving to the people the trouble of leaving their homes to come out so far, propose:—

That in case our representation fail of effect with the local Government and the Court of Directors, it is expedient to appeal to Parliament on the general question, and that the Committee of the Landholders' Society be instructed to carry such resolution into effect.

"We talk of the tyranny of the Mahomedan Government! but what are the English doing they are taking away from us all what the benevolence of the Mahomedans had given us. The just, the liberal, the enlightened English are depriving us of all what a tyrannical, bigotted, semi-barbarous Government has bestowed. Is this the boasted justice and liberality of our rulers? Seventy years have now elapsed since the people have had their lakhbraz lands in their possession under the British rule, and now, after the lapse of so long a period, they are to be deprived of their possessions? It is not that we alone are of this opinion; even among the most experienced and able advisers of Government, I could mention a Prinsep, a Maddock, a Blunt, a Bird, and several others who do not approve of the resumption operations. But who are those that have advised these operations? a few young men, come out to India but the other day. These are the people who have been the cause of all this disgrace to the Government, who are in fact doing all they can to alienate the affections of the people from their Rulers. It is true Mr. Prinsep, one of the gentlemen just named by me, proposed a plan for these said operations; but this circumstance has nothing to do with his opinion: he is a servant of the Government, and as such bound to obey its orders, and to execute its measures, and to do what he may be told to do."

to cut the throats of the Lakherajdars, and he as an executive, did point out the most lenient method he could. But let us now trace the practical workings of this system to its root, which I say is bad. The Deputy Collector, who is the informer, and the complainant to his own tribunal, has the preparing of the case; he hears the witnesses, he examines the titles, and if he chooses, he can reject the evidence. The Commissioner, it is true, has to re-examine these cases, if appealed; but he judges only from the papers which the former has thought fit to place before him; and from these he can but little understand where the injustice of the case lies. The particulars of the case of Mr. Taylor, Deputy Collector at Burdwan, mentioned by my friend Mr. Dickens, are as follow. This officer, commencing on a wholesale system, took up his Tydat, or Registry Book, and found there, that about 2,000 tenures were registered in 1202, and ordered a proclamation to be issued requiring the personal attendance of several hundreds of individuals, long since dead; without enquiry whether the lands in question were in existence or where they were situated, or who the parties then in possession were; and passed his solemn judicial decree in favor of Government in default of the appearance of the parties not now alive, leaving the settlement officers to hunt out the lands so decreed in favor of Government. Mr. Low's, the then Commissioner, although by virtue of his office one of the guardians of the interests of Government, most strongly objected to the proceeding of Mr. Taylor, the resumption officer, and in that protest he was supported by Messrs. Pattle and Walters, members of the Sudder Board, on the ground that without proper service of the notice on the actual possessors of the tenure, or ascertaining the situation of the land, adjudicated by a decree, it was useless to all intents and purposes, not to say that it was illegal in the highest degree. But, unfortunately, the Government, instead of considering this improper proceeding illegal and unjustifiable, sanctioned it as just, equitable, and fair. Now, if the Commissioner had been less upright and lean more towards Government in cost than towards justice, and if Mr. Taylor had taken the precaution to submit these cases, one by one, instead of all in a lump, there is little doubt but that the whole would have passed off smoothly.

I have much more to say, gentlemen, concerning the tyranny carried on in the Mofussil; but I do not know if I am heard (at this time there was much noise in different parts of the house). I shall therefore conclude; but this

I cannot do without remarking, with reference to an observation which is always made, that these petitions and addresses are got up by interested parties, that it is nothing surprising that interested parties should petition. Who, I ask, is to complain, but he who suffers: albeit we can mention the name of Messrs. G. Prinsep and Dickens, who have night after night labored in the preparation of the documents now before you, but who are not in any way interested parties; they do not hold a bigah of lakheraj land. The community is therefore much indebted to them for their disinterested labors.

The speaker here resumed his seat in the midst of loud and continued cheering. The resolution was then seconded by Roy Bykanthnath Chowdhury, who thanked heaven on observing such unanimity amongst his countrymen; he adverted to the beneficial effects of rent-free holdings, especially in regard to education which people enjoying the grants can obtain and bestow without charge. Carried unanimously.

Dewan Ramcomul Sen now addressed the chair:—

The resumption regulation, to avert the consequence of which we have met here to-day, is not the only grievance under which the country labours; but there are great many others connected with the Revenue and Judicial system of Government, and in case the Society find it necessary to go before the superior authorities in England, such of them as may appear glaring and injurious, should be included in the memorial.

Resolved,—That it is also expedient to appeal such cases of peculiar hardship as the Landholders' Society shall select, to the Privy Council.

This Resolution was seconded by Joi Kisto Mookerji, and carried nem. con.

Dwarkanath Tagore again addressed the chair, and said, that so large a public meeting as this, and for such a purpose, had never before assembled in India. He complimented the chairman on having conducted the proceedings in so able a manner, and observed that the whole had been managed so peaceably, that even Captain Birch, the Superintendent of Police, who had come in during the proceedings, found so little occasion for his presence, that he had already retired. He, therefore, felt great pleasure in proposing a vote of thanks to the chair. This was seconded by Mr. Vint, and carried by acclamation.

The meeting dispersed after 4 P.M.

MEETING OF THE BENGAL AUXILIARY SOCIETY.

WEDNESDAY, 31st OCTOBER, 1838.

Annual meeting of the Bengal Auxiliary, to the London Missionary Society, held at the Union Chapel, Durrumtollah. Agreeable to notice given in the public journals for some days, the 20th Anniversary of this Society took place.

G. Alexander, Esq., C. S., in the chair.

The chairman opened the meeting in a suitable manner, after which the Rev. Mr. Boaz was called upon, and read the Report of the Committee for the past year, which was very interesting, and several resolutions were moved and seconded by the following gentlemen, viz. The Rev. Mr. Yates, Mr. Cooke, the Rev. Mr. Macdonald, the Rev. Mr. Bradbury, Mr. Wale Byrn, the Rev. Mr. Lacroix, Captain Roxborough and Mr. Grant. A collection was made in aid of the funds of the Society which, with the former collections for the same purpose, amounted to about 600 rupees, besides what may be realized from blank cards put in by several gentlemen. The meeting was well attended, and all left the place apparently well pleased with it.—Hark, November 2.

THE STEAM COMMUNICATION.

The COMMITTEE of the NEW BENGAL STEAM FUND, have much pleasure in publishing for general information the following copy of a letter, dated 14th August to the Hon'ble Court of Directors from Lord Wm. BENTINCK.

The reply had not been received when the Mail left England, but the Committee hope to be able to publish it after the arrival of the October Mail.

The letter of Lord Wm. Bentinck speaks for itself. In as few words as it is possible well to embrace a subject of such vast importance, it comprehends the general bearings of the question, as they more particularly relate to its practical development. A proposal to carry out the perfect comprehensive scheme with all its attendant advantages, at a cost to the public authorities of, at least, one-third less than the sum now expended in the partial, inconvenient, and indeed harassing intercourse, guaranteed by such a man as Lord Wm. Bentinck, cannot fail to meet attentive consideration, as well by the Hon'ble Court as the Board of Control, to whose President a copy of the letter has been sent.

By this act Lord William Bentinck has placed himself in the van in bringing this great measure into practice. The importance of such a position on his part is incalculable. It is at once a guarantee to the authorities and to the whole of the public in great Britain and India. To the former that there will be nothing in the proposition which does not tend to the mutual interests of the two countries; and to the latter, and especially to the people of England, that it is neither visionary nor illusory, but one to which they may unreservedly give their confidence.

It will be seen that Lord William Bentinck refers to his having presented the Calcutta and Madras Steam Petitions. By a letter from Capt. Barber, it appears that this occurred on the 1st August; but the mail of that month not having yet reached Calcutta, the committee are unable to make any communication on the subject.

By order of the committee of the new Bengal Steam Fund.

C. B. GREENLAW, Secretary.

Town Hall, Calcutta, 5th Nov., 1838.

6, Park place, Aug. 14, 1838.

TO THE CHAIRMAN AND DEPUTY CHAIRMAN of the Hon'ble EAST INDIA COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—The interest which I take in seeing to it that Her Majesty's Indian territories under the Government of the East India Company the full benefit of Steam Communication, will, I trust, be received by you as my apology for thus trespassing upon your attention.

Having been entrusted with the charge of advocating the earnest and reiterated wishes of the British and native community for the full and complete extension of such communication to India, I feel no hesitation in addressing you as the heads of the executive branch of the home administration in the full confidence that the Court of Directors will receive with satisfaction any proposition calculated to attain this most desirable object.

The petitions which I have lately presented to the House of Commons, sufficiently attest the truth of the conviction expressed by the president of the Board of Control in his letter, dated 10th March 1837, addressed to the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the Court of Directors, that any plan which does not embrace a communication with Madras and Calcutta, as well as with Bombay, will certainly fail to give public satisfaction, and to fulfil the just expectations of the people both of India and England. The greatest disappointment prevails throughout India in consequence of the delay in carrying out these intentions.

But, independently of the inadequacy of a communication, which has its terminus in Bombay, for either social, commercial or political purposes, it is impossible that it can be beneficially conducted by so many different authorities,* none of

- * 1. The Calcutta dock to whom are responsible for the unbroken continuity of the present limited route, while it is also carried on at a very great public charge.
- 2. The Bombay Packet to Suez.
- 3. The Egyptian transit, the conflicting interests of the public authorities and private agency.
- 4. The Admiralty Branch Packet to Malta.
- 5. The Admiralty's Branch Packet from Malta to Gibraltar.
- 6. The Peninsula Steam Navigation Company's Packet to and from Gibraltar to Falmouth.

The uncertainty of the departures from India, the defective arrangements in Egypt, the length of the quarantine, which ought to be avoided, and the delays on the European side are subjects of general complaint.

After maturely considering the question in all its bearings, and being fortified with the opinions I have formed, by the concurrent judgment of competent parties, I am convinced that Steam Communication, on the most comprehensive scale, may be extended to the several presidencies, including also the Island of Ceylon, with the Red Sea, in the most satisfactory manner, and at far less cost than is incurred under the present incomplete arrangements.

I appreciate the disposition that has been manifested by Her Majesty's Government and by the Court of Directors, in the support hitherto given to this important measure; but the undertaking is more fitting the enterprise of a private Company than one legitimately falling within the province of the ruling authorities. At the same time, from the peculiar position in which British India stands towards England, no Company can be formed, with any reasonable hope of success, unless supported, for a time, by pecuniary aid from such authorities.

I beg, therefore, to ask, whether in the event of a Company being formed for carrying on steam communication between England and India, which shall afford the most complete means of conveying in the shortest possible period, all despatches, diaries, and consultations from the Governments of India, and conveying despatches from the home authorities to those Governments, as well as presenting ample accommodation to passengers, the Court of Directors and Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to pay an annual sum, certainly not exceeding two-thirds of the present charge, for a term of seven years, at the expiration of which period, the agreement to be open to revision, if it shall appear that reasonable grounds exist for a remission, by the Steam Company, of any portion of the aid now sought.

By this arrangement a large annual saving will accrue at once to the Government, whilst the anxious desires of the Indian community, so repeatedly pressed upon the attention of the Home Authorities, will be completely and satisfactorily met.

As I shall be prepared to take a prominent part in the conduct of such a Company, provided my proposition is favorably received, as I can confidently assert that the greater part of those with whom I am associated have exclusively in view the prosperity of India, I trust that in these motives will be found a sufficient guarantee, that the principles upon which such Company shall be based and carried forward, will be unexceptionable.

Being pressed to make known to India the steps which I have taken to discharge the trust reposed in me, I may be allowed to request as early a reply to this communication as your convenience will permit.

I have &c.

At a meeting of the Home Committee of the New Bengal Steam Fund, held on the 22d June 1838.

A letter from the New Bengal Steam Fund Committee, dated 9th April last, having been laid before the meeting and being read.

It was resolved,—That the Secretary be required to report upon its contents, on the balance of funds and on the subject of remuneration for his personal services.

It was also Resolved,—That a deputation, consisting of Lord Wm. Bentinck. Mr. HARDING.
 Col. CRAIGIE. Mr. LARPERT.
 Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. MACKILLOP. be requested to wait upon the Chairman, and Deputy-Chairman of the East India Company, to announce the arrival of a petition or petitions addressed to the House of Commons from Calcutta, and Madras, in favor of a comprehensive plan of Steam communication, embracing all the presidencies, and to ascertain the views of the Court of Directors on the subject.

(Signed) W. BENTINCK.

16, Cornhill, 2d June, 1838.

To the Right Honorable Lord Wm. BENTINCK, &c.

D. M. P. &c. &c. &c., and the Home Committee of the New Bengal Steam Fund.

My Lord and gentlemen,—In compliance with your instructions, as recorded upon the minutes of this day, I proceed to report upon the various subjects respecting which you desire to be furnished with detailed particulars.

The first of these subjects is the letter addressed to you by the Committee of the New Bengal Steam Fund, dated Calcutta, the 9th April last, and received by Lord William Bentinck on the 20th instant.

The principal object of that letter appears to announce the appointment of Capt. Barber, as the direct Agent of the Committee at Calcutta, and with reference to the anticipated course of the Steam question, various suggestions are made for putting Captain Barber in communication with your committee, for arranging his remuneration and for obtaining the services of Dr. Lardner.

The Calcutta committee advert to the deposit of £1,000 with Sir Charles Cockerell and Mr. Fletcher, to meet the expenses of the proceedings and express some surprise at the non-production of the statement of account, which was to be furnished. I need not inform your committee that the statement referred to, has long since been furnished, and that the delay in transmitting it during the successive months of December and January, was fully explained in private letters from Mr. Mackillop to Mr. Greenlaw.

I, therefore, pass on to the remaining points upon which you have called for information—the balance in hand and my claim for remuneration.

The amount of expenditure incurred under the authority of your committee is (as appears from the statement attached) £796 0 9, of which £300 was paid by your order to Captain Barber, for the use of the Provisional Committee, the balance consequently remaining in my hands, exclusive of the letter of credit of £1,000 on Sir Cockerell and Co., received by the 'Hindo', 14th Sept. 1837, is £193 19.

On my own claim to remuneration, I have little to say, nor should I have adverted to it at all, but in deference to your instructions.

Thus called upon, I may be pardoned for mentioning, that I have now been engaged in actively aiding the progress of the steam question for a period of nearly two years. How large a portion of my time during that period has been thus devoted, may be best estimated by those who, like yourselves, my Lord and Gentlemen, have had the means of observing the constant and unwearied attention I have bestowed upon the cause. I have sacrificed to it much lucrative employment, more immediately connected with my own business, and I have incurred various expenses which I could not bring forward as matters of separate charge. It is to be recollected also, that the duties which I have performed were not of an ordinary character, that they required not only habits of business, but for their efficient discharge a peculiar position in society and habits of intercourse with classes not readily accessible to all.

These circumstances I cannot refrain from mentioning, but as neither my labours nor my difficulties have been appreciated by those with whom my connection with the steam question originated, it would not be accordant with my feelings of what is due to myself to make a charge for the performance of duties in which I have unfortunately afforded no little satisfaction.

I have already expressed my grateful sense of your kind approbation of my exertions, I have only to add that amidst much of bitter vexation and cruel disappointment, that approbation has ever been sufficient to sustain, support and console me.

I have the honor to remain, my Lord and Gentlemen, your most obedient servant.

(Signed) R. M. GRINDLAY.

At a meeting of the Home Committee of the New Bengal Steam Fund, held at the House of Lord William Bentinck, on the 26th June 1838.

The Secretary presented the annexed report, in conformity with the resolution of the last meeting.

The same was read, whereupon it was—

Resolved,—That this Committee see no reason to change the opinion respecting Capt. Grindlay, contained in their letter to the Calcutta Committee, under date the 16th February 1838, that in consideration of his services, and in reference to the state of the funds, Capt. Grindlay be requested to accept the sum of five hundred pounds, that the balance, amounting to £—, now in the hands of the Secretary; and be placed at the disposal of the Calcutta Committee of the New Bengal Steam Fund.

That the Secretary be requested to forward to C. B. Greenlaw, Esq., Secretary to the New Bengal Steam Fund Committee, a copy of the minutes of the day's proceedings.

That this Committee be now dissolved and is hereby dissolved accordingly.

THE UNION BANK.

CALCUTTA, NOVEMBER 7, 1838.

At a Meeting held at the Union Bank, Calcutta, this day, November 7, 1838., R. Walker, Esq., in the chair.

Mr. Holroyd, read the correspondence relating to the resignation and re-nomination of Mr. A. H. Sim.

The Chairman read extracts of proceedings of Directors on the subject.

A proprietor (Mr. Staunton) asked if Mr. Sim accepted the conditions.

Mr. R. S. Thomson stated, that he would accept them.

Moved by Mr. W. Patrick, and seconded by Dwarkanauth Tagore,

“That the nomination of the Directors be confirmed.”

Mr. L. Clarke rose and addressed the Meeting to the following effect:

Gentlemen, I beg to move the following amendment to the resolution which has just been proposed.

Resolved.—That Mr. A. H. Sim, the late accountant of the Union Bank, having resigned, in consequence of a complaint against him; and the directors having nominated him again to the situation in order to enable him to take the sense of the Proprietors on his conduct, it is the opinion of this Meeting, that Mr. Sim having admitted to the Directors, that he communicated to Mr. Henderson, the Attorney, that a cheque of Mr. Joseph Patten, a proprietor, had been dishonoured, and also in particular of Mr. Patten's account; that Mr. Patten's bail was to be opposed, the nomination of the Directors be not confirmed.

Gentlemen, you have partly heard from the papers which have been read, the circumstances under which I brought this matter to the notice of the Directors. I had been out of town for twelve days, and returned for the express purpose of attending our last General Meeting. In the room, I heard of the report which was circulated, and on questioning our Secretary, he told me; that no complaint had been made to the Directors; and that he knew nothing of the matter but, from general conversation. To me it appeared, that such a supposition on the conduct of any officer of the Bank, might not be permitted to exist for one hour, and I wrote to Mr.

Patten, desiring to know if the report rested on his authority, and if it did, calling upon him to furnish me with the particulars, as I deemed it my duty as a Director, that the character of the Bank should be vindicated, or the conduct of its accountant cleared. Gentlemen, you have heard my letter read, and Mr. Patten's reply contained in his letter to the Directors. At a Meeting of the Directors the next day, Mr. Sim was called before us, and he admitted Mr. Patten's statement was substantially correct, but he denied that he ever authorized Mr. Henderson, the Attorney, to use his letter, or that Mr. Henderson had produced it. This qualification, however, was of little consequence; for he admitted that he gave the account to Mr. Henderson, the better to enable him to oppose Mr. Patten's bail, and that his letter to Mr. Henderson, contained the figures 320, being the amount of Mr. Patten's cheque, and 8-2, being the balance of his account.

It has been said, that this question has caused a difference of opinion among the Directors, but this I positively deny, in the presence of all my brother Directors. Acting as Directors we have been unanimous in every thing, with the exception of making a reference to Mr. Patten before we decided the matter ourselves; a difference which was rendered of no consequence, as Mr. Patten's reply compelled us to decide the matter. On Mr. Sim's admission, I moved that he should be dismissed, considering that the 48th section of the deed left us no discretion. It is this “That no shareholder of the Company, other than the Directors, Secretary and Accountant thereof, shall be allowed to inspect the accounts of private individuals, or co-partnerships, with the said Company, without the consent of such individuals or co-partnerships, and if any of the Directors, Trustees, Secretary, Treasurer, or any other officer of the Company, shall divulge, unless compelled by a Court of Justice, the transactions, or dealings of any such individuals, or co-partnerships with the said Company, the person or persons so divulging such dealings or transactions, shall be immediately dismissed from his office, and some other person appointed in his stead, in the same manner as hereinafter directed.” Gentlemen, I withdrew my motion for Mr. Sim's dismissal, upon his resignation being tendered, and when Mr. Holroyd proposed to nominate him for the purpose of leaving your opinion I cordially joined in that resolution. Mr. Holroyd has stated, that the resolution originated with himself, and not from Mr. Sim; but Mr. Sim knows of it, and has availed himself of it, and he has, therefore, strictly speaking, appealed to you on the question of his conduct. I can see no reason for altering the opinions I originally entertained. The facts of the case are not disputed, and nothing new has transpired to alter it in the least; and a more flagrant act, I can hardly conceive to have been committed by any person holding a responsible situation in a large public Bank. I need not appeal to the opinions of those who inserted that clause in the deed. Common sense, and common honesty are quite sufficient to characterize the nature of the offence. In vain do I look for one redeeming feature in the whole transaction; every part of it is of the most aggravated nature. It originated in interested and vindictive motives: in interested motives, because it was an object with Mr. Sim to keep Mr. Robinson in prison; in vindictive motives, because when I put the question to Mr. Sim in the presence of the Directors, whether he would have dishonoured the cheque of any one other Proprietor of the Bank without applying to Mr. Storm, he admitted that he would not; adding, that when a constituent overdraw his account, he was always written to, and being on bad terms with Mr. Patten, he would not communicate with him. Here, then, Mr. Sim quarrels with Mr. Patten, and this is the reason that your accountant is not to do his duty towards your constituents; so much for the motive in which his conduct originated. Now mark the premeditated manner in which the whole plot is carried out. The cheque was dated the 13th, and therefore was not payable until that day. It was presented on the 17th, and it therefore ought not to have been paid, and consequently not being due, could not possibly be dishonoured. It was not only contrary to the routine of Banking business to dishonour it, but Mr. Patten might have sent in money to meet it before the time at which he made it payable; it was therefore untrue to say the check had been dishonoured on the 17th; and yet Mr. Sim, without any communication with the Secretary, and assuming an authority, which, as accountant he did not possess, deliberately sent it back on the 17th, and on the morning of the 18th, writes to the attorney to tell him, that Mr. Patten had overdrawn his account, and his check was dishonoured; when, according to the routine of Banking, no such circumstance could have occurred. I could pardon a hasty expression in moment of unguarded conversation, by which an account was disclosed. I could palliate indiscreet communications over the wine cup; but here is nothing of this sort; here we have a grossly improper act done on one day, as the foundation of a deliberate communication to be made in writing on the following, and that communication being an untrue statement. Now, gentlemen, let us look to the object of all this proceeding. It is to keep one man in prison, and to cast a stigma upon the solvency and respectability of another. Here you have a respectable tradesman keeping his Banking account with you, met in a Court of Justice, with a false assertion, not only that he is insolvent, but twitted with the intention to commit perjury; for Mr. Patten was prepared to swear, that he was worth a certain sum, and your confidential officer betrays the state of his private account with you, to establish that he was about to swear to an untruth. Look, therefore, at the whole transaction, the bad motives in which it originated, the premeditated manner in which it was carried through, and the scandalous object it had to achieve. Gentlemen, I state to you, without fear of contradiction, that it rests with Mr. Patten, or Mr. Robinson, to inflict Mr. Sim at the next session, for conspiracy to get Mr. Patten's bail rejected on false pretences, and Mr. Robinson detained in prison. And this is the man whom you are asked to elect to the most responsible situation of the Bank, to whom all your accounts with all your constituents are to be entrusted. I ask what would be thought of this in London, or in any Commercial City? Would it be celebrated there for a moment, and what will be thought of you for doing so? Would any partners in Coote's, or in Child's, permit a clerk in their establishment to remain for one single moment, who, taking his master's money, and being supported and maintained by him, betrayed the state of his accounts in order that he might be insulted, degraded, and twitted with perjury? No man who had any principle or any honor could have been guilty of such a deliberate breach of trust. It has cast a stain, and a tarnish on the character of Mr. Sim, which no vote of yours can remove; and it is due to the immense constituency and numerous absent proprietors of this great Bank, that a person who has been guilty of such an unprincipled act, should not be placed at the head of its accounts. In this city it becomes us to be more strict in matters of this kind, than is necessary in any other part of the world. Look at its immense native population; look at the number of natives in whom you are obliged to repose confidence, and receiving only small pittance for their services, and how can you blame any one of these for misconduct, if you again place confidence in one of your chief officers, after he has been guilty of so unprincipled an act. You are here but very few, as compared with the 250 or 300 Proprietors which constitute the Company. They have a right to demand from you, that principles of honesty be cherished in the Bank; but if you place at the head of your accounts, a man who has acted so, you are doing directly the opposite. While Mr. Sim remains here, never shall any account of mine be kept within these walls, nor shall any friends of mine, who may be influenced by my opinions, trust their accounts to his inspection. I deem it most unsafe, and entertaining that opinion, I fearlessly express it, and deem it my duty so to do. You may restore him, but you cannot wipe the stain from his character; and I believe that to bring him back will do incalculable mischief.

On the amendment being put from the chair, Mr. Dickens, in favor of the original motion, addressed the meeting as follows:—

Sirs,—I rise to oppose the amendment of my friend, Mr. Clarke, and to support the recommendation of the majority of the Directors, which is, that Mr. Sim's appointment be confirmed. On one point, the whole of the Directors were unanimous, and Mr. Clarke himself admitted before, as he admits now, that it was proper to moot the question whether there was any thing in the conduct of Mr. Sim, that for ever disqualified him from serving the Bank. The appeal of Mr. Sim which has been brought before you, gentlemen, by the majority of the Directors, and which is supported by their recommendation, is an appeal to your mercy. It is not, I apprehend, quite correct to say, that Mr. Sim, is here upon his trial before you; he has been already tried, convicted and punished and, as I think, most justly punished; but the question for your consideration, gentlemen, as proprietors of this Bank, now is, whether mercy should be extended to him after he has undergone punishment, or whether the door of pardon should be closed on him for ever, and his exclusion from your service be made permanent, to the serious injury of his character, and perhaps to the utter ruin of his prospects in life. I cannot but feel, gentlemen, all the while admitting, that he has been guilty of a very grave offence, and that the Directors have acted with propriety, [as it is clear they would have dismissed him from office had he not resigned it] and that he has suffered no greater penalty than he justly brought upon himself—I cannot but feel, I say, that in consideration of a valuable service of upwards of seven years, we ought to overlook this his first and sole offence; and that is the just application of the precept, which enjoins us to do unto others as we would be done by, in the like case, that we ought to anticipate his restoration to office. I think, that otherwise we should exceed the limits of justice and meet out too heavy and disproportionate a punishment.

Although I am not here to defend Mr. Sim; although I admit that he committed a breach of his duty as a servant of the Bank, and a very serious breach of duty; although I admit he was very deservedly punished for it; yet I say, gentlemen, by no means intending, however, to constitute myself a defender of Mr. Sim) that it seems to me to be carrying matters too far, to charge him with not having an "unimpaired character." I do not consider that Mr. Sim has been guilty of any serious breach of moral duty or any grave moral offence. Our of anger arising from previous litigation and quarrel with other parties he has done what he was not justified in doing to one of the proprietors of this Bank, and broken one of its important rules; but there has been neither fraud nor deception in his case, nor what can be fairly called breach of trust nor in short any misconduct such as would render him altogether unworthy of trust hereafter, especially after the several lessons which he has received, and by which I doubt not he will profit. My conviction that he cannot fail to profit by this lesson, and that the Directors will profit by it also and look more closely to his conduct, makes me feel quite secure that no harm can arise to the credit or prosperity of this Bank from his restoration to office; and I am satisfied my friend, Mr. Clarke, will, upon reconsideration, and twenty-four hours hence be inclined to be of the same opinion, and will end, I hope, by not withdrawing his confidence and support from the Bank, if he should find himself outvoted here; and that the majority of his co-partners are of opinion, after an investigation of the subject, that the step which the great majority of the Directors has recommended, ought to be adopted.

As I conceive that the offence of Mr. Sim, thought considerable, is by no means altogether unpardonable, and that the Directors, who must be the best judges of his character and fitness for office, have recommended him to our favorable consideration, I hope that the Meeting will concur in the propriety of the recommendation, and confirm his appointment.

On Mr. Clarke's amendment being put from the chair, it was lost and the original motion carried by a large majority,

After which the meeting dissolved.—Hurk. Nov. 8.

THE BLACK ACT MEETING.

Agreeably to the announcement in the public prints, a meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta was held at the Town Hall on Sunday the 24th of November. The Sheriff took the chair precisely at 3 p.m., and the proceedings commenced a quarter of an hour after. The chairman entered upon the business of the day, by reading the requisition calling for the meeting, which appeared in the Hukara of the 24th instant, and stated that he would make it a point to preserve order and secure impartial hearing for all parties.

MR. DICKENS.—Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen; it is my intention to propose for the adoption of this meeting the following Resolution, which I read now, in order that every one may hear and clearly understand the subject to which I shall apply myself, and I shall again read the resolution at the end of my address and propose it formally for your sanction.

I. Resolved, that it is expedient again to petition both Houses of Parliament to repeal or disallow the Act No. XI. of 1836.

Before I go on, however, to the main subject, it is necessary, in the discharge of my duty as Secretary to the Committee appointed by the former meeting on the subject of this Act, held in June 1836, to lay before you an abstract of the account of the Subscription fund raised in pursuance of the resolutions of that meeting, in order to shew the amount that has been raised and the manner in which the fund has been applied. The amount that was to be raised was left to the discretion of the Committee, and the amount of the remuneration to our agent was necessarily left subject to the same discretion and to the result of the subscription. The amount you may recollect that we desired to raise, was a sum amounting to Company's rupees 26,000 and not exceeding Company's rupees 30,000, and this was publicly announced by the Secretary.

The amount of Company's rupees 26,322 was easily raised, as the abstract of accounts I shall submit will shew, and when that was done it was considered that the subscription was complete, and no further appeal was made to the subscribers. In the minutes of Council which now lie before me, it has been alleged by Mr.

Macd'lay, and statements to the like effect have been made in the House of Commons, that no part of these funds was subscribed by British Residents in the Mofussil. That is utterly false; a very large proportion of the subscription has been derived from the contributions of British Residents in the Mofussil; indeed, in proportion to their means, much the largest share; for I believe but half seven-tenths of the subscription has been raised from that source, and quite voluntarily raised. Mr. public appeal through the newspapers, was readily responded to, others were needless. I now lay before you the abstract of the account, which I trust will be found satisfactory. The details, including the names of the subscribers, have long since been published in the newspapers, and I need not take up your time with them.

Abstract Account of the Committee against Act No. XI. of 1836, in account current with T. Dickens, Esq., Secretary.

Calcutta, 22d November, 2838.

Having discharged this duty, which I felt it incumbent upon me, on behalf of the Committee and on my own behalf, as Secretary, to do in the first instance, I proceed to take notice of the arguments by which we have been opposed. A cry has been raised against the petitioners on the ground that they seek to obtain exclusive privileges at the expense of their native fellow-subjects and of their fellow subjects of every denomination, who are not British subjects. In the first place the former petitioners were not exclusively British subjects, very far from it, as the analysis of Mr. Crawford shews; in the next place, as far as the British subjects among the petitioners are concerned, the charge thus brought against them is utterly unfounded in every particular, as I pledge myself to shew. I must here remark, that this charge was first produced in England; it was never brought forward in any public or official form in India, until the publication yesterday of these Minutes of Council, which were intended to be secret. When the memorial of Messrs. Turton, Thackeray and Samuel Smith was presented to Government, which was the first step taken in opposition to the Black Act, the Government, by Mr. Secretary Macnaghten, answered in these words:—"The rescinding of the 107th Clause of the Charter Act will make no change in the rights of British subjects. Its effect will be merely this, that what has hitherto been done by the Supreme Court will now be done by the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. The substantive law remains the same." There was not a syllable said in the reply of Government, to indicate that the British subject in claiming, when defendant, to be entitled to the benefit of English law, and in claiming an appeal to the only Court of English law in the presidency, claimed an exclusive privilege. If the charge had been brought forward, it would have been refuted here; it was not brought forward here, but reserved for Minutes of Council penned in secrecy here and intended to produce an effect in England, and of which, but for our opposition, we should have known nothing. If the opposition to the Black Act had produced no other result than publication of these Minutes, all the pains and toil and cost that have been bestowed by us, would, in my judgment, have been more than repaid. What we asked for in our memorial to England and our petitions to Parliament, was to preserve this right of appeal, but not as an exclusive privilege to the class of British born defendants, entitled, when sued, as such, to the benefit of their own law, just as when Hindoo sues Mussulman or Mussulman sues Hindoo, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of his own law, but as a privilege to all. What we asked, will be best shown by the prayer of our petition, which I will read to you.

"Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray, that the Act of the Council, No. XI. of 1836, be repealed, and that the Sec. 107 of the 53d Geo. 3d C. 153 be amended, if necessary, by inserting, that in all cases of debt, contract or trespass, in which one British subject may be sued by another British subject, or by any other than a British subject, for an amount exceeding (4,000) four thousand Government rupees, an appeal shall be given to the party against whom the decision of the Court shall pass (whether native or British subject) either to the Supreme Court or Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at his option; and that in all cases merely between British subjects, relating to marriage, divorce, inheritance to real and succession to personal estate, inasmuch as they relate to matters solely cognizable by the laws of England, the Courts of the East India Company be prohibited from holding plea thereof."

Thus you will see, gentlemen, that we asked for no privilege for British subjects exclusively to choose their own Courts, but the precise contrary. In cases solely relating to British subjects, they are entitled to the benefit of the law of England throughout the British territories in India: that is beyond dispute, in mixed cases, where one other than a British subject sues a British subject as a defendant, such defendant is entitled to the benefit of his own law, that is the general rule in India its application to mixed cases of Hindoos and Mahomedans is expressed by a prior Act of Parliament, its application to British subjects when sued by others was confined to them, as I maintain, by the 107th Section of the 53d Geo. 3d, which the Black Act professes to repeal. If that had not been so, the result would have been that where all other defendants in mixed cases, when the laws of the parties differed, possessed the privilege of having the case decided by their own laws, when ascertainable, until the absurd law of equity and good conscience was introduced, the Englishman in India alone was deprived of it. The 107th Section of the 53d Geo. 3d so far from being favorable to exclusive privileges of Englishmen, conferred, in fact, upon natives and all others, a privilege which Englishmen did not possess by it. That Section made British subjects resident in the Mofussil subject to the Local Courts in like manner as the natives were then subject; but it preserved, by an express clause to natives and all others, the right of suing British residents in the Mofussil or the Supreme Court, at the election of the plaintiffs. Thus a native could sue a British subject resident in the Mofussil, either in the local Court or in the Supreme Court, but the British subject could not sue a native resident in the Mofussil any where but in the Local Court. The appeal lay in cases where the native was defendant and the British subjects the plaintiff to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, because the law was the law of Hindoos, Mahomedans, or some other foreign law which the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut was as competent to administer as the Supreme Court, but it lay in cases where the defendant, being a British subject, chose to appeal to it to the Supreme Court, as the only Court competent to administer the law of the defendant. There was sound reason and justice in this, perfect fairness and equality, for I deny, gentlemen, that it could ever have been a privilege to the plaintiff himself to have the law of the defendant, which was to govern the case administered by a Court that did not understand it. The same individual, Mr. Macaulay, as I find in these Minutes, who has thought fit to call the 107th Section of the Act of Parliament of the 53d of Geo. 3d, c. 155, a law having the semblance of tyranny and partiality, and indicating a notion that Englishmen have a title to something more than justice, has thought fit to set up a construction of his own of the Black Act, and he states in the 16th, 17th and 18th paragraphs of a Minute without date, as I observe all Mr. Macaulay's are (for some reason which I should be glad to know) but which is the third in order of printing and, I presume, therefore, the last in order of date, various propositions of law and among them lays it down broadly, that he knows of no Court in the Mofussil that has power to grant a divorce to any party of any race or religion. This may be Mr. Macaulay's opinion, but here are the words of the Black Act, by which it is "enacted, that no person whatever shall, by reason of place of birth, or by reason of descent, be in any civil proceeding whatever, excepted from the jurisdiction of any of the Courts hereinafter mentioned," and then all Courts but Moonstiff's Courts are mentioned. I apprehend that questions relative to the validity of marriages, and the right to divorce are civil proceedings. I know very well that the Zillah Courts have express jurisdiction in such cases, in the cases of Mahomedans and Hindoos, and I know too that they exercise such jurisdiction in other cases, and in fact the construction of this, as of every law, is for the Courts who are to administer it, and not for Mr. Macaulay or the executive and legislative Government, which he seems to think has the right to decide such questions. When I saw that the Black Act made no distinction of persons and excluded no civil proceedings whatever from its operation, I circulated a memorial before it passed, which was signed by about 50 other most respectable persons, and couched in perfectly respectful terms, requesting to be informed by Government, what law, after the passing of the Black Act, it was intended (as there was no exception even of cases relating to marriage, inheritance and succession to real and personal property between British-born subjects) that the Provincial Courts should administer under it. To this the Government returned an answer, which in effect was the same thing as if couched in these words "the same law as before." In truth, Mr. Macaulay confesses elsewhere in these Minutes, that he could not answer the question, which I very well believe; but he has in the 16th, 17th and 18th paragraphs of the Minute, presumed to answer very summarily and authoritatively most of the points specified in the question, and has in every case answered them wrong.

He has stated that up to the date of his Minute no Englishman had a right to hold an estate of inheritance in the Mofussil. I utterly deny the proposition; it is contrary to law and fact. Long before the last Charter Act, Englishmen did hold estates of inheritance by English law in the Mofussil, and their right to hold them has been over and over again confirmed, both here and at home. The 26th Section of the last Charter, which declares it lawful for an Englishman to hold lands for any term of years, in any part of India in which he may reside without license, is merely a declaratory Act, and no more specially concerns lands in any part of the Mofussil acquired before the year 1800, than it especially concerns Calcutta itself. Mr. Macaulay has never understood the Act any more than the President of the Board of Control. As I have said before, the clause is simply declaratory of the law. By declaring that in any part of India where he can reside without license, it shall be lawful for an Englishman to hold land for any term of years, it does not declare or imply that it shall be or that it was unlawful for him to hold land in perpetuity or as an estate of inheritance in the like places; it would have been odd indeed if it had so declared; we should then have heard a good deal more of it.

Mr. Macaulay having taken upon himself to decide that the Supreme Court has exclusive jurisdiction in cases of divorce in which British subjects are concerned, in the teeth of the words of the Black Act, which says in its general and sweeping terms the contrary, and which I believe the Mofussil Courts will construe according to its plain intent and phrase, and will construe rightly to give them concurrent jurisdiction, proceeds to say, that in cases of inheritance, marriage and succession to personal property and matters of debt and contract, the Supreme Court will have concurrent jurisdiction; and, what I must own fairly surprises and somewhat amuses me, seems to think this a sufficient answer to objections and a good thing in itself. While the 107th Section of the 53d Geo. 3d, c. 155, remained un repealed, the Supreme Court possessed the power of restraining double litigation beyond any question; now it may reasonably be doubted how far such power remains and whether it is not gone altogether. The result practically of the Black Act is, that every cause between two British subjects, one resident in the Mofussil, and the other in Calcutta, may be the subject of a double controversy by way of cross suit and new litigation in an independent jurisdiction not a concurrent jurisdiction. A, for example, if an in-ligo-planter give a bond and warrant of attorney to a Calcutta agent and judgment is entered up for a penal sum to recover a balance of account which the planter disputes, the planter, may, by showing that the cause of action (that is the debt), arose within the local jurisdiction, sue the agent before the local Court, and then the agent would be obliged to file his bill in equity against the planter, to restrain him from suing as plaintiff in the Zillah Court, or try the payment of a writ of prohibition addressed to the Zillah Court itself. Or the planter, knowing, what was coming, might begin first in the Zillah Court and so try and stop the execution of the judgment entered up, or the parties might fight it out to an end in the Supreme Court, and then begin over again in the Zillah Court, which would lead infallibly to beginning over again a third time in the Supreme Court. One example, gentlemen, is worth a good many suppositious cases. This sort of thing is actually beginning and going on under our eyes. A gentleman of my acquaintance, Mr. Piddington, whose case I have liberty to name, but on the merits of which, as between him and the other party, you will observe, I am not going to pronounce any sort of opinion, is sued by a mercantile firm here for a balance of account. The plaintiffe prove a partnership and a contract of partnership, which the Court decide make their claim premature, and are nonsuited. A day or two after, the defendant, Mr. Piddington, finds himself defendant over again in the same case in the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs, at the suit of the same parties, and essentially for the same cause of action. I suppose that is going on still in the Zillah Court, and there can be no doubt that if Mr. Piddington chooses, he can become plaintiff in his turn in the Supreme Court again.

and file a bill in Chancery and apply for an injunction to restrain the Mofussil plaintiff from proceeding, or if he chooses, may apply for a writ of prohibition to stop the Zillah Court, though I beg you to observe, gentlemen, that I pronounce no sort of opinion or recommendation of any proceedings whatever. It only seems to me, gentlemen, that this Black Act is not likely to be disagreeable to such lawyers as are fond of fees above every other consideration, and that the opposition of such as oppose it and as live by professional fees, has not been very ably attributed to that motive. In fact the act in question is calculated to increase the causes of litigation between British subjects in the Supreme Court, and to encourage the experiment of double litigation in the Mofussil, by taking away the only check which existed before. The distinction between courts of concurrent jurisdiction governed by the same maxims, and rules of process and law and courts of concurrent jurisdiction governed by entirely different maxims and rules of process and law, is plain enough. The latter sort of double jurisdiction is productive of unmix'd evil.

The reference to this matter, brings me to the charge which has been brought by Mr. Macaulay against the profession of the law in Calcutta and the practitioners of the Supreme Court, in the Minutes which lie before me. In the Minutes the members of the profession who have taken part in the opposition to this Act, and indeed those who have taken no part, are charged in the most coarse and unqualified terms with having been actuated by the sole desire of increasing their fees. The tone and language of these state papers are so extraordinary as to have occasioned in my mind, great and unusual and even painful embarrassment. These Minutes of Mr. Macaulay were only published yesterday. It was no easy task for a busy man even to read through the whole Minutes of Government and prepare to reply at this meeting to them in the manner which I wished to do, and which, if time allowed, I would pledge myself to do paragraph by paragraph. I feel, I say, and I own it, very much embarrassed and doubtful how to deal with this part of the subject. I have determined, however, to state fully and explicitly to this meeting, the exact mode in which I am remunerated as an officer in the Supreme Court, and the amount of the remuneration. It is not on this point that I feel any difficulty, or hesitation at all, but simply on the question of whether I should take any further notice publicly of this portion of the Minutes of Mr. Macaulay.

By a plan for the remodelling of the offices of the Court, and a reformation of its expenses proposed in detail by the Judges to Government in April 1836, and before the passing of the Black Act and of which Mr. Macaulay was before its passing of course fully aware, and which plan was carried into execution on the 1st January 1837, the whole of the officers of the Court are now paid by fixed salaries and do not receive one rupee from fees in any one case whatever. I, as the Registrar of the Court, and ex-officio administrator of the estate of British subjects and others dying intestate or leaving effects within Calcutta, am paid partly by commission on the estates of such intestates. The amount on an average of 12 years, was found to be 54,000 Co's Rs. per annum, and the net average will not, I conceive, during my tenure of office, be exceeded. Out of my commission I pay my own charges off-office and take the chances of gain or loss. This I think, gentlemen, as you will perceive, neither a tax upon either nor upon justice, nor upon the people of India at large, it is purely an Agency Commission, paid in whole or out of the British subjects' next of kin to intestates, and it is given to all Indian Executors or Administrators, whether private or public, by a usage of more than a century, which had its origin in the necessity and convenience of the case, in the impossibility of finding people when there were not near relatives on the spot, to undertake the trouble and responsibility of administering to the estates of deceased acquaintances without remuneration, and which usage has from its utility grown into law and been sanctioned by Acts of Parliament, and by decisions of English and Indian Courts. The public officer gets no more than the private executor, and any one who does not like the administration of a public officer and prefers that of a private man, can, by appointing an Executor in India, put a bar to the interference of the Registrar. In consequence of the income derived from this source, I have undertaken and perform the duty of Registrar on the Equity, Ecclesiastical and Admiralty side of the Court, for a salary of Co's Rs. 1000 a month, and I am under engagement to pay the whole amount of the fees I receive into the Government Treasury, to contribute to the expenses of the Court. My account with the Court fund for the first year of the system, viz. for 1837 stands thus:—my own salary costs the Court and suitors fund annually 12,000, the expenses of my Registrars Office (not as administrator to estates, which is my own burden, but as Court Registrar) 19,000 in round numbers, in all 31,000; the amount earned by my labour and paid into the Government Treasury; including a balance of some few hundred rupees yet unreceived from the Solicitors, 81,000, leaving a clear surplus of 50,000 rupees earned by me as Registrar towards the expenses of the administration of Justice in the Supreme Court. Unless I had felt myself assailed in my honour and my feelings as a gentleman, by these Minutes, I should have certainly not made this statement in any public assembly; but you will do me the justice, I trust, to understand the causes of my wish to keep silence on such a topic. I have ever avowed, gentlemen, elsewhere, as I avow here, and have acted upon the principle, that the remuneration to a public officer ought to be commensurate with the service and labour performed, if the public service performed by me can be performed better, more efficiently and more cheaply in the judgment of those alone qualified to judge, I am ready to resign my appointment; but I am not ready to act for less than I receive, for this very plain reason that, I have always felt and still feel a confidence, which may be well or ill-founded, but which I possess, that either by my own professional labour at the Bar, or by employing my time and exertion in other pursuits, I could earn as large if not a larger income. One word more on this subject before I have done with it. The only men at the Bar or in the profession who, to my knowledge or belief, took at all a prominent part in the first opposition to the Black Act, or spoke at the Meeting, were my friend Mr. Clarke and Mr. William Grant; whom it is unnecessary I should defend from such a charge; they are here to defend themselves if they shall deem it in their judgment necessary to answer what has been alleged in these Minutes, never intended for the public eye.

I have discussed the question which I thought the most important, and I trust I have satisfied you all, that we neither asked for exclusive privileges as far as the class of British subjects are concerned, nor wished for them, nor should have obtained them, had either the law of 1813 been let alone or what we asked for in its stead been granted; and moreover, that by the law that has been substituted the class of British subjects has been injured, while no other class has been at all benefited. Let me now proceed to an examination of the other reasons which have been alleged in support of this law by its authors. I draw your attention to these paragraphs of Mr. Macaulay's Minutes, the same point of date, whatever that date may be.

The principle on which we proceeded, was that the system ought, as far as possible, to be uniform, and the distinction ought to be made between one class of people and another, except in cases where it could be clearly made out that such a distinction was necessary to the more efficient administration of justice.

One such distinction, and only one, we thought it necessary to make. The general character of the moonsiffs is such, that we could not venture to intrust them with the decision of suits in which an European and a native might be opposed to each other. The functionaries are ill paid. They do not appear to possess the public confidence. Their courts require a thorough reform, and until that reform is effected, it would be highly inexpedient to give them jurisdiction in a class of cases in which the strong will very generally be opposed to the weak.

We, therefore, determined not to permit Europeans to sue or to be sued before the moonsiffs: in other respects we thought that we might safely put Europeans and natives on exactly the same footing in all civil proceedings. Nor did it appear to us that there was any reason for allowing a British-born subject to appeal to the Supreme Court, in a case in which a Hindoo, a Mussulman, a Armenian, a Jew, a Greek, a Portuguese, or an Armenian would have no appeal, except to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut."

New, gentlemen, I shall read and contrast with these paragraphs, the 22d and 23d paragraphs of a minute of Mr. Macaulay, subsequent in date, but the date equally unknown.

"22. Since the foregoing pages were written, I have read, with great pleasure, Mr. Shakespear's valuable Minute on this question. I have been particularly interested by his remarks on the charges which the petitioners have brought against the native judicial officers. I am willing to believe that the view which he has taken of the character of that class of persons, is not too favourable; but if all that the petitioners say on the subject were true, I should still think the Act of which they complain a salutary Act.

23. In the first place, I think that nothing can be more pernicious or absurd, than, because a certain body of functionaries are corrupt, to exempt from their jurisdiction a very small class, distinguished by intrepidity and by hatred of oppression and fraud, accustomed to a pure administration of justice, and accustomed also to think little of the flow of power; certain to complain whenever they think themselves wronged, and certain to be heard whenever they complain. Such a class the English settlers in the mofussil will be. To exempt them from the jurisdiction of the local courts, and to leave subject to that jurisdiction a vast population, timid, weak-spirited, the ready prey of every extortioner, the ready slaves of every tyrant, would, I think, be in the highest degree reprehensible. What is the great difficulty which meets us whenever we meditate any extensive reform in India? It is this, that there is no helping men who will not help themselves. The phenomenon which strikes an observer lately arrived from England with the greatest surprise, and which more than any other damps his hope of being able to serve the people of this country, is their own apathy, their own passiveness under wrong. He comes from a land in which the spirit of the meaneast rises up against the intolerance or injustice of the richest and the most powerful: he finds himself in a land where the patience of the oppressed invites the oppressor to repeat his injuries. Therefore it is that I am not desirous to exempt the English settler from any evil under which his Hindoo neighbour suffers. I am sorry that there should be such evils, but while they exist, I wish that they should be felt, not only by the mute, the effeminate, the helpless, but by the noisy, the bold, and the powerful. If, therefore, I thought that the mofussil courts were as bad as the petitioners describe them to be, I should still say, "but the English settler under them, then we shall know the whole; then we shall have, set corrupt functionaries brought to shame and punishment for one who is detected now." Many abuses there undoubtedly are in the Company's courts and therefore. I would give the English settler a common interest with the native in the exposing of these abuses. The more these courts require amendment the stronger are the reasons of giving those who have power to produce amendment, motives for producing amendment. Many a grievance which would pass unaddressed, because unknown while only some thousands of natives feel it, will be forced on the notice of the Government as soon as one of our countrymen smarts from it.

2dly. I conceive that if the Company's courts are corrupt, this is an additional reason why appeals from those courts should lie to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut rather than to the Supreme Court. It is not pretended that the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut is corrupt; the Judges of that court stand as high in repute for integrity, higher it is impossible to stand, as the judges of the Supreme Court. Integrity, then, being supposed equal in these two Courts, which of the two is the more likely to detect corruption in a subordinate functionary? Which of the two is the better able to punish corruption when detected? Surely it cannot be doubted that a Sudder judge, who has been in India from his youth, who has himself presided in a zillah court in the mofussil, who has passed years in the daily transaction of business with native law officers, who is familiar with all the shapes which dishonesty takes at a mofussal cutcherry, must be more likely to discover malpractices than an English barrister, who, in the middle of life, has come out to this country, and who has probably never stirred beyond the limits of a town which may be called a British colony. Again, if corruption is detected by a judge of the Supreme Court, he has no power to punish, as the Company's law officers are not under his authority. If the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut should discover that a decision is corrupt, it should be their duty not only to set it aside, but to visit the offending functionary with congn punishment."

You will observe now, gentlemen, that upon his own hypothesis in his last Minute he admits, that all these Company's Courts are corrupt, at least he makes no exception that I can perceive. In his first Minute he says, that because the Moonsiff's Courts are corrupt, for that reason he will not give those Courts Jurisdiction over Englishmen; because the Englishman is too strong to be sued in those Courts with chance of fair play to the other side. In his last number he says, that if the Company's Courts are corrupt, he will therefore have the Englishman sued in them; because he will smart for it, suffer from the corruption, and therefore complain. And that then the Government will know the corruption and knowing it will be able and willing to remedy it.

Now let me ask what was the duty of this Government in such a case? I do not ask what, in the general and abstract, was the duty of any Government, professing to be civilized and to govern civilized men, but what was the special and appointed duty of this Government as pointed out by the Act of Parliament, the last Charter Act, under which they exercise power? I will read to you the 53d Section of that Act, which ought ever to be borne in mind by us all.

LIII. And whereas it is expedient, that, subject to such special arrangements as local circumstances may require, a general system of judicial establishments and Police, to which all persons whatsoever, as well Europeans as natives, may be subject, should be established in the said territories at an early period, and that such laws as may be applicable in common to all classes of the inhabitants of the said territories, due regard being had to the rights, feelings and peculiar usages of the people, should be enacted, and all laws and customs having the force of law within the same territories, should be ascertained and consolidated, and as occasion may require amended; be it therefore enacted, that the said Governor-General of India in Council, shall, as soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this act, issue a commission and from time to time commissions to such persons, as the said Court of Directors, with the approbation of the said Board of Commissioners, shall recommend for that purpose, and to such other persons, if necessary, as the said Governor-General in Council shall think fit, all such persons, not exceeding in the whole any one time five in number, and to be styled The Indian Law Commissioners," with all such powers as shall be necessary for the purpose hereinafter mentioned; and the said Commissioners shall fully inquire into the jurisdiction, powers, and rules of the existing courts of justice and Police establishments in the said territories, and all existing forms of judicial procedure, and into the nature and operation of the laws, whether civil or criminal, written or customary, prevailing and in force in any part of the said territories, and whereto any inhabitants of the said territories, whether Europeans or others, are now subject; and the said commissioners shall, from time to time, make reports, in which they shall fully set forth the result of their inquiries, and shall, from time to time, suggest such alterations as may in their opinion be beneficially made in the said courts of justice and Police establishments, forms of judicial procedure and laws, due regard being had to the distinction of castes, difference of religion, and the manners and opinions prevailing among different races and in different parts of the said territories."

I request to know whether, with due regard had to the rights, religious feelings, manners and opinions of the class of subjects of the crown in India, called "British subjects," the Black Act has been passed? But I will not dwell on our rights and feelings only; I wish rather to pass on to the general argument, and examine, armed with this clause, the extraordinary propositions laid down in paragraphs 22 and 23 of the Minute which I have last referred to.

You will take note of this, that Mr. Macaulay, admits the English settler to be distinguished by intrepidity, by hatred of oppression and fraud, accustomed to a pure administration of justice and accustomed also to think little of the frown of power; certain to complain who ever he thinks himself wronged, and certain to be heard whenever he complains." Very good for the moment; we have got this length. Upon the hypothesis of Mr. Macaulay, all the Company's Courts are corrupt; and the English settler is to smart from their corruption because of what? Why he will complain, and is certain to be heard. Mr. Macaulay does not say he is certain to be redressed. Let us examine the reason assigned for certainty of complaint. If the English settler be strong and the courts corrupt, how is it certain that he will have cause of complaint or that he will not warp or domineer over the decisions of these corrupt courts? The question answers itself, if, even on the premises of Mr. Macaulay, the question were not fully answered, as far as his opinion and that of Government goes, by what was said and done about Mooniffs' Courts. But it is said that the English settler is certain to be heard. Is he? To what purpose then? I like to take an example, because I find these examples tell and are more to the purpose in life than general reasonings.

The Court of Sadder Dewanny A-lawut is the highest Appellate Court of this Government. Mr. Pringle, a Judge of a Zillah Court, and therefore a person of long standing in the Civil Service, was accused to the Government of a crime importing judicial corruption, of taking money in an indirect way from a person who had been, or might be, or was, a suitor in his Court, and contrary to the Regulations and the rules of the Service. I pronounce no opinion on the justice of the charge. The proceedings have been noticed in the public papers, the result is recorded in the Archives of Government, which I have not seen. But this I know, that Mr. Pringle was absolved by the Judges of the Sadder Dewanny A-lawut, and the proceedings were sent home. When they went home, the controlling powers, the Court of Directors and the Board of Control, agreed upon one thing, namely, that the party accused had been acquitted against evidence; had been unduly absolved. Nay, more. The despatch on the subject clearly indicates, as I am informed on good authority, the conclusion of the Supreme controlling power, the President of the Board of Control at least, that the supposed guilty had been acquitted from partial and undue and therefore corrupt motives. But the supreme controlling power, gives way to the secondary controlling power in one rather important point, and the despatch concludes with the most lame and impotent conclusion, that the supreme and appellate judges are not to be either tried or punished, but reprimanded, and the absolved judge, the guilty innocent, or the absolved guilty, which you will, is to be tried again. You who understand the language probably know the maxim "Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvitur;" all can see its force and application. But did I say the party was tried? Why, if he were tried by a competent tribunal and pronounced innocent, by what law or judicial reason is it that he can be tried again? Are those who tried him in reality punished? One of those Judges, as I am informed, with a full knowledge of the circumstances by both controlling powers, has, since all these occurrences, been appointed to a seat in the Council of India, from which we may judge of the quantity and degree of the punishment and the value for the example. The matter does not, however, end here. The accuser, a native Sadder Aumeen, was, in the first instance, as I hear, suspended, tardily restored, finally appointed to another station, and is now brought forward again, (I should be glad to know whether with his own consent, after the lesson which he has received) as the prosecutor of the twice accused.

Gentlemen, you will perceive by the minutes of Mr. Macaulay, that he professes, on his own hypothesis, to have a general belief of the existence of corruption in all the Company's Courts; you will perceive also, that by the 53d Section of the last Charter Act, the Government were bound early to enquire into this matter without any such belief or suspicion, doubly bound if such belief or suspicion were felt. In 1833, the Charter was passed, in 1834, the Government was organized on the new footing, and the Law Commission might easily have been organized too, and was organized quite in time enough before the Black Act to begin new enquiries, without the necessity of new laws. When Mr. Macaulay said then, that if you put Europeans under these corrupt Courts, the Government would find out the corruption, what was the meaning of that? Why, nothing but a pretext for evading the enquiry, for the Government upon his showing, knew it already in the general, and upon mine ought to have known it, both in general and particulars. Mr. Macaulay says, however, that if Englishmen smart from it in particular cases, they will complain, and that will compel Government, not only to redress the particular grievance, but to cure the general evil. This I utterly deny and pronounce to be a false and ridiculous error and assumption. The legislative and executive Government has no business to interfere with particular cases; it cannot deal with them without mischief; it can only refer them to its own tribunals. What encouragement is there to us to complain of those tribunals, where we perceive that the Government, knowing the general grievance and assuming the general corruption, declines to interfere, and imposes its own duty not upon a class even, (for that is a fallacy, a class never complains of particular cases,) but upon individuals of a class who are first to be exposed to the hazard of ruin and the certainty of injustice on these principles, and then to work out the general good by complaint.

Gentlemen, it has been alleged by this same man, Mr. Macaulay, in these minutes, that the British-born residents in India, constitute a small white oligarchy; I mean, as he meant, the British born subjects not employed in the service of the East India Company, that against this oligarchy of Englishmen it is necessary for the local Government to have despotic power and for the Government and people of England to be on their guard. Let us examine this matter. The number of the heads of families of British-born settlers in all India unemployed by Government, does not certainly exceed 2,000 in number, if it reaches that number. The number of heads to families in the highest ranks of the Government service, the covenanted Civil Service, employed in this presidency, only probably reached 400. We have no privilege whatever: we ask to be governed by our own law in our own cases, and even that is denied to us by these Minutes to be our right in the Mofussil as far as it can be denied in argument with a shew of reason, and the prayer to have our own law administered to us by the single court which is here appointed to administer it, is denounced as a seeking of exclusive privileges. What we have, every native has, the benefit of his own laws in civil matters, and we have no more than they. We have the benefit of our own criminal law and so have they, for wherever it exclusively prevails, they have it without the least distinction. It is not our fault if they have it not every where. We, the British born subjects not in the service, are excluded from the possibility almost of getting into the covenanted service of the Government, and, therefore, from the Councils of Government from every higher employ, and so are the natives. But the Civil Service of the East India Company, which is a patronage and exclusive service, has almost the sole possession of all the higher employments of Government; is exempted by law from all civil responsibilities to law or to any one but itself, for acts done as Government servants; is exempted by law from all criminal responsibility for acts done in the like capacity, unless a malicious motive can be proved or enforced; and, finally, has, by practice, the sole judgment in the acts of its functionaries of all kinds, both high and low, which may be complained of by any one; for the fiscal and administrative, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial government is one and the same in this country, with one single exception, the existence of the Supreme Court. I ask you, Gentlemen, where is the oligarchy? We have no political power. Where, and in what class does this power reside? Gentlemen, in this cause I am satisfied we have judged rightly; we have opposed the first commencement of a system which, if we had not opposed, would by this time have been confirmed; great good has already been done, and if no other result had been obtained, the publication of these minutes would have been enough, for that in itself is a great benefit. There is only one thing more which it occurs to me just now to notice. It is admitted in these minutes, by Mr. Macaulay, as the opinion of others, and well-judging persons, as he says, that this act ought not to have been passed at the time it was, indeed he almost indicates such to be his own opinion; but add, at the end of one of his minutes, "the satiric merits of this act are now the smallest part of the question." There is no want of arguments for passing it; but the strongest of those arguments is the manner in which it has been opposed. I want no better measure of the principles of the man than this confession. Its meaning amounts simply to this, any opposition to a measure of mine is the best reason in my mind for passing it. There was no public opposition to this measure before it was passed, but the memorial of Messrs. Tait, Thackeray and Smith, which was also signed by, I believe, about one hundred persons, was the only direct opposition. My own memorial, which was signed by about 50 persons, many of them very moderate in opinions, simply asked a question concerning the law which it was intended hereafter to administer under this Black Act. Both memorials, I will undertake to say, were perfectly respectful in their language and legitimate in their objects. When I received the answer which was given, I admit I was not by any means ill-pleased, and I made up my mind (as I believe every body else did) that it denoted a foregone conclusion, and that it was useless to petition further here, and that we must prepare for the passing of the Act without amendments, and prepare for our opposition elsewhere. The inhabitants of Calcutta, I believe, felt that after the tone of the Government replies further memorials here were useless. At least I can say that I did. The British public in India is in no way responsible for what was said by the press, or for what it did not do, and we have here a practical proof disclosed to us in these state papers of the probable use of remonstrance. Gentlemen, we have done much good; if we persevere I am satisfied that we shall do more.

I move the resolution which I have read.

Resolved, that it is expedient again to petition both houses of Parliament to repeal or disallow the Act. No. XI. of 1836.

MR. C. A. FENWICK, begged to offer a few observations on the important subject before the meeting, which he believed would set the question at rest. It was not so necessary to dissent on the nature of this Government or the mode of legislation adopted by it, as to take into consideration the actual operation of the laws in the Mofussil, which could scarcely be done without being an eye witness of it. He had lately come from the Mofussil, the scene of the operation of the laws which were the object of this meeting's consideration. To enter into details would fill a volume; he would, therefore, content himself by stating, that he had not only been a personal observer of judicial proceedings in the Mofussil, but had conversed upon the subject with many Europeans, East Indians, as well as Natives; and he begged to assure the meeting, that one and all agreed with him in the opinion, that nothing could be worse for the country than the law against which the meeting had assembled to remonstrate. They all thought, that the Black Act, as it is called, took away from, not only Europeans, but all classes, every vestige of protection. The Government, Mr. Fenwick observed, had no means of becoming acquainted with what was passing in the Mofussil, but by means of their servants; and it was therefore upon information derived from this source, that they framed their laws and regulations. But then, if Government servants, being the executive party, were not the most unbiased to give an opinion on subjects which daily came under their executive cognizance; a Supreme Court, which held an independent station, was absolutely necessary; but of the benefits of this Mr. Macaulay's Act deprived the people, and it therefore left them without protection. The privilege of appealing to the Supreme Court, is the law upon which our liberty hangs; if you destroy this you at once destroy our liberty; for who without it can oppose himself to this Government. The only class of people who can at all withstand the encroachments of Government, are the Europeans; if they be laid low, who shall protect the interests of the country. It is a well known fact, that the natives are a timid and weak race, incapable of carrying any measure even for their own benefit into effect, without the aid of Europeans; these have always been the leaders, and no petition could be got up without being backed by them. He instanced the proceedings of the late Resumption meeting, in which, he said, Europeans had taken a prominent part. It was therefore, that he urged the Native as well as the East Indian population, to support the Black Act as a proper and independent solution.

This, gentlemen—this Black Act, is, I assure you, only a feeler put forth by the Government to ascertain how far the people will bear their yoke patiently. If this be allowed to pass unnoticed, further inroads will be made upon our liberty, until we shall not be able to boast of even its name. It must not, therefore, be suffered to pass, (hear, hear.) Who, I ask, are the makers of the law against which you are enabled to petition? Not the inhabitants of this country, not those who have made up their mind to continue here; but mere birds of passage; to-day they are here, making laws for the country—and drawing handsome salaries from the State, to-morrow they take their passage on board, and are gone to enjoy their earnings at home. They will never be subjected to the operation of the laws made by them, and they are in every respect the most irresponsible legislators the country could ever have. Their acts must, therefore, be regarded with suspicion. I call upon you, my native and East Indian fellow-subjects, to recollect the aid and support you experienced from Europeans at the late Resumption meeting: it is now for you to support their cause, and return that kindness which you have received from them. Recollect, if you allow this obnoxious law to remain uncanceled, your liberty is destroyed. Therefore, lose not this opportunity of giving your co-operation to the efforts now now making to gain the object. Mr. Fenwick concluded, by seconding the Resolution proposed by Mr. Dickens.

MR. SPIER merely rose to draw the attention of the meeting to one of the minutes, by which it appeared to be intended that hereafter Englishmen should be subjected to be tried in criminal as well as civil cases, by the Mofussil Courts. He had mentioned this to an Indigo planter long resident in the country, and he would never forget his ghastly look at the bare idea that his life must be placed at the disposal of a Mofussil Court—and that without trial by jury. Mr. Spier had hoped to have heard something on this important point from Mr. Dickens, and still trusted that either that gentleman or some one else, better qualified than himself, would give the meeting full information on a subject of such paramount interest.

MR. COBBURN, junior, would ask a question. If the co-operation of East Indians was desired, and they were required to sign the petition, he wished to know in what manner their interest was to be subserved by so doing—what benefit would this confer on them?

MR. DICKENS.—To the question put by the gentleman who spoke last, I have no hesitation in giving a plain and explicit answer. When he asks me what peculiar benefit the East Indians in the Mofussil will derive if the prayer of our petition be granted, frankly I reply, the East Indian class will derive no peculiar benefit whatever, nor any benefit until there be a more complete change in the law. I speak of the class of East Indians born out of wedlock, but of British subjects and foreign fathers. Of those born in wedlock of British fathers I do not speak, because I maintain, and always have maintained, and pledge what reputation I may possess as a lawyer, to maintain it successfully any where, that the persons of that class born in wedlock and within the allegiance of the crown, are as much entitled to all the laws, rights, and privileges of British subjects, as if they had been born in England, or as Englishmen born in India.

If this gentleman asks me another question, and says ought the class of East Indians not born in wedlock to remain in the situation in which they are? As fully and frankly, and with my whole heart I answer, no. If he asks me ought not the Franco-Indians, Greco-Indians, the children of Danes or Hollanders, of Armenians, of Greeks, or men of Portuguese descent by Indian mothers, ought not these too, and all Christians similarly circumstanced, to be removed from the practical outlawry in which they are all placed and to be admitted to the same privileges, and the same equal laws as their Christian fellow men of British birth and blood, or as the sons of British fathers born in wedlock, I answer again fully and frankly, and with my whole heart, yes, they ought. Nor, gentlemen, is this an answer prompted by the occasion on a matter in which I have taken no previous interest. Twelve years ago I gave much time and thought and labour to plead this cause and took a deep and anxious interest in the result. The petition on this subject, which was sent home in 1827, was originally prepared by me during the presidency of Mr. Wynn, and I did once hope that that excellent constitutional lawyer, that just and good man, who has been as warm, as steady and as able a friend as India has ever possessed in the English Government. I did once hope, I say, that he would have been enabled to aid the petitioners and effect their object. If any man could have done it he could; however he could not, the opposition was too great, the difficulties he found were then insuperable. No one, I will venture to say, was better aware of those difficulties than myself, and of the infinite intricacies and complications of the question considered merely as a legal question. On behalf of the petitioners I prayed Parliament to cut this gordian-knot, and in the spirit of statesmen anxious to conciliate those who had done no wrong and were subjects wholly unoffending, not to say most deserving, to overstep the barriers which the tribunals of the law could not; to admit once and for all time, all descendants of British and foreign Europeans and every other class of Christians of mixed descent and legal or illegal birth, to the fellowship and brotherhood of the sons of English fathers, by one comprehensive declaration.

Gentlemen, that was not done; but if that be their misfortune is it our fault? Do we not wish their cause success; are we not ready to do our best to aid them? We call upon them to aid us, on the principle that if this battle be ultimately gained its results cannot rebound to our goal without bringing about the good of all without exception.

I am satisfied they will answer to that appeal in the spirit in which it is made. For my part, as far as my voice could aid, I have aided their cause; as far as the public feeling in Calcutta evinced in public meetings has been pronounced, it has ever been favorable to their cause. They, on their part, have ever aided ours and I am satisfied that now there will be no diminution. But, gentlemen, had it been otherwise; had the class of East Indians been the former opponents of our endeavours to protect our rights from invasion, would I for that reason, or would you withhold your aid to their endeavours to procure for themselves a legal and recognized condition as subjects of the crown entitled to the laws of freemen? No, I am sure you would not, nor would I. If they were here to declare their determination to oppose our endeavours, to declare themselves our enemies in this struggle for our rights, would we for that reason and henceforward oppose their claims. No, gentlemen, we abjure such maxims and our practice shall be in conformity with our professions. Were the case to happen, as right sure I am it will not, we would say, in the spirit of the precept which commands us to do unto others as we would have them do unto us, we overlook your enmity, we forget your opposition; we look but to your ends and aims and these are just, and we will not be unjust and refuse to aid them,—we will aid them to the utmost of our power. In the same spirit of cordiality in which I have spoken to all without exception of classes, I now speak again to all of this class here present; and when I say I am sure that no one will withhold his support from the Resolution I have proposed, I am sure I do that I shall not be disappointed.

MR. GRANT said, that he was anxious to make some observations in the early part of this discussion, because the Minutes of Council, which had been brought to the notice of the meeting by Mr. Dickens, had brought to light reflexions made by Mr. Macaulay on the motives of those who had interested themselves in promoting the opposition made in this country to the Act in question, which he, Mr. Grant, felt it due to himself to notice. He was one of those persons thus attacked. He had done his best, as an humble individual, to rouse and force upon the attention of the public and the authorities here, and the public and the authorities at home, an opposition to an Act, which Act he conscientiously believed to be mischievous, unconstitutional and illegal. Mr. Macaulay had presumed to arraign his motives for so doing, in a manner which was most indecorous, uncandid and ungentlemanly. He knew that he was using strong language and he meant to do so. He acknowledged that he was smarting under the attack that had been made on him; but lest the Meeting should think he was led away by passion, into expressions unwarranted by the offence he had received, he begged leave to read the words which had been used towards him by Mr. Macaulay.

In his first Minute, after giving his own account of the feelings with which the Draft of the Act had been received in the Mofussil, he says—

"In Calcutta the case has been somewhat different; and this is a remarkable fact. The British inhabitants of Calcutta are the only British-born subjects in Bengal who will not be affected by the proposed Act, and they are the only British subjects in Bengal who have expressed the smallest objection to it. The clamour, indeed, has proceeded from a very small portion of the society of Calcutta: the objectors have not ventured to call a public meeting, and their memorial has obtained very few signatures; but they have attempted to make up by noise and violence for what has been wanting in strength. It may, at first sight, appear strange, that a law which is not unwelcome to those who are to live under it, should excite such acrimonious feelings among people who are wholly exempted from its operation; but the explanation is simple. Though nobody who resides at Calcutta will be sued in the Mofussil courts, many people who reside at Calcutta have, or wish to have, practice in the Supreme Court. These appeals, indeed, have hitherto yielded but a very scanty harvest of fees; but hopes are entertained, and have indeed been publicly expressed, that as the number of British settlers in the Mofussil increases, the number of appeals will increase also. Great exertions have accordingly been made, though with little success, to excite a feeling against this measure among the English inhabitants of Calcutta."

Again in his Minute of 9th May 1836, he says—

"In the meantime, a small knot of people in Calcutta, a knot of people who are not to live under this law, who know nothing about the administration of justice in the mofussil, and who are interested in the question only as practitioners or officers in the Supreme Court, have kept up an incessant clamour against the Government, and have done their best to conceal the smallness of their number and the weakness of their cause, by the violence of their invectives and the audacity of their assertions."

Again—

"The fact is, that the hostility to the proposed law, is confined to those who live, or wish to live, by the abuses of the most expensive court that exists on the face of the earth. The proposed Act, indeed, will directly affect their gains but little. There are not two appeals from the Mofussil courts to the Supreme Court in five years. But the persons to whom I refer in this measure, the beginning of a great and searching reform. They see that we are determined not to suffer the high powers bestowed on us by Parliament to be idle. They have, therefore, attempted to stop us at the outset, and by interesting all classes of their countrymen in their quarrel, to prevent us from proceeding to the correction of those evils which, I firmly believe, have ruined more native families than a Pindarree invasion.

"All the reasons which have led these persons to oppose this Act ought to lead us to pass it instantly. It is a pledge of our determination to rescue our native subjects from a ruinous system of chicane: to do justice without distinction of persons: to defy interested clamour, &c."

He need read no more to convince them, that Mr. Macaulay has attributed very base motives to him and those of the same profession with him, who publicly opposed this Act. He had had some experience of the mode in which discussions on public questions are conducted in England by persons of different opinions. Mr. Macaulay has had more, and he did not hesitate to say, that if he had had the honor of a seat in the House of Commons, and Mr. Macaulay had ventured in the heat of debate to impute to him such motives as he had imputed in these state papers, supposed to be written upon reflection, he would have been obliged to apologise to the house for his breach of decorum to it, or have been placed in custody of their Serjeant at Arms.

Mr. Grant did not deny, that as far as he was individually concerned, the Act could not affect him. He was not likely, while he remained in India, to be out of Calcutta even on a tour into the Mofussil, still less likely was he to have any commercial or pecuniary relations with the Mofussil, which would make it of any moment to himself individually, whether the law were good or bad. But he thought that he might be allowed to feel some interest in the welfare of a people among whom he had come to earn, not from the favours of Government, but by the honest exercise of an honorable profession, the means of present and future independence. In these endeavours he felt that he had been among the luckiest of those who, for the same ends, had left their native shores, and gratitude to those people to whom he was indebted for his success, would always induce him to do his best to advocate what he believed to be their cause.

He was known both to have written and spoken against the Act in question. Both what he had said and written was before the public. The signature under which he had written had never been attempted to be concealed, and was well known; and he challenged any man to point out a single passage which was personal to any one or which could by possibility give offence to any, the most sensitive, of the authors of this Black Act as it was called. In return, he had the mortification to find unmerited abuse, for the motives and manner in which he had conducted his opposition, heaped on him by Mr. Macaulay. It was contrary to his wish and to his custom to attack individuals who were opposed to him, and he wished always to deal rather with their arguments than their characters; but when a man ventured to asperse him, he owed it to himself to disregard such delicacy and to bring down from assumed superiority the person who had tried to degrade him.

Now, Mr. Macaulay, with talents sufficient to have ensured success in any profession to which he had chosen to turn them, had, in his outset of life, embraced the anomalous and in England not very highly thought of vocation of a professional statesman. In an early and shining part of his career, he had born certainly a considerable, it was said, by some a prominent, part in the formation of the Act of 1833, by which a very lucrative office, but, as it was by many then and by more now thought, not a commensurately useful one, was created, to use his own language, not perhaps in reality but in semblance for Mr. Macaulay. Certain it is, that Mr. Macaulay was its first occupant and arrived here in the year 1834, with no very great stock of such Indian knowledge as could make him useful in his avowed vocation of improving the people of this vast country, and to have the education necessary for this noble purpose completed at the expence of the people he was there after to benefit. He remained here long enough to fill his pockets sufficiently to ensure his independence at home, from the savings of the sums so lavishly bestowed on him here, and, having done in return, how much the gentlemen present all know, without any of those reasons which so often oblige men to desert their duties to this country, without having loss of health, or even a thwarting of his views by those associated with him, to plead for his abandonment of the task he was supposed to have undertaken, in the year 1836, he resigns his appointment, and returns home.

Surely this is a person whom it does not become to impute to others pecuniary motives for their conduct, and who would do well to remember the old adage, that they who have glass windows should not throw stones. He had to direct the attention of the meeting to some other parts of Mr. Macaulay's Minutes, in which such different conclusions had been derived from the same premises, as forced him, whatever respect he might have for Mr. Macaulay's talents, to attach no great weight to his opinions. Writing of the Supreme Court here, in the part of his Minute of the 9th May already quoted, he speaks of "the abuses of the most expensive Court that exists on the face of the earth;" of the attempts made to prevent the Legislative Council "from proceeding to the correction of those evils which he firmly believes have ruined more native families than a Pindaree invasion, and of passing the Act as "pledge of our determination to rescue our native subjects from a ruinous system of chicanery." The 25th paragraph of his last Minute was quoted by Sir J. Hobhouse, in his speech on our late petition, on which Mr. Charles Wyndham, in the same debate, very properly, as I think, remarked, that he was very sorry to hear that it was quoted from a paper written by Mr. Macaulay, and very much astonished that any man who was a Legislative Counsellor of India, should use language of such rhetorical but vituperative description, without considering what might be the very serious effect of Courts being called on for a length of time to administer justice under such a stigma conveyed in those strongest possible terms.*

* 25. A sullied stream is a blessing compared to a total drought; and a court may be worse than corrupt: it may be inaccessible. The expenses of litigation in England are so heavy that people daily sit down quietly under wrongs and submit to losses rather than go to law; and yet the English are the richest people in the world. The people of India are poor; and the expense of litigation in the Supreme Court is five times as great as the expenses of litigation at Westminster. An undefended cause, which might be prosecuted successfully in the Court of King's Bench for about 8l. sterling, cannot be prosecuted in the Supreme Court under 40l. sterling. Where an English barrister receives a guinea, a barrister here receives two gold mohurs, more than three guineas. For making a motion of course an English barrister receives half a guinea; a barrister here receives a gold-mohur. Officers of the court are enabled to accumulate in a few years, out of the substance of ruined suitors, fortunes larger than the oldest and most distinguished servant of the Company can expect to carry home after thirty or forty years of eminent services. I speak of Bengal, where the system is now in full operation. At Madras the Supreme Court has, I believe, fulfilled its mission: it has done its work; it has beggared every rich native within its jurisdiction, and is inactive for want of somebody to ruin. This is not all: great as the evils of the Supreme Court really are, they are exaggerated by the apprehensions of the natives to a still more frightful magnitude. The terror with which it is regarded by them is enormous. Within the last few

The last sentence which Mr. Macaulay devotes to the Supreme Court, is that in which he is pleased to style the officers and practitioners in it as "a class of men who live by the worst abuses of the worst Court in the world." Mr. Grant left it to those who had more confidence in the accuracy of Mr. Macaulay's judgment than he had, and who thought it important that weight should be attached to his opinion on this matter, to reconcile their remarks with those in that gentleman's first Minute, in which, speaking of the same Court, he says, "I am quite ready to admit, that the Supreme Court, composed as it now is, would be a very good Court of Appeal," and in which he gives reasons for preferring the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlat in the case in hand, which Mr. Grant thought very extraordinary reasons for such a conclusion certainly, but not one of which affects the character of the Supreme Court, and in which he acknowledges the prevalence of the general belief, from which he takes no opportunity of expressing his dissent, that the justice administered in it is of "a superior quality" to that "coarse one" which the Company "keep for themselves."

But it was not only for the purpose of shewing up Mr. Macaulay's inconsistency that he had made these quotations from his Minutes, he had a graver charge to found upon them.

Every one would see, that, stripped of the rhetorical vituperation with which he had adorned them, his real objections to the Supreme Court came to this and to this only, that it was expensive. What would the meeting think of the candour of Mr. Macaulay, when they heard, that at the very time when he was writing these celebrated Minutes, he was in possession of letters and calculations and memoranda of the Judges of the Supreme Court, which shewed that they were zealously, honestly and earnestly employed in bringing about the means of reducing the expenses of that Court? What would the meeting think of the candour of Sir John Hobhouse, when they learn that at the time he used that memorable quotation from those Minutes, he was in possession of the fact that the Judges had succeeded in their laudable purpose, and had before him a copy of the very calculations upon which the saving was demonstrated and the rules of Court which had been passed by which it was effected? What would the meeting think of the man who, with the means before him of proving the injustice of Mr. Macaulay's invective, had published the slander and kept back the refutation, and had done so in a case such as this, where months must elapse before those affected by it could publish their defence, and at a time when it was clear that Sir John Hobhouse believed the question at issue was never likely to be stirred again?

The saving to the suitor which had been effected, Mr. Grant spoke under correction of a gentleman who knew the facts more accurately than any one, (Mr. Dickens, months, in consequence of an attempt made by some persons connected with that court to extend its jurisdiction over the suburbs of Calcutta, hundreds of respectable and wealthy natives petitioned the Government, in language indicating the greatest dismay "To give to every English defendant in every civil cause a right to bring the native plaintiff before the Supreme Court, is to give to every dishonest Englishman an immunity against almost all civil prosecution. It is true that such appeals are scarcely ever heard of. There have as yet been only two actually brought to a hearing. But it is the opinion of some of the most experienced servants of the Company, that the threat of appealing has often been employed, and employed with success by dishonest debtors against honest claimants. And I am quite certain, from what I have myself seen of the dread with which natives regard the Supreme Court, and from what I myself know of the expenses of that court, that the threat would, in a great proportion of cases, be successful."

who assented) already amounted in the necessary expenses of Court to fifty per cent. They would hereafter, as offices fell vacant, be reduced further, and from the circumstance of all the officers being paid by salaries, would as business increased, be still further reduced. That the Court was still an expensive Court was very true. It necessarily was so, where its officers and practitioners were Englishmen and obliged to look to their gain in this country, not only for their present but their future livelihood, exposed to all the chances which this climate offered against a long continuance in it, and who had no pension to look forward to.

To compare the gains of such persons here with those of their own rank at home, would be unfair in any one, but was absurd in Mr. Macaulay, who himself as fourth Legislative Councillor in India, received three times the salary which his Master the President of the Board of Control gets at home.

Mr. Grant had thought it his duty to say thus much, and to enter into the detail which he had done, in order to caution the meeting as to the sort of opponents they had to deal with at home. He need not assure them that they were not asking for any privilege, or for any distinction, except where Mr. Macaulay himself admitted a distinction ought to be made, in a case such as they could clearly make out theirs to be, one where such distinction was necessary to the pure and efficient administration of justice. That a defendant of a large class of people differing in their laws, manners and habits of thinking from others in this country, should be tried by his own laws, is a law recognised in India as well for the Hindoo and the Mussulman subject of the Queen of England, as for Her British-born one. If an Englishman sues Hindoo, he must sue him according to Hindoo law. If a Hindoo sues an Englishman, or a Mussulman, he must sue him according to the law of England or of the Koran. No privilege whatever was given to British-born subjects by the provision of the Act 53. Geo. 3, which the Legislature here have attempted to repeal, the privilege there given was to the natives of India in the provinces, who were by that act allowed to sue British-born defendants in other Courts than the Supreme Court, where alone formerly such suits could be entertained. In every suit within the contemplation of that act the British-born subject was necessarily the defendant, it was only where he was defendant that English law could by possibility come in question; and the giving the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in those cases only in which the British-born subject was defendant, was in fact giving an appeal upon all questions of English law, and upon no other, to the only Court in India which pretends to understand them.

Mr. Grant concluded, by earnestly requesting the meeting to keep the true question steadily in view, and not to allow a word in their petition or their speeches to escape them, which the ingenuity and determined prejudice of their opponents could construe into the betraying of a wish for any exclusive privilege.

After some desultory talk about the lateness of the hour, and the quantity of business yet remaining undone, it was agreed, that the meeting be adjourned to 7 P. M. Monday next. The meeting broke up at about a quarter past 6 P. M. Hark. Nov. 27.

MALCUTTA, NOVEMBER 26, 1838.

Precisely at 7 P. M. the Sheriff took the chair, and having stated that this was the meeting which stood adjourned from Saturday last, he read the requisition by which it had been convened. Having done this, he stated that on Saturday only one resolution had been passed, which he read likewise, and concluded by stating, that thus far the business had proceeded, and he would now leave it in the hands of the gentlemen present to proceed on.

MR. W. C. HUNTER thought it needless to enter into any arguments or lengthy observations, to prove that the people of England were neglectful of all subjects connected with India, and ever required to be awakened on such questions; the meeting must be fully aware of this; he would not therefore detain them, particularly as there was much to be done, but conclude by moving the second Resolution.

2.—Resolved, that it is expedient to pray that the petitioners may be heard by Counsel at the bar of both Houses of Parliament, for the repeal or disallowance of the said Act.

MR. LONGUEVILLE CLARKE said, that the employment of a Counsel in England had been found beneficial by all the colonies. He adverted to the case of Canada, which employed Mr. Roebuck who was not at that time a Member of Parliament; that gentlemen took up the cause before the House, and made one of the most luminous speeches that ever came from him. The bar of England, he said, embraced gentlemen of the highest talents, many of whom would be glad to take up our cause. On the occasion to which he had alluded, the Canadians had been heard in Parliament by their counsel; why then should not the same right be enjoyed by the residents in India?

Mr. Clarke would not, however, recommend that our agent in England be bound to employ a Counsel; he would allow him to exercise a wholesome discretion, that as he found it advisable he might or might not entertain a Counsel. He would, however, strongly urge the propriety of putting or praying in the petition that the petitioners be heard by Counsel, and leave the agent to do as he liked. The employment of a Counsel had been found beneficial for the colonies, why should it not then be found the same for us.

The Resolution was seconded by Mr. Cullen and carried nemine dissentiente.

DWARKANATH TAGORE.—Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen. Two years ago I had the pleasure of addressing you on this very subject, and in this very hall. I then explained to you at length the reasons why we, the natives of this country, take interest in these proceedings of Europeans. You are all aware of this, I will not, therefore, again enter upon them. But even supposing for a moment that we were not in any manner to be affected by your acts, could we not come here to support you in return for the support you have given us on various occasions. Let us consider some of those occasions. Some time ago we poor heathens were not permitted to sit on the jury. How, I ask, did we get in there? Was it not by the exertions of Mr. Dickens and other lawyers, who voluntarily came forward to make us partake of this important right enjoyed by Englishmen? What, are we to have no gratitude? What ungrateful wretches must we be, if we, now that they are to be degraded in the Mofussil, do not come forward to support them. Suppose the Europeans are turned out of the Mofussil by the Black Act, and other acts of that kind, what will become of the improvements that are there carried on by the interlopers? (hear, hear). What, I ask, has the Government done for the people of India? It was the lawyers, with Sir Edward Hyde East at their head, that established the Hindoo College, of the usefulness of which my friend Baboo Casper and Ghose, sitting here opposite, as a proof. Even the lac of rupees a year granted by Parliament for education, would have remained hidden if the Marquess of Hastings had not found it out. And when it was found out, what did the Government do with it but encourage Sanscrit, leaving the people in the dark?

Much, gentlemen, has been told to you about interlopers. I ask, is not our Chairman—a Law Commissioner, an interloper? (much laughter.) I wish all our Law Commissioners were interlopers, we would then have real Law Commissioners (hear, hear). The natives in the Mofussil, they say, do not trouble themselves about these matters, nor take any notice of these things, and that it is only the interlopers who agitate and give all the trouble. This is according to Mr. Macaulay's own showing; but this is the very reason why we should support the interlopers; for, it is they who cause the improvement of the country, not the Civil Servants, who never care for reforms. It is true they all know where the mistakes and errors lie; but never come forward to remedy the evil—it is the lawyers and the interlopers that do this, and it is these people that we are come to support (loud applause) A friend of mine has brought to my notice, a Black Act of a very different kind, a Criminal Black Act. In it, gentlemen, we find the following passage:

“XXXIII. And it is hereby enacted, that whoever being in the employ of the Government, in the Post Office department, or being in the employ of any person or persons who may contract with the Government to convey letters or packets by Post for hire, shall fraudulently appropriate any letter or packets which may have been entrusted to him or any thing contained in any such letter or packet, or shall open any such letter or packet, or any hangy box, with the intention of fraudulently appropriating any thing therein contained, shall be punished with imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a term not exceeding seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

By this you perceive that a Mofussil Magistrate is to have it in his power to punish any man, whether Native or European, with imprisonment for seven years, and the man thus convicted has not the right to appeal to any higher tribunal. The Black Act, against which you are come here to petition, is but the forerunner of such Acts as that which I have just read to you; the mischief that has commenced will go on, unless we all come forward and support each other to put a check to it. (Hear, hear, and loud cheering.)

It has been said that the Mofussil Courts are better than the Supreme Court, but how can this be the case when we see that not only the interlopers, but, even the servants of Government—the Civil Servants, gentlemen, prefer the Supreme Court to those of the Mofussil? I allude to the case of Pattle versus Patton. If Mr. Pattle, who is one of the oldest Civil Servants, and well acquainted with the Supreme as well as the Mofussil Courts, was not satisfied in his mind that the former was far better, why should he have sought a remedy there, and employ Messrs. Clarke, Osborne, and Grant to conduct his case? It is not my intention, gentlemen, to enter into the merits of that case. Mr. Patton, for aught I know, might have been quite right; but Mr. Pattle thought him to be in the wrong and accordingly applied to the Supreme Court. All I have to do with the case is the circumstance of Mr. Pattle applying to the Supreme Court instead of the Mofussil Courts, a circumstance which clearly proves from the opinion of one of the oldest and most experienced Civil Servants, that the Supreme Court is far better than the Mofussil Courts. (Cheers.) You have heard of the enormous expences of the Supreme Court. Did not Mr. Pattle know this, and does he not love his money as well as any body else? (hear, hear). Then why did he go to the Supreme Court? The fact is, he knew justice could be had at some cost in the Supreme Court; but he feared he could not at all obtain it in the Mofussil Courts. The question, gentlemen, is one which more particularly regards appeal cases. Now, it has been admitted, even by Mr. Macaulay himself, that the Supreme Court is free from corruption. Why not then allow a man to appeal to such courts if he chooses, instead of forcing him to appeal only to such courts as Mr. Macaulay himself admits, administer “course justice?” We do not ask to make it binding on defendants to appeal to the Supreme Court; but only that it be left to their choice either to appeal to that Court or to the Mofussil Courts which ever they may prefer. (Hear, hear.) Why not then give us the privilege to make a choice.

Mr. Macaulay, who made that Act, came out from Europe, and without knowing any thing of the country, immediately set about making laws. He sought information from no body; and when any body went to him he was ready to inform them instead of endeavouring to learn any thing from them. (Hear) In fact, gentlemen, Mr. Macaulay was a perfect *sub-junta (Much laughter and cheering.) This Mr. Macaulay, gentlemen, makes a parade of his love for the natives of this country; but I am a Native, and have had some experience in the affairs of my countrymen; I know the nature of the Mofussil Courts, and of the Supreme Court too; and I can assure you, gentlemen, that the conclusion to which I have arrived, is that whether poor or rich, you can get equal justice in the Supreme Court, but in the Mofussil Courts it is only the rich that can get justice. (Hear, hear.) This is an opinion which I express, not only here, but have expressed it elsewhere, I have distinctly stated all this in my evidence before the Police Committee, and then it is on record. The justice which Englishmen receives is stated to be pure and that which is administered in the Mofussil Courts is corrupt. Mr. Macaulay would equalize us by bringing down Englishmen to the level of natives, instead of raising the natives to the level of Englishmen. This is real equalization. The equalization of which Mr. Macaulay, with all his love for the natives, talks, is no equalization at all. It is taking away from us all that is worth possessing and giving us in return that which is worth nothing. The fact is, the Court of Directors have always been jealous of interlopers, and wish them not to interfere in the affairs of the country. they do not wish them to know the merits of their rule nor to look into their acts. The Charter has, it is true, allowed the colonization of India, but has colonization taken place? No. How do we know, gentlemen, that the Court of Directors did not send out secret instructions to Mr. Macaulay, to prevent the practical workings of the provisions of the Charter. They are, believe me, very long sighted people—they can see far, and in time take care to put a stop to the progress of improvement and civilization of the country. Indeed, gentlemen, so many times have we seen principles fully and unequivocally allowed in public rendered nugatory by secret instructions effecting their practice, that even if Sir John Cam Hobhouse were to declare before the Parliament any thing in favour of the natives. I should not be certain if the boon would even then be actually granted.

I have now shown you, gentlemen, why we ought to support the cause of the Europeans, and I hope, I have proved to your satisfaction, that in doing so, we support not only their cause, which in gratitude we are bound to do, but our own. I should now proceed to read to you the resolution which has been put into my hand.

3—Resolved, that it is expedient to open a subscription to defray the expences of employing a permanent Agent and Council in England and of forwarding the petitions, and that John Crawford, Esq., be requested to act as our agent.

Gentlemen, in recommending the employment of Mr. Crawford, I do not recommend it only for the business now under your consideration, but as your permanent agent, who will be there to take up any public business you may require to be done in England. Such an agent there is absolutely necessary for the proper protection of our interests, against the intrigues and trickeries now going on; an efficient check is indispensable, and in the measure I have proposed, I hope you will find it. If I be asked why the West Indians are better off than we, I reply, that in England and in the Parliament, there are numerous proprietors of large farms and plantations in the West Indies; and that they protect the interests of the country in which they have so much property; but that the case with us is very different; there is no one in Parliament, who has any personal interest in this country, and therefore no one to advocate her cause. Hence the necessity of appointing an agent and a counsel to protect our rights and interests. Even if our agent gains no great advantage for us; he will, at least, keep us informed of what is going on there.

* A native phrase which means a know-all.

Mark, gentlemen, Mr. Macaulay and his colleagues wish to deprive the Europeans in the Mofussil of the right of appeal to the Supreme Court under the pretence of placing them on a footing of equality. The Resumption operation, was another Government measure of equalization. The principle on which they wished to proceed was to equalize all the tenures. They assess the rent-free lands in order to bring it on a level with the lands that pay revenue. But mark the tendency of this principle, observe where it leads you, if carried out to its full length (hear, hear.) The estates in Orissa and other parts of the country under temporary settlement, pay generally a higher rate of Revenue than the estates in the permanently settled provinces. Now, it might as well be argued on this equalizing principle of our Government that the estates under the permanent settlement ought to pay in the same ratio as those I have just mentioned, and lose the other advantages of a permanent settlement. If therefore this equalizing principle is not to be checked by pledge or any other consideration, there is an end to all certainty even in regard to the permanently settled provinces (hear, hear). These are the consequences likely to result from allowing the Black or equalizing Act to go unnoticed,—these the dangers which threaten our countrymen. I, therefore, call on them to come forward now and support the Europeans against the encroachment with which their rights are threatened. Support, I say, the lawyers and interlopers who have always advocated your cause (loud cheers.) Who came forward to protect the coolies from being carried away to the Mauritius? Not the Civil Servants (hear, hear) but the lawyers, gentlemen, the interlopers, with the Lord Bishop and other clergy. But surely these do not expect that the coolies will employ them in the Supreme Court, and fill their pockets with fees. They had no interested motives in coming forward with so much zeal in behalf of the poor coolies. (Loud cheers.) But I ask you, gentlemen, was there a single Civil Servant at the Cooly Meeting, as it is called? Not one; as servants of Government they said, they could not mix themselves up with these proceedings. But where was their conscience at that time—that tender conscience which would not allow them to pull down or build up a Musliman mosque (hear, hear). Was it asleep when the cause of humanity summoned them to this Hall in order to protect the poor coolies? I have known of their being here on St. Andrew's night; (hear, hear and much laughter) then their connection with Government was no obstacle to their meeting here: but when the cause of humanity required their presence, when Bishops and interlopers came here to rescue the poor coolies from slavery, then they could not come. Believe me, gentlemen, when I assure you, that the lawyers, who are always the first to get up these meetings to protect your liberties and interests, are your real friends? With what motive they came forward at the Cooly Meeting you all know, gentlemen, it was certainly not one of interest. Mr. Macaulay, too, may have motives, and the only motive that I can perceive in him, is the motive to keep the interlopers out of the country. I have done gentlemen.—(Loud and continued cheering.)

Mr. MACKINNON mentioned the case of Calder versus Halket, and was not satisfied why that case had been thrown out of the Court altogether.

Mr. DICKENS.—Gentlemen; in reference to what has fallen from Mr. Mackinnon, perhaps that gentleman and the meeting will allow me to explain, that the case of Calder v. Halkett was decided without any regard to the merits whatever, and was so decided, because the majority of the Court felt bound, (though they pronounced the defendant wrong, if I do not much mistake) by the terms of the 24th section of the 21st Geo. 3d c. 70,* by which section it is provided, that no civil action for damages shall lie at all against any Provincial Magistrates for any act done by them as such.

That I believe was the ground, and the sole ground, on which the majority of the judges decided that case, or rather pronounced that the statute decided it. The judges had simply to administer the law and to construe it: it was thought, I presume, that the terms of the statute were too clear and precise to permit a civil action for damages to be brought on any ground against a Magistrate for acts done by him in that capacity.

Criminal proceedings are not touched by the statute, and if a Magistrate does wrong, he may certainly be indicted, but unless an expressly malicious motive can be proved or inferred, in ordinary cases, it would be of little use, and there would be no reparation to the prosecutor in any case for his costs and trouble.

Mr. MACKINNON made a few more observations, which we could not take down, and concluded by saying, that what he had been alarmed at, was not the Black Act now under consideration, but the Act read by Dwarkanath Tagore in his speech. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. GRAY would not detain the meeting beyond a few moments. This was the first time he had ever appeared before a public meeting to utter a recantation; but he felt it his duty to do so, and begged the meeting would give him a hearing. Some time ago he had entertained an opinion, and had declared it openly, that there was no necessity of employing an agent in England; for he trusted that the cause would there be in safe hands; but he had been deceived in Sir John Camille-Henry, and could no more trust people from whom such unconstitutional measures emanated. We have now tried them and found them out, and he had therefore, changed his opinion on the subject of employing an agent in England, and was now anxious that we should have an agent there, and pay him well. He had not come here to support the measure with words only, but he was ready to open his purse-strings in support of an agent in England (cheers).

The resolution moved by Biboo Rustomjee Cowasjee, was now carried unanimously.

Mr. SPUR.—The resolution put into my hands regards the re-election of the Committee previously appointed. As you did me the honor to nominate me on that Committee, there might seem an impropriety in my recommending to you such a resolution; but having the prospect of soon quitting India, I am at least not interested in the recommendation, although I shall never cease to be interested in the cause. I shall never cease to be interested in opposing not only this Black Act but the black system of which it is the commencement.

We have been twitted, gentlemen, with the notion that we are led on this occasion by Lawyers interested in the emoluments of the Supreme Court; my friend Dwarkanath Tagore has happily disposed of this idea, but I will ask you in addition to what he has said, if these are not the very men whom we have seen so recently battling with us for and triumphing in the Freedom of the Press, and having stood here conspicuous on every occasion of public utility, is it fair to attribute to them in this one instance interested motives? As to the disposition of the British Residents in the Mofussil, I can only judge from what has come before myself. I have conversed with none who have approved of this Act, but with many who view it with abhorrence. If deeds be at all a proof of sincerity, I might refer you to Mr. Dickens to show the liberal manner in which they came forward with their assistance in the cause. From the subscriptions which fell particularly under my own observation, I can state that three planters gave 100 Rs. each, two gave fifty each, and by 26 planters no less a sum than 700 Rs. was subscribed, to obtain the repeal of this obnoxious act.

* We subjoin the section of the Act in question—ED. AND WHEREAS it is reasonable to render the provincial magistrates, as well natives as British subjects, more safe in the execution of their office, be it enacted, that no action for wrong or injury shall lie in the Supreme Court against any person whatsoever, exercising a judicial office in the country Courts, for any judgment, decree, or order of the said Court, nor against any person for any act done by, or in virtue of the order of the said Court.

But we are a small body, and we are cavalierly told that if we are not satisfied with the laws which are to be imposed upon us, we may withdraw ourselves from the country, and stay at home. We are a small body it is true, but we are an influential body. We may be few in numbers but we are Englishmen, and have the spirit of Englishmen, and it is neither for the interest of India nor of England that we should be so superciliously dealt with. The British Capital at risk invested and circulated in the Mofussil within the range of the Supreme Court, is of no small amount. In the production of opium, indigo, alone, no less a sum than three and a half million sterling is employed, one and a half million of which is in annual circulation, expended in cultivating the soil and returning in products to Calcutta where it is exchanged for an equal amount of British manufactures and products. A large revenue accrues to Government from these operations, in the shape of land rent, and not only so, but duties are again levied on the produce to the extent of 3 lacs annually on indigo alone, and this doctrix tax is paid without a murmur. Payment is largely to the state, we surely are entitled to the blessings of good Government, to the protection of a just and pure legal administration? but no, we are persistently told we are to be made the subjects of the oppression of the law. We are to be worked a system of reform, through the injustice we are to suffer and complain of, to purify, at the hazard of our ruin, a legal administration known to be corrupt. Englishmen are to be made besoms of by these legislators to sweep out the dirt of their Mofussil Courts. I trust they have themselves met with a broom (Brougham) that will sweep them out.

But, gentlemen, all this will be labour in vain; no sufferings of ours will ever implant a principle of honesty in a dishonesty Ameen, nor in the class of Ameenus. It is beginning at the wrong end. We must educate and enlighten the people and elevate their character. We cannot expect to find a pure, isolated class of legal functionaries springing up in the midst of a corrupt people; we cannot draw an enlightened Ameen out of a corrupt mass. The natives of India are lost in ignorance, and of all kinds of ignorance the ignorance of a civilized people is the worst, the most prolific of crime. Bands of Thugs are at this moment peopling the plains of India, who believe murder to be an acceptable worship of the deity. In the mountainous parts another race rush with the blood of human victims to their fiends, believing it will give them a larger harvest. Famine and pestilence have desolated the country. Works of great national improvement are neglected, and by similar neglect the great moral laws of the country are broken down and sunk in one general abandonment of all that is great, public-spirited and virtuous in a people. Yet this is not the fault of the natives; they are eager for and highly capable of receiving instruction. It is not the fault of the Government; for one with more paternal feelings towards the country does not exist, nor of the civil servants, the best of whom are over-wrought, and have little time to devote to matters of general improvement. The fault—

the crime, lies with the Directors and with the British Government, in not having provided, and in not providing he means for the education of the people. This is the bounden duty of every Government. It is by the discharge of this high moral duty, that Prussia has raised her character among the nations; but not without a large and necessary expenditure. I find in Berlin seventeen shillings and sixpence allotted for the education of every child that would not be otherwise educated, and what is the amount annually allotted for the education of India? Gentlemen, you have just heard it from Dwarkinath Tagore, it is a lac of rupees—it is not a farthing for every child that will not be otherwise educated. Let us take one-fifth which is given by one Mr. Adam's tables as the proportion that children between 1 and 15 years of age bear to the whole population reckoned at 100 millions. This gives 20 millions of children capable of receiving education. Now take the numbers as found by Mr. Adam, say an average of seven per cent., the proportion of children actually receiving to children capable of receiving instruction. Deducting this 7 per cent., we have 18 millions of children now existing in India, who are allowed to remain and will be allowed to grow up in utter ignorance, unable to read or write and without any kind of education whatever. The Government allowance, £10,000 sterling per annum, is not, therefore, a farthing for each child, and it will amount to little more, even although increased by all the sums placed at the disposal of the Committee of Public Instruction. It may be thought that this is foreign to the object of our meeting, but if Englishmen are to suffer so long as the Courts of Justice are corrupt, it surely behoves us to enquire at what period we may expect an end to our sufferings which can only be effected by education, and here let me point the words of Mr. Adam, then whom India has not a truer, a more judicious, or a warmer friend:—“While ignorance is so extensive, can it be matter of wonder that poverty is extreme, that industry languishes, that crime prevails, and that in the adoption of measures, of public policy, however salutary and unimpeachable their tendency, Government cannot reckon with the silence on the moral support of an intelligent and instructed community?” Is it possible that a wise, a just government, can allow this state of things longer to continue?

There is no other means than by education of elevating the character of the people, without it years may roll on pregnant with the suffering of Englishmen, and the sadder Ameen and Omdas may as corrupt as ever, and I see little prospect of any other better result. A rupee for each uneducated child would require annually a crore of rupees, so destitute of other resources is the country, that nothing less it seems to me, will meet the exigency. You can judge whether this sum is likely to be obtained while it is reckoned cheaper, a sad mistake, to educate the amahs by the suffering of Englishmen; and what is the pretext, a political dogma, that the laws which are good enough for the greater number are good enough for the few. I deny the truth of this. Like hundreds of political theories, it is true in the abstract, but like these theories, which, if acted upon, would overturn every Government in the world, it is premature and impracticable. Enlighten and elevate the mass of the people, then the syllogism will hold true, and the free institutions adapted to the larger number, will be equally applicable to the smaller; and until this be accomplished, the dogma is false, is premature, and consequently pregnant with mischief.

4.—Resolved, that the former Committee appointed at the Meeting, held on the 24th June 1836, be re-appointed with liberty, as before, to add to their members, and that such Committee be made permanent to watch over our own and the interests of all classes of the governed in British India.

MR. FERGUSON rose to second the resolutions. He was engaged in various parts of the country in raising its produce, and was largely interested in these operations. He had many opportunities of conversing with the planters and other classes of people residing in the mofussil, and from all he had heard or experienced, he arrived at the conclusions, that the account given by Mr. Macaulay was false. Mr. Macaulay, he was sure, had in his possession returns and documents which must have shewn to him clearly, that the European settlers in the interior were but few and scattered over a large tract of country that had no good roads for easy communication; which, added to the effects of a tropical climate, rendered it quite impossible for these people to see each other often or to be informed regarding the affairs of each other. These few settlers were on all sides surrounded by natives, and the only courts they had in their neighbourhood, were the notoriously corrupt courts of the mofussil. The only check on these courts and the natives, was the Supreme Court, to which an Englishman could appeal (hear, hear). The people in the mofussil, therefore, looked to the removal of the privilege of appeal to the Supreme Court with dread. They were all of opinion, that if the expences of the Supreme Court were twice what it now is, it would still be cheap as a check on the Civil Servants, than whom he did not no of a more proud and inaccessible oligarchy.

DWARAKANATH TAGORE begged to be permitted to add a few words to what he had said before. In support of the disinterestedness of the lawyers, he would refer to their exertions against the Stamp Regulations, in which cause they labored for several days, and would accept of no remuneration. He would also call to mind the act by which it was intended to deprive Amemans, Moguls and other foreigners from holding land in this country. On that occasion, Mr. Clarke went from house to house to obtain signatures to a requisition for a public meeting. Had he allowed the act to pass it would have been of great advantage to the lawyers, as it would have increased their work, but he would not do that. There are many other instances of disinterested acts of the Calcutta lawyers, which plainly prove that they are not such horse-leeches, as Mr. Macaulay would fain make them out to be. (Much laughter and loud cheers.)

MR. FEWICK.—Mr. Spier had alluded to the relative position in which the Planter and the Civilian stand in the mofussil. He had lately come from the Mofussil and could speak on this point. He knew that among the Regulations of Government, there were many which protected the ryots but there was none which afforded the least protection to the planter (hear hear.) The Supreme Court was their only protection, and if that be taken away, then liberty is at once destroyed. The Supreme Court had been called an expensive court; but he knew what mofussil courts are, for he had considerable experience in them. Out of several instances of injustice which he recollected, he would mention but two. In one of these he acted as the legal adviser of the defendant, (some laughter, principally amongst the members of the Bar) and having explained certain points, the Magistrate fully agreed with him! Yet the Magistrate was determined to carry things with a high hand, and ordered accordingly, stating that this was not a King's court, that he should be bound to act according to fixed principles and rules, but that he would do what he liked. The other instance was produced by an altercation between a police peon and an indigo-planter. The latter, it seems, provoked by the insolence of the peon, had given him a thump or two. The peon complained to the Magistrate, and the planter, without even being called upon to make his defence, was fined 100 rupees. He, however, waited on the Magistrate to ask why he had passed such an ex parte decision, and was coolly told by his worship, that it was to save him the trouble of coming to the Court.

The equality sought by Mr. Macaulay is all a farce; there can be no real equality until the people of the country are made eligible to sit on the bench of the Courts under the protection of which they live. Without this equality the equality offered by Mr. Macaulay is not worth having. Mr. Fewick would again urge on the attention of the meeting, the necessity of opposing this Black Act, and he would assure them, that if this Black Act be suffered to pass without very strong opposition, we would soon have other acts not only black, but red as blood itself.

MR. SPIER'S resolution was now put from the chair and carried unanimously.

MR. LEITH rose to move the 5th Resolution. He would not enter upon the general question which had been so ably discussed by his learned friends, who had addressed the meeting before him. He would only impress upon the minds of the meeting, that if this act were allowed to pass without the expression of our strongest dislike, it would form the commencement of a series of such acts, which would ultimately crush the liberties of every class of the people of India. He then read the following resolution:

5.—Resolved, that it be referred to the Committee to prepare the draft of a petition to both Houses of Parliament, with liberty to call in such assistance as they may think advisable, and such draft petition be published in all the newspapers of this presidency.

This was seconded by Roy Calinauth Chowdhury.

MR. C. POTE, who stood at some distance from the table, spoke to the following effect. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen. Before you proceed to put to vote the resolution that has been read, I beg to be allowed an impartial hearing. I hope and desire, gentlemen, that you will feel that you are not exempted from the laws under which your native fellow subjects are placed; you ought not to desire such an exemption; you ought not to wish to exempt yourselves from the penalties to which the natives of the country are liable. I see you desire to be exempted from the general law of this country. To this I say you have no right. (Hear, hear and much laughter. Order, order, from the chair.) I desire then to say, that you who have arrived in this country have no right to exempt yourselves from the laws of this country (a great deal of noise and hisses from all sides.)

Mr. Dickens here begged to be heard, but Mr. Pote called out to Mr. Dickens, order, order. Mr. Dickens, however, raised his voice to its highest pitch, and was heard to say:—gentlemen, I beg of you—I entreat of you to let Mr. Pote proceed, and give him an attentive hearing. Mr. Pote then resumed his speech. If the Mofussil laws are wrong, I wish Englishmen to be subjected to it (hear, hear.) I wish that they may feel the injustice of those laws, and that they may remonstrate against them. I particularly wish Englishmen to be subjected to those laws, because I know they are the strongest, the most energetic class in this country. I wish the strongest to be subjected to these laws, that they may overthrow them (hear, hear and loud cheering.) I know there is a great difficulty in subjecting Englishmen to injustice; but I ask and pray for it. I do not think there is any barrister here, except Mr. Dickens. (A cry of, "there are several others besides him," from different parts of the house.) He will explain to you the advantages of the Supreme Court (This has been already done, from the crowd, and order, order from the chair.) Recollect, gentlemen, what Mr. Canning, that immortal man, said in regard to English Courts of law. He advised all rather to compromise by giving up even the half of their claim, than go to law. I talk not of this but of the courts of Great Britain. Has not the Supreme Court a supremacy over the other Courts of the country? But you say that the native courts are corrupt; now if the Supreme Court has a supremacy over those Courts, and yet cannot reform them, of what use is that supremacy? I have just heard a learned barrister address you in a long speech about his own Court. I think this is all done to save Mr. Turton some inconvenience. Who, I ask, is the originator of this meeting? (a great deal of noise and confusion, followed by calls of order from the chair.) I admit that the Mofussil Courts are very bad, (hear) yet they are much better than the Supreme Court. (Mr. Hurry here rose to order, on the ground, that Mr. Pote was speaking irrelevantly. Mr. Pote was, however, permitted to go on.) The Supreme Court is a nuisance in Calcutta. You should never enter it: you know it is far better to compromise than to enter the Court. You talk of the corruption of the Mofussil Courts; all that was most ably discussed by AMICUS CURIAE, and to this moment remains unanswered by Mr. Turton and the other lawyers. What I propose, gentlemen, is that the Mofussil Courts are the best in the country; "if you fall in with the interests of this meeting," I entreat you to send no body to England. (Here Mr. Pote made a pause, and was asked by the Chairman if he moved any amendment to the resolution before the meeting.) The amendment I have to propose, Mr. Chairman, is that this meeting be forthwith dissolved. (Much laughter and shouts from all sides, which having subsided, the Rev. Mr. Morton addressed the meeting.)

THE REV. MR. MORTON.—Mr. Chairman.—I solicit your indulgence, and that of the meeting, whilst I offer a few observations on the question now before us. I can most truly assure you, Sir, that I had not, when I entered this room to night, the remotest idea that I should be led to utter one word within its walls. But some how or other, as on other occasions so on this, I have been carried away by feelings I can ever but ill restrain. I am an Englishman, Mr. Chairman, although an Irishman—the blunder may be allowed to pass, I hope, in consideration of my country—though a native of a the soil of Ireland, Sir, I am a British citizen; and, the spirit of a free-born Briton glowing within me, I feel it ever difficult to repress the expression of my love for freedom, personal, civil and religious, all over the world. Mr. Pote has asked why Englishmen in India should even desire to be exempted from an equality in sufferance and disadvantages with the natives of the soil; and why, indeed, if that were the sole alternative? But, if I judge aright, the object contemplated in the measures proposed to night, your high and noble aims, not to degrade Englishmen to a level with any class of natives in civil or any other disabilities whatever, but to elevate every class amongst them to an equality with Englishmen in all social rights and civil privileges, in all the blessings which follow in the train of knowledge and civilization to a free people. And for my part, Sir, I cannot for one moment entertain the monstrous, nay the impious, supposition, that the Great God, the ruler of the destinies of nations, whose universal Providence pulls down one power and exalts another, should have in a most remarkable manner called the most highly civilized, the wisest, not powerful, most virtuous of the nations of Europe, to exercise a paramount dominion over the vast extent and countless population of Hindustan, to serve no higher a purpose than the replenishing of an India Company's Exchequer, the augmenting of the dividends of a few princely merchants in Leadenhall Street? No, Sir, far holier and more benignant was and is the design of the Eternal in giving the sovereignty of India to Great Britain; it was to extend, as I firmly believe, to the many millions subjected to her rule, the inestimable benefits of enlightened education, of civil liberty, of perfect morals, of true and pure religion. England has not, however, done her duty, to the extent she might, in fulfilling this glorious behest; nor has the Government of this country been adequately faithful to its sacred trust. Not altogether, I hope and believe, from any express design at any time to impede the designs of Providence, but from a defect of information, from a most timorous and unnecessary apprehensiveness of the danger of untried experiments, from long continued inadvertence to the positive responsibilities resting upon them to govern India for the benefit of India. Who can for a moment suppose, that the natives of this great country are for ever to continue an untaught, demoralized and but half-civilized people? are to continue for ever unqualified and unpermitted, in short, to govern themselves? Doubtless it is but given to us, Sir, to the English Government and the English people, to train and educate the natives of India for becoming a great and free and good and happy people. This is the consummation we all, I trust, desire for India, and with this desire it is I support the measure now proposed, as aiding in its accomplishment.

For the rest, however, I honestly and candidly avow, that I have as yet no distinctly formed opinion upon the individual question of the Black Act so termed; and that simply because unpossessed of the information necessary to enable me to form a settled judgement. I hold it most immaterial and unjust to take up with warmth any view of a question of such grave moment, before one has been qualified for a decision thereon by competent acquaintance with its bearings and merits. But, for this very reason, if for no other, Sir, I should vote for the perpetuation of a committee, because agitation is the life of civil freedom and must elicit the information that should guide our judgement and our measures; and because such a measure pledges no man to any unreasonable partizanship. It simply calls upon every one who loves the blessing of equal laws justly administered for himself, to show that he is worthy to enjoy it by doing whatever in him lies for its ultimate extension to his fellow subject of this country. For me, Sir, I see in the meanest native who supports my palkee, a man like myself, created and born, and having therefore a divine right to every enjoyment and privilege with which I myself am blest; and I should be a traitor to my fellows and an apostate from God, if I were indifferent to his final realization of them.

It has been said to you, that the Parliament of England is an instructed body; it is so, doubtless, as to the interests of our father land; but on Indian affairs, I need not say that it is proverbially rather misinstructed; most profoundly in the dark; lamentably, nay ludicrously, uninformed upon almost every question having reference to this country.

I delight, Sir, to hear such sentiments as were uttered to-night by Dwarkanath Tagore. Myself engaged in promoting the education of the people of India, and in communicating direct religious knowledge amongst them, in the measure in which my voice or my pen can reach them. I am a warm friend to the diffusion of all knowledge; because knowledge is the food of virtue, and the hand-maid of true and pure religion. Well am I convinced too, that in exact proportion to the extension of a sound education will be the progress of our divine faith amongst our Indian fellow subjects.

We have heard it stated, that whilst the Government of Prussia, a comparatively insignificant and feeble European state, expends no less a sum than seventeen shillings and six-pence per head upon the education of its youth, the mighty Government of British India, under the direction of the British Parliament, disburses from its vast revenues, for the same paramount and all-important object, not even one solitary farthing per head! But whence arises the difficulty, admitted on all hands, of administering impartial justice through the medium of our Mofussil courts? It is not said that the laws are altogether partial or inapplicable; it is not said that the European Judges and Magistrates are wanting in acquaintance with the regulations or in intelligence and liberality of sentiment and integrity of principle; no; the chief of the acknowledged obstacles is ever the absence of probity and in corruption in the native officials, omulab, amceus moonisiff and other subordinate functionaries; and the impossibility of securing, by any Government regulations, the services of an honest and active native police. And whence this difficulty, this impossibility, but in that the people are uneducated, and therefore necessarily without principle, without public spirit, without private and social virtue? Till, therefore that consummation so devoutly to be wished for, the mental improvement and moral regeneration of the nations of India, be effected, the Mofussil Courts must continue to be every way immeasurably inferior to the Supreme Court, (with all its delays and its expensiveness,) as resorts for an equal, enlightened and uncorrupt administration of justice. It is too well known to be at this day a matter of question to any man, that whatever the intelligence, the probity, or the watchfulness of a Mofussil Judge or Magistrate, he cannot certainly, if it all be, reached, nor can right, however clear, be certainly established in these Courts, save through bribery. But can bribery be even attempted in the Supreme Court of Calcutta? The question answers itself.

With the gentlemen of the Calcutta bar, I have no personal acquaintance in a single instance; but I do know something of their public acts; and this I know, that on very many occasions involving the highest interests of all classes of the community; in the advocacy of measures of public utility, enlightenment and humanity, they have ever stood prominently forward, and for this I honor and applaud them. We have been told they are munificently remunerated for their legal services: and why should they not, Sir, when half a life has usually been expended in acquiring, by a mental drudgery that would prove intolerable to most minds, the knowledge and information requisite to guide them in defending the rights and liberties, the persons, properties and lives of their fellow-citizens? Is the benefit of the vast learning and uncorrupt, impartial judgment of British Judges, the advocacy of enlightened, talented and liberal British lawyers, too dearly purchased at any cost?

It is a maxim of the Christian religion, Sir, that "the law was not made for a righteous man." He will be just without, and therefore needs not its restraints; but where universal ignorance and civil degradation, a mental and moral slavery of ages, have entailed universal baseness of sentiment and laxity of principle, it is chimerical to think of finding agents for a wise and honest administration of justice. Nor is the general influence upon society of our divine religion, (I speak to Christians) to be lightly estimated; it is great even when it has had but small operation in the production of individual piety. Happily in that elevating, ennobling and generous influence, our lawyers must and do very largely participate. We can trust them with confidence, we can rely upon their honor, their impartiality and their love equally of freedom and of justice. I should blush, therefore, Mr. Chairman, for myself, not as a Christian only; but as a man and as a Briton, I should blush for my country, if it could be said with truth that there was a man amongst us who should, who could be backward with hand and voice, and, last not least, in opening his purse strings, as the expression has been used, in contribution to the improvement of our fellow-subjects of India, in supporting and aiding any measure aimed at calculated to extend amongst them the benefits of just and equal laws, a pure administration of law and all the other advantages of civil freedom, of good and liberal Government. I fear, Sir, I have too largely trespassed upon the patience of the meeting, and shall therefore now conclude, by giving my cordial support to the motion.

Mr. Pote's amendment, "THAT THIS MEETING BE FORTHWITH DISSOLVED," which was put by the Chairman, amidst roars of laughter from all parts of the room, not being supported, was dropped, and the original motion unanimously carried, Mr. Pote, apparently on reconsideration, also supporting it.—Hurkatu, Nov. 28.

Moved by Mr. D. Hare and seconded by Baboo Caspersaud Ghose.

6.—That the thanks of the subscribers to the former petition, and of the inhabitants of Calcutta in this and the former meeting, on the subject of Act No. XI. of 1836, in Town Hall assembled, are due to Lord Brougham, to Mr. Ward, the Member for Sheffield, and to the Members of both Houses, who have supported the prayer of the former petitioners and shown themselves friendly to our cause.
Carried unanimously.

Mr. CLARKE—Gentlemen, - I have been requested to move the next resolution, and before I conclude I will explain to you, why it has been put into my hands, and the reason which has influenced the framers of the motion, to select me in particular to bestow the induction it administers. You, gentlemen, have just voted thanks to Lord Brougham and Mr. Ward, as the tried and staunch friends of the best interests of this country, and now I have to call upon you to denounce its greatest enemy, Thomas Babington Macaulay. (Loud cheering.) At our last meeting Mr. Cook proposed an address to the Legislature, to recall Mr. Macaulay. That he deserved to have such a resolution passed, was, I believe, the unanimous opinion; but Mr. Turtton, Mr. Dickens, and I interfered. — (Mr. Dickens, and Mr. Grant.) Yes, and Mr. Grant, interfered, and stated that we had no positive proof against him. General report gave Mr. Macaulay the credit for this measure, but we could not fix this man. Now his own minutes are published by Parliament. We have his very words, his political dogmas, his false assertions, his wilful mis-representations, his machinations for the future, bare, unmasked, laid open and exposed to all, and this to the highest authority. Now we have him on the hip, before we had not, and now is the time to send abroad among men, the opinion of the people of India of this Indian Legislator. Gentlemen, this resolution entirely corresponds with my views on this important subject, but I have only recently seen it, and not having taken any part in framing it, I can, without improperly, say, that I consider it to be admirably drawn up. You will find when I read it to you, that it contains the reasons for the resolution which you pass. Those reasons are Mr. Macaulay's own words, they are indisputable, and on these indisputable facts, we call on our brethren in England to say, are we not right in denouncing this man as the enemy of India? (cheers) Gentlemen, I shall now read the resolution to you; but in reading it, I shall make a running commentary on Mr. Macaulay's minutes, which are embodied in it. The resolution is this.

"Resolved, because we find that Thomas Babington Macaulay, while holding the high trust and offices of fourth ordinary Member of the Council of India, and an Indian law Commissioner, in a minute without date, printed by authority of Parliament, and written by him as such Councillor, used the words following." "We know that India cannot have a free Government, but she may have the next best thing; a firm and impartial despotism." (a)

Mark you these words, gentlemen—mark ye these words I say—that the next best thing to a free Government, is a firm despotism. Good God! has any Englishman dared, hired and bribed as he may have been, to utter language like this? (Loud cheers) I blush that such a man should be my countryman. Loud cheering.) A man who could dare to send forth in an era like this, that all must be slaves or all must be free! Yet this Mr. Macaulay has done, and of his language there can be no dispute. Well, then, this resolution proceeds.

(a) Mr. Pote, who had frequently interrupted the Revd. Mr. Morton during his speech, and had been as often called to order, continued his interruptions, and about this part of Mr. Clarke's speech, called the speaker to order on the ground of irrelevancy. The chairman said, Mr. Clarke was reading a resolution and could not be considered out of order.

"The worst state in which she can possibly be placed, is that in which the memorialists would place her. They call on us to recognize them as a privileged order of freemen, in the midst of slaves."

Indeed! Where did Mr. Macaulay learn this? I know more of India and its natives than he possibly can. Sixteen years practice at the bar of its metropolis, has given me no small insight to the laws, the habits, the customs, the language of the natives, to no knowledge of which can he pretend from his short and secluded residence here (b)

I have yet to learn that Englishmen are in the midst of slaves. I have yet to learn where slaves in India are to be found. (Loud cheers.) Certain am I that when an attempt was made to enslave the Hill coolies,—when an attempt was made to carry the free peasant of India to the slave colony of the Mauritius, when Mr. Macaulay's compomers, the Indian Government, signed not, all Calcutta roe. Our Bishop, his Clergy, every independent man in Calcutta, assembled in this Hall and denounced the infamous traffic. We said it may be true that the coolie is wretched,—he may want some clothes, and food, but he shall not be trapped into slavery, by selling him to slave owners and exporting him for that purpose. (c) Then, I ask you, in the face of this great and public act of the citizens of Calcutta, can it be said that we live in the midst of slaves. I say the assertion is false. (Cheers) I say it is a libel by Macaulay on his own Government, and his countrymen. (Loud cheers.) But, gentlemen, suppose it true, Mr. Macaulay's position is infinitely worse, (laughter.) Aye, worse, and I will show you how. Mr. Macaulay says we, the English, are in the midst of slaves, and Englishmen are not to be a privileged order; that is in my simple understanding, that living among slaves, we, the English, are not to be privileged but to be slaves also. What other possible construction can be put on those orders? there they are, they speak for themselves, and Macaulay came to India to write down that Englishmen ought to be slaves (Loud cheers) Well, gentlemen, to stop my running commentary, and proceed with my resolution, it continues this.

"It was for the purpose of averting this great evil, that Parliament, at the same time that it suffered Englishmen to settle in India, armed us with those large powers, which, in my opinion, we all deserve to possess if we have not the spirit to use them now. And in another minute, also without date and printed by like authority, used (in speaking of the draft of an Act called No. XI. of 1836, which had been published for general information, and against which certain Englishmen and others had presented a respectful memorial) the words following. But its intrinsic merits are now the smallest part of the question. There is no want of argument for passing it, (b). Here Mr. Pote again called out "that is nothing to the purpose, or words to that effect. "Turn him out, turn him out" from all sides, with groans and hisses. Order, order from the chair.

(c) Here Mr. Pote again interrupted the speaker and was again called to order. The chairman begged of him to keep quiet, and as he had been permitted to address the meeting, the chairman hoped, he would now permit others to do the same without interruption Mr. Pote to the chairman, "Am I out of order, Mr. chairman?" The chairman, "Yes, you are out of order, Mr. Pote, and I beg of you to stay quiet."

but the strongest of those arguments is the manner in which it has been opposed."

The manner, gentlemen—! the manner—! Judge on the importance, the necessity of the measure, that, according to Mr. Macaulay, is a secondary reason! the strongest argument of all is that Mr. Macaulay, forsooth, has a distaste to our manners.—(laughter.) And this is the fourth ordinary Member of Council, the great Legislator for India! (laughter.) To what is it that this monstrous doctrine would lead? To passive obedience (cheers.) No matter how the free spirit of man may be kindled—no matter to what he may be worked up, by finding his constitutional rights, aye, his very birthright taken from him, let the manner of his resistance not be palatable to his oppressor, and Thomas Babington Macaulay propounds, that the offence of resistance justifies the oppression (cheers.) Gentlemen, I proceed with my resolution (d)

"And in a certain other minute, also without date, and printed by like authority, used the words following. "In the first place I think that nothing can be more pernicious or absurd than to base certain bodies of functionaries are corrupt, to exempt from the jurisdiction a very small class distinguished by intrepidity, and hatred of oppression and fraud; accustomed to pure administration of justice, and accustomed also to think little of the frown of power; certain to complain whenever they think themselves wronged, and certain to be heard whenever they complain. Such a class the English settlers in the Mofussil will be."

Gentlemen, I shall reply to this, by reminding you of the admirable answer which it has already received in an editorial of the Harkum newspaper. Suppose, the writer says, when the Palee plague was raging the Governor-General had driven into that infested district all the Europeans over whom he had control, alledging that as their habits were cleanly and their exertions strenuous, all the drains and sources of filth would be speedily cleansed, and the evil itself be removed; would that inevitable sacrifice of life,—that violation of the plain moral axiom not to do evil that good may come of it, be tolerated for a moment? No, I say. (Cheers.) Yet this is the plain, obvious, common sense result of Mr. Macaulay's doctrine. Is it not? (Loud cheers.) But I proceed with the resolution. (e)

"And in another part of the last-mentioned Minute, used the words following. "If, therefore, I thought that the Mofussil courts were as bad as the Petitioners describe them to be, I should still say, put the English settler under them; then we shall know the whole; then we shall have ten corrupt functionaries brought to shame and punishment, for one who is now detected. Many abuses there undoubtedly are in the Company's courts, and, therefore, I would give the English settler a common interest with the Native, in the exposing of these abuses." (f)

(d) About this part of the speech, Mr. Pote became so noisy and disorderly, frequently putting questions and calling out, that Mr. Clarke was obliged to sit down, in the midst of roars of turn him out, hisses and groans. The Chairman again begged Mr. Pote to be quiet or to leave the room. Mr. Pote "You may laugh at me, but I despise you—I laugh at you all." The Chairman:—"Mr. Pote, if you laugh at the meeting you must leave it." Mr. Pote, "I will not leave the meeting." Some little order being produced, Mr. Clarke got up and resumed his speech.

(e) Here Mr. Pote again interrupted. We saw him speaking to a constable who had placed himself near Mr. Pote. The chairman on again receiving interruption called out "constable be ready."

(f) Mr. Pote was again out of order and noisy, which conduct having been repeated so often, the meeting at

Why, how profoundly ignorant this man is! how utterly unconsent—must he be of the real state of the country! or if he does know it, how he purposely misrepresents it!—(Cheers.) This is an important point of the question, and suffer me, by undoubted facts, to show how erroneous Mr. Macaulay is. Mr. Macaulay says—“If, therefore, I thought that the Mofussil Courts were as bad as the petitioners describe them to be.” Now the meaning of this is that Mr. Macaulay doubts that they are so bad as we describe them. I will go to the proofs. I will go to facts—facts into which he never enquired, but which the slightest enquiry would have brought before him thousands of more instances, than your time will permit me to mention. Let me introduce these facts with a slight exordium taken from Sir J. C. Hobhouse’s speech on the 22d March last,

“Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has devoted much of his address to night in going into what he doubtless considers a just description of the Provincial Courts. He tells you they are corrupt and ignorant—that they have no means of knowing the facts of the cases brought before them, and that in point of fact they are such tribunals as no Englishman ought to consent to be tried by. Now, Sir, is the honorable gentleman’s description of these Courts correct?—if it be so, if what he has stated be true, then I say, shame on England that has governed that country for upwards of a century; more shame upon this country for allowing the tribunals of that vast Peninsula, which has been a source of opulence and fame to us, to remain in such a disgraceful state of ignorance and incompetency; but, Sir, I beg to deny the fact, and if time would serve me, I could shew that although those courts are not such as they ought to be—although justice is not administered by them as well as it might be, still I can prove that we have no right if the law be considered good enough for our Indian subjects to exempt a privileged class belonging to our own country from its operations.”

Why, what untrammelled Englishman, who ever lived in India, thought Mofussil law was good enough for Indian subjects? Make your laws good, you will make your subjects good. What we say is, give the Natives English law, not Mofussil law; raise them to our level, and you will consult the interest of both Great Britain and India; but if you give them only Mofussil law, you merely consult the interests of the East India stockholders. Now I come to my proofs, and I will but adduce a few of what the Company’s courts really are. For my first instance I will turn to the fact related by Mr. Ward, on the very debate in which Sir J. C. Hobhouse said it would be a shame on England if justice were so badly administered.

Mr. Ward, in that debate stated—I cite his words from the Mirror of Parliament—

“Then there was the case in which a friend of mine was connected, Mr. Thackeray, who having delivered a judicial opinion contrary to the interests of the Company, was suspended from his high functions and was forced to apologise for the expressions he had made use of. He states distinctly that he was suspended, because he had given an opinion which was supposed to interfere with the Company’s interests and—(in the petition which he sent to this country) he adds that no Englishman can efficiently exercise the functions of a judge, whilst he is so dependant on the Company.”

last appeared to be aigh going to turn him out. All eyes were directed towards the chair and Mr. Pote, who unmindful of all, continued talking and interrupting; when the chairman called out, “constable remove that gentleman.” Hereupon Mr. Pote was laid hold of by two constables, who, notwithstanding his struggles, succeeded in taking him out of the room. The business then proceeded without interruption.

Such, gentlemen, was the accusation against the mode of administering justice in the Company’s Court, by one of their highest Judges. Conscientiousness may be very good in its way, but all notions of justice are to be lost, when the Company’s interests intervene, and the highest judge in the Empire is to be disgraced, provided his notions of rectitude, cost the people in Leaden Hall Street, one single rupee. (Cheers.) But the case of Mr. Courtney Smith is familiar to you all. He was the most distinguished judge who ever adorned the Sudder Dewāny Adawlut; such at least is my opinion, and I believe the opinion of all India. (Loud cheers.) Yet, gentlemen, was he menaced with dismissal because he was not subservient. All Calcutta, all India knows the story—(Cheers.) I need not, therefore, detain you. But, gentlemen, if such be the conduct that the Indian Government has exercised over their highest judicial functionaries, if you find the Government compelling their highest judges to be corrupt, or to be deprived of their bread, what becomes of that reliance which a nation ought to have on judicial authority? I have told you of two cases where intimidation has been used; I will not further mention Mr. Pringle’s, as that has been already detailed, except by reminding you, that the authorities at home, have pronounced some of the present Judges of the Sudder, and a present Member of Council, is sanctioning corruption, and oppression, and yet have left the supposed offenders—(supposed I call them) in the full plenitude of power for the commission of further guilt. And now for another specimen of the Company’s Courts. But let me first, in justice to myself, assure you that in alluding to the Culna and Burdwan transactions, I shall not say one word regarding any conduct which was recently investigated in the Supreme Court, or which yet may be under trial; and I believe that no one here will for a moment suppose, I could be guilty of so gross an impropriety. It is of the system of conducting business, adopted then, and long and still existing, of which I speak. You know, gentlemen, that a most serious accusation was preferred at the Calcutta Police against Mr. Ogilvie, the Magistrate at Burdwan, regarding the loss of life at Culna; that the case went before the Grand Jury, who returned a true bill; now, I tell you, that at the very time the Calcutta Police were investigating the charge, Mr. Ogilvie, the person accused, was employed, under the orders of Government, to take evidence at Burdwan regarding the same transaction. Mr. Smith, the Superintendent of Police, was nominally, and farcically directed to investigate, but he was not permitted to examine a witness. The gentleman against whom this heavy charge was pending, and while the legal proceedings were in progress, was the person whom this Government order to take the depositions, and by him the whole of them were taken, not in open Court, not in his Cutcherry or Justice room, but in his private house, with closed doors, and guards upon them to exclude all intruders. It is of the Government only that I speak, for Mr. Ogilvie did but obey their orders. Does any man believe, that this would be credited for a single moment in England? (Cheers.) It would be laughed at as an idle tale, yet every man who hears me, and was in India in the month of May last, knows that it is true. (Cheers.) Bring the case home to yourselves. Suppose any one of you had his life, liberty, or fortune at stake, arising from the acts of some person whom you looked on as the author of your peril, what would your terror, your feelings be, if the power from whom you sought your redress, committed the investigation of your case, to the person whom you accused? (Cheers.) But monstrous as this is, yet so peculiar is the system in this place, that I have only met with two gentlemen in the civil service, of the large number with whom I am acquainted, who could be brought to comprehend that the proceeding was improper. Gentlemen, the next case I have to notice, I brought before the Supreme Court the other day, in moving for a certiorari to remove a criminal conviction which had been made by Mr. Allau, the Joint Magistrate of Nuddea, for errors apparent on the face of the conviction. He had fined Mr. Russell, a most respectable indigo planter, 100 Rs. for an alleged assault, and by the Magistrate's own albedo, or conviction, it appeared, that Mr. Russell, not having any witnesses there being only the prosecutor's wife and servants present, desired that the lady's evidence might be taken, and the more especially, as he was accused of having insulted her; whereas he insisted that he had behaved to her with marked respect, and felt assured she would do him the justice of stating so. No, no, says the Magistrate,—mind, gentlemen, I give you the words of his own albedo—of what service can the evidence of a woman be to the accused party? (laughter) Beside the disposition of the defendant is manifest, he would degrade her more by bringing her into Court, the requisition for the same salub is therefore inadmissible, Mrs. Egelbight, gentlemen, not being either a Moolhummoodan or Hindoo, nor enobled by the honors of the purdah. (Laughter.) But this was a trifle to what followed. Mr. Egelbight had sworn, that Mr. Russell had given him a shove, but his servants, like stout Bengallee oaths-men, swore to three severe blows; here was a discrepancy, but to a Mofussil magistrate the obstacle was slight. It does not at all, says the ingenious justice, in his albedo, impeach the credibility of any of the witnesses, for, doubtless, the grief and indignation of the gentleman at the insult was so overwhelming, that he did not perceive or feel the blows. (Loud Laughter.) Well, I need hardly tell you, that the Supreme Court did take the case out of the Mofussil magistrate's hands.

I am aware of that case, mentioned by Mr. Fenwick, and it is perfectly true, that when a most respectable gentleman was called upon to pay a fine, which had been imposed on him, and he inquired of the magistrate why no notice of any proceedings had been sent to him, he was assured, with all possible politeness, that the worthy justice only deemed that he was consulting the defendant's convenience, by requiring him to pay the fine at once, instead of being put to the trouble to defend himself. (Laughter.) You have heard, gentlemen, of the delays of the Supreme Court; but they are trifling to the lengthy journeys of a Mofussil suit. In one case, I know a person in the Sudder, well versed in the arts of litigation, coolly tell a client of mine, you had better take half the debt and give me a release in full, or as I am not subject to the Supreme Court Jurisdiction, I will, by successive appeals, keep you out of your money for twelve years. I considered the advice prudent, and the terms were complied with. But if they talk of the expenses and delays of the Supreme Court, what will they say to the case of Bhiv Jha and his son Rajleh Beghagovind Sing. In 1807 it was, that the Court of Moorshedabad pronounced its first decree, and in 1838, the appeals are now pending in the Judicial Committee. None can tell the costs of this suit. I have heard them estimated at twenty lacs, but this I do know, that Mr. Charles Reed claims, as a remuneration for his work and labor, as legal mooktear or attorney in the suit, 42 lacs of rupees, (loud cheers) secured to him by deeds, which may be good by Mofussil practice and Hindoo law, but which, by English law, would never be tolerated. Well, gentlemen, 32 years of litigation, and £4,20,000 British for the work and labor of the plaintiff's attorney only, to say nothing of the £200,000 estimated expenses of the proceeding, is a modest example of expedition and economy in the administration of Mofussil justice.

Let me give you another instance, gentlemen. A client of mine was opposed in the Insolvent Court the other day, because he would not state what had become of a sum of money which was known to have been in his possession; he dare not tell the Court openly what he had done with it, and was therefore sent back to prison. He was brought up again, was not opposed, and was discharged, for in the mean time he had satisfied his creditors and his assignee, that to preserve his estate from the plunder of a Mofussil decree he had been obliged to buy justice,—give buckshees and salamee to the native omrah, and that the money had actually been laid out for the benefit of the creditors. I tell you, that no man knows this better than the Assignees of the great insolvent firms, and I assert, that had they not winked at the application of large sums of money by their Agents in the Native Courts, the inevitable consequence would have been an enormous loss to the creditors. You know it, and you know it well, that excepting in our Queen's Courts, unless justice be paid for, it can never be obtained in India. (Loud cheers.)

Gentlemen, this has been a long digression, occasioned by my comments on the last of Mr. Macaulay's Minutes, which have been recited in the resolution which I am now proposing. I now proceed with the rest of the resolution.

"And because we find that the said Thomas Babington Macaulay, by the said last mentioned words, and by the words used in a letter addressed to the Government, and signed by him amongst other persons, and prefixed to the draft of a penal code, expressed a deliberate opinion and advised the Government that British subjects ought to be deprived, and can be deprived of trial by jury when resident out of the limits of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, we therefore resolve, that the said Thomas Babington Macaulay hath, as such Councillor and Commissioner, wilfully, maliciously, and in breach of his duty as such Councillor, advised the Government of India to make laws contrary to the unwritten law and constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, whereon doth depend in a high degree the allegiance of all British subjects to the crown of the United Kingdom.

And we record it to be our solemn and deliberate conviction, that the said Thomas Babington Macaulay, has forfeited all claim to the confidence of his countrymen has disgraced his country, and has proved himself the enemy of India."

Such, gentlemen, is the resolution which I have the honor of proposing to you, and I think it has been cautiously and wisely framed. It is a serious matter for so very large and so highly respectable a meeting as this, to brand a man with the stigma of being a disgrace to his country, and to denounce him to be the enemy of a vast nation. Such things should not be hastily or rashly done, and the most convincing testimony should be adduced of the absolute justice of the accusation—(cheers.)—What is our testimony? Mr. Macaulay's own words, and of their genuineness no man can doubt; and that they assert untruths, and breathe principles a thousand times worse than this his Black Act, no real Englishman will dare to deny—(loud cheers.) Again I ask, where are the slaves in the midst of whom he represents the English to be? It is untrue, a false assertion, wilfully framed to work out his purpose; but if that be true, what think you of this Statesman's reason for reducing and condemning freemen, and his own countrymen, to slavery? This resolution contains the over acts of Mr. Macaulay, and as men not destitute of understanding; as men who know their rights; as men who will resist oppression, aye, and war with their oppressor, I call on you to brand him as the enemy of India. Gentlemen, here let me explain to you how this man is in the most literal sense of the expression, the enemy of India. Where the advice he has given to be acted on, there would be, or at least ought to be, an immediate rebellion, for the tie of allegiance between the Sovereign and the subject would be broken. The Queen has duties to perform, as well as we her subjects, and if she violates those duties, we are no longer bound to obey her, and have a right to expel her, and place another sovereign on the throne. This was what was done when our sovereign's own ancestors attained the British Crown. The second James would have destroyed the British constitution, and trampled on his subjects' rights. Then came the glorious and bloodless revolution, which banished him the realm, and placed his sceptre in the hands of his child, guiltless of his acts, and constitutional in her principles. But James never attained anything so tyrannical as what Macaulay recommends to our Sovereign, to establish a firm despotism - to reduce the English to the same state as the slaves whom he falsely asserts surround them, and to hand eighty millions of people over to corrupt Courts of Justice. (Cheers) I quote his own words gentlemen, (Cheers) I say on constitutional principle, acknowledged by all, questioned by none, that the British Sovereign who does this, forfeits the allegiance of the British people, (Loud Cheers.)

But this has not been done, and by our Sovereign never will be done. (Cheering.) Now let Macaulay, who has dared to give the advice, who for the sake of the Masters who hired him has striven to re-establish their rule, by breaking the tie of allegiance between the Sovereign and her subjects, be denounced and held up to scorn and contempt. (Loud Cheers.) Gentlemen, it may be asserted, that the people of Calcutta are factious; but never was assertion more false. They are patient, they are enduring, forgiving, and to prone to lend and attach themselves to their rulers. Never has one left us, with the solitary exception of Macaulay, but all that he may have done ill, has been forgotten, and all his good acts have been commemorated and extolled. I appeal, gentlemen, to the friends of Lord Hastings, to Lord Amherst, Lord Bentinck, and Sir Charles Metcalfe, for the truth of this. Nay, more, I assert, that there is an extraordinary propensity to foster the fondest and kindest anticipations of the future popularity of our rulers, when they first arrive. Never was this feeling more marked, than on the arrival of Mr Macaulay. His speeches, his best essays in the Edinburgh Review, nay, the poetry of his lighter hours, crowded the columns of the public press; all hailed and received him with delight, and his Scottish descent was eagerly caught at, to place him in the chair at the national festival of St. Andrew. But, oh! what a change was wrought, wrought by himself alone. Remember ye the hour of his departure, the manner of his departure, the stern silence of contempt and detestation under which he slunk away. We have not been hasty or rash in our judgments: we refrained from condemning till we had our proofs, but now that they are attained, fearlessly pronounce your sentence. I have told you, gentlemen, when I began, that I would state to you my belief, of what the motives of the gentlemen were, who placed this resolution in my hand. When the long official labors, the admirable public conduct, the private virtues, and that great patriotic work which freed the press of India, excited for Sir Charles Metcalfe that burst of gratitude under which he left our shores, mine was the proud lot to be called on by my fellow citizens to preside in the chair at the festival given to him. Presiding at a banquet unexampled for the numbers attending, it became my duty, I say, my proud duty, to express the feelings of gratitude to the assembled crowds to that eminent statesman, for his Act No. XI of 1835, the Charter of Freedom to the Indian Press. Now, be it my proud duty also, in the same hall, and within one little year, forth Macaulay Act No. XI, of 1836, to brand its author with the execration of his fellow-citizens. Metcalfe, the patriot, won your gratitude; Macaulay, the world-enslaver, must wither under your contempt. (Loud cheers.) The feelings of gratitude, and the feelings of courage, should reign in the same bosom. Be prompt to honor those who have claims on you, and shrink not from denouncing your enemy. (Cheers.) Let me be the appointed one, to meet out equal justice which springs from gratitude, not from subservency - justice which springs from fearlessness, not from faction. Metcalfe did you a lasting service, let your gratitude be unbounded; Macaulay has done you lasting wrong, brand him with your execration (Loud cheering.) Mr. Clarke then re-read and moved the resolution.

7.—Because we find that Thomas Babington Macaulay, while holding the high trust and offices of fourth ordinary member of the Council of India, and India Law Commissioner, in a minute without date, printed by authority of Parliament, and written by him as such Councillor, used the words following:

"We know that India cannot have a free government; but she may have the next best thing; a firm and impartial despotism. The worst state in which she can possibly be placed, is that in which the Memorialists would place her. They call on us to recognize them as a privileged order of freemen in the midst of slaves. It was for the purpose of averting this great evil that Parliament, at the same time at which it suffered Englishmen to settle in India, armed us with those large powers, which, in my opinion, we all deserve to possess, if we have not the spirit to use them now."

And in another minute, also without date, and printed by like authority, used (in speaking of the draft of an Act, called No. XI, of 1836, which had been published for general information and against which certain Englishmen and others had presented a respectful memorial) the words following:—

"But its intrinsic merits are now the smallest part of the question. There is no want of arguments for passing it. But the strongest of those arguments, is the manner in which it has been opposed."

And in a certain other minute, also without date, and printed by like authority, used the words following:—

"In the first place, I think that nothing can be more pernicious or absurd, than, because certain bodies of functionaries are corrupt, to exempt from their jurisdiction a very small class, distinguished by integrity and by hatred of oppression and fraud, accustomed to a pure administration of justice, and accustomed also to think little of the frown of power; certain to complain whenever they think themselves wronged, and certain to be heard whenever they complain. Such a class the English settlers in the Mofussil will be."

And in another part of the last mentioned minute used the words following:—

"If, therefore, I thought that the Mofussil Courts were as bad as the petitioners describe them to be, I should still say, 'Put the English settler under them; then we shall know the whole; then we shall have ten corrupt functionaries brought to shame and punishment for one who is detected now.' Many abuses there undoubtedly are in the Company's courts; and, therefore, I would give the English settler a common interest with the native in the exposing of these abuses."

And because we find that the said Thomas Babington Macaulay, by the said last mentioned words, and by the words used in a letter addressed to the Government and signed by him amongst other persons and prefixed to the draft of a penal code, expressed a deliberate opinion and advised the Government that British subjects ought to be deprived and can be deprived of trial by Jury when resident out of the limits Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, therefore we resolve, that the said Thomas Babington Macaulay hath, as such Councillor and Commissioner, wilfully, maliciously, and in breach of his duty as such Councillor, advised the Government of India to make laws contrary to the unwritten law and constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, whereon both depend, in a high degree, the allegiance of all British subjects to the crown of the United Kingdom.

And we record it to be our solemn and deliberate conviction, that the said Thomas Babington Macaulay, has forfeited all claim to the confidence of his countrymen, has disgraced his country, and has proved himself the enemy of India.

MR. DICKENS.—Gentleman.—I rise to second and support the motion of my friend, Mr. Clarke. The grounds of the resolution on which we pronounce the condemnation of Mr. Macaulay, are clear and precise, they speak for themselves. After what has been so well said by Mr. Clark, after what is expressed in this Resolution, which I have distinctly read to you, and feeling as I do towards this man, I should disclaim to add one word in support of the Resolution, unless indeed it should be opposed.

The Resolution was then duly put from the chair and carried unanimously.

Mr. T. DICKENS rose to move the following resolution, which he prefaced by a few appropriate remarks.

8.—That the thanks of this meeting be given to T. E. M. Turton, Esq., the Agent of the Petitioners, also to John Crawford, Esq., who has acted on our behalf during the absence of Mr. Turton in Canada,

Dwarkanauth Tanna, in rising to second the above resolution, stated, that he had received several letters from Mr. Turton, which enabled him to explain, that the departure of that gentleman from England to Canada, in company with Lord Durham, so far from being any way detrimental to the cause with which he had been entrusted, was likely in a great measure to advance it. In the first place, Mr. Turton had left the business in such hand—that it could not possibly suffer, and secondly, it was not improbable that the official connexion of Mr. Turton with Lord Durham, would open for him a way to the British Parliament or some other post of consequence, in either of which situations his advocacy of our cause would be invaluable. He, therefore, thought that the step Mr. Turton had taken, was very judicious and favourable to our cause.

He would take the opportunity of being on his legs, and state to the meeting, that on the occasion when they had met before on the same business, there was some disorder caused by a humorous gentleman, (Captain Bidden) giving three cheers to the Duke of Wellington, which Mr. Macaulay had not forgotten to notice in a manner so as to cast a slur on the whole proceedings of that meeting. That was no doubt unfair on the part of Mr. Macaulay, yet as such notices may create an erroneous bias, unfavorable to the proceedings, he (the speaker) felt himself obliged to state, in reference to the disorder created by Mr. Pote, and his subsequent expulsion from the meeting, that such an occurrence was neither extraordinary nor unexpected when Mr. Pote was present. He (the speaker) had often been at public meetings held here, and he could say, that whenever he saw Mr. Pote, whether it was morning, noon or night, he was sure to make some display of his talents. He was sure Mr. Pote had not come with any wish to create a disturbance, and that what he had done, originated from nothing but a habitual desire to make a speech and take a share in the proceedings.

The usual vote of thanks to the chair was then moved by Mr. Clarke, and carried by loud acclamations, and no chairman could have better deserved them. The Meeting broke up at about 10 p. m.—There were about 500 persons present.—Hark, Nov. 29.

BENGAL BONDED WAREHOUSE ASSOCIATION.

Report by the Directors of the Bengal Bonded Warehouse Association, submitted to a General Meeting of the proprietors held on the 19th of November 1838.

The progress of the building has of late been tardy. We found room to feel considerable dissatisfaction ; and, after some ineffectual attempts to correct what was faulty, and to provide for the sequel of the work being executed without the occurrence of difficulties, and free from all objection, we judged it advisable to solicit the Government to allow the Association the benefit of the aid and advice of an Engineer Officer to such extent as might not interfere with his Official avocations. Government, in that spirit of favor which they have uniformly manifested to this undertaking, promptly accorded our request ; but we are constrained to state that, as yet, circumstances have prevented our securing the assistance we so much desired.

We place on the table four letters, which were brought by the late Overland Mails, from Mr. Anderson and Mr. Speir, under dates 3d and 31st August, and 1st September.

By these you will learn, that about 550 tons of the iron work had been shipped in the James Ewing, (already arrived,) Allerton, Elizabeth, and John Knox, which had sailed in July and August ; that 105 tons were loading in the Nerva, advertised to sail on 10th

September ; and that they expected to despatch the remainder of the castings in the course of September, so that all will be here before they can be required.

That you may understand the extent of that remainder, as well as the particulars of the whole commission, allow us to explain that, of 443 columns ordered, there had been shipped.....	310

112 Sole Plates, ditto.....	112
430 Flooring Beams, ditto.....	339
117 Roofing Beams, ditto.....	none

1080 Stay Bolts, ditto.....	none
1332 Coupling Bolts, substituted for the residue of the Hoops, ditto.....	none
It may not here be inopportune to remind you, that the estimated costs of the iron work was	£ 8550
Freight and Insurance say.....	1500
	£ 10,050

A sum of £6,000 was remitted long ago ; and a further remittance of £4,000 was made last June, to be forwarded by the Steamer from Bombay on the beginning of July. Had that Steamer not been compelled to put back the remittance would have been in England by the date of our last advice.

From the rise in the market, and the course of trade, a great deal of merchandise has been removed from the warehouse since August. We look to this being compensated ere long, the chief season of importation being at hand. And we continue, notwithstanding, to expect that some dividend may be made by the end of the cold season, from the limited operations conducted in the old godowns on these premises. It is not necessary, we presume, to inform you, that the business which the compass of the present accommodation permits to be transacted, is no test nor measure of what may be called into operation whenever you have even the present range of warehouse erected.—Harkn, November 24.

MEETING OF CATHOLICS.

In pursuance of a requisition sent round by the Vestry and the Trustees of the Church of Nossa Senhora D'Rozario, alias the Principal Roman Catholic Church of Calcutta, to some of the members of that communion, a meeting was held at the parochial house on Saturday last, the 24th instant. The Reverend Vicar of the Church, Fre Antonio De Santa Maria, took the chair at about half past 7 o'clock, and opened the proceedings by reading the requisition for the Meeting.

Mr. M. Crow addressed the chair, and called to the recollection of the meeting, that 6 years ago they had met at the Trade Rooms to petition the Holy See of Rome for British Pastors, that this prayer had been granted, and that the Most Reverend Dr. St. Leger, with several English Clergy, had come out in consequence. Six years, he said, we had laboured, in it, the cause of the reforms consequent on that measure, and which were well known to all ; but that now, Rome had appointed a foreign Dignitary to succeed Dr. St. Leger in the important Vicariate of Bengal, and it was thus likely that the whole of our labours for so many years, would come to nothing. It was not his intention, however, to oppose the mandates of Rome in any manner, and he trusted there was not one present who would differ from him in that respect. "Rome has spoken—the cause is finished." The newly appointed Vicar Apostolic must, therefore, be received with every mark of respect and submission ; but that did not prevent the Catholics of Calcutta from petitioning the Holy See for a British Prelate to preside over the Vicariate of Bengal—a Prelate who spoke the language that we all speak, and who could instruct us and conduct our public meetings and other affairs in a language we all understand. He felt it his duty to state, that he received the news of Dr. St. Leger's succession with the deepest regret ; but as the present meeting had not been convened for the purpose of expressing our sentiments in regard to Dr. St. Leger, he (the speaker) would not then enter upon that topic, but reserve the expression of his sentiments for another opportunity, which he hoped would soon offer. He concluded by moving the first Resolution, which was to the following effect,

That a petition be submitted to the Holy See, praying for the appointment of a British Prelate to the Vicariate of Bengal, instead of a foreigner.

This resolution was seconded by Mr. T. Gregory.

Mr. R. Dias regretted the necessity he was under of taking a part in the proceedings of the evening, which were to him exceedingly painful. He was, however, glad to meet so many who were zealous in the cause in which, as Mr. Crow had said, we have laboured now for six years. Mr. Dias then adverted to the various benefits which the Most Reverend Dr. St. Leger had conferred on the Catholic community, in bringing to a close the very vexatious lawsuit which had for years divided the community, in reconciling differences among the people, and in various other ways. In Dr. St. Leger, we had all that we could require in a gentleman and a prelate ; but what return had he received for the obligations he had conferred on us ? Nothing but gross and barefaced ingratitude ! but, happily, only from a few, very few, indeed. Mr. Dias then adverted to a rumour which he had heard, that there was an intrigue on foot to deprive this church of the ministry of British pastors, which rumour he thought received confirmation from the appointment of the Bishop of Cochin China, who is certainly not suited to this Vicariate in which nine-tenths of the people understand only the English language. Under such circumstances no time, he thought, ought to be lost, in petitioning the Holy See.

Mr. P. S. D'Rozario here stated, that he had learnt, upon the authority of the Bishop of Cochin China, that his Lordship's appointment was but temporary ; and under that circumstance he thought it premature and disrespectful to the Holy See to petition.

Mr. Crow wished to know from Mr. D'Rozario and all who were assembled, whether he and they did not wish for British instead of foreign pastors. (Mr. D'Rozario.—We certainly wish to have British pastors.) Then, proceeded Mr. Crow, if there was any disrespect to the Holy See, it was in that wish ; and he thought there could be no aggravation of the crime to lay that wish before the Holy See, the source from whence all ecclesiastical appointments flowed. But if the measure in itself was right, as had been admitted, he did not see why it should not be prayed for ; if the Holy See had it in contemplation to appoint a British prelate to this Vicariate, the petition could only convey the intelligence that our wishes were perfectly consonant to the views of his Holiness. If such, however, was not the intention of the authorities at Rome; the petition was to all intents and purposes a most seasonable one. He would not, therefore, advise that the petition be dropped; and as he had been given to understand that a draft had been prepared, he would propose further that it be read, and adopted, and forwarded to Rome.

After a good deal of desultory conversation and some warm discussion between Messrs. Dias and D'Rozario, Mr. Crow's resolution was put and carried, with one dissentient voice.

The following petition was then read and adopted.

TO OUR MOST HOLY FATHER, POPE GREGORY XVI.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HOLINESS,—We, the undersigned Roman Catholic Inhabitants of Calcutta, with due deference and submission, beg most respectfully to approach the apostolical throne, and earnestly to solicit the attention of your Holiness to our urgent prayers.

We beg leave, in the first place, to apologize for the unusual mode we adopt of directly addressing your Holiness, and respectfully to state in extenuation of so apparently presumptuous a measure, that our earnest supplication on another occasion (14 Feb. of the present year) forwarded through the sacred congregation, proved ineffectual.

We beg respectfully to assure your Holiness, that we feel deeply grieved at being deprived of the spiritual Government of Dr. St. Leger, our late highly esteemed and beloved Vicar Apostolic, a man of such distinguished virtues and talents as made him universally respected, even by those who conscientiously are opposed to the Catholic religion.

We further beg to assure your Holiness, that our regret has become doubly great, by the appointment of a foreigner in the person of the Right Reverend Bishop of Isauropolis to succeed a British subject (the most Revd. Dr. St. Leger) as Vicar Apostolic of Bengal, while it is manifest that neither the British Inhabitants of Calcutta nor the Supreme Government of India, can possibly entertain the same degree of interest in a foreigner as a Briton. We are the more convinced of this important truth, from the circumstance of the Government of India having, in one of its official addresses to our late respected prelate, expressed their being highly gratified at the nomination of a British-born subject to preside over the Catholics, who owe allegiance to the British Government.

We further beg leave to state to your Holiness, that by the appointment of the Bishop of Isauropolis (a foreigner) to the important Vicariate of Bengal, we, your faithful children, the greater portion of whom are conversant with only the language of our rulers, shall be deprived of hearing spiritual instruction from the mouth of our Bishop, a privation which we deeply feel to be of no small importance. Further, that the public institutions hitherto supported by Dr. St. Leger, viz. the Martiniere and the Catholic Free Schools, as also the Catholic Public Meetings presided over by him, can now hope for no such assistance from his Right Reverend Successor, inasmuch as all the matters connected with these are entirely transacted in the English language.

We beg leave in this place, most earnestly to assure your Holiness that as obedient and affectionate children, we are willing and prepared to receive any boon from your paternal tenderness; that our implicit obedience will be rendered to every mandate of the Holy See; and that with reference to our present humble address, we beg it to be distinctly understood, that we entertain not the slightest personal feeling against the Right Rev. Bishop of Isauropolis, whom we shall respectfully receive as the Spiritual Pastor appointed by the Supreme Head of the Catholic Church. But in the meantime we think, that our ready obedience to the Holy See does not deprive us of the right of representing our wants and wishes to the paternal care of your Holiness, whom we accordingly humbly supplicate to send us a British Bishop, who may be accompanied by an adequate number of British clergymen, to discharge the heavy duties of the mission in Calcutta and to afford spiritual aid throughout its extensive dependencies to a vast number of Native Christians, some thousands of whom are now left without a Pastor, and to attend the many regiments, the major part of which are composed of Irish Catholics. And here we cannot refrain from presuming to make known to your Holiness, the deep humiliation we feel at the marked distinction which has been made between us and the Catholics of Madras, which, although an inferior Presidency, has been supplied with two British Prelates and a great number of British Priests, while the metropolis of British India and the seat of the Supreme Government, is destitute of even one.

Being conscious that conflicting statements have of late gone to Rome, regarding the mission of Bengal, we are fearful that your Holiness may be led to consider this our humble application as the result of prejudice or party spirit. If our apprehension be well founded, we earnestly implore, that in justice to your petitioners and in consideration of the interest of this important Vicariate, your Holiness will be graciously pleased to send hither a Visitor Apostolical, empowered to investigate our case.

In the ardent expectation that our humble request will be complied with, and while prostrate at your sacred feet, we devoutly implore the Apostolical Benediction."

Mr. Dias proposed, that the present meeting continue embodied as a committee until the return from Rome of the answer to the petition; but this proposition not being supported, fell to the ground. It was then ordered, that the petition lie for signature at the Parochial house, and the meeting dissolved, at about 9 P. M.

Last Sunday evening the Revd. Mr. Mascarenhas, announced from the pulpit, that the Bishop of Cochin China intended to be regularly installed in his new office next Sunday.—Herald, Nov. 27.

CATHOLICS OF MADRAS. —

We learn from unquestionable authority, a piece of intelligence, which will doubtless prove highly gratifying to our Catholic readers, viz. that the Vicar Apostolic of Madras having, in consequence of ill health, applied to the Holy See for a Coadjutor Bishop, the Right Reverend Dr. Carew has been appointed to that office, and was consecrated in June last. His Lordship was Senior Professor of Divinity in the Royal College of St. Patrick, Maynooth, and was to have set sail in the Lady Flora on the 25th of September, accompanied by six British Clergymen, and six clerical students.—Ibid.

THE METCALFE LIBRARY MEETING.

A meeting of Subscribers to the Metcalfe Library Building was held yesterday afternoon, at the Town Hall, when it appeared, that the amount of subscriptions realized, was Co. Rs. 10,782-13-3—unrealized about Co. Rs. 1,200. Allusion was also made to a sum of about 4,000 Rs. from the vested fund of the Public Library Society.

After some discussion, the following resolution was proposed and carried unanimously.

Resolved.—That the Committee shall place itself in communication with the Public Library Committee, to ascertain whether the Public Library Society will transfer their vested funds for the purpose of assisting in the erection of the Metcalfe Library Building, on the terms of the Resolution of the first public meeting held at the Town Hall on Thursday the 20th August 1835.

That in the event of the Public Library Meeting assenting to the above proposition, application be made to Government for the necessary extent of ground on either side of and to the north of the building which contains Lord Hasting's statue.

That in the event of Government refusing the ground applied for, the money subscribed to the Metcalfe Library Building be returned to such subscribers as may apply for their subscriptions within one year from the date of a regular notice to that effect.

That the Committee be instructed to appropriate any unclaimed amount to some public testimonial in honor of Sir Charles Metcalfe, and of the occasion of the subscription, as may appear to them advisable.

P. O'HANLON, Chairman.

Thanks were voted to the Chairman and the meeting dissolved.—Harkuru, November 30.

MR. DAMPIER AND RESUMPTION.

To the Editor of the Bengal Harkuru.

SIR,—While the important matter of the Resumption Petition is occupying the attention of Government, it will be interesting to the public to know, that some of the abuses in the mode of prosecuting investigations in the Mofussil have not escaped the observation of the District Commissioners. The subjoined copy of a letter of instructions from Mr. Commissioner Dampier, is highly creditable to that excellent officer. But why are not such documents, affecting, as they do, the interests of an extensive population—I say, why are they not published by Istahar in every pergunnah? Ad restes, I cannot but perceive in these directions a pretty complete confession of the evil working of the system. Orders are not issued to control extortion and injustice except when well grounded complaints have shown good cause for their issue. May it appear that other Commissioners have been equally vigilant and equally careful to protect the Zemindars from the oppression of the subordinate authorities!

I hope the obliging Editor of the Durpan will copy this letter into his journal for the benefit of his native readers.

To the Special Deputy Collector and Superintendent of Khas Mehals, Hooghly.

Miscellaneous Revenue Department.

SIR,—I have the honor to transmit to you the accompanying copy of a letter from the Sudder Board of the 9th instant, No. 492, and its enclosures, conveying the Sanction of the Hon'ble the Deputy-Governor of Bengal to the proposed revised establishment for your office, and the appointment of four New Deputy Collectors, and the removal of four others, to be employed under your control.

2d. I trust these arrangements will enable you to proceed rapidly in your operations, and at the same time to hold that check over the Aumeens and Tuh-eeldars whom you employ, so as to prevent the loss which must arise from the uncontrolled rapacity of that class of officers. In several personal communications which I have had with some intelligent zemindars of Hooghly and Burdwan, they have stated to me the grievances they suffer from the demands which have been made on them by the aumeens deputed to examine the oi lands; at the same time fairly admitting, that their own amlah or zemindaree servants have colluded with the public servants, and shared in the sums which have been procured from them.

3d. These persons have all owned to me, that they know no check which can be placed over this class of officers (including their own servants) beyond the personal supervision of a superior, and now that you have obtained the full complement of native Deputy Collectors, I see no reason why this most important point should not be conceded to the landholders. I request that in instituting enquiries as to the existence and situation of the rent-free lands, and in the settlement, you will place a certain number of villages under a Native Deputy Collector, acquainting him that he will be held strictly responsible for the good control over his subordinates, and be expected, in the institution and decision of his cases, to be most impartial as to the lands he may fix upon as liable to assessment.

4th Of course the lakherajdars, who state themselves to have been ejected from the rent-free tenures, will point out the best lands in the villages as those which formed their tenures; (their object being to recover possession hereafter by a regular suit) but on this assertion only you must not call on the zemindar or talookdar to prove these lands being a part of their perpetually settled estates; but after parole evidence insist on the alleged lakherajdar bringing forward proofs in the shape of old Dakhelas or other Mofussil papers which he must have, if his assertion is correct, to shew that these lands once did form a tenure separate from the zemindaree.

5th. You will also cause it to be made known, that in case the zemindars in possession, after the definition of the lands by you, should refuse to engage for the same on settlement, the alleged lakherajdars will not have the next option of engaging for them; but that the estates will be put up for farming offers in such portions and manner as I may hereafter settle in communication with you, and that the zemindar will receive the malikana until the lakherajdar has proved his right to the lands in a Court of Justice.

6th. I also wish you most particularly to address the Special Commissioner for leave to make use of the punchayet system in the execution of your decrees according to the mode laid down in the instructions of the Sudder Board in the Western Provinces, para. 10 to 18, 49 and 50, included in the Circular of the Sudder Board for the Lower Provinces, of the 12th November, 1833, No. 29; as I am certain that this mode of adjusting the claims of Government to asses lands, the right to do which is disputed by the malick, will not only be most satisfactory to the people, but highly conducive to the ends of justice.

7th. Whenever any zemindar, talookdar, or other holder may have filed in your office, a general or even, I should say, a common Power of Attorney, he is entitled to have his petition (through the agents named therein) taken by any or all of the Deputy Collectors employed under you; for these are not holding separate offices and passing final decisions; but merely preparing cases for your final decision and orders. The simplest plan to adopt will be to notify this to the parties who may give in the Powers of Attorney; telling them that the production of a copy, not to be filed on the Deputy Collector's proceedings, but retained by the Deputy, to see that it is correct, will enable his agents to transact business with all the Deputy Collectors without interruption.

8th. I also think, as you must be in many cases moving about the district, which will render an appeal from or petition against any proceedings of the Deputy Collector extremely difficult to be made in person, which if not remedied, will amount almost to a dismissal of appeal or redress of alleged injury, that you should not refuse the receipt of petitions by dawk, referring them to the native Deputy Collectors against whose acts they appeal, to be sent up with the papers or you might authorize the Deputy Collectors to receive petitions to be transmitted to you with their proceedings, the parties to be warned that they must appear before you when the case comes on for final hearing and decision on the Deputy Collector's proceedings.

9th. It appears to me a great object that the zemindars or talookdars should not be deprived of the power to collect from the hands in their possession (the right to assess which on the part of Government they dispute) whilst the question as to right is pending; for a contrary course might in the end prove extremely injurious to the possessor, by taking away from him the means of paying his revenue to the Government and forcing him into usurious loans to keep his estates.

10th. If, therefore, any zemindar or talookdar is willing to retain possession of his lands in dispute, by entering into an engagement to make good whatever revenue may ultimately be adjudged to be the right of Government, I think you would do right to accept the terms, as you would not in the least impede your own proceedings; whilst you would take away from the possessor very considerable grounds of complaint, and prevent all oppressions on the part of a talookdar.

11th. In conclusion, I beg to transmit to you an original letter with its enclosures, addressed to me by Baboo Joykissen Mookerjee, and to state my opinion that you should have directed the Deputy Collector subordinate to you to have received those and all other petitions regarding claims in cases where he was executing decrees, or settling the Government assessment, and you should not have referred the party through your head Clerk, he having no authority to communicate on your behalf with any person.

I am, &c.,

THE NEW CHURCH.

Many persons, both European and Native, assembled this day at the appointed time and place, to witness the ceremony of laying the first stone of the new Church in Cornwallis Square. The arrival of the Bishop, however, was, from some cause or other, delayed till after twelve o'clock, when he proceeded with the ceremony. By this hour many individuals who had been on the spot at the appointed hour of half-past ten, had departed, but still a great concourse, of natives principally, were present. His Lordship opened the business of the day by a very neat and appropriate address of the assembled multitude; he then delivered a prayer and subsequently read the following paper which, together with one or two newspapers of the day and a few coins, were afterwards placed in a bottle.

CHRIST'S CHURCH.

The foundation stone of this building, for the purpose of the service of Almighty God, according to the doctrine and discipline of the United Church of England and Ireland, was laid this twenty-eighth day of November, in the year of Christ one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, the Right Honorable George Lord Auckland being Governor-General of India, by the Right Reverend Daniel, Lord Bishop of Calcutta, under the direction of the Trustees of the Old Church and Members of the Evangelical Fund,

Consisting of the following gentlemen:

The Venerable Thomas Dealtry, Archdeacon of Calcutta.

The Reverend Richard Bethell Boys, Bachelor of Arts and Chaplain of the Old Mission Church of Calcutta.

George Samuel Hottelmann, Esq.,
William Willis, Esq. and Thomas Seddon Kelsall, Esq. } of Calcutta.

The building is to be styled Christ's Church, was designed by Mr. John Michael Vos, Architect of Calcutta, and erected by him.

Psalm 48, Verses 11 to 14.

Let Mount Zion, let the daughters of Judah be glad, because of thy judgments.

Walk about Zion, and go round about her: till the towers thereof.

Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generation following.

For this God is our God for ever and ever: he will be our guide even unto death.

Psalm 122, Verses 7, 8, and 9.

Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces.

For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will not say, Peace be within thee.

Because of the house of the Lord our God I will seek thy good.

The mouth of the bottle having been closed, the necessary ceremonies of the laying of the stone were then gone through by the Bishop; his Lordship delivered a second address, followed by a prayer; the Archdeacon also gave an address and prayer, and Mr. Sandys delivered an address to the natives in the Bengallee language. Before one o'clock, the whole ceremony was concluded and the audience returned to their homes.—Calcutta Courier, Nov. 28.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a Meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Calcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's apartment, the 3rd November, 1838.

The following letters were read :—

From J. Bouton, Esq., Assistant-Surgeon, Jessore, stating his wish to re-enter the society from which he had withdrawn solely from pecuniary motives.

From G. King, Esq., Superintending-Surgeon, Cawnpore, requesting to be again enrolled among the list of members.

From A. Smith, Esq., M. D., Hidgelee, to the same purport.

From R. Guise, Esq., Assistant Surgeon, 75th Regiment, N. I., requesting to join the society. He was accordingly proposed by Dr. O'Shanghnessy, seconded by Dr. Wallich.

From C. Fuller, Esq., Assistant Surgeon, Kishnaghur, to the same purport. Dr. Goodeve proposed and Dr. Spry seconded the nomination of this gentleman.

From J. H. Palsgrave, Esq., Surgeon, to the same purport. He was accordingly proposed as a member by Mr. Egerton, seconded by Mr. Chapman.

These letters were in reply to the circular of the President, requesting the Members of the Medical service to support the society.

The following communications were presented. Some observations on the treatment of Cholera, by W. Batson, Esq.

Two cases by J. W. Knight, Esq. The first was an instance of abscess of the heart, discovered after death, the patient during life having shewn no sign of severe disease of any description, much less indication of cardiac affection.

The other case was that of a man who had been struck on the pit of the stomach in a quarrel—he walked home, but some hours afterwards became insensible, and in the course of the night he died. Upon dissection the mesocolon and cellular tissue covering the pancreas were found of a deep purple color. The pancreas itself was soft, pulpy and dark colored; but Mr. Knight could not detect rupture of any blood vessels. The minute ramifications of vascular in the pancreas were remarkably distinct, forming elegant net work. All the other organs of the abdomen were healthy. There was slight effusion between the membranes of the brain and congestion of the choroid plexuses.

Dr. Goodeve's case of paralysis, caused by improper feeding an infant, with remarks, was then read and discussed.

R. DeCuney, Esq., (Harrah, Kishnagur,—Proposed by the Secretary, seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

J. Meliss, Esq., (Nautpore, Purneah,) proposed by Charles Haffuagle, Esq., seconded by D. Wallich.

P. J. Sarkies, Esq., proposed by Charles Haffuagle, Esq., seconded by G. A. Prinsep, Esq.

Capt. Wm. Allen, proposed by W. F. Gibbon, Esq., seconded by W. K. Ewart, Esq.

Motion of which notice was given at last Meeting. Mr. Bell's motion to present a gold medal to the Commander of the French ship Aide, for having been the first successful importer of the true grana fina from Bourbon, was brought forward, and carried unanimously.

Dr. Wallich, brought to the notice of the Meeting the injury which the Society's sugar cane plantation had sustained by the late storm, and stated, that with the sanction of the Committee and in accordance with the Secretary's advertisement, such portion of the cane as was broken and laid, had been distributed without loss of time.

Dr. Wallich also drew attention to a minute of the Agricultural Committee, who had visited the nursery on the 12th instant, recommending that the cane, the whole of which has now arrived at maturity, be distributed immediately to the applicants whose names have already been registered, instead of delaying its disposal till December next, as originally proposed.

The sense of the meeting having been taken, as to the recommendation of the Committee, it was resolved, that it be adopted.

In connexion with the subject, the President proposed, and it was resolved,—That it be referred to the Sugar Committee to consult and report at what periods it would be desirable the canes in the Society's nursery should be cut hereafter.

(On the departure of the president, at this period, the chair was taken by Mr. Robinson.) V. P.

Read the report of the Committee appointed by a resolution of the Society, passed at a general meeting on the 12th September last, to revise the conditions on which medals shall be offered for encouraging improvement on the staple products of India, for the ensuing year.

In consequence of a difference of opinion among the members of the Committee, with respect to the description of sugar for which medals shall be offered, it was, after some discussion, moved by Mr. Hare, seconded by Dr. Haffuagle, and resolved, that the report be confirmed with the word "unrefined," substituted for "Muscavado or raw" in the 1st and 2nd prizes for sugar.

The following communications were read :—

From Dr. K. M. Scott, Secretary to the Agricultural Society of Assam, dated Gowhatti, Oct. 29th 1838, returning thanks to the parent institution, for the offer conveyed in the Secretary's letter of the 15th June last, to award medals and prizes, to encourage the growth of European vegetables in their district.

Enclosing a copy of the regulations of their Society and of proceedings of a meeting held on the 16th of August 1838, and with reference to the 4th resolution passed on that occasion, advises despatch of 6 specimens of grain for this Society.

From F. O. Crane, Esq., Secretary to the Agricultural Society of Singapore, dated October 9th, transmitting a box of mangosteen plants.

From Messrs. Willis and Earle, enclosing a note from J. Finch, Esq., of Tirhoot, and forwarding 8 English apple grafts, presented by that gentleman for the Society's fruit tree nursery.

From Captain O. Bell, dated Prince of Wales Islands, 8th September, 1838,—transmitting 2 boxes, containing several varieties of fruit trees.

From T. H. Maddock Esq.,—presenting a few seeds of a pear tree, which flourishes in Nepal and Tirhoot.

From H. Piddington, Esq.,—dated Chandernagore, 12th Nov., presenting a cob of a fine description of maize grown at Bourbon,—termed "mais rouge."

From Dr. Wallich, dated October 24th,—presenting to the Society on behalf of Major Archer, a quantity of a beans called "pois noire," the produce of the Nannius, much valued in that Island, as an excellent fodder for cattle.

From Messrs. W. and J. Noble, dated London, May 29th 1838,—acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter of the 12th of January last, enclosing an order for the despatch of a trial assortment of vegetable and flower seeds.

They state in reply, that the order reached too late to enable them to transmit the seeds so as to have arrived by the period to which he was limited,—viz. the 1st of September; and request to be informed if an assortment may be prepared for the Society, for the next season.

From Jas. Cowell, Esq., enclosing extract of a letter to his address from a resident of Jamaica, dated June 23d, 1838, which gives some information as to the mode adopted in the West Indies, for the culture of ginger.

From E. A. Blundell, Esq., dated Moulmein, October 2d, mentioning the safe arrival of the plants and seeds lately forwarded. Gives a short account of the cultivation of rice, which is the only species of grain grown in those parts.

From Captain H. Macfarquhar, dated Tavoy, September 21st, 1838, promising to transmit some specimens of gamboge, collected from trees growing in abundance at that province. States, that the specimen of cotton lately forwarded to the Society, is the produce of Sea Island seed, and not of South Sea Island seed, as mentioned in a former letter.

From J. W. Payter, Esq., dated October 16th, forwarding a few pods of cotton grown in 1837, from New Orleans seed received from the Society.

From Dr. J. W. Helfer, dated October 12th, acknowledging receipt of an assortment of seeds for introduction in the Tenasserim Provinces.

From Dr. Wise, Secretary to the Branch Society of Hooghly, intimating their wish to accept of the medals and prizes offered to encourage the growth of European vegetables.

From Colonel L. R. Stacy, dated Dacca, October 14th, promising to send a quantity of the seed of a variety of African grain.

The following proposition was moved by Mr. Harris, seconded by Mr. D. McPherson, viz.

"That half an anna be the price of each Otaheitan cane, instead of one anna, as fixed at the last meeting of the Society."

On being put to the vote, the above proposition was negatived.

The thanks of the meeting were ordered to be offered for all these communications and presentations.

CHOWRINGHEE THEATRE.

MR. AND MRS. VALLADARES' MUSICO-DRAMATIC SOCIETY.

We take some blame to ourselves for having neglected yesterday to give some account of Mr. and Mrs. Valladares' Musico-Dramatic Society at the Chowringhee Theatre, which "came off" with due punctuality and deserved success. It is not, however, too late in the day, or rather in the week, even at this eleventh hour to say a very few words, lest the worthy and industrious beneficiaries may imagine their praiseworthy endeavours to please have passed unnoticed. Scribe's Operatta, "La Vieille," is a clever and spirituelle little piece such as one is accustomed to expect from the piquant heir of that prolific favorite of the play-loving Parisians. The Music by FETIS, a young composer, is light but pleasing, and as a composition, more correct and severe than modern opera music in general. One Trio, however, deserves more marked praise and was executed in a very pleasing manner by Mesdames De Ligny and Nouveau, and Monsieur Charles, who made his appearance on this occasion, for the first time that we remember, in the character of a tenor singer, and very successfully. The ladies acted their parts with their usual spirit, and Madame De Ligny's transformation from an ancient dame to an elegant young widow, was excellently accomplished.

The Vaudeville of the Trois Sultanas went off rather heavily, notwithstanding a clever pas by Madame Nouveau and a very successful Aria of Paolini's by Madame Valladares.

The concert entre acte was on the whole sufficiently agreeable. Mr. Linton sung Handel's sublime composition from Sampson—"Total Eclipse," with great pathos and taste, and Mr. Valladares executed his violin solo cleverly. The performances were enriched by the kind assistance of two talented amateurs, and the numerous audience departed, apparently well pleased at a late—too late—hour.—Hulk. Nov. 24.

POLICE.

NOVEMBER 22, 1838.

During the past week another case of kidnapping coolies, involving circumstances of considerable interest, was under investigation before the Magistrate of the 2d division. On Friday, the 16th instant, Mr. David Hare called upon the Magistrate with his servant Sewchurn Doss, who swore to the following affidavit.

Sewchurn Doss of Fenwick's Bazar, a khedmutgar in the service of David Hare, Esquire, of Calcutta, maketh oath and saith, that about the hour of half past eleven o'clock, on the morning of Wednesday, the fourteenth of November instant, as this deponent was returning home from his said Master's house, he met his cousin Phakun Babbah at a place called Hydra Bagaun, lying to the north of the Old Post Office, on the Chowringhee Road, who told this deponent, that while he, the said Phakun Babbah, had been on his way to Calcutta from up the country, certain duffadars, or procurers of coolies for the Mauritius, about twenty-one days before offered to procure him, the said Phakun Babbah, employment, and he accordingly accompanied them to Calcutta; but he had now discovered, that their intention was to ship him for the Mauritius, to which place he was unwilling to go. And he, the said Phakun Babbah, requested this deponent to give him some money that he might pay the said duffadars for the food with which they had supplied the said Phakun Babbah during the time that he had been with them. And this deponent further saith, that the said Phakun Babbah informed him, that he was detained there by the said duffadars against his will and that the names of the persons who so detained him are Soorutram, Ramsahyram and Lalaram. And this deponent further saith, that he believes that the said Phakun Babbah is still in the custody of the said duffadars and detained by them against his will. And this deponent further saith, that while the said Phakun Babbah was so speaking to this deponent, this deponent saw that there were twelve or thirteen other persons who had been likewise detained by the said duffadars, and the said duffadars had small huts at the aforesaid place in which they kept the said coolies, and did not allow them to stir without some of the duffadars going with them as a guard. This deponent further saith, that he saw his cousin Phakun Babbah this morning in Haikattah lane, and that he believes his cousin is still there, and had been removed from Hydra Bagaun near Old Post Office.

The necessary process was immediately issued and three duffadars, Lalsah, Sookharee and Soorutram, the individuals he alluded to, were soon after brought before the Magistrate, together with several coolies. It would appear from the evidence adduced, that two of these duffadars, namely Lalsah and Sookharee, proceeded to the upper provinces, where they persuaded several ignorant natives, viz. Phakun, the brother of Mr. Hare's khidmutgar, Mahabur, Ihurree, Nundo, Bausoo and Moongya, the wife of the last named person, and their son Nobole, a little boy, to leave their homes (near Hazareebaug) under promises of employment in Calcutta, and came down with them.

When they came near Budwan, they were put under great restraint; in so much, that they were not even permitted to relieve the calls of nature, without being watched and guarded by the duffadars and their servants; and they were so narrowly watched, that they could not get away. They were made to proceed by night only, and it appeared to them that in the route which the duffadars took, they avoided all Police stations. They arrived at Calcutta on the night of Tuesday the 13th instant, about 11 o'clock, when they were taken to the house of the duffadar Soorutram, and kept that night under strict watch. It was on the morning of the next day that Phakun, while in Soorutram's house, happened to see his cousin Sewchurn, Mr. Hare's servant, passing along the street. He called him and stated what had happened. Sewchurn desired him to come away with him; he was doing so accordingly, when several men (among whom was Seivdoyal, who has since been taken into custody) by order, and under the direction of Soorutram, rushed upon Sewchurn, beat him and drove him away, and seizing Phakun took him back by force into the house. From this place the coolies were taken the same day to the house of one whom they called Poyumber Baboo, but whom none of them knew. Here they were detained until Friday; when, as they were being taken to some doctor's for the purpose, as we understood, of being vaccinated, they were met by the Deputy-Superintendent of Police, Mr. Hare and another Sahib, who took the duffadars into custody and liberated the coolies. The proceeding in the case were this day closed.

The charge of kidnapping, false imprisonment and assault being clearly established against three the duffadars and their assistant, Seivdyal, they were sentenced to be punished in the following manner.

Upon the complaint of Phakun, —Soorutram, Sook-haree and Lalsa, to pay a fine of 20 rupees each, or be imprisoned for two months in the house of correction; and Seivdyal (for a simple assault) to pay a fine of 5 rupees, or be imprisoned for one month in the house of correction.

Upon the complaint of Jhurru, —Sookharu and Soorutram to pay a fine of 20 rupees each, or be imprisoned for two months in the house of correction, and Lalsa (who in this case was not equally criminal with the others) to pay a fine of 10 rupees or be imprisoned for one month in the same place.

Upon the complaint of Mahaber, —the three duffadars, to pay a fine of 20 rupees each, or to be imprisoned, for two months, in the house of correction.

The same upon the complaint of Nundo.

Upon the complaint of Bausoo, who, with his wife and child, was cruelly deceived and brought to Calcutta where the defendants promised to procure the woman an employment as an Aya, the circumstances in this case appearing peculiarly distressing, the poor duped persons being now left without any means of support, the punishment of the three duffadars was enhanced, and they were sentenced to pay a fine of 25 rupees each or be imprisoned in the house of correction for three months.

A Sinner of Pittumber's stated, in giving his evidence, that eighty coolies were at that time in Mr. Dawson's veranda. We hope means will be taken to ascertain whether they are all there with their consent.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the unwearied exertion of Mr. O'Hanlon in the investigation of this nefarious transaction, by which eleven of our fellow creatures have been rescued from slavery. Four of these men could not find out the persons who had kidnapped them, and they consequently escaped the punishment which would most justly have been awarded them, had they been caught. —Herald, Nov. 26.

SUPREME COURT.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31.

FOURTH TERM OF 1838.

(Before Sir E. Ryan and Sir J. P. Grant.)

RAJAGOVIND BONNERJEE AND OTHERS v. TADRINACHURN BONNERJEE AND OTHERS — AND THE OTHER CAUSES.

The Court this day gave judgment upon the exceptions filed to the last Report of the Master, made in this long pending cause. The suit was originally instituted by the members of a wealthy Hindoo family, to settle their respective rights to the patrimonial estate and reports in our columns have appeared at different times, of the cause in its different stages, under the title of "Bonnerjee v. Bonnerjee." The question now before the Court under the exceptions, related only to the right to a certain fund claimed by a collateral party, Mr. Charles Reed (very well known indeed in the Supreme Court.)

Sir Edward Ryan. The amicable adjustment which the Court for many reasons so earnestly recommended in this suit, has entirely failed, and it only remains for us now to pronounce our decision. By an order of this Court of October 1820, the Accountant-General was directed to pay out of a certain fund, called the Bhyra Jah fund, the sum of Sa. Rs. 900 monthly to Mr. Charles Reed, (appearing to be due to him by virtue of certain agreements produced in the cause), but not to make any other payments whatsoever thereout. This was certainly a singular order to make in the then stage of the cause, as Mr. C. Reed was not even a party to the suit; but the Court have long expressed their opinion that the order must be taken to be binding upon us unless solemnly set aside, and that it was necessary, therefore, to carry it into effect, if the Master should report the fund in question available. In 1834, an application was first made to the Court to carry this order into effect, and it seems that for some cause or other not very apparent, Mr. Reed had never received any of the monthly sums due, and he appears to have remained ignorant of the very existence of the order. I was then absent from the Bench, but I learned that it was objected and so, held, that Mr. Charles Reed, and one Rajagovind Singh, who also claimed as a creditor, were not parties to the suit. In September 1834, however, they were allowed to come in, with all other creditors, before the Master, and the Master was directed to inquire what monies were standing in the Accountant-General's name to the credit of the Bhyra Jah fund. The Master made his report in 1837, and eleven exceptions were filed, Mr. Reed, himself, being then the excepting party. The Court did not at that time enter on the merits, as the report was inaccurate on a question of figures, and was referred back accordingly. A fresh order dated July 1847, was then made, to the report upon which the present exceptions were filed by Raja Bhoj Govind Singh. The only object of the last mentioned order, was to ascertain the rights of the claimants to the Bhyra Jah fund, and the Master was directed to take only so much of the accounts as should be necessary for that purpose. The exceptions are ten in number, and I must confess I do not quite understand the tenor of the first eight. The Master found that the said Charles Reed had a clear, certain, and prior claim to the said fund called the Bhyra Jah fund, and that he was entitled to his monthly payment of Sa. Rs. 900 thereout, and that the arrears due to him amounted Sa. Rs. one lac, and 62,000. We disallow. Exceptions 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 5th, 6th and 8th, because they virtually except to the order of 1820. The 4th and 7th have been abandoned. The 9th exception is that the Master ought not to have reported that Mr. Charles Reed had a prior and certain claim to the fund because no evidence was offered upon the said matter. Now we are of opinion that the Master ought not to have found this matter in his report, not for the reason assigned, but because it was not referred to him. We do not think it necessary, however, to send the report back to the Master upon this point, but we shall amend it ourselves, by striking out this part of the finding as surplusage. The 10th exception is well taken: for the report refers to the report of the preceding Master, and the schedule thereto annexed; but as that preceding report was never confirmed, and is not now in existence, the reference is certainly irregular. The reference, however, was unnecessary, and we shall, therefore, strike it out, as on the preceding exception. We therefore disallow all the exceptions, but not with costs.

Sir J. P. Grant concurred.

Exceptions to the Master's Report disallowed, but each party to pay their own costs—Hark., Nov. 1.

SANDEF F.

Mr. Clarke moved in this case, that judgment might be signed as for want of a plea. The defendant had pleaded a special plea, concluding of course with a verification, to which there was no signature of Counsel as required by Rule 32. The learned gentleman submitted, that this plea was a nullity, and he cited Maehor v. Billing, 1 Crompton, Meeson and Roscoe's Reports, p. 577.

Sir Edward Ryan.—Has the prothonotary refused to sign judgment?

Mr. Clarke.—It cannot be signed without a certificate of no plea filed.

The Advocate-General begged to be allowed a single remark.

The Court.—Do you appear to shew cause?

The Advocate-General.—Yes, my Lord; I have just this instant received instructions to oppose this application. I admit we are in default, but I submit that the Court may exercise a discretion. We are ready to accede to any terms offered, and is the other side are put in statu quo, I do not see how any reasonable objection can be urged against the defendant being let in.

Mr. Clarke offered to consent to the defendant being let in, provided he would agree to submit the case to arbitration.

Sir E. Ryan said, that in matters of practice, the Court had resolved to adhere strictly to rule. This was a mere question of time, and the defendant was now too late, as he had put in a plea which was a nullity, and the time for pleading had expired. If the offer to arbitrate was not accepted, the defendant would be barred.

The Advocate-General at first assented; but afterwards, in the course of the morning, he moved for an order nisi to set aside the judgment.

Sir E. Ryan.—Are you prepared with an affidavit of merits?

The Advocate-General.—We are, my lord.

Sir E. Ryan.—Are you prepared to undertake to pay all the costs of the judgment and of this application, to plead as usually instantur, to take short notice of trial if necessary, and to give judgment of the term?

The Advocate-General.—All, my lord.

Sir E. Ryan.—Then you may take your rule nisi.—Ibid.

THURSDAY, NOV. 1.

Equity Side.

MOHA RANEE BISSUAT COOMARREE versus MUDDEN-MOHUN COOPORRAH.

The Advocate-General (with whom was Mr. Prinsep) moved, that the complainant might have leave to amend her bill of complaint. By the 6th Equity Rule the time for applying for an order to amend after the filing of the answer is limited to six weeks; and in the present instance a much longer time had certainly elapsed, but the question was whether the special circumstances did not take the case out of the general rule. The answer was filed on the 16th of June. Exceptions to the answer were filed on the 13th of July, which exceptions were allowed by the Master. The defendant then filed his exceptions to the Master's report, and by an order of the 29th October, the Court allowed the exceptions to the report and thus overruled the complainant's exceptions to the answer. Now from the 44th and 45th rules of "the rules for the Master's office," it may be gathered, that whether the Master, upon a reference, find the answer sufficient or insufficient, the time is intended to run, for amending the bill (if necessary) in the former case, or for putting in a further answer in the latter case, from the date of his report. The learned counsel contended, that in the present case, the complainant's hands had been tied, first by the exceptions to the answer, and then by the exceptions to the report, and that the application therefore was made in time.

Sir E. Ryan was of this opinion. The time was suspended during the pendency of the exceptions to defendant's answer, and the Master's report, and began to run again from the date of the order of Court of 29th October. The complainant, therefore, was then entitled to all the time which remained unexpired at the period of the filing the exceptions to the answer.

Order granted.—Hark., Nov. 2.

MONDAY NOV. 5.

IN THE MATTER OF RUSSELL.

Mr. Clarke moved for a writ of certiorari (under 53 Geo. III. c. s. 115, referring to 33 Geo. 3 c. 52 s. 143) to remove the proceedings of a Magistrate into the Supreme Court. In the Ballynoge case, it was a question whether the conviction was by a Justice of the Peace, or a Magistrate, but in this case the Magistrate had acted expressly as such. The name of the Magistrate was Mr. Allen, of Palna; and Mr. Russell, the party named in the conviction, was an indigo planter residing in the district.

Sir E. Ryan. What are the grounds upon which you move?

Mr. Clarke. I move upon the ground of error apparent upon the face of the conviction; but I apprehend that the party is entitled to the writ as of right both at common law and under the statute. At all events the error here appears upon the roobicaree.

Sir E. Ryan. Is the roobicaree the record of conviction?

Mr. Clarke. It is, my Lord. The whole proceedings before the Magistrate, and the grounds of the conviction, are stated upon it. From this it appears, that the charge against Mr. Russell was the having assaulted his assistant, Mr. Englebright, and used insulting language to Mrs. E. The defendant wished to have the lady examined as a witness, which the Magistrate refused, assigning no other reason than that her testimony could not possibly benefit the defendant, and that his application must have been made solely in order to annoy the lady, and hurt her dignity! Again, there appeared to be a discrepancy between the complainant's own statement and the testimony of his witnesses, which the roobicaree specially alluded to, and proceeded to reconcile after a very ingenious fashion. The complainant complained of having been pushed, but his witnesses swore to three or four distinct blows; but, says the Magistrate, the complainant was probably so excited with passion that he did not feel the blows! The upshot was, that Mr. Russell was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200.

Sir Edward Ryan. In this case you may have your writ. The Court are of opinion, that sufficient appears on the face of the conviction to entitle you to the writ; but you are not to suppose it is a matter of right on behalf of a subject. At the instance of the crown, indeed, a writ of certiorari is always grantable as of course, but on the application of the defendant it is entirely in the discretion of the Court. The Queen's Bench at home constantly refuse the writ I wish merely to mention another matter, upon which the Court express no opinion now, but which must be discussed whenever this question is brought regularly before us. By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 74.s. 48, it is enacted, that in all cases where the punishment is greater than a fine of Rs. 50, or imprisonment for one calendar month, the appeal shall be to the next Court of General or Quarter Sessions, and by section 49 of the same statute, it is provided that no such conviction or adjudication made on appeal therefrom, shall be quashed for want of form, or be removable by certiorari or otherwise into any of Her Majesty's superior Courts of record.

Rule nisi for a certiorari.—Hark., Nov. 6.

JOHN DAVIDSON SMITH versus WILLIAM WOOD ROBINSON.

This was an action brought on a common money bond, bearing date January 1836, in a penalty of Rs. 36,000. It appears that Mr. Smith, the obligee, shortly before his departure for England, had given a general power of attorney to Messrs. McDonald and Fraser, to prosecute and defend all suits and actions in his name. This power, which was joint and several, was dated 16th December 1835, a period antecedent to the execution of the bond. Mr. Smith afterwards executed a special power of attorney in reference to this bond, bearing even date therewith, by which he appointed Messrs. Fraser and Sim his joint attorneys for suing upon the bond. The present action was brought under the first mentioned power of attorney, and the defendant wished to raise the question whether it was properly so brought. The same point in effect arose upon the recent application made to the Insolvent Court to set aside the adjudication of insolvency against the present defendant (W. W. Robinson) when it was successfully contended on behalf of the Insolvent that the subsequent special power of attorney revoked the former general power pro tanto, and the adjudication accordingly was set aside. After the decision in the Insolvent Court, a rule nisi was obtained to set aside the whole proceedings in the present action at law, and to take the warrant off the file.

Mr. Prinsep, on behalf of the plaintiff, shewed cause. This is an application of rather a novel character, and one, I must confess, for which I am unable to find a precedent. The defendant (the obligor) applies to the Court to set aside the proceedings in the action upon the bond, and to take the warrant off the file, on the ground that sufficient is disclosed upon the face of affidavits, office-copies of which have been obtained from another Court, to shew that there is no authority to maintain the action.

Sir Edward Ryan interrupted the learned Counsel, and suggested, that it would be advisable to wait for a full Bench. This question must decide the matter raised in the Insolvent Court as effectually as if that decision itself were appealed from. Now he (the learned Chief Justice) had already expressed his opinion upon the point, and even if his learned colleague (Sir J. P. Grant) should unfortunately differ from him in opinion, this in the present state of the Bench would not affect the decision. It seemed quite useless, therefore, to press the matter now.

Mr. Prinsep said, that he only waited for this intimation from his Lordship. He thought it certainly ought to stand over, but, of course it was his duty to be in readiness to shew cause.

The Advocate-General had no sort of objection.

Sir E. Ryan. Then let the matter stand over by consent. Of course all proceedings will be tied up in the interim.

RUSSICKCHUNDER NROGHY versus HURRIPERSAUD GHOSE.

In this case a motion was made by the Advocate General, last Thursday week, (See the Murharu of Friday, October 26th) for a special order to the Sheriff to sell or otherwise dispose of, certain Company's paper which had been extended at the suit of the plaintiff in the hands of the Accountant-General of this Court, and to pay over the proceeds to the plaintiff in satisfaction of his debt. When the motion was made, the Court intimated, that they should direct a search for precedents.

Sir E. Ryan, this morning said that their Lordships were clearly of opinion that they could not interfere to grant this order, and that it rested with the plaintiff to take any steps he chose at his own peril and discretion, to obtain the property from the Sheriff. A search had been made for precedents and one similar case had been found. No order whatever was there made:—the paper was merely indorsed over by the Sheriff to the plaintiff in the action, in satisfaction of his demand. There was one distinction, however, that in that case the Company's paper was for a smaller amount than the debt, whereas here it was for a larger.

Refused.—Ibid.

TUESDAY, NOV. 6, 1838.

WILKINSON THOMAS DAVES AND OTHERS, v. THOMAS HOWATSON AND OTHERS.

In this case the Bill was filed in December 1837, and prayed, that the trusts of the will of the testator in the pleadings named, might be carried into execution, under the direction of the Court, and that it might be referred to the Master to take an account of the estate, and of the debts and legacies, and that an alleged devastavit committed by the executors, might be decreed to be made good by them. The testator was one William Graham, a retired Brevet Ensign, who died in August 1829, leaving very considerable real and personal property. The will bore date of February 1821; and J. Palmer, (since deceased) of the firm of Palmer and Co., E. M. Sandford and Thomas Howatson, were appointed trustees and executors thereof. The present bill was filed by certain legatees, entitled under the will to one-third portion of the residuary estate, against the two surviving executors and the administration of the deceased executor, with whom were joined as a co-defendant, one Catharine Lemondine, another legatee entitled to one third of the residuary estate under the will:—the legatee entitled to the remaining one-third portion was a native of India not resident within the local limits of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction, and therefore not made a party to the suit. An answer was put in by the administration of the deceased executor, and an answer was also put in by the defendant, Mrs. Lemondine, admitting all the facts stated in the bill. The two surviving executors had not answered, and the bill was taken against them pro confesso.

Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Nutt, appeared for the complainants.

The Advocate-General and Mr. Sandes for the administrator of the deceased executor.

Mr. Cockrane and Mr. Nieth for the defendant, Lemondine.

Mr. Prinsep said, that in the present stage of the cause, all he should ask for, was, that an account might be taken of the estate of the testator, and that the Master might be directed to enquire what was the amount of the devastavit, and by which of the executors caused. It would be necessary to advertise for creditors; but he believed that in point of fact there were no debts whatever.

The Advocate-General said, that he had peculiar grounds for asking the Court to delay decreeing the liabilities of the executors, until the accounts had been taken and the cause came on for further directions. Appearing, as he did, for a different party, he had of course no legal interest in making any application on behalf of the surviving executors; but the fact was, that he had been consulted for them, and he had then formed a strong opinion that they had a good defence. The learned counsel believed that it was only through some mistake that their answer had not been filed, and he thought they might yet in some way be let in.

Sir Edward Ryan said, that it was quite impossible now to listen to such a statement:—The facts of the bill had been admitted by such of the defendants as had put in an answer, and the bill taken pro confesso against the rest. The Court could only make the usual interlocutory decree.

Decree accordingly.—Hurkaru, Nov. 7.

Note.—In the matter of Russel, moved yesterday by Mr Clarke, the Court granted a rule absolute in the first instance, for a certiorari and not (as we reported) a rule nisi.—Ibid.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1838.

W. W. ROBINSON versus A. H. SIM AND ANOTHER.

The Advocate-General, made an application to the Court upon notice of behalf of one of the defendant in this suit that six weeks further time might be allowed for filing his answer to the Bill. There was an affidavit, shewing special grounds for the indulgence claimed. The grounds were that during the pendency of the proceedings touching the adjudication of insolvency (afterwards set aside) against the complainant, the defendant had been advised not to go to the expense of consulting Counsel and putting in an answer. The adjudication was only set aside about ten days ago so that the defendant had in effect but a very short time to put in their answer to a bill of some two hundred folios.

Mr. Prinsep made the same application on behalf of the other defendant.

Mr. Leith opposed the motion, and called the attention of the Court in the first instance to the irregularity in the grounds, the notice of motion not having been given by the attornies on the record.

Per Curiam.—The irregularity would be cured by your appearing to shew cause.

Mr. Leith then reminded the Court, that it was only the preceding day that an attachment had issued against the defendants for want of an answer.

Sir E. Ryan.—The special grounds take this case out of the general rule. Under the circumstances the application is very reasonable.

Mr. Leith.—But they are not even in time in making the application:—the time for putting in their answer has already expired. The application for farther time might at all events have been made sooner. There was nothing to prevent it from being made the very day after the adjudication of insolvency against the complainant was set aside.

Sir E. Ryan.—Undoubtedly the application might have been made earlier, but you are not prejudiced if they pay the costs of the attachment. The Court will allow four weeks' further time for answering,—the defendants paying the costs of the attachment and of this application.

Time allowed.—Hurkaru, Nov. 9.

MONDAY NOVEMBER 12, 1838.

HOLROYD, ASSIGNEE OF CRUTTENDEN AND CO. v. CAPE AND OTHERS.

Mr. Prinsep moved to enlarge the time for the return of the Commission to take the answer of the defendant, Major Cape, until the first day of next term. The defendant was in England, and there was an affidavit that when the last accounts were received, he was undergoing an operation for a cataract in his eyes, and was totally unable to attend to business. He was 80 years of age and the complaint affecting his eye-sight was likely to prove incurable.

It appeared that the time granted by the Court for taking the commission had already expired, and the motion was about to be dismissed as a nullity, on the ground that it was absurd to apply for the enlargement of time which had actually run out before the application was made; but it was stated that the opposite side had consented to the matter standing over, and the Court, therefore, allowed the application to be made as of prior day.

The Advocate-General shewed cause in the first instance. His learned friend had shewn no satisfactory reason for the delay in taking the answer. If Major Cape had the perfect use of his eyesight, it was not probable (and certainly not necessary) that at the age of eighty, he should actually read over a voluminous bill and answer. Total blindness would not prevent the papers from being read over to him, and that was all that was necessary.

Mr. Prinsep suggested, that during the operation, and for some time afterwards, the patient would not merely be unable to read, but totally incapacitated from attending to any kind of business.

The Advocate-General supposed, that the operation and its consequent effects in incapacitating the patient, might last altogether about ten days at the utmost.

Sir J. P. Grant said, that the Court, not being oculists, could not precisely determine that point, but they saw nothing unreasonable in the application.

Time enlarged. *—Hurkaru, November 13.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14 1838.

ROBERT GILFILLAN v. MUTTVIOLL SEAL.

Mr. Leith moved on behalf of the defendant, for a rule nisi to postpone the trial of this cause. The action was brought by the master of the ship "Asia" against the owner of the ship "Bahob," for an injury caused by a collision between the two ships in the river Hoooghly. He had affidavits from which it appeared that the "Bahob" would not arrive at this port before January, and as the defendant's material witnesses were on board that vessel, it was impossible for him to go to trial earlier than next term.

The Court granted a Rule nisi.—Hurkaru, Nov. 15.

CAIR AND TAGORE v. MACDONALD.

Mr. Leith moved to amend a clerical error in the plaint, by inserting certain words which had been omitted in copying the draft. The action was on a guarantee, and the omission rendered absolute non-sense of the plaint, as it did not appear but that the money had been duly paid by the surety. No plea had been filed, and no appearance entered, and the cause was coming on to be heard ex parte.

Sir J. P. Grant, Why the error goes to the cause of action itself.

Mr. Leith. It certainly does, and I confess it is an awkward matter.

Sir E. Ryan. I do not see how the Court can allow such an error to be amended. You must move to discontinue the action, and commence de novo.

Mr. Leith. I am afraid, my Lord, that would be equivalent to barring us altogether, as the defendant has since taken himself out of the jurisdiction of the Court.

Sir E. Ryan. Probably he was so advised!

Rule refused.—Ibid.

* A Gentleman at the bar suggested (as amicus curia) that a case in point was happily furnished by a letter of Miss Fanny Squeers, in a recent number of NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, where the young lady describes her father as having lost the use of his legs, and having become thereby incapacitated from holding a pen!!—Miss BRYEN might have so pleaded specially, and the plea would have been good on demurrer!

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1838.

(Before Sir E. Ryan, Sir J. P. Grant, and Sir H. W. Selon.)

RADAGOVIN MOYTRO V. MEKHUNJOY DAY.

Mr. Mortan opened the pleadings.

Mr. Clarke stated the case for the plaintiff. The action was to recover the value of certain silk and other goods alleged to have been received by the defendant from the plaintiff for the purpose of sale on commission. A written account acknowledged by the defendant, would be put in, and it would appear from the evidence, that there still remained in his possession the proceeds to a considerable amount of these commission goods. The total amount specified in the bill of particulars, was Co.'s rupees 3,887.

A gomastah formerly in the service of the plaintiff, was then called as a witness, and he proved the adjustment of the account, and the signatures of the defendant himself, and of certain of his agents by his authority.

After the plaintiff's case had been closed, a question arose upon the pleadings. The first count was to recover the proceeds of goods alleged to have been sent to the defendant for sale on commission, and to have been actually sold by him. The second count was for the value of the same goods with the allegation that the defendant, as commission agent, had never accounted according to his undertaking and agreement. The third count was for money had and received—(upon which no evidence was offered). The defendant pleaded as follows:—1st Plea, as to part of the 1st count, that a certain portion of the goods were re-delivered to a third party as agent for the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff had accepted such re-delivering in discharge and satisfaction; and as to the residue of this 1st count, that the remaining goods therein mentioned continued still unsold in the possession of the defendant. As to the 2d count, the defendant pleaded that he had duly accounted.

No evidence was given on the part of the plaintiff, to show that any of the goods sent for sale on commission, had been actually sold by the defendant, and upon this ground.

The Advocate-General, (with whom was Mr. Leith) submitted that the plaintiff must be nonsuited. There was no case made out at all. As to the first count, the contract was admitted indeed, but the breach was denied; the whole case depended on proving that the defendant had effected the sale of the goods, for until this was done, there could be no breach of the contract. Then, with reference to the second count, the defendant had pleaded that he had accounted, and this was proved for him by the account put in by plaintiff himself.

Mr. Clarke contra, submitted, that, at all events as far as the special plea went, in which the defence set up was, that the goods had been re-delivered, the objection of his learned friend was quite untenable. The affirmative of that issue was upon the defendant; and the only question there was whether the goods were delivered or not. That plea did not raise the question whether any sale had been effected by the defendant; for at the utmost it was but an argumentative and inferential denial, and of such a denial the plaintiff was not bound to take any notice. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove anything which was not directly denied. The case did not fall within the New Rules, for according to the first principles of pleadings the defendant can avail himself of no other defence under a special plea than what the plea itself affords.

The Court, after some deliberation, were of opinion, that a nonsuit was clearly out of the question, because under this plea, the whole question related to the alleged redelivery of the goods, and the affirmative of that issue lay in fact upon the defendant.

The counsel for the defence then went into their case, and put in a later account, from which it appeared (it genuine) that the plaintiff had himself acknowledged the receipt of the goods. The counsel for the plaintiff put in further evidence to contradict the defendant's case.

Mr. Clarke claimed the right of general reply: his learned friend would of course have the privilege of commenting upon the fresh evidence first.

Sir E. Ryan at first doubted, whether the plaintiff's counsel was entitled to the reply, as he thought they ought to have called upon the other side to begin.

Mr. Clarke said, that the rule laid down in Chitty was, that where the general issue was pleaded to any portion of the declaration, (which was the case here) the plaintiff ought to begin, although the affirmative of the other issues might be upon the defendant.

Sir E. Ryan allowed him the right of replying generally.

There was much contradictory evidence, and cross-swearing, and the Court ultimately found a verdict for the defendant upon all the issues. The Chief Justice, twice or three during the progress of the cause, suggested the propriety of referring the matter to arbitration; but to this the defendant's counsel said, that their client could not be brought to accede. The case occupied the Court nearly six hours.

Verdict for the defendant.—Harkara, November 17.

To-morrow, Saturday (this-day) is the last day of Term. The Chief Justice will sit at eleven o'clock. One cause on the common law board stands over.

The Insolvent Court will sit to-morrow, (this day.)—Ibid.

SATURDAY, NOV. 17 1838.

PIDDINGTON V. HARDING.

The Advocate-General moved in this cause, for an attachment for contempt of Court, against Mr. Roger Dias. From the affidavit of grounds, it appeared that one Panshoonang, a writer in the office of Mr. T. Sandes, the Solicitor, went to the house of Mr. Dias, to serve a subpoena in the above cause. Mr. Dias snatched the subpoena out of his hand, threw it upon the ground, and desired the unfortunate process-server to eat it! The man naturally enough declined the pleasure of making a meal of the parchment; whereupon Mr. Dias called his servants and gave orders that they should throw him into the tank, and sent for his dogs in order to indulge in a novel species of duck-hunting! The threat of plunging him into the tank, and hunting him with dogs in the water, Mr. Dias certainly did not venture to carry into execution; but he summoned several chokeydars, and gave the man into custody upon a charge of theft, which it was needless to say was quite unfounded. The learned Counsel said, that he could scarcely conceive a grosser case of resistance to the power and authority of the Supreme Court, and gratuitous contempt of its process. He would leave it to their Lordships to grant either a rule nisi for an attachment or a rule absolute in the first instance.

Sir E. Ryan.—Have you any other affidavit than that of the party complaining?

The Advocate-General.—No, my Lord; it would have been difficult under the circumstances, as, probably, no one disposed to give testimony against Dias, witnessed the outrage complained of. Upon the matter of the giving the man in custody upon a charge of theft, the affidavit of the darogah of the chokeydars may be procured; but he was not present at the first part of the transaction.

Sir E. Ryan.—In general no order nisi for an attachment is grantable on the last day of term, although a rule absolute in the first instance may be moved for. In the present case we should be reluctant to grant a rule absolute on a single affidavit of the circumstances, and that too the affidavit of the party complaining. We think the justice of this case will be best met by giving you a rule nov, with liberty to the party to shew cause in the sittings as of this term.

Mr. Clarke (who had been retained by Mr. Dias) remarked, as amicus curiæ, that it must be at the option of the party to shew cause during the sittings, and that he could not be compelled to appear until the first day of next term.

The Court assented.—Hurkain, Nov. 19.

Monday (this day,) is the first day of the Sittings;—there are fourteen causes on the common law board for trial during the Sittings, and one a remanet from the Term. As there are some motions and demurrers standing over, the Court indicated that these would be taken on Monday (this day,) and that the common law board would not be gone into until Tuesday (to-morrow).—Ibid.

NOVEMBER 20.

In re Soodasun Sein.

The Chief Justice said, that having looked into the affidavits in the matter of Soodasun Sein, (who has been for some time confined as a lunatic in Mr. Beardsmore's asylum) he did not think it necessary to order that individual to be brought up for inspection, and informed Mr. Prinsep that he was entitled to the supersedeas, which he applied for on a former day.

The Advocate-General moved for an attachment for contempt against Bissumbur Holdar, who had resisted the process of the court. When the bailiff had proceeded to execute a writ against him, Bissumbur Holdar had thrown himself on the ground and called out for help; and about fifty people, armed with sticks, had rushed out from various parts of the premises and beaten and maltreated the bailiff.

The Court granted a rule for an attachment absolute against Bissumbur Holdar, and also, on a subsequent motion of the Advocate-General, a rule for an alias commission of rebellion against the same person.—Englishman, November 2.

CORRECTION OF ABOVE.

(Extract from the Englishman of 21st November, 1838)

20th November, 1838.—Memorandum.—In re Soodasun Sein. The Chief Justice said, that having looked into the Affidavits in the matter of Soodasun Sein—(who has been for some time confined as a Lunatic in Mr. Beardsmore's Asylum) he did not think it necessary to order that individual to be brought up for inspection, and informed Mr. Prinsep that he was entitled to the Supersedeas, which he had applied for on a former day.

In reference to the above, a communication was forwarded to the Englishman Office, a copy of which is herewith subjoined.

21st November, 1838.

MY DEAR SIR,—Be good enough to correct an error which I perceived in the Englishman newspaper of this day's date.—Soodasun Sein is not now, nor ever was, confined in my Asylum—he has been from first to last, an out-patient under my especial care and professional treatment.

Your's truly,

Courier, Nov. 23. (Signed) J. BEARDSMORE.

TUESDAY NOV. 20.

PITTA SIDE,

Rajnarain Mookerjee v. Ohnopournah Dossee.

This was an action on promises brought to recover the sum of one thousand rupees, with interest at twelve per cent, on a loan secured by a Bengallee instrument or receipt granted by the defendant to the plaintiff bearing date the 18th of June last. Plea—General issue.

The Advocate-General and Mr. Prinsep appeared on behalf of the plaintiff, and the execution of the instrument was admitted by the defendant's counsel.

Mr. Clarke, with whom was Mr. Leith, on the part of the defendant, submitted that, as the instrument carried interest, and was payable at a certain time, namely, the month of Assu, it ought to have been declared on specially.

The Court over-ruled the objection, stating that they had been in the habit of entertaining suits on Bengallee bonds and receipts in this manner for some time, and would be likely to do so for some time longer.

The defence then set up was, that the instrument had been obtained by the plaintiff from the defendant without consideration, and solely for the purpose of raising money on her account, and that the plaintiff had been only employed as her mookteer for this purpose; that she could not have required the money for the purpose alleged by the other side, viz., the payment of certain costs due to her attorney, as the money for that purpose had been obtained and paid from other sources; and the inference attempted to be drawn was, that the instrument had been obtained by the plaintiff on fraudulent pretences.

On behalf of the plaintiff it was sworn, that the money had been actually paid to her, and that she had given a receipt for the amount, and also executed a mortgage; and, on cross-examination, that one Luckeynarain Mookerjee was the brother of the plaintiff, and that they were joint in estate.

Mr. Clarke, submitted that, by the evidence which his friends had given, they were now out of court. The action had been brought on the common law counts, and it had been proved that Luckeynarain Mookerjee was joint with the plaintiff in estate. The declaration should therefore have been, by both, and the plaintiff ought to be nonsuited.

The Chief Justice.—We do not think this a ground for a nonsuit. There is no proof that the money was lent out of the joint funds, or that the plaintiff was manager of the joint family.

Mr. Clarke then went for a verdict. The case of the plaintiff had been weakened by his putting in the mortgage paper. The condition of the mortgage must be taken with the receipt; and the condition of the mortgage was, that if the money was not paid, the plaintiff was to collect the rents of the property mortgaged, and pay himself thereof. The plaintiff, being bound by this condition, was barred from bringing his action for the debt.

The Chief Justice.—The question is simply whether there has been any consideration given. This we think has been proved, and we believe the plaintiff's witnesses. It is not necessary to join all the members of a joint Hindoo family in bringing an action on a security given to one; and, in the present case, it has not been shewn that the money lent was a part of the joint funds, or that the plaintiff, in whose name the note was taken, was the manager.

Verdict for the plaintiff, with immediate execution.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 21.

(Before Sir H. W. Seaton, Judge.)

Sir H. W. Seaton sat alone in Court to-day, to take common motions.

The case of Piddington v. Harding stands for Monday.

The case of Gillies v. Muttyloll-Seal, is tied up by a rule nisi (on the ground of the absence of material witnesses) which will be made absolute on Monday, unless cause be shown. The rest of the common law board is disposed of.

The equity Board will be taken on Tuesday. Some motions are also standing over.—Hurk Nov. 26.

MONDAY NOVEMBER 26, 1838.

HENRY PIDDINGTON v. BENJAMIN HARDING AND OTHERS.

This was an action for arrest and imprisonment without reasonable or probable cause brought by the plaintiff against the defendants, who are merchants carrying on business in Calcutta under the name and firm of Messrs. Boyd and Co. The damages were laid at 50,000 Rs.

The Advocate General and Mr Sandies for the plaintiff Mr Prinsep and Mr Clarke for the defendants.

The Court were occupied with the trial of this cause during the whole day until a late hour. We are therefore unable to give a full report of the proceedings.

The Chief Justice delivered the verdict and judgment of the court to the following effect:—

We are of opinion that there must be a verdict for the plaintiff; and as questions of law have been raised, we think it right to state our reasons. All actions of this kind must be founded on malice. Malice may be implied by a jury from want of probable cause, but they are not bound to imply it. The first question here is whether there was a want of probable cause. On this point we are clear when we considered the former action. We then tried the case of Fromont versus Complan d. Bingham's Reports p 170 in which Chief Justice Best laid down the doctrine already established by preceding cases, that before there can be an action in respect of a claim arising out of a partnership account, there must be a final balance struck. When the cause between these parties was tried during the last sittings, it was shown that no final balance had been struck, and that, therefore, there had been no ground for the action brought. We have been informed to-day, by the evidence of the attorney for the defendant, that, before any proceedings were had in that action against the plaintiff in this, the opinion of council had been taken. We conclude, in the absence of any thing shown to the contrary, that he advised according to known principles of law, and are not entitled to suppose that he told the party that arrest would lie for this. The second question is whether from the want of probable cause of which we are satisfied, malice is to be inferred in the present case. We are of opinion that it was a malicious arrest and a contrivance on the part of the defendants for the purpose of getting the plaintiff out of the factory of which he was in legal possession, of conveying him to and imprisoning him at Calcutta and then getting possession of the premises themselves. We, therefore, infer malice. The third point for us to determine is the amount of damages. Special damage has not been specifically proved; but it has been proved that the plaintiff by this malicious arrest and false imprisonment, which was illegal from the commencement and not from the time only of taking the money out of court, was deprived of his right to carry on the concerns of the factory. Looking at the whole of the circumstances, the mode, trick, and contrivance by which he was so deprived, and the inconvenience to which he and his family were subjected, and pronouncing no opinion on the real merits of the accounts which it is impossible for us to decide on in the present action, we think that we do justice to the whole of the case by giving verdict for the plaintiff with Three Thousand Rupees Damages.—Englishman Nov. 27.

THURSDAY, NOV. 29, 1838.

SITTINGS AFTER THE FOURTH TERM OF 1833.

BONNERJEE VERSUS BONNERJEE.

The Court were occupied nearly the whole day in hearing the arguments in this case, on a motion for the payment out of Court of the sum of Sa. Rs. 16,62,000 standing in the name of the Accountant General to the credit of the above cause. It may be recollected that the Court last term pronounced a decree, after considerable deliberation, overruling all the exceptions to the Master's Report and the Report was afterwards confirmed on a motion made upon notice, and opposed by a creditor, Rajah Bajyogvindh Sing. A subsequent motion to pay the money out of Court, declared to be due by the Master's Report, was refused on the ground of irregularity—no notice having been given. The same motion was this day made upon notice.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. Osborne now shewed cause. They first took formal objections, the gist of which was that all the parties were not regularly brought before the Court.

The Advocate-General and Mr. Prinsep contra, contended that all objections of this nature were too late at the present stage. Besides it was not for their cheat, who was a mere creditor and not a party to the original suit, to file bills revivor from time to time upon the death of any member of the numerous Bonnerjee family. They further contended that the present objections were substantially the same as those disposed of by their Lordships upon the motion to confirm the Master's Report.

The Court gave no opinion upon this matter, but called on the other side to take their objections (if any) to the merits.

Mr. Clarke and Mr. Osborne then referred to the original order of November 1820, which directed the payment of sicca rupees 900 monthly to the present creditor, and out of which order (not acted upon at all until very recently) these proceedings arose. They called the attention of the Court to the fact, that the order directed the sum of sicca rupees 900 to be paid, while the deeds of agreement referred to on the face of it, and upon which it was founded, only gave the party rupees 450.

Sir E. Ryan. Your ground of objection goes to the validity of a decretal order of this Court. It is utterly out of the question to entertain such an objection. The order is valid and binding upon the Court, until solemnly set aside.

Mr. Clarke. At all events my argument proceeds only upon what appears on the face of the order itself. But, again, it must be remembered, that the present application is for the payment of money out of Court. Now, the order declares, that the said sum of rupees 900 monthly, is to be paid out of the interest or proceeds only of the fund in Court, and the present application is for the payment of the claim out of the principal. This party, therefore, himself seeks to obtain what is inconsistent with the terms of the order.

Sir E. Ryan. Your present objection is equally untenable. You are now impugning the Master's Report, which finds the sum in question to be due out of the fund, and which the Court upon argument have confirmed.

Mr. Clarke. Not so, my Lord. The Master's Report has found the sum to be due to this party, but it is for the Court alone to determine how and when the sum is to be paid. I contend, that the present objection is one which could not have been taken until the present moment, when the application is made to pay the money out of Court, and it is an objection in no way inconsistent with the Master's report.

The Court took time to deliberate. There appeared to be a difference of opinion among their lordships.—Hurkaru, Nov. 30.

The important case of Radhakissen Mitter versus the Bank of Bengal, (in which the Chief Justice and Sir J. P. Grant differed in opinion) stands specially for rehearing to-morrow, Friday (this-day).—Ibid.

INSOLVENT COURT.

NOVEMBER 3, 1838.

IN THE MATTER OF A BETTS, AN INSOLVENT.

Counsel for the Insolvent J. Pearson. Counsel for Messrs Bruce, Shand and Co., L. Clarke.

In this case Messrs. Bruce Shand and Co. moved the Court to have the Insolvent's Schedule amended, regarding his statement in it with respect to the deposit of title deeds of a house in Berhampore and another in Colingah. The Insolvent had, in his Schedule stated, that these deeds were deposited by him with Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co. merely as his agents, whereas Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co., asserted, that the entire papers of the house in Berhampore, and the rents of the house in Colingah, in the town of Calcutta, had been entrusted to their hands by both Mr. and Mrs. Betts, as collateral security for a debt of 700£, which sum had been advanced to Mr. Betts by Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co.'s Agents in England, and which debt they alleged still remained unpaid; whilst the Insolvent, in contradiction to this allegation, maintained, that this debt, which he had contracted in August 1834, had been subsequently liquidated, and in August 1830, he had a surplus fund of 2,500£ in Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co.'s hands, and produced a letter from the firm in support of this asseveration. He admitted, that previous to his departure to New South Wales, he had mortgaged the title deeds of the houses in Berhampore and in Colingah, to Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co.; but that the debt contracted on that occasion had been subsequently liquidated, and for any subsequent debt which he may owe to Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co., they had taken an Insurance Policy of 5 shares in the Laudable Society, on his life, as guarantee for the payment of it. In addition to these particulars, the Insolvent added, that he was born of British parents in Italy; that the house in Berhampore, together with 285,000 Rs., were given to him by John Goddard Watson, Esq., in exchange for his Indigo Factories; that he had settled this house on his wife in lieu of her dowry, and she pays the Zemindar's rent for the ground on which it is situated, and holds the grounds under a perpetual pottah from the Zemindar. In addition to this house, Mrs. Betts possesses another house situated in Colingah, for which this Insolvent paid 10,000 Rs. This house he likewise settled on her in 1829, under a deed of trust. The trustees were Mr. Thomas Betts (since deceased) and Mr. Willoughby DaCosta. At this time deponent was in affluent circumstances. Subsequent to the liquidation of his debt of 700£ to Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co., they, in August 1836 informed him, that he had been very successful in his business, which was then that of a Silk Manufacturer, and that he was possessed of 2,500£ in their hands. They then offered to enter Copartnership with him in his business on the following terms, viz, that he was to get one-third of the profits of the sales which they effected for him in India, and Mr. Gledstane, their agent in London, was to get one-third for the sales effected by him in Europe. In addition to this they were to get credit for commission and other contingent charges. After this arrangement had been entered between deponent and Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co., he never drew on them for any monies, but only drew against the silks which he remitted to them for sale on his account. They, however, ran him up as their debtor, by commission and other unintelligible items, to upwards of 50,000 Rs. for which they rendered him a rough account which he has by him at his residence; and as a security for the ultimate payment of this debt, they took from deponent policies of 5 shares in the Laudable Society, on deponent's life. Deponent does not consider himself in any wise indebted to Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co.; it is they that tell him that he is indebted to them. Deponent in the course of his business has remitted silks to Mr. Willoughby DaCosta, and several persons, to sell on his account, but he never drew largely on them nor is he indebted to any of them; he only drew on them such sums as he considered the sales of his goods in their hands would more than liquidate. Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co. used to buy deponent's silks themselves at under market price, viz at 10-8 and 11 Rs. per pound, and sell it off in the bazar here again as their goods at 12-8 and 13 Rs. a pound, and thus realize large profits on it. Deponent's wife never joined with him in assigning over either the title deeds or the rents of any house to Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co., subsequent to the liquidation of deponent's debt of 700£ to them; they were only entrusted to them as deponent's general agents. Mrs. Betts now claims them, they being her property. Deponent did not advise her to set up this claim; she has done it of her own accord.

These were the chief particulars elicited from this insolvent, whose examination by Mr. L. Clarke, was very lengthy, and many other facts were stated by deponent in his depositions, which were not very material and are conveniently omitted in this report.

After this examination had been closed, Mr. Clarke informed the Judge, that when he entered the Court to-day, it was his intention to have opposed the discharge of this insolvent; but he had subsequently received a letter from Messrs. Bruce, Shand and Co., in which they had instructed him not to oppose the discharge of the insolvent from custody; they only requested him now to move the Court to order the insolvent to amend his schedule, regarding the deposit of the title deeds of the two houses in question.

Mr. Pearson replied, that as Mr. Clarke had intimated that he would not oppose the discharge of the insolvent, he, Mr. Pearson, would not therefore cross, question him as he might otherwise have done.

The Judge replied, that he could not compel the insolvent to alter his schedule after he had sworn to the correctness of it. If the insolvent chooses, to maintain the correctness of it, it must be on his own responsibility. All that the Court could now do, since Mr. Clarke has withdrawn his intention to oppose the discharge of the insolvent, is to swear him to the correctness of his schedule, and then discharge him.

Mr. Clarke observed, that any person who will swear in the one and the same instant, that he owes a party a debt, and then deny the debt, as this insolvent had done to-day, is not to be believed.

The Judge replied, that he was the person who was to decide whether the insolvent was to be believed or not in this instance. To this remark Mr. Clarke bowed and assented.

The Court then swore the insolvent as to the correctness of his schedule, and afterwards ordered his discharge.—Hurk., Nov. 5.

IN THE MATTER OF GOPAL CHAND SEEL, AN INSOLVENT.

In this case, it was plainly shown to the Court, that the insolvent had, in collusion with his detaining creditor, given him fraudulently a promissory note for a certain sum, which he never owed him, solely for the purpose of enabling the holder of it to arrest the payee for its amount, and thus enable the payee to sue out an adjudication of insolvency, which he has done in hopes of being enabled to take the benefit of the insolvent act, and thus defraud his other creditors. On this fact being proved to the Court's satisfaction, the Commissioner revoked the adjudication in this insolvent's case.—Ibid.

IN THE MATTER OF G. H. SWAINE, AN INSOLVENT.

In this case, Mr. C. G. Strettell, the attorney for the insolvent, moved the Court to postpone the hearing of this insolvent's case, on the plea that all the notices to the creditors of this insolvent had not been served on them. He informed the Court that the insolvent was not now in custody.

The Court then postponed the hearing of this case until Saturday the 4th December next, and ordered the attorney for the insolvent to advertise in the daily papers the day on which the hearing of this insolvent's case had now been fixed.

After this, two officers of the hon'ble East India Company's Service, were sworn to the correctness of their schedules, and there being no opposition, they were discharged. This, together with some minor motions, concluded the business of the day, and the Court adjourned until Saturday the 17th instant.—Ibid.

NOVEMBER 17, 1838.

Present Sir E. Ryan, and Sir W. H. Seaton.

IN THE MATTER OF JAMES JACOBS, AN INSOLVENT.

Mr. Strettell, attorney for the insolvent, applied for leave to amend the schedule, as to certain particulars, in regard to debts inserted in the schedule to be due to Rousac Brothers and Co. and to the estate of Henry Fowles; and Mr. Leith, who appeared to oppose the insolvent on behalf of certain parties, claiming under the estate of Fowles, stated, that one of his grounds of opposition would necessarily entail amendment of the schedule, further than Mr. Strettell has asked leave for,—the Insolvent having admitted in his schedule the receipt of a sum of 20,000 rupees which is stated partly to have been lost with McKintosh and Co. it ought to be particularized, how much, and what portion of it, was so lost in that firm, and how the residue has been appropriated, and what portion remained in the hands of the insolvent.

The Court concurring in this, the insolvent was remanded, until the next Court day, the 4th Dec. next, and the Court granted Mr. Strettell's application to amend the schedule, requiring him to put in, before the rising of the Court, an affidavit in support of the petitioner for leave to amend the schedule, and directed fresh advertisement of the postponed hearing.

Mr. Leith asked, that the order for the postponement of this hearing be enlarged with a direction for the appearance of the insolvent's wife, to examine her as to fraudulent concealment of some property, as attempts to serve here with a subpoena have been unsuccessful. The Court granted it. Mr. Strettell stated, that she was now in Court in attendance. Mr. Clarke also appeared to oppose this insolvent, on behalf of Bruce, Shand and Co.—Hurkaru, Nov. 20.

IN THE MATTER OF BRIJONATH BAROO.

Mr. Anley, on behalf of Samchund Seal, a creditor of the insolvent, applied for an adjudication of insolvency in this matter; on grounds, which appearing to be sufficient, the application was granted.—Ibid.

IN THE MATTERS OF JOHN BROWNE, A. HARVEY, AND S. M. GASPER.

The Assignee, Mr. Alexander, applied for, and obtained leave, to file accounts in these several matters.—Ibid.

IN THE MATTER OF KISSEN SOONDER SEAL.

Mr. Strettell, on a certificate of the examiner, applied for further time for the examiner to make his report in this matter, until the 4th of December next.—Granted.—Ibid.

IN THE MATTER OF SHAIK MOKIM.

This insolvent being called, and no one appearing to oppose him, after the usual oath being taken by him, as to the truth of his schedule, he was discharged.—Ibid.

IN THE MATTER OF BEBEE AUMEERUN.

The insolvent was brought up, and Mr. Strettell appeared to oppose her or behalf of the detaining creditor, as to the service of notice on whom there appeared to have been some irregularity, but that was waived by Mr. Strettell representing him. Mr. Strettell stated, that considering the advanced years of the insolvent, and her having been already in prison for 18 months, he had no wish by his opposition to have her detained in custody any longer. That so far as his opposition went, it being left to the assignee to enquire into, would sufficiently answer the object of his opposition, which was that the insolvent has made a fictitious transfer of her property, the only property she possessed, to evade payment of the debt due to the detaining creditor; and has also executed a bond and warrant of attorney to confer judgment, on which judgment had been entered up in the Supreme Court, but no execution had been issued out. He added, that the party to whom she had executed these securities, Shaik Rubbewallah, was not to be found. As he was secreting himself to avoid being called upon to be examined; he would, therefore, adduce secondary evidence, by which it would appear, that this insolvent, jointly with Bebee Sohoo, was possessed of a spot of ground, situate at Mutchwabazar, in the Town of Calcutta; and on the 19th of November 1836, she and Bebee Sohoo executed at the office of Mr. Attorney Kemp, a bill of sale of this ground to Shaik Rubbewallah for an alleged consideration of 900 rupees, which was apparently paid in the presence of the Attorney, the money in fact being that of the insolvent. That she gave Rubbewallah a bank note for a thousand rupees, which Rubbewallah carried and gave her in the presence of the attorney, and she was to have returned to him the 100 rupees excess. This was what passed to bind the attorney as to the consideration for this bill of sale, immediately after which, on the 30th of the same month November 1837, she executed, at the office of Mr.

Graham, jointly with Bebee Sohoo before named, a bond and judgment to the said Shaik Rubbewallah for 3,000 rupees, on which judgment had been entered up as stated above. Mr. Strettell then called Shaik Becho, who, being sworn, said, that he knew the Insolvent and of the execution by her to Rubbewallah of certain securities, having accompanied them to Mr. Kemp's; but he did not go inside Mr. Kemp's; house or office. This was 12 months ago. He could not say what security had been signed. He added that this woman, pointing to Bebee Aumerun, the insolvent, outside of Mr. Kemp's office, and before going in and before the execution of the security in question, in the witnesses presence, gave Shaik Rubbewallah a thousand rupees in one or more bank notes, witness could not say which; and she told Shaik Rubbewallah, that the property was to remain hers, the money (1000 rupees) being hers, and the transaction to be banamey. Shaik Rubbewallah took the money and they all, except the witness, went in to Mr. Kemp's office. The property alluded to, was a spot of land situated at Mutchwahazar, in the Town of Calcutta. Witness waited until they came out of Mr. Kemp's office, and was asked, but he refused to attest the security.

Bebee Aumerun, the Insolvent, sworn. She acknowledged having signed the bill of sale, and that Mr. Kemp explained it to her, that she received 900 rupees consideration from Shaik Rubbewallah, paid in Mr. Kemp's presence, by a bank-note for 1,000 Rs., and the excess 100 she was to have returned, and did change the note and return to Rubbewallah, but could not say where the bank note had been changed. She gave it afterwards to Rubbewallah, to change the note, take his 100, and to bring her the 900, which he did, through a sizar of his. She denied all knowledge of Mr. Graham, and of having ever known or seen him, or at any time been to his office or having any transaction or business in the way of signing any paper in his office. She said, that these 900 Rs. she appropriated, in paying for law charges to Mr. Fountain, who had been originally, and up to the time of his death, her attorney, now Mr. Martindell was her attorney. She was asked to identify Mr. Kemp and did so. She said she knew Shaik Rubbewallah, and was indebted to him in a sum of 350 rupees for money advanced by him for law charges. She denied having signed any paper to Shaik Rubbewallah for 3,000 rupees or other than the one, or the bill of sale, for 900 rupees, and she positively and distinctly denied again all knowledge of Mr. Graham and of any transaction with him, at his office. Mr. Graham was called for, and he had been served with a subpoena to attend, but he was not present. Mr. Strettell sent for him, and in the interim the bond of judgment was produced, from the office of the Prothonotary of the Supreme Court, and the draft of the Bill of Sale, by Mr. Kemp. Mr. Graham was again and again called, and absent.

Shaik Bhakoo was next sworn, and examined. This witness knew nothing of the transaction of his own knowledge, but had heard of that regarding the ground at Mutchwahazar, and the bill of sale. This he heard of from one Juggoon Khan, a dultoll, not from the Insolvent, nor from Shaik Rubbewallah; but he knows them. Shaik Rubbewallah, he said, was absent from Calcutta, gone to collect some money due to him, but where, or who from, witness did not know.

Mr. Graham was again called and not forthcoming. Mr. Kemp, who was all the time in Court, was sworn. He said he had been attorney for this insolvent (since the death of her former attorney, Mr. Fountain) for 2 or 3 months in part of 1836, and part of 1837, and had prepared the Bill of Sale before spoken of and of which, he produced the draft. He had explained the deal to her, and saw the money paid in a bank-note of a thousand rupees, 900 out of which, from the consideration to her for the Bill of Sale, from her to Shaik Rubbewallah, and she was to have returned the excess one hundred rupees to him. This was on the 14th of November 1836, and from the date of the Bond and Judgment spoken of, (30th November 1836), witness said he must have been her attorney at the time of the execution of this bond and judgment in question, for he continued her attorney until part of 1837, as stated already; in preparing in betiments for her to prosecute certain parties for perjury in an ejectment suit between the insolvent and her detaining creditor, of which suit this witness could say nothing, Mr. Fountain having been her attorney at that time and the object of this sale for 900 rupees was, as stated to this witness, to defray the costs for the prosecution before mentioned. Witness did not know where the Insolvent was arrested, nor any thing of the bond and judgment, except that he had lately heard of the bond and judgment.

Mr. Graham appeared, and the Chief Justice remarked to him, that, as an attorney, he ought to be in attendance. Mr. Graham said, that according to arrangement with Mr. Strettell, he was waiting until written to. His Lordship repeated, that he ought to have been in attendance, and ought not to have waited for any letter. Mr. Graham was sworn and examined. He looking at Bebee Aumerun, the insolvent, but said he did not recollect her, though he might have seen her. Looking at the warrant of attorney to confess judgment, he said to him, he said, it is from Bebee Aumerun and Bebee Sohoo, for 3,000 rupees, to Shaik Rubbewallah and is attested by him. He was attorney for the latter and believed the consideration 3,000 rupees to be for money owing to his client, and could speak of it from his memoranda which he had brought. In reply to a question from the Court, if he allowed native women to execute bonds and judgments in the absence of any legal adviser on their part, he replied that he did allow it, not knowing any practice to the contrary; and as to the identity of this woman, perhaps some native writer in his office would know her, and he accordingly sent to his office; but the Court observed, that native females ought not to be allowed to sign bond and judgments without a legal adviser on their part to protect them, the like as in the signing of bond and judgment by a prisoner, as native females were entitled to that protection whether in or out of prison; and in this case, as it has turned out, it would appear, if all this is represented to be true, that the Insolvent has been guilty of fraud, and could on no account be allowed to swear to the truth of the schedule, nor be discharged. She must be remanded, and this matter made to stand over for the Examiner to examine. Mr. Graham and his native writer, as also Shaik Rubbewallah, and such other witnesses as might be necessary, to enable the Examiner to enquire and report into the truth of all matters; and as to the bond and judgment in question, and all other debts and transaction; and if any thing of fraud be established as is apprehended, it will remain for another Court perhaps to enter into the matter. At present the insolvent was remanded and the matter referred to the Examiner to enquire and report as above, on the next Court day, that is the 4th of December next; and on Mr. Strettell's application, ordered, that Shaik Rubbewallah do attend before the Examiner to be examined. — Ibid.

IN THE MATTER OF BEBEE SOHOO.

This is the lady who is spoken of conjointly with Bebee Aumerun, the Insolvent above named, and she is also in prison, seeking for the benefit of the insolvent act, and, as in the last matter, the like points are involved in this. The matter also stands over in like manner as the other.

Mr. Graham has asked us to add, that it will appear on the face of the warrant of Attorney to confess judgment, as it now stands filed in Court, that it was duly explained to the women, and they were identified to him by a native who is a subscribing witness to the warrant.—Ibid.

HOOGHLY SESSIONS COURT.

FIRST DAY—NOVEMBER 19, 1838.

(Before Jurists Curtis, Esq., Sessions Judge, and Mouley Syud Ahmed, the Mohomedan law officer of the Zillah.)
GOVERNMENT versus KISTULOL BRANACHARFE PANDA alias ALUCK SHAH, alias PERTAB CHUNDER JOOMUN KHAN, KALLY PERSAD SING JENADHAN, RADY KISTO GHOSAL, SAGUR DHUR, HAJA NARHAI CHUND, AND HAFIZ ELIHIH-GOLAH.

Charge. Count 1st against the 1st prisoner, of imposition, in assuming the name and title of Dhe Maha Raja Pertab Chund, Babadoor, late Zemendar of Zilla Burdwan. Count 2nd, of Extorting money under the aforesaid false pretence from Rada Kissen Byack, Dewan of the Government Treasury. Count 3d, of as-sembling unlawfully, a large and tumultuous body of men on the 2d of May 1838, at Culna, in the zilla of Burdwan; he, the said prisoner, having been previously convicted on the 4th of August 1836, of a similar breach of the peace, and sentenced by Mr. Harrington, the Judge of zilla Hooghly, to 6 months' imprisonment in the zilla Jail, from whence he was released on bail after the expiration of his sentence. Charge against the other prisoner, of aiding and abetting the first prisoner in the commission of the said illegal acts.

Counsel for the Prosecution, M. A. Bignell, Esq.

In this case, the Sessions Judge had issued summons for the attendance of a Special Jury to try this case, in conjunction with him; but as the case is likely to occupy the Court's time for nearly two months, all the jurors, with the exception of one person, named Baboo Anundoo Persaud Bondapadma, Zemindar of Teelie Parah, declined attending, on the plea that their daily attendance at the Sessions Court for 2 months, would completely withdraw them from usual duties, which would, by so long a discontinuance of their attention to them, be neglected, and they be the sufferers thereby; and further, that even if they were willing to sacrifice their interest on this point, to accommodate Government, they could not answer for the casualities of sickness, &c. intervening in this period. As the Government Regulations in existence in the Mofussil Courts could not compel the attendance of the Jurors thus summoned, the Sessions Judge, in failure of a complete jury, was necessitated to abandon his original intention on this point, and try the case with the assistance of the Mohomedan law officer of his Court.

Previous to the reading of the charges against these prisoners to them, the Sessions Judge received a letter from Mr. Morton, Barrister at Law, wishing to know whether he would be permitted by the Court to attend on behalf of the prisoners and to conduct their case for them. The purport of this note the Sessions Judge communicated to the Government pleader, who informed the Sessions Judge, that he had been especially instructed by Government, to waive all objections to the attendance of any person on behalf of the prisoners, who may be delegated by them to manage their case. The Sessions Judge then wrote in reply to Mr. Morton, that no objections existed to his appearing as the prisoners' Counsel, provided he filed a mookarnama signed by them, authorising him to act on their behalf.

Shortly after the receipt of this note, Mr. Morton entered the Court, accompanied by Messrs. W. D. Shaw and R. Graham, Attorneys for the prisoners in this case.

During the reading of the indictment to the prisoner, Mr. Morton, on behalf of the principal prisoner, stated to the Judge, that the prisoner felt indisposed, and requested to be accommodated with a seat. The request was granted, and he had a chair allowed him during the trial of his case.

The Shristadar of the Session Judge's Court, commenced at about 11 o'clock A. M., the Magistrate's commitment in this case, and at about half past one o'clock P. M., he had finished the reading of the charges, which detailed minutely the transactions of the principal prisoner, ever since his release from the Hooghly jail, after the expiration of the term of his former sentence for a breach of peace committed by him at Bancootah, and more particularly the affairs of his trip to Culna, and his capture there, together with his adherents; as likewise the prisoners reply to these charges, as given by him before the Magistrate, and was proceeding to read the purport of the evidence of the witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution, before Mr. Sannells, the committing Magistrate, together with Mr. Sannells's comments on them, when the Sessions Judge remarked, that all these witnesses would, during the investigation of this case, be again examined, and the Court would thereby be enabled to form its own judgment on their testimony; therefore he did not perceive the necessity of having them all read to the Court now, together with the Magistrate's opinion on them; as the Court would not be guided in its decision of this case by whatever the Magistrate might opine of it, but form its own judgment thereon, from the facts which may arise during its investigation. In this remark of the Sessions Judge, both the Mohomedan law officer of his Court as well as the Vakueels for the prosecution and the defence coincided; but the Shristadar replied, that he differed in opinion from them, and that it was requisite to have the whole of the commitment, together with the abstract of the evidence, and the Magistrate's comments thereon, read; because their personal would prove the trickery and the chicanery of the prisoners. To this reply no objection being made by the Court, the reading of the commitment was continued and ended at about 2 o'clock.

After this reading was over, the three counts of the charges against the principal prisoner and his adherents, were read to them in the Bengally language at their request.

The prisoners pleaded not guilty.

The reply of the principal prisoner. My name is Pestaub Chunder Dhe Maharaj. I have no profession or calling. I am a native of Burdwan and the rightful zemindar of it. I can read and write. I plead not guilty to the charges against me. I wish an English copy of this my statement to be furnished to my Vakueels. This request was complied with. He then signed this plea to the indictment against him; after which the other prisoners were severally brought up and stated their names, age, the names of their parents, their profession and place of nativity, to the Court, and signed their declaration of not guilty to the indictment against them.

Whilst the prisoners were pleading to the indictment against them, a discussion took place between the Court and the vouchers for the defence, regarding the attendance of Dr. Halliday, a very material witness for the defence. He, it appears, was formerly the family Doctor to Maharajah Pertab Chunder. This officer has stated in reply to his subpoena, that as he cannot be compelled to attend on the subpoena, served upon him in this case, he declined so doing, unless his travelling expenses and the deduction of his allowances, which would necessarily ensue, in consequence of his leaving his station, be paid to him. This reply, it appears, was submitted by the Sessions Judge to Government, who, in reply, informed him, that the Government would not deviate from their usual practice in these cases, and therefore they declined to reimburse the Doctor for the losses he said he would suffer in consequence of his attendance on this subpoena.

Mr. Shaw replied, that he is not conversant enough to declare what the practice in such cases is in the Mofussil Courts; but in the Supreme Court in criminal cases, the Court compelled the witnesses within its jurisdiction to attend, and they were not allowed any travelling charges. He supposed the same rule would hold good in this case. He then mentioned a case quoted by Mr. Spankie. The Sessions Judge, on perusing it, opined, that it did not coincide with the case now pending before the Court, and said that if the defence wished the attendance of Dr. Halliday, they could send him his expenses and he would then willingly come.

In consequence of the subpoenas being worded for the 20th instant, none of the witnesses were in attendance to day. The Court, in consequence thereof, adjourned at 3 o'clock, P. M., until 10 o'clock, A. M., of the next day.

The prisoners were this-morning brought up at 8 o'clock, A. M., into the Court house, and the Court sat at a quarter after 10 o'clock, A. M.

There are 67 witnesses subpoenaed for the prosecution, and 317 for the defence. The trial, it is supposed, will occupy the Court two months if not more.

Mr. Graham informed the Court on its adjourning, that the prisoner, Rada Kisto Ghosaul, had been released by the Magistrate on bail of 300 rupees; but the Magistrate subsequently added 200 rupees more to it; and although the bail is competent for a much larger amount, and is forthcoming, still the prisoner is taken back to the Jail and confined.

Mr. Hignell remarked, that no prisoner could be released on bail during the hearing of his case before the Sessions.

With regard to the attendance of Dr. Halliday, the Judge advised the defendant's counsel to apply to the Mizanur Adawlut.

Mr. Edward Trevor, to-day took his oath and relieved charge of the office of the Registrar of the deeds in this zilla.—Hurk., Nov. 21.

SECOND DAY.—Nov. 20, 1838,

Gregory Herbelots deposed, that he had seen Pertaub Chunder, the late Rajah of Burdwan, three times before his demise. The first time he saw him for a few minutes, when he was introduced to him in 1816 by Mr. Forbes, the Commissioner for foreign settlements, under whom deponent was then an assistant. The next time when deponent saw him, was in September 1817, on the occasion of the settlement of Chinsurah being restored to the Dutch. On that occasion Pertaub Chunder requested deponent to introduce him to Mr. Van Brucelar, the Dutch Commissioner. Deponent, consequently accompanied Pertaub Chunder in his carriage, from the Rajbarry at Chinsurah to the residence of Mr. Overbeck, the then Governor of Chinsurah, and after an interview of about one hour, Pertaub Chunder returned in company with deponent to the Rajbarry. The last time was a few days after this introduction, when deponent was in his company for a few hours at a nautch where he had been invited.

It would be very difficult for deponent to recollect and identify natives after a lapse of 20 or 22 years; but from what deponent has seen of the prisoner, who alleges himself to be the Rajah Pertaub Chunder, he does not consider him to be the individual he personates. He appears to be about an inch taller than Pertaub Chunder was, and not so fair. Besides, his features do not correspond with those of Rajah Pertaub Chunder. Deponent has seen the picture of Rajah Pertaub Chunder produced during the trial, and it resembles the late Rajah. Deponent first saw the prisoner in the Hooghly jail, in 1836, where he questioned him regarding the situation of the Rajbarry and the particulars of his interview with the Dutch Commissioners. His answers to these questions are not correct. He stated the tank and garden in the Rajbarry to be to the north of the building, whereas they are to the southward. Deponent even chalked out a plan of the building, but he still could not describe it although it was the residence of Pertaub Chunder when he was at Chinsurah.

On cross-examination deponent stated, that Europeans in this country grow darker, but he cannot say if natives change their complexion during twenty-two years; but perhaps the constant use of oil may darken their complexion. Deponent has seen the prisoner three times since his interview with him in the jail. When deponent first saw him he was much fairer than he now is, and stouter. When deponent saw him under examination in the Magistrate's Court here, he then appeared to be much darker and rather haggard; he is now rather fairer and improved in his appearance. When I saw the prisoner in the Hooghly Jail, he recognized me and mentioned my name. He never evinced any disposition to converse with deponent on any occasion. The particulars of the interview between Rajah Pertaub Chunder and the Dutch Commissioners were of so important a nature that if the prisoner was Rajah Pertaub Chunder, he could never have forgotten them. The circumstances of the prisoner's not recollecting it, and not being able to describe the particulars of the Rajbarry, even putting aside the circumstance of his features, complexion and stature not corresponding with Pertaub Chunder's, I could almost swear that the prisoner who alleges himself to be Rajah Pertaub Chunder, is not the man he personates. Mr. Overbeck received two or three visits from Pertaub Chunder after Mr. O. had been appointed Governor of Chinsurah. Deponent cannot say whether Mr. Overbeck was intimate with him or not.

The rest of this deponent's evidence being irrelevant to the question at issue, is omitted.

After this, Rajah Nore Hurry Chunder Roy, of Hurdhun, Zilla Nuddea, who was at large on bail, appeared on his reconnaissance and pleaded not guilty, and the deposition of this witness and Mr. Hutchinson's evidence, as given at the Magistrate's Court, were read over and explained to the prisoner, and the Mahomedan Law Officer of this Court.

Henry Toby Prinsep deposed, that he had been personally acquainted with the late Pertaub Chunder, son of Rajah Tej Chunder, late Zemindar of Burdwan. He was personally acquainted with him for some time previous to his being appointed a Special Commissioner at Burdwan in 1839, where he had several interviews on business connected with that Zemindary with both Rajah Tej Chunder and Pertaub Chunder. I took great interest in these interviews, and the old Rajah carefully excluded all his anlas on those occasions and none but deponent, the Hon'ble Mr. J. E. Elliot, and the two Rajahs, were admitted in them. They were of such a nature that neither Pertab Chunder nor any of those present on the occasion could have forgotten them, and when deponent questioned the prisoner last year on that subject, he gave very incorrect replies. He said that all the anlas were present on those occasions, and that he knew nothing of Mr. Elliot. Deponent had an interview with the prisoner last year, and spoke to him on that occasion. The prisoner mistook Mr. Pattle for deponent, and he could not recognise Mr. Hutchinson, who was present in the room, but he subsequently recognized Mr. Trower. The late Pertab Chunder was rather a short man, shorter than Dwarkanath Tagore, with rounded limbs, small boned and neat make. Deponent, if he were to see him, could recognize him again. He does not believe the prisoner to be Rajah Pertab Chunder, as he does not resemble that person; I have seen a picture of Rajah Pertab Chunder in the Court; it was reckoned a tolerable likeness of that individual when it was first drawn, but it did not resemble him latterly.

In 1820. Government received an official intimation of the death of Kowur Pertab Chunder and wrote an official reply of condolence to his father Rajah Tej Chunder. Deponent was then Secretary to Government in the Persian Department. Deponent drafted the letters and Lord Hastings signed one and deponent the other. When the death of any great personage is reported to Government, no enquiries are made unless there are any reasons to doubt the correctness. There were none in this case and consequently no enquiries were made. This is all the knowledge deponent has of Pertab Chunder's death. General Allard, after his return from France, told deponent that he had seen the prisoner previous to his quitting India, travelling about Lahore as a tukeer, and he gave himself out to be a Bengal Rajah; but of what place he did not state then, and General Allard said, that he believed him to be a real Rajah, but I was always incredulous of his tale.

Here this deponent recognized the official letters of condolence alleged to be written by him.

Dwarkanath Tagore deposed, that he had seen the late Rajah Pertab Chunder, son of Rajah Tej Chunder, zemindar of Burdwan, 5 or 6 years previous to his death, and was very intimate with him in Calcutta. The last time deponent saw him, was about one year previous to his death, which occurred 18 or 20 years ago. Deponent never was at Burdwan. Deponent cannot, after the lapse of so many years, state whether the prisoner who alleges himself to be Pertab Chunder is that individual or not; but he thinks he is not, because he is taller and darker than Pertab Chunder was, and his features are not like those of Pertab Chunder. Pertab Chunder was very fair for a Hindoo. Deponent was once asked to take up the prisoner's case. He engaged to do so, and gave Mr. Tutton some written questions to ask the prisoner, which, if he were the real Pertab Chunder, he could never have forgotten. As the prisoner could not answer these questions, he at once disbelieved him to be the man he pretended he was, and abandoned his cause. Rajah Gopee Mohon Deb, who was very intimately acquainted with Pertab Chunder and his father, invariably refused to see the prisoner, being fully satisfied that he was an impostor and that the real Pertab Chunder was dead. Mr. Tutton subsequently treated with Mr. Charles Reed for the management of this prisoner's case, and was to have got 100,000 rupees for his trouble, partly in advance; but as their was no money forthcoming, he threw it up. The prisoner, when deponent first saw him, recognized deponent in the Supreme Court, although deponent did not recognize him to be Rajah Pertab Chunder. In fact, deponent is certain that the prisoner is not Pertab Chunder from all the circumstances of this case. Deponent knew Kiseep Seal. He was, after Pertab Chunder's death for, some time in deponent's employ, and was discharged for embezzlement. He was a great favorite of Pertab Chunder's. He might have made away with his papers after his death, but deponent is not aware of this. The picture which deponent saw in this Court, of the late Pertab Chunder, bears a strong resemblance to him. The firm of Carr, Tagore and Co. are the mooktars of Ranee Buxant Komaree, and have paid some money on her account to Mr. Hedger, her attorney. Her suit is for maintenance and some property, which Rajah Tej Chunder assigned to her. Deponent does not think that if the real Pertab Chunder were to appear, her case would suffer by it, as it is in no way connected with the question of the Rajahship. However, the firm of Carr, Tagore and Co. have in consequence of some information, which had subsequently come to their knowledge, intimated to her attorney, that they will no longer act on her behalf. In expressing his opinion as to whether the Ranee's case would be affected by the issue of this case, deponent said, he would submit it to the better judgment of Mr. Morton who was a barrister and better able to decide the point.

Mr. Morton applied to the Judge to enquire, whether, according to the course of Mofussil practice, any course could be adopted by consent of both sides, for taking the depositions, as transmitted from the Magistrate's Court, as evidence in the Judge's Court, without re-examining the witnesses. He was ready on his part to allow certain of those depositions (if practicable) to be received in evidence here, and the mere reading of them in Court would take far less time than examining the witnesses over again. He had mentioned the matter to Mr. Bignell, who had acquiesced in the expediency of the course, if it could be done.

Mr. Curtis said, that it was not the usual practice certainly, but he would consider of it.

THIRD DAY—NOVEMBER 21, 1838.

Rada Mohon sircar deposed. I saw the prisoner, who alleges himself to be Pertab Chunder, in custody at Bancoora. I went there as a witness in that case. In the B. S. 1227, either on the 6th or the 8th Pous, Rajah Pertab Chunder fell ill, and on the night of the 10th or 11th of that month at 11 o'clock, P. M., he was carried to Ambeeka. I was then Mooktar of Ranee Joy Komaree, wife of Tej Chunder Bahadur. On the night of the 20th of that month, Joy Komaree sent for me, and her brother Sham Chunder, and desired us to take a letter to Pertab Chunder, who, she said, was seriously indisposed at Ambeeka, and added, "if you find him somewhat recovered, then do one of you stay at Ambeeka and send us daily intelligence of his health, and the other return to me at Burdwan. We left Burdwan that night and arrived on the evening of the 21st Pous at Ambeeka, and gave the letter to Major Rajah Tej Chunder, who was then at Ambeeka, and asked him how Pertab Chunder was. He replied go and see him; he is in an adjoining room, and struck his forehead. Sham Chunder and I went there and we saw Pertab Chunder very dangerously ill and a person fanning him. We afterwards returned to our resting place. On that night, shortly before midnight, we heard a noise in the Rajbarry, and a shout that the Rajah was going to the river side. We came out and saw Pertab Chunder carried to the ghaut of the river in a palkee, and many persons following him weeping. When I arrived at the Ghaut, I saw the Rajah in a swoon, lying on a bed which was there. After a short time, the Rajah, in consequence of the cold river breeze, began to shiver. The people then took him from the river side into a tent close by, where Bermonuud Gossain began to read prayers over him, and bestowed alms of elephants, horses, cows, grain and clothes; after which Bermonuud Gossain and Juggut Doctor said, there are no hopes now, take the Rajah to the river side and perform his funeral obsequies there. The Rajah was then re-taken to the river side. Sham Baboo, Nundoo Baboo, Gureel Baboo, Busunt Baboo, and Jugmohun Baboo, took him there, and put the bed partially into the river, so that the water reached the Rajah's knees. Jugmohun and Mohun Baboo held his knees, and Bermonund Gossain and the other Kheetros, began to exclaim hurry hole, hurry dhunee around him. About half an hour or less after the Rajah expired. As he was expiring the crowd pulled up the bed and left the corpse on the bank, and Jugmohun and Mohun Baboo stood near the body, we and the populace at a short distance. Busunt Lall and Ghasee Ram, went to give notice to Tej Chunder of Pertab Chunder's death, and they shortly afterwards returned. A panoply, a ruttee, and other articles necessary to perform the funeral rites, were brought to the ghaut. They then undressed the deceased, washed him, put an bleached shroud over his corpse, and Ghasee Ram made a funeral offering called pindee. The corpse then was removed on the ruttee a short distance on nen's shoulders, near the funeral pile, where another pindee was offered. They again bathed the corpse, took it up from the ruttee or coffin, and put it on the cheeta or funeral pile; and Ghasee Ram performed a third pindee on the mouth of the Rajah while on the cheeta. Ghasee Ram then thrice performed a circle round the funeral pile, with a burning brand in his hand, at each circuit touching the pile with the brand and on the fourth round, Ghasee Ram set fire to the deceased's mouth, and the crowd immediately afterwards began to throw ghee, pice and tow on the pile. This was at about 2 o'clock, a.m. Early next morning, they removed the ashes, and Ghasee Ram threw some river water on the pile and quenched it, Jugmohun washed the site off the pile, scraped the ashes and gathered the bones and ashes and put them into a new earthen pot and took it to put it into the burying ground of Rannee Bissunt Koomaree, the mother of Pertab Chunder; and after his departure I bathed, took my meals, and returned to Burdwan. I did not see Prawn Baboo on the occasion. Rajah Tej Chunder accompanied Pertab Chunder to Ambeeka. I am sure that Pertab Chunder is dead, for I saw his corpse burnt.

Cross-examined by Mr. Bignell.—I saw no European physician attend on the Rajah during his sickness. Dalalove Hakeem, Uskur Uller Hakeem, Chunder Seeker Cubeerajh, Juggut Cubeerajh, and Bermonund Gossain, administered to him. His indisposition was a severe fever. The prisoner is taller than Pertab Chunder. His eyes are smaller than the Rajah's, nor is he so fair. His hands and feet are more lengthy, and he is not so old as Pertab Chunder would have been were he still alive. Pertab Chunder was 29 or 30 years old when he died; had he been alive he would now be 48 or 49 years of age. Bermonund died after he had given his deposition at Bancoora; so did Juggut Chunder Cubeerajh. I have never seen Chunder Seeker Cubeerajh nor Uskur Ally Hakeem since the Rajah's death. The prisoner appears to be 38 or 39 years of age. I do not know which of Pertab Chunder's servants attended him during his indisposition. I did not see the cremation of the Rajah's remains, but I have seen his tomb at Unuah. It is a brick built room, with a round protuberance on it, wrapped with cloth, and alms are distributed there in remembrance of the deceased.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton.—I am a servant of the Rajbarry at Burdwan, and get 25 rupees a month. After the demise of Pertab Chunder, his two widows had a very complicated law-suit regarding their dowry. I gave evidence there, and again when the prisoner was in custody at Bancoora. I gave evidence in that suit again regarding the death of Pertab Chunder, as these have served as refreshers to my memory, regarding that event.

I was not present at the performance of the funeral ceremonies of Rajah Tej Chunder. I was desired by Prawn Baboo to remain at Burdwan. He died on the 2d Bhaadhoor, 1239. On the 2d May last I was at Ambeeka, accompanied by eight or ten men. I was despatched by Prawn Baboo to protect the Burdwan Rajah's place of worship and house from the aggression of the pretender, who had proceeded there with an intention to plunder it. I was not present at the river side when the pretender and his party were captured and the firing took place there, but in my way to the ghaut, I saw the men in custody. Neither Jevun Mitter nor Bissumbhur Mookorjee accompanied me to Ambeeka. Gopee Dutt and Harro Dhur were there, but they were detached from my party. I do not know the names of the 8 or 10 men who accompanied me. I never said in the Magistrate's Court that he had only been once to Culna. No men of Prawn Baboo appeared to oppose the pretender vis et armies at Culna in the year 1837. There was no mooktarname filed in my name from the Rannees who a Mooktar I then was. The prisoner asked was it customary to file mooktarname there but the Judge declined to put this question to the witness. It appears that this witness in the Magistrate's Court had deposed that he had been only once at Ambeeka, so the printed reports show.

Bissunth Lall Baboo, deposed. I was acquainted with Rajah Pertab Chunder of Burdwan. He is dead. On the night of the 13th Pous, I received a letter at Calcutta, that Pertab Chunder was very unwell, and I proceeded to Ambeeka and arrived there on the evening of the next day, and saw Pertab Chunder lying on his bed very sick, attended by Bermanund Gossain and Uskur Allee Hakeem. I saw the Rajah was laid up with an intermitting fever, which came on him every morning at 10 o'clock. It used to be preceded by cold shivering and fainting fits, and the fever used to abate towards the night, leaving the patient weak from a prostration of strength. On the 21st of Pous, Bermanund and Jugmohun said, we despair of the recovery of the patient, do with him what is the usual custom with you in these cases. Intimation of this was conveyed in the evening to Rajah Tej Chunder, who, on hearing it, began to weep and replied, "Well, do whatever is necessary in such cases." After this they brought Pertab Chunder down from his bed room, and as the staircase was circuitous, they could not bring the bed down, therefore Bermanund and Jugmohun took him up in his bedding and brought him down, many others following him. After this they sent for a palkee and put Pertab in it, and took him slowly to the river side. On arriving at the ghaut, they took him out of the palkee and put him on a charpoy, when he began to shiver from the effects of the cold breeze and was consequently removed on the cot to a tent close by. Bermanund read the Baghut Pooran to him at 9 p.m. Bermanund said, he is dying take him to the river side and perform his funeral obsequies. I was one of those who assisted in taking him on this occasion to the river, and placed him on the bank with his body partly in the water, and Bermanund Gossain, I, and others, began to pour water into his mouth and read prayers over him. Whilst so doing he died about 1 o'clock a.m. Mohun Baboo held his feet, and Jugmohun his shoulders. I, after Pertab's demise, went to the Rajbarry at Ombehak and told Tej Chunder that Pertab had died, and asked him who were to perform the ceremonies of the deceased. Tej Chunder ordered Ghasee Ram to light the funeral pile. I returned with Ghasee Ram to the river side, and desired Shebooram and Ram Kissen, to bring some sandal wood, bamboos, ropes, &c., to perform the rites, and to gather the Kathrees of that place to assist in these rites. Here this deponent described the particulars of all the minute ceremonies which were performed on the burning of the corpse, which, as they have already been fully detailed by the witnesses Bada Mohun sircar, it would be both uninteresting and superfluous to detail them, more so as there was no glaring contradiction between the two testimonies on this subject, so as to throw any discredit on them from that circumstance. After describing with great prolixity these funeral obsequies, deponent added, I have seen the prisoner who alleges himself to be Rajah Pertab Chunder of Burdwan twice here in the Magistrate's Court of Bancoora, and once in the presence of the Magistrate of this Court. Prisoner does not resemble the deceased Rajah either in shape, features, color or stature, nor even in age. Prisoner is younger, taller and darker than Pertab Chunder was. Pertab was born in the month of Cartick, 1197 B. S. and my father died the following day, therefore I remember the date. Pertab Chunder died in Pous 1227 B. S., therefore he was 30 years old at the time of his death. Prisoner does not appear to be older than 40 years.

Cross-examined by Mr. Bignell.—There were many torches burning at the time Pertab died and was burnt. I saw his features on the pile and assisted in the funeral rites. The pile was about two feet high and a short distance from the river. On its banks the corpse was consumed in my presence. There was no possibility nor motive of or for the deceased to escape.

Cross questioned by Mr. Morton.—I have been employed by Rannee Komul Komaree, the sister of Prawn Baboo. My grand daughter is married to Prawn Baboo's son, Tarrachund, and my son was married to a daughter of Prawn Baboo's, who is dead, leaving issue.

Nundoo Loll, deposed. I am related to Prawn Baboo. My cousin is married to one of his daughters. I saw the prisoner, who alleges himself to be Pertab Chunder, at Bancoora, where I was subpoenaed as a witness, but not examined. On the 5th Pous 1227 B. S. Rajah Pertab Chunder, son of Rajah Tej Chunder, zemindar of Burdwan, fell sick. When his indisposition increased, Dr. Cantur, the medical assistant at Burdwan, was called to see him. He came and was with the patient about 20 minutes. He advised the invalid to be bled and have leeches applied to his temples. This prescription he refused to have administered, and was consequently dispatched that very night to Ambekka, because the doctor refused to prescribe for him, unless he consented to abide by them. Tej Chunder followed him, and two native physicians, and many residents of Burdwan accompanied him to Ambekka, where we all arrived on the evening of the 14th Pous B. S. On that very evening the fever came on him with shivering fits, and he fainted away. After this, this deponent deposed to the different stages of the indisposition of Pertab Chunder, up to the period of his demise, as likewise all the details of the funeral ceremonies, almost word for word as the two former witnesses had related them, and he swore positively that Pertab Chunder had expired in his presence, and he had seen his corpse burnt at Culna. In conclusion, this witness likewise deposed, that the prisoner, who alleges himself to be the deceased Pertab Chunder, does in no wise resemble him, neither in age, shape, stature, color features, in fact his route ensemble was quite different from that of the deceased Rajah.

Cross-examined by Mr. Bignell. I saw the dead body of Pertab Chunder burnt.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. You are an European. I cannot tell the age of any European, but by guess, I did say before the Magistrate, that I should conceive you to be 35 years old. I am servant of the present Rajah of Burdwan, and get 21 rupees a month, and 10 rupees for conveyance. I am an old servant of that Rajahship. By two or three intermarriages I and my uncle Bussanth Lall, are related to the family of Prawn Baboo.

Munnee Lall deposed. Within these 2 years I got a pension, and am the dewan of Kissenpoor, under Prawn Baboo. I know Khosaul Baboo. I cannot see at a distance; but what is the use of my seeing a man who pretends to be another person who I saw expire, and whose corpse was burnt in my presence. The prisoner who pretends to be Rajah Pertab Chunder, I have seen in the Magistrate's Court here. My memory is not every tenacious, but I can on consideration recall many facts which may have been obliterated from it. After this, witness likewise, but with more brevity, described the last sickness and death and the funeral ceremonies of the late Rajah Pertab Chunder, the son of Tej Chunder, the late zemindar of Burdwan, and added, that the person who pretends to be represent him does not resemble him in any wise what-so-ever. I am 58 years old, and Shant Chund is my father-in-law. He is 3 years younger than I am.

Cross-examined by Mr. Morton. I live in the Rajbarry at Chinsurah, and did so when I attended on the Magistrate's subpoena. I never had any consultation with any person on the subject of my evidence to day. I would not tell a lie for 50,000 rupees. My memory is far better than my eye-sight. I never can forget the death of a great man my master, and I was a witness in the case of Pertab Chunder's widow against his father. No inquiries are made at the death of any man, for no dead man has ever risen from the dead, and this is all a fully and useless trouble in this man to pretend to be Pertab Chunder, and gave needless trouble to the Court, the witnesses, and to you, Mouly and Judge. No one ever doubted Pertab Chunder's death at either Culna or Burdwan, and the Government is the first to lend an ear to this man's absurd pretensions. No memorandum was taken of the date of Pertab's death, but it is a subject of daily conversation at Burdwan. Then, addressing Mr. Morton: Are you the defendant's vakeel? Question away as long as you please, you will get nothing out of me. After this speech of this witness, Mr. Morton declined question him any further.—Hurkaru, Nov. 23.

4TH DAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1838.

Mr. Biguell requested to be informed why the prisoners had issued subpoenas against so many of the Government officers. He said, that as this list comprised an officer in almost every district under the Bengal Government, if Government were to issue subpoenas against them all, it would strip the districts of some of their most efficient officers, and cause a considerable cessation and delay in the official duties of those districts. As such he begged to be informed of the prisoners' motives and the question which these witnesses were required to prove, before he could issue these subpoenas; and perhaps if it embraced any topic which was well known and not of much importance to the case, he might concede it at once rather than cause unnecessary delay, expence and inconvenience in the proceedings.

Mr. Morton replied, that as the charge was of a very extensive nature and embraced many points, he had subpoenaed these witnesses to prove that the principle prisoner had during his exile, travelled over all these districts, and, there never had, been any riot or disturbance occasioned by him in any of them, to the best of their knowledge.

Mr. Bignell replied, that the Magistrate of Bancoora certainly could not depose favorably towards this prisoner on that point, and as far as the Zillah of 24-Pergunnahs were concerned, he could state, that with the exception of a little hullabullo in Calcutta, there had been no disturbance occasioned by the prisoners in that district; but be that as it may, as the present charge only stated one particular riot, his general demeanour in others, would not in his opinion affect the question at issue.

Mr. Bignell was likewise this day, at his request, furnished with the demurrers of the principle prisoner to the several counts of the indictment against him and his fellow prisoners in this case, signed by him in English.

Mr. Curtis, the Judge, replied, that he had maturely considered Mr. Morton's proposition to admit the testimony of certain witnesses, who had been examined in this case before the Magistrate, and file their dispositions as documentary evidence in the trial now pending before him. The proposition at first certainly did appear to him to be advantageous, as it would have greatly saved the court's time and be beneficial to him as well as the parties concerned in this case; but on a deliberate consideration, he found many insuperable difficulties in acceding to this request. 1st. It would be requisite to read and explain these depositions to the Mahomedan law officer of his court, as he must be acquainted fully with their purport, to enable him to sum up his verdict on the termination of the trial in his court. 2d. By taking the evidence viva voce and before the court, the court, by observing the demeanour of these witnesses, whilst under examination, would be much better enabled to form its idea as to the degree of credit which may be due to their respective testimonies on the occasion, and likewise to detect any discrepancies which may occur between their depositions given in this court and that which they had deposed to before the magistrate, and this mode of procedure would further enable the prisoners to lay hold of any point which in their evidence may possibly in their opinion be favourable to them, and to cross examine the witnesses on any part of their depositions on which they might be inclined to do so; and lastly, that this mode of procedure suggested by Mr. Bignell and Mr. Morton, is irregular and contrary to the Regulations and the practice of the Mofussil Courts in such cases, and if he were to adopt it, it is very probable that when the proceedings would be forwarded from this Court to the Nizamut Adawlut at Calcutta, for their final disposal of the case, that Court might, on the ground of this irregularity, throw out the case, and order this Court to try it de novo.

After the demurrers of the prisoners had been for some time in Mr. Bignell's possession, Mr. Curtis asked him whether he had perused them sufficiently, and being answered in the affirmative, remarked, that there was certainly one objection which even to him appeared to be valid, viz., as to the identity of the principal prisoners, whether he was Pertaub Chunder, the late Raja of Burdwan, or not. This, in his opinion, appeared to be a civil question and not a criminal one, and it certainly appeared to him, to be an invidious task singly, without a jury or the assistance of another judge, to try and decide this question. It would, perhaps, have been far more preferable to have appointed a special commission of two judges to have taken up this prisoner's case in all its bearings, and have decided on it; but as the Government had positively, in spite of his objections, ordered him to try the case in all its bearings, all that he had now to do, was to act on these orders to the best of his knowledge and belief.

Mr. Bignell replied, that he was prepared to file an answer to this objection, and added, that he believed that Mr. Morton had waived all his objections as to the credibility of the prosecutor's witnesses as to the death and burning of the late Raja Pertaub Chunder.

Mr. Morton suggested, that if four or five main questions were put, of a leading nature, he would not object to each witness regarding the death and funeral being disposed of without making them repeat all the particulars over again.

Mr. Bignell replied, that if Mr. Morton would state what he was disposed to admit, this might be done, but if he intended to impeach the credibility of the witnesses for the prosecution, it would then be requisite to go into particulars.

Mr. Morton said, that he was reluctant to bind his client by any admissions, or to anticipate the defence which would be set up; but if the main points were elicited by the prosecution, he was at a loss to perceive why it would be considered necessary to examine each witness so very minutely on every point, which was rather the duty of the cross examiner. In conclusion he said, that his suggestion was made merely to save unnecessary trouble, and the time of the Court, and it was in the power of the presiding judge to determine what was best to be done in this case. With this opinion of Mr. Morton's, both the Judge and the Mouly fully concurred.

Mohun Lall then deposed, that he likewise had been acquainted with the late Rajah Pertaub Chunder, Zemindar of Burdwan, and was present at his last illness and demise at Culna, in B. S. 1227, in the month of Pous; and that Pertaub Chunder died in his presence, and deponent had seen his corpse burnt at Culna on this morning of the 14th Pous, 1227 B. S. and that the prisoner who pretends to be Pertaub Chunder, the late Rajah and Zemindar of Burdwan, is not him, as the Rajah died many years ago and was burnt; neither does he resemble the Rajah in shape, features, color, height or age. This witness admitted, that he was the Superintendent of the present Rajah of Burdwan's elephants, and got 10 Rs. a month for his services. He was cross-examined on a few minor points.

Byrn Baboo deposed, that he is married to Prawā Baboo's Sister, and Prawā Baboo had married deponent's sister. Deponent is in the service of the present Rajah of Burdwan. This witness likewise followed in the wake of the last witness, regarding the death and burning of the Rajah Pertaub Chunder at Culna in his presence, and the non resemblance of the principal prisoner to that individual.

Shum Churn Baboo deposed, that he is the brother of Ranny Jye Koomarree, the elder widow of the late Maharaja Tej Chunder, and he gets 10 Rs. a month from the present Raja, as a Darogah to his establishment at Burdwan. Deponent's daughter is married to Baboo Raushabarry, Prawā Baboo's third son. This witness likewise followed in the wake of the former witnesses and deposed to his having been present at the death and burning of Raja Pertaub Chunder, and that the prisoner alleging himself to be that person, is not him. Deponent was present at the death of and witnessed the funeral obsequies of the late Raja Tej Chunder, and although he could not, either in his examination before the magistrate at Bancoorah, nor at the time he gave his evidence before the magistrate of this district, relate the particulars of the ceremonies attendant on his funeral, he is well prepared to state them now, if the defendant's counsel required of him.

Rada Churn likewise deposed to the same effect as the last witness, viz., that he was present at the death and burning of Raja Pertaub Chunder, and that the prisoner assuming his name does not resemble him. The Deponent was likewise related to Prawā Baboo, and a servant of the present Raja of Burdwan.

Up to the period when deponent was examined all the Hindoo witnesses were, instead of being sworn either by the Ganges water, the solemn declaration, either by self repetition or holding the same written on paper in their hands, were made simply to sign a written akhar-nama, or compact, to speak the truth in their evidence in this case. To this form the prisoners objected, and wished the court to swear them on the Ganges water.
